The cholera or diarrhœa of a very bad kind appears to have broken out in the Baltic fleet.—Thirty men have died in the Austerlitz, seven in the Duke, and a few in other ships.

An effective blockade of the Gulf of Finland was announced from and after the 26th of June. An imperial decree, published by the Paris Moniteur, confers on Omer Pasha the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor.

Redschid Pacha had resumed the Turkish Ministry of foreign affairs. The ex-ministers of Greece are indicted for malversation of the public money, to foster the recent insurrection.

The Emperor Napoleon is witnessing the embarkation of the French army at Boulogne and Calais, for the Baltic. He reviewed the troops, and issued the following proclamation to the army, amid loud shouts:

"Soldiers, Russia having forced us to a war, France has armed 500,000 of her children.—England has also called out a considerable number of troops. To-day, our troops and armies, united for the same cause, are combined in the Baltic as well as the Black Sea. I have selected you to be the first to those regions of the North. English vessels will convey you there; a unique fact in history, which proves the intimate alliance of the two governments, not to abstain from any sacrifice to defend the right of the weak, the liberty of Europe, and the national honor. Go, my children; attentive Europe openly or secretly offers up vows for your triumph. Our country, proud of a struggle which threatens the aggressor only, accompanies you with its ardent vows, and I, whom imperious duties retain still distant from the scene of events, shall have my eyes upon you. I shall be able to say, they are worthy sons of the conquerors of Austerlitz, of Eylau, of Friedland, and of Moscow. May God protect you. Napoleon."

News from Spain is very imperfect. The insurgents, however, seem to maintain themselves under Generals Serrano, O'Donnell, and Dolce. They number 5000, and are going to- [illegible] prisoners were taken, and the chief of the insurgents killed.

The reconciliation of Switzerland and Austria is now unequivocally verified.

It is notified that the Sultan will visit Omar Pacha's head-quarters, and afterwards proceed to Silestria to distribute rewards to the brave defenders of the fortress.

Cholera still prevails at St. Petersburg and Cronstadt. At St. Petersburg, June 28th, the police report states the number of cases to be 405. On the first of July there were 580.

Asiatic cholera had broken out on board the Australian emigrant ship Dirigo, and the ship put back to Liverpool with 60 deaths.

Irish Riot at Portland. The Portland papers give accounts of an Irish row in that city. The Argus says: "The watch were attracted by the strange behavior of three persons, one of whom carried a bag, and appeared to be going toward the hill. The watch immediately followed them, and upon their discovering that the watch was following them ran to nearly the centre of the open ground between Monument and Congress streets, where they were overtaken. It was here discovered that they had been decoyed, as by the flashes of lightning they could distinguish a body of about 20 or 30 Irishmen, who made an attack upon them. They thereupon attempted to arrest the persons who decoyed them, but were unable from the superiority of numbers. One of the watch named Fairbanks was knocked down and badly beaten. The other, named Wyman, did not fare much better."

Terrible Hurricane. On Thursday last a fearful hurricane visited Davenport, Ill. The steamer Ben Franklin had her pipes blown down. The steamers Golden Gate and Emma Harmon, had their entire upper cabins blown off, and on the latter two persons were killed. A canoe containing three persons was capsized, and all are supposed to have been lost. The store of Wickenham & Son was blown down, and nine persons buried in the ruins. Seven were taken out alive, but the other two, supposed to be females, had not been extricated.

Revolution in England. While Spain is in the throes of a revolution, signs are not wanting of a general breaking up of the present order of things in England at no remote day. The Church is going down; and "with the Established Church," as Lord John Russel once said, "the hereditary monarchy and hereditary aristocracy stand or fall."—Lowell Journal.

☞ Mr McKenna, pastor of the James Street Catholic Church, New York, fell suddenly dead at the chapel, of heart complaint, on Friday. Other sudden deaths also occurred in that city.

☞ An earthquake occurred at Panama on the 10th inst., which caused considerable damage.

Obituary.

Portland, July 29, 1854.

Dear Bro Merriam:—By request of others, it has devolved on me to write an obituary notice of a departed Bro. in Christ for the Crisis. Bro. Joseph D Farnum, of this city, died of the cholera on the night of the 26th inst., after an illness of about seven hours, during which he suffered extremely from the cramping tortures of that disease. And although not with him in his last moments, I am told he appeared to be perfectly [illegible] expressed a wish to be at rest. "And I heard a voice from Heaven saying unto me, 'Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.'" Amen and Amen. He rests from his labors, and is delivered from the time of trouble, "Such as never was since there was a nation." Yet his absence makes Portland lonely, and the household of faith a house of mourning; but we sorrow not as those without hope—we cannot—

"O hope, sweet hope, thou hast not failed,—
But borne us on our way,
And will, we're sure, still buoy us on,
'Till night shall end in day."

May we be followers of him in good works, even as he followed our Lord and his Apostles. His house has long been a "Pilgrim's tavern" as many of our Brethren can attest, and he has now left a mourning household consisting of a wife and five children: for it was announced to me a few minutes ago, that the youngest child of our deceased Brother, named Samuel R. Farnum, died this morning about six o'clock of the same disease. He was four years and one month old. It is hoped that God's stewards will, in this case, remember the widow and the fatherless; for he that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord. Our beloved Brother was one of the two first ones that sounded the midnight cry in this city; and has been regarded (especially by the Brethren) as at the head of the cause in this city, and one of its main pillars in the Church. As a Brother beloved in Christ his loss cannot be estimated; and as a citizen he was respected and esteemed by all who knew him.

Appointments.

CAMP MEETING.

The Lord willing, there will be a Camp Meeting at Houghtonville, Vt., on ground owned by Bro. A G. Gibson, commencing Tuesday, Aug. 29, and continuing one week. It is hoped that the Brethren and Sisters in all this region of country will come together at this meeting in the name and strength of the Lord. This may be the last meeting of the kind we shall ever have. We hope the Brethren, as far as possible, will come with tents and provisions, prepared to take care of themselves. There will be a tent for the use of those who cannot bring one. The Lord willing, Bro. I. Adrian, with other ministering Brethren, will be present to preach the word. Will Bro. L. Boutell inquire of the Lord whether it is his duty to attend?

Your Bro. in hope of life,

O D. Gibson.

There will be a Grove-Meeting, August 16, 1854, to be held at Hillsdale Co., Mich., half a mile south of the plank road leading from Hillsdale to Barswood Corners, on the town line of Cambria. Brethren coming on the cars will stop at Hillsdale the day before the meeting, where teams will be in readiness.

Will some of the Time preachers attend?

T. L. W.

There will be a Grove-Meeting in South Butler, Wayne Co., N. Y., near King's Corners, commencing August 5th, and continuing over Sunday. Brethren John T. Houk and Z. Ford [illegible]

[illegible]

R. R. York.

TENT-MEETING.

The Tent-Meeting appointed to be holden in the neighborhood of Syracuse, Onondaga Co., N. Y., will be held in Van Buren, Onondaga N. Y., 12 miles west of Syracuse, commencing Thursday the 17th of August. The meeting will be 4 miles south-west of Baldwinsville, (on the Syracuse and Oswego Rail Road,) and 3 miles north of Canton, (on the Syracuse and Rochester Rail Road). Brethren, one and all, come to this meeting prepared to do good and get good; bring your tents and provisions with you, and camp on the ground. For those that cannot do so there will be some way provided. Dear Brethren and Sisters, the Lord is coming this year. Come and hear the evidences from the word of God, and be prepared for that event looked for by the saints of every age. Bro. Cummings will be present with his big Tent.

John T. Ongley.

N. B There will be a team provided to convey Brethren to and from the cars. J. T. O.

TENT-MEETING.

The Lord willing, there will be a Tent-Meeting in Ware Village, Mass., commencing Wednesday Aug 9th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Bro. Cummings will be there with the big tent; and as there are but a few brethren in this place, it is hoped there will be a gathering of the brethren from the surrounding country, to lend a helping hand in sounding this last message to the world. Brethren are requested to bring their tents, bedding and board, as far as practicable; and those who cannot provide for themselves, will be provided for. We expect God's watchmen will understand their duty and be present to sound the alarm, to make the people ready.

Brethren coming from the east will stop at West Brookfield depot, where they will take stage for Ware at 11 o'clock A. M., and 7 1-2 P. M., and those coming from the west, will stop at Palmer depot, and by stage to Ware at 2 1-2 P. M. Come, brethren, to lend a helping hand, in the name of the Great Head of the Church. For the brethren. D. E. M.

Dear Brother, I made the change in my appointments, by request of the friends North, you will see all is as it should be this week.

I. Adrian.

I will preach in

C. L. Page.

The Lord will, I will preach in
Lawrence the 1st Sabbath in August.
Manchester the 2d Sabbath in August.

B. P. Manning.

TENT MEETING AT WORCESTER, MS.

The Lord willing, there will be a Tent Meeting in Worcester, Mass., on Hudson st., at the foot of Elm st., west of Main st., commencing on Wednesday, August 2d. Bro. J. Cummings will be in attendance with his large tent.—Brethren having small tents are requested to bring them where it is practicable. The meeting will continue over the Sabbath. Let there be a general gathering.

There will be a Tent Meeting in Newburgh, Me., to commence Wednesday, Aug. 16, at 10 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. As the brethren in that place expect a large gathering of the saints, we hope all, who can, will bring their tents, and be on the ground at an early hour, so that we can commence our meeting Wednesday morning. Brethren at and west of Portland, will proceed by steamboat to Hampden, where carriages will be in attendance to convey them to the ground. Boats run from Portland, Me., Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings. From Boston Tuesdays and Fridays. Bro. Couch and other preaching brethren will attend. Boarding on the ground. In behalf of the Brethren. E. H. Baker.

North Haverhill, N. H., July 18, '54.

There will be a general gathering of the dear Saints of God at Sugar Hill, N. H., commencing Thursday, Aug 10th, and continuing over the Sabbath. Come, my brethren and sisters, to this meeting, for and seat, and have your faith strengthened, and your hearts made glad, by the glad tidings of the soon coming King. May the Master send some of his servants who have the spirit and power of the Gospel, to labor at this meeting. E. Whitney.

There will be a Grove Meeting at North Woodstock, N. H., commencing Thursday, Aug. 4, and continuing over the Sabbath. As this is a new field of labor, I hope the brethren will come up to this meeting to labor for the salvation of souls. The people at this place are anxious to [illegible]

[illegible]

If the Lord will, there will be Tent Meetings as follows, and each continue over the Sabbath:

One at Worcester, Mass., Wednesday, Aug. 2. Will the brethren there also give the particulars.

One at Ware, Mass., Wednesday, Aug. 9. Particulars hereafter.

One in the vicinity of Syracuse, N.Y., Thursday, Aug. 17th. Particulars hereafter.

J. Cummings.

CAMP MEETING IN VERNON, VT.

Providence permitting, there will be a Camp Meeting in Vernon, Vt., on the old ground occupied the two past years, in a beautiful grove, about one-fourth of a mile from the North Vernon Depot, near the Connecticut river road leading from Brattleboro, Vt., to Springfield, Ms., about 4 miles south of the former, and 48 north of the latter named place, commencing Aug. 14th, and continuing one week. The sole object of this meeting is for the salvation of our fellow-men. Brethren East, West, North and South, will you not exert every power of your being, knowing the time is about over for us to labor to save souls? We cannot do too much for the cause of our soon coming King, seeing he has done so much for us. O do come to this feast in the name of the Lord, full of faith and the holy ghost, with the whole armor on all ready in working order to save souls from the awful gathering storm. We once more invite all of God's people to come and bring their tents and join us. Arrangements are made for board and horse keeping for all who may wish on reasonable terms. Arrangements will be made to reduce the fare on the railroads.

Committee,—E. G. Scott, E. Miller, C. Severance, A. Gage, S. Titus, J. Frost.

Brethren E. Burnham, J. G. Bennett, J. Couch, F. H. Berrick, are invited.

If time continues there will be a great Camp Meeting in Winsted, Ct., commencing Aug. 28. Particulars hereafter.

Conferences.

There will be, by leave of Providence, a Conference meeting of believers in the near approach of the coming Savior, in Hubbardstown, commencing Aug. 22d, to continue over the following Sabbath. The meeting will be held in Mechanics' Hall. Brethren from neighboring towns are cordially invited to come up to this feast, in the name of the Lord. We expect the Lord will send some of his Watchmen to give the trumpet a certain sound, that men may prepare themselves for the battle. There are tenements and rooms connected with the Hall, where Brethren can be accommodated who wish to bring board and bedding. Those coming by Railroad will stop at Gardner Depot, a coach running daily from there to H. Distance 6 miles. Provision will be made for board and horse keeping. In behalf of the Brethren, J. D. Merriam.

By leave of Providence, there will be a Conference Meeting in Hubbardston in Mechanics' Hall, to commence Tuesday, Aug. 22, and hold over the following Sunday. Particulars hereafter. For the brethren. J. D. Merriam.

P. S. Brethren Mathewson and Grant are requested to be present.

There will be a general Conference of Advent brethren holden in Lowell, Mass., at the Merrimack Hall, near Merrimack House, on Dutton street, to commence on Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 2, and continue over the Sabbath. Brethren Couch, Adrian, and others are expected to be present. All who wish to hear the argument on the coming of the Lord in 1854, are cordially invited to attend.

Providence permitting there will be a Conference at
N. Lebanon, N. Y., Tuesday, Aug. 1st, to continue over the Sabbath.
[illegible] to continue over the Sabbath.
Colerain, Mass., Tuesday, Aug. 15, to continue over the Sabbath, Christian Hill.

Brother M. Grant will accompany me.

In behalf of the brethren, H. Pratt.

P. S. Will the Brethren make an effort to attend these meetings and especially to help the poor to attend. They must have the gospel.

Special Notices.

By request of Bro. E. C. Stiles the appointments for meetings at [illegible], [illegible] Corner, Jay and Hebron are withdrawn. The appointments were made by request of D. C. Wheeler, who was to assist at these places. But it has been ascertained that D. C. Wheeler is a man whose private life does not correspond with his public profession; consequently the meetings will not be holden.

Springfield, July 23, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—It is the wish of the Brethren that are looking confidently for the coming of Jesus this year, also it is the wish of those that are favorable to the coming of Jesus nigh, that there might be a Tent-Meeting held in this city. Cannot Brother J. Cummings come here with his tent, also Brethren E. Burnham, F. H. Berick, J. Couch? We should be glad to have this meeting, the Lord willing, as soon as convenient. We will provide a suitable place for the gathering, and do all that we are able to give the inhabitants of Springfield a chance to hear this last message that is now being sounded through the land. There is an increasing desire to hear about the coming of Christ this year in this city. Will Brother J. Cummings let us know when he can come with his tent, the Lord willing, and let it be known in the World's Crisis. May the Lord give the Brethren, that are interested in this movement, wisdom how to act, and may we all realize that what is done must be done quickly.

Samuel Cowing,
H. J. [illegible],
Hiram E. [illegible].

I will say, in behalf of the Brethren and friends in Grantham, N. H., that we hope Brother Edwin Burnham will call to visit his old friends in this place and visit them as soon as possible. H. Foss.

Let the letters and communications be carefully read over, corrected, and, if need be, re-written, punctuated, and prepared for the press, so far as the writer has ability so to do. If, however, the writer does not understand punctuation, &c., the Editor is just as willing, and if possible more so, to serve the humblest member of the flock in bringing his or her sentiments and feelings before the public, as those who have been favored with higher educational advantages, provided only they write under the influence of the Spirit of God.

Business Items.

☞ M. C. B: We cannot ascertain without something more definite.

☞ Bro. R. R. York: We find you credited with one dollar, under date June 21st.

☞ Sister Mary L. Morgan has ordered one Hymn Book, but we don't know where to send it.

☞ The Bro. who sent $2 and the name of Jesse Jackman, &c., will be under the necessity of writing again. We credit the money, but we cannot attend to the other business until we know where the individuals live. We don't know what Lincoln P. O. our Brother refers to. It would cause us much labor to look over our entire list to find Lincoln P. O., and when we find it we are not sure that it is the one.—We hope our friends will see the importance of GIVING THE STATE in the date at the top of the page when they write.

☞ The Bro. who writes from Brattleboro', Vt., ordering Pilgrim Songsters, forgot to sign his name.

☞ When the names of new subscribers are sent they should be marked as such.

Persons are particularly requested, when writing to this office, to let the Business part of the letter, as well as notices of all kinds, stand in a place by itself. We find that some things have been overlooked in consequence of not being separate.

☞ Notices and appointments must be written as they are expected to appear in the paper.

☞ When Hymn Books are ordered to be sent by mail we send 6 for one dollar and prepay the postage.

☞ We hope persons returning papers to have them discontinued, will be careful to give the P. O. address to which they are sent.

☞ The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3.00. "Bible vs. Tradition," can also be obtained of Bro. French.

☞ The book by J. Cummings explaining the Lithographic Chart may be had by applying to J. French, Lowell, Mass., or to J. Cummings, Concord, N. H. Price, fifty cents.

☞ We have just published in tract form the exposition of Rs. 38 and 39, which was published in the Crisis. We will supply those who may order them. Price $2 per hundred.

☞ The Lithographic Charts and Pilgrim's Songster, published by Eld. J. Cummings, can be had of him at Concord, N. H., or by applying to J. French, of Lowell.

"Turn you to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope."

O sinner, will you linger,
Oh! will you yet delay;
When but an hour of mercy
Is shining o'er thy way?
Soon the destroying Angel
His mission will receive;
O hasten to the fountain,
For Jesus' blood will save.

Your golden hours are wasting,
And every passing pulse
Counts out for your probation,
And your delay insults
The majesty of heaven,
Who in long suffering waits,
And offers you his pardon;
But soon 'twill be too late.

Soon mercy will grow weary,
And spread her snowy wings,
And sorrowing and tearful,
Retreat from earthly scenes;
While in her loving bosom
The trusting ones will fold,
And hide them from the besom
That desolates the world.

How would you prize the mercy
Bestow'd by gracious heaven,
How would you value glory
And beg to be forgiven;
Did you but know you're wretched,
And miserable, and blind,
And vile, and poor, and naked,
Without this mercy kind.

Could you but see the glory
By sainted John foretold;
Or on Mount Pisgah's summit
The goodly land behold;
Or with the three disciples,
With Jesus on the Mount,
The Kingdom view in miniature,
You'd hasten to the fount.

O take the kindly warning,
The night shades hasten on,
And no sweet light of morning
On that dark night will dawn.
With no bright star to cheer you,
No loving friend to guide,
No Jesus there to save you,
You'll sink in Death's cold tide.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LANDAFF, N. H., July 21st, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—We arrived home this week from our journey "west" after being absent almost three months. In travelling about 2,500 miles, surrounded by multitudes of people, we found but very few who are looking for the Saviour, and keeping his commandments: such are as oases in the desert. The first meeting was at Union Mills, Ind., notice of which has been given by Bro. Howell. We were glad to hear from him, as also from other dear brethren and sisters there whose memory we shall cherish till Jesus comes, and hope to meet them when the "elect" are gathered to meet the Lord. I trust Bro. Howell will prove a blessing in that western field, and may he gain many to shine as stars in his crown of rejoicing.—The meeting at Terre Coupee was well attended, though few in that place sympathise with this last message to the world. Bro. and Sister Redding did all they could to have the evidences of the Lord's coming brought before the people. Two of their family were baptized. The blessing of the Lord attend them.

We then visited the brethren at "South Bend"; found a few "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints." If they continue faithful, the Lord will give them a crown of life. Here we shared the kind hospitalities of Bro. and Sister Fox, who are devoted to the cause.

The next meeting was at Plymouth, Ind., notice of which has been given by Bro. R Corbaley. We remember those dear brethren and sisters with much christian affection, and cease not to pray for God's blessing to abide with them. At Adrian, Mich., good attention was paid to the preaching of the word, trust good will be the result. As Lot was delivered from the destruction of Sodom, so they the few who love the appearing of Christ be saved when judgment shall come upon that city. On our return, we stopped in Cleaveland, O., that beautiful "forest city" and found a few of like precious faith, who are seeking for immortality at the coming of Jesus. I hope they will not be discouraged, for Jesus says, "Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." On our return, we stopped at Niagara Falls; but could find none who loved the appearing of Jesus even where are displayed the wondrous wisdom and power of the Creator. In viewing such sublime scenery, who, but those deeply depraved in heart, would not admire, adore, and praise Him who could form the mighty waterfall as well as the placid stream? Surely "His understanding is infinite." We distributed papers and tracts, on our way, to all who manifested an interest or desire to read; and hope the seed sown may fall into some good and honest hearts. But few comparatively have any real desire to be enlightened upon this great and important subject. The Lord saith, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." We spent one night in Syracuse with Bro. and Sister Chandler. Found them loving the appearing of Jesus, and believing it near, even at the door. Had a good meeting in the evening with the brethren. May they be found ready. After visiting my friends in Cambridge and Boston, spent one Sabbath with the brethren at Rye, N. H., where we had an interesting meeting. I was then sick several days at Dr. Richardson's, New Market, N. H., who is also looking for the Saviour; but by the blessing of God I am now getting better.—Spent last Sabbath in North Haverhill, with Bro. Whitney, whom we esteem very highly in love for his work's sake, having labored in this vicinity about three months, and we trust to the good of many.

Now, dear brethren, as we are sure that the end of all things is at hand, let us be sober and watch unto prayer, keeping ourselves in the love of God, and in patient waiting for Christ. Let us heed the admonition of the Apostle, "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness," &c. Again, "Beloved seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless."

Yours, in hope,

O. D. EASTMAN.

April 28th, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—Feeling somewhat impressed to write on the subject of our Lord's return from the wedding, I think that the present opportunity is the best. I praise the Lord that he is so soon coming to set up his everlasting kingdom upon the earth, when it is cleansed from sin and all its impurities. Then it will be a glorious residence to the saints of God. Then there will be no more sickness, sorrow, pain nor death; but happiness and peace. O it will be a glorious land to me, and to all the children of God. There we shall never part, but dwell together through an endless eternity. O glorious thought to the child of God, who is waiting for Jesus to come the second time without sin unto salvation. Thank God, I believe we may know something about the time, Jesus has told us how we may know the time, and thank the Lord that he has said, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Matt. 24. 29. The darkening of the sun is one sign, the darkening of the moon another, and the stars falling another; and what next? "The powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Has not this taken place? or is it not being fulfilled at the present time? The next sign will be the sign of the Son of man; that sign there will be no mistaking. "Then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, when they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." I believe we have had signs of our Master's return, and that a little while, a few more months, will tell the fate of the world. Our blessed Master has told us in his word, "when ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand.) The objector may say understand what? Ans. The time that the abomination was set up.—When was it set up? I answer in 519.—How do you know that it was set up in 519? Because Jesus says after the abomination is set up, "then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." How long was the tribulation? Ans. 1260 days (years.)—Where do you find that it was 1260 years? In Rev. 11: 3. "I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three-score days, clothed in sackcloth." And this agrees with Rev. 11: 14. "And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place where she is nourished for a time and times and half a time from the face of the serpent." The time was given to Daniel, 1290 days (years.) Jesus said the days should be shortened, and we find them given in Rev. shortened to 1260. At the end of the tribulation the sun was darkened, just as he foretold. Daniel had the promise of standing in his lot at the end of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days. When do they commence? They commence at the same time that the 1290 days did. When will they run out? This year, and then I shall see good old Daniel, if faithful till Jesus comes. How do you know that they run out this year? Because 1260 of the 1335 days (years) ended in 1779, and 75 years added to 1779 will end the 1335 days (years) and that brings us to 1854 when the days will end. Twelve hundred and sixty years subtracted from 1335 will leave 75 years, and that added to 1779, will bring us to 1854, when I believe Jesus will come to gather his waiting ones into his glorious kingdom. I cannot see anything beyond '54; and I want to be ready for that day, so that I can say, "this is my God; I have waited for him, and He will save me" from the judgments that are going to be poured upon the ungodly. Let us be faithful to all around us, that we may have nothing to reflect upon at the Judgment. May we be watchful and prayerful in all things, and let us see to it that there is no hindrance in our serving the Lord. Let us have that love one toward another which the Master exercised towards us.

W. D. I. PILGRIM.

LONDON, N. H., July 20th, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—Although I am a stranger to you in the flesh, yet I bless God we are children of one family, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ to an inheritance in the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. I can never praise God enough for the comfort and encouragement which I have every week in reading the Crisis. While some of the dear children perhaps are gathered together in the capacity of a prayer meeting, your unworthy sister resorts to the Crisis. There I find words of communication from the pilgrims who are journeying to a better land, fulfilling the good word to exhort one another daily, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. To the little flock who do not share the privilege of social worship, let me say, "fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

I find the Crisis a blessed substitute for the prayer meeting. O how it cheers my weary soul to hear those expressions of sympathy and brotherly love; and often does my heart respond, Amen! "Here's my heart, and here's my hand, to meet you in that better land, where we shall part no more." Glory to God! Children, we are almost home. It is my honest conviction before God, that probation will end this year, and all who are written in the book, will have deliverance. I understand the time, I believe it, yet I cannot say I know it, believing as I do, that the word of God is a light to our path, and a lamp to our feet. In reading the Crisis, I have ever marked the most implicit trust and confidence in the sure word, in every column of the messenger of good news. I have noticed also that fervent charity for the children who feel as though they cannot say they know the Lord will come this year; and a willingness to receive such, and give them all the light they can. I feel as though I have received the light, and am trying to walk in it. "The pilgrim's pathway now grows bright, The King is coming soon."

Your sister, looking for this same Jesus from heaven this year.

JANE.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—It appears that God is fulfilling His word, even in the jots and tittles; and I am somewhat persuaded that the antitype of the memorial of blowing of trumpets will this year be realized. The Saviour says he came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill. He fulfilled the law, not only in time, but event at the passover; so he did on the morrow after the Sabbath, the wave sheaf by becoming the first fruits of the harvest, or the first born from the dead. We are begotten now by the word of truth, bearing the fruits of the spirit, and that spirit now dwelling in us will be the quickening power from natural to spiritual bodies, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump. Then shall we see the kingdom of God, then shall be brought to pass the saying, death is swallowed up in victory. Who is there that does not want victory over the last enemy, death, and does not want that Christ should reign on David's throne, and that sorrow and pain and death should flee away. Who, who is there that does not want Christ should reign over him, and that would not wish to see him come? Those that manifest the same spirit that the Jews possessed when they said, "away with him, away with him, crucify him, crucify him." Dear brother, we are coming up to that event. What a solemn time is this we now occupy, and yet how glorious; solemn on account of some of our principal teachers whom we highly esteem for their work's sake, making the signs so obscure, that the children have no cause to lift up their heads, knowing that their redemption draweth nigh.

The members of this little flock, brought to see, from the labors of our beloved brother Chapman in this place, that the sun and moon had been darkened, and that the stars had fallen from heaven, (some of them having been eye witnesses to that sublime scene,) in fulfilment of the Saviour's word, did begin to lift up their heads because their redemption was so nigh. They cannot think the times of the Gentiles must be fulfilled before the sign be given, as some of our teachers tell us, and that the sign must again be given to fulfil his word before the Lord comes. O no, little flock, lift up your heads, your redemption is near, nearer than when you first believed; the Scriptures cannot be broken; there must be a smiting of fellow servants; there must be a giving of meat in due season, there must be some saying in their hearts, "my Lord delayeth his coming." The Lord will come in an hour they think not.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, stick close to his word; how perfect has been the fulfilment thus far, it will be so to the end. Peter's exhortation to take heed to the sure word of prophecy as a light shining in a dark place, I think has a practical bearing on all now more than ever: it being more perfect than eye or ear-witness, whereunto we shall do well to take heed, until the day dawn. It seems the day is about to dawn, at least in our hearts, the East is lighted up, the Lord himself will soon descend, and the dead in Christ will soon arise. Comfort one another. Ye are not in darkness, God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation through Jesus Christ. "Faithful is he that hath called you, who also will do it." Go on, dear brother, in your work and labor of love; soon will you cease from your labour, and your works will follow you. No doubt you will gather a sheaf from the highways and hedges, at least. It seems compelling, now or never, time will soon close. May you and I greet each other with all the dear saints this year, is the prayer of your brother in hope.

ROBERT CHOWN.

BIDDEFORD, ME., June 20th, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I thank God for the Crisis, for when I first heard its lines, it seemed like a brother supporting the same doctrine which I had been advocating for about a year. It presented abundantly more convincing proof than I was able to bring; yet the words of Jesus in the 24, and 25 of Matthew, were sufficient for me, showing the signs of his coming, the going forth of the virgins, the tarrying, and then the midnight cry. This, with the connection which Jesus gives, warrants to me the immediate coming of my Lord, for which I ever want to hold myself in readiness. Scoffers have all learned the one passage—of that day and hour knoweth no man, but they have not turned over the leaf to look on the other side.—We find spoken by the same Being, "there is nothing hid that shall not be made known, nothing secret but that shall be made manifest, and proclaimed on the housetops." Jesus refers to Noah, and says it shall be at his coming as in the days of Noah. Now upon the day Noah entered the ark, God shut him in, and then declared, "yet seven days, and I will bring a flood upon the earth to destroy all flesh." Here we find that God's children were notified and gathered in before the destruction of the ungodly. So I believe it will be at his coming. In Revelation we find the seven days brought to light again, for it is admitted that Revlation is a symbolic prophecy. The Revelator, speaking of the coming of the Lord, says, "And there was silence in heaven, about the space of half an hour." This half hour, or seven days, I understand to commence at his coming with his saints. Then angels will cease rejoicing over penitent sinners, then will be fulfilled the declaration "he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still."

Please to receive $1,00 enclosed, as a blind man's offering towards the support of the Crisis.

A. BOOTHBY,

BY A FRIEND.

KENSINGTON, N. H., June 17, 1854.

Dear Brethren:—Much has been said through the columns of the Crisis about the time of the Saviour's second coming; and I rejoice that the time draws near when the opening heavens shall reveal the Son of God coming, not as he did in the days of his flesh, to suffer and die for a sinful world, but to be the Judge of quick and dead; to punish the wicked, and to take his dear children to himself in glory. Since I embraced religion, I have loved the blessed doctrine of the second advent of Christ. I have often looked forward with pleasing anticipations to the time when I should see, not as I now do, through a glass darkly, but face to face. Since my brethren in this and the neighboring towns have believed that Christ was coming this year, and based their belief on the word of God, I have been studying the Bible; but have not been convinced that the coming of Christ would take place this year. I feel that I love God, and want to be saved in the kingdom of Christ; and if it is essential to my salvation to believe it I desire to, not because others believe it, but because I have a regard for the cause of Christ, and want to perform my whole duty in the fear of God, that it may be well with me here, and that in the day of judgment I may be found at God's right hand. Wishing to be instructed in the right way, I would humbly ask through the columns of your paper, an explanation of the following passages of scripture.

"Ye know not when the time is."

"Of that day and that hour knoweth no man," &c.

Hoping that the brethren will write on these passages, I remain your brother in Christ.

PROPHETIC PERIODS—1260, 1290, 1335 Years of Daniel and John.

1290 years, or time times and the dividing of time—or time times and a part, in which the TIMES and LAWS are in the hands of the Little Horn. Napoleon takes away the civil power of the Little Horn. 1809.

Fall of the Stars 1833.

1335 years, reaching from the setting up of the Abomination of Desolation, or the time when the Saints' times and laws were given into the hand of the Little Horn, to the end, when Daniel with all the Saints will stand in their lot.......1854.

THE END.

☞ The above Diagram is designed to illustrate the measurement of time from the rise of the little horn, with eyes and a mouth (the civil power of the Greek Empire, or Eastern Rome incorporated with the Ecclesiastical Power of the Papacy.—Dan. 7: 8) until the coming of Christ at the resurrection of the saints.

The 1290 years, or time, times and the dividing of time, (Dan. 7: 25) measure the period during which the saints, times and laws were to be given into his hand—The period of the saint's tribulation, we understand, were shortened to 1260 years, (Rev. 12: 6, 14—11: 2 and 13: 5); but times and laws were to remain in his hand during 1290 years, extending 30 years beyond the 1260. "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end." 45 years from the close of the 1290 make 1335 years, when Daniel will stand in his lot, which must be at the resurrection of the saints.

Christ, speaking of this desolating power—the papacy—says, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened,"—which marks a point previous to which the saints were taken out of the hands of the little horn power. Thus we perceive that 1260 years of the 1335 ended prior to the 19th of May, 1780, when the sun was darkened. Add 75 years to 1260 and you have 1335 years, which must end before May 19th, 1855, according to the evidence from the darkening of the sun. But we have abundant historical evidence that the papal power, i. e. the abomination that maketh desolate, was set up in 519, hence the 1335 days (years) end in 1854, which brings the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the saints the present year.

SAMUEL PAGE.

WATERBURY, CT., May 1st, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I will say for the encouragement of the Brn. and Sisters, that the Lord has greatly blessed the efforts of a few humble souls in this place. A goodly number have been aroused from their slumbers, others have come in at the eleventh hour, are washing their robes and making them white in the blood of the Lamb, ready to be presented without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, when the Bridegroom comes. Ten have followed Christ in baptism, and more expect too soon. Our meetings increase in interest and numbers. Many are convinced of the truth, who, I greatly fear, will put off the preparation until it is too late, and to whom it will be said "Ye knew your duty, but ye did it not;" for Christ has said "Except ye forsake all and follow me, ye cannot be my disciples;" and "He that is ashamed of me and my words, of him will the Son of man be ashamed before His Father and the holy angels."

Let us gird on the whole armor in this last hour of the conflict; make the last sacrifice, slay the last Isaac, that we may have nothing to look back to, like Lot's wife. Let us see to it that our treasure is all in heaven; then we shall be sure of a home there eternally, away from the cares, perplexities, and turmoils of this ungodly world.

C. H. A.

SALMON BROOK, AROOSTOOK Co., ME., June 2d, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I feel that we need much of the grace of God to keep us from the snares of the Devil which are laid to entrap our feet, and to lead us astray from the love of God. There are no advent meetings in this place. I should like to have an opportunity to meet with those of like precious faith, who are looking for Christ to appear in the clouds of heaven this year, to take his weary children home, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. My desire and prayer to God is, that I may be found ready and waiting for His coming and kingdom, and at last hear the welcome plaudit, "come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." I thank the Lord that I have the privilege of reading the Crisis from time to time. That the Lord may aid you, and enable you to continue to publish abroad the solemn midnight Cry, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in hope.

JOHN F. CHURCHILL.

GREENFIELD, April 23, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—Your paper is a treasure to me. It is like a genial shower to parched ground to see it come with that Christian love from so many of God's despised children scattered through the land, all rejoicing in the belief that we shall see our Savior this year. We have a small band here in Greenfield, that are expecting the kingdom of Christ will be set up soon.

"What manner of persons ought we to be in words, and thoughts, and deeds, and lives unspotted from the world, so that that day will not come upon us unawares. I hope we, in this place, shall so live that we never shall bring a reproach upon the cause of Christ; and that we may be found worthy to join all the heavenly throng in the land of rest, where Christ will ever be. Brothers and Sisters all over the land, be faithful. Let us be faithful to our families and friends, and neighbors, to warn them to be ready to go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Then we shall cease to warn our dear children; we can offer no more prayers for them. O let us work while the day lasts, that we may bring our sheaves with us into the store-house of our blessed Redeemer.

Yours, hoping for eternal life when Jesus comes,

D. W. SPEAR.

CHELCY, July 18th, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—I would say to all that look for Jesus' coming according to the scriptures, that we had a refreshing season at our tent meeting in Levant, Me. It was attended with a large gathering of saints from different portions of that region of country. A harmonious spirit prevailed, while we were blest with the word of God, and warm prayers for the church and the conversion of souls. The exhortations also, were warm and comforting. Much good was done, I trust. It was thought to be one of the best meetings we have ever had in Maine. At the close, on Monday morning, we repaired to the water side for baptism, and being seated on the beautiful green, on the low banks of a small stream, listened to a short discourse on the subject of baptism, and then arose, prayed, and six happy souls were buried in baptism. I then felt that I must take my leave of the brethren for Wisconsin in company with Bro. Ross. We were reminded of the parting of the saints in Paul's day, while they fell on our necks and wept, not knowing that we should ever see one another again. Since the close of that meeting, we have heard of one conversion, and another came into the faith, rejoicing in hope of seeing Jesus this year. Glory to God, Amen.

Yours, waiting,

ISRAEL DAMAN.

PINE MEADOW, CONN., June 14, '54.

Dear Brother Merriam:—There are a few in this place that are looking for Jesus, and love his appearing. And we feel like taking heed to the sure word of prophecy, which is as a light that shines in a dark place, until the day dawns and the day-star arises in our hearts. I feel to praise God for the light that shines on the prophetic numbers. "The Midnight Cry in mercy sounds." The proclamation is going far and near, and I believe it will till Jesus comes to take his waiting children home.

It is a blessed thought to me that we are, if faithful, so soon to realize the enjoyment of home in all its blessedness.—Brethren and Sisters, cheer up, the land is nearing; a little time from this and we shall be free; yes, praise the Lord, free from sickness, sorrow, pain and death. A little while, and those of our friends who now are laid away beneath the cold clods of the valley, will awake and sing the conqueror's song on the fair plains of Eden. We soon, if faithful, shall meet them to part no more forever. Yes, we are almost home; soon we shall wave the palms of victory, and have that crown that never will fade away. Let us, one and all, gird anew the armor on, and strive to overcome.

Your sister, looking for Jesus soon,

LORENA GRISWOLD.

The Signs of the Times.

Christ on one occasion came into the coasts of Magdala; and the Pharisees and Sadducees came and desired him that he would show them a sign from heaven.—He refers them to signs, that they looked at which foretold the state of the weather, then declares,—"O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?"

In taking a survey of God's government, and his dealings with the children of men, it will be found that each generation living on the eve of important changes, or events, have had signs and premonitions that some change or great event was about to occur. At Christ's first Advent, there was evidence sufficient to convince all that would be convinced, that a great event was to take place; that the Messiah was to be born in the town of Bethlehem, and was to be called Immanuel. But as it has been in all generations past, when great events were to occur, some believed, others (and a majority too,) closed their eyes to all the signs, and hardened their hearts, and would not believe; so it was then, while there were some that discerned the signs of the times and waited for the consolation of Israel; others disbelieved,—and most of them the professed children of God,—the heirs of his promise,—yea, some were masters in Israel, and assumed to be correct expounders of the law, and the interpreters of prophecy, and as such ought not only to have "discerned the signs of the times," but also to sound the alarm, and give the necessary instruction; and because of their rejecting these evidences, the people were led to err, and place their faith in the Masters, the Scribes, the Pharisees, &c. Hence arose the enquiry, "Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees believed on him." (i. e., Christ,) John 7: 48. From this rejection of the signs of these days, by the great and learned, we may learn an important lesson,—viz: to take heed how we reject the signs of the last days. Now the signs that we shall endeavor to bring to your mind, that were to be in the last days, could not belong to the Jews; and those of that time, in which our Saviour lived, inasmuch as he declared that to that "wicked and adulterous generation should no sign be given, but the sign of the Prophet Jonas: for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." We shall not then refer you to Christ's first Advent, neither to the destruction of Jerusalem, while we speak of the signs; but we shall turn your attention to the last great day—the day of the Lord,—the day of Judgment,—the day that shall burn as an oven,—the day that ought to interest all—the children of God especially, inasmuch as in that day, to which the signs refer, we are to receive a reward, an heavenly inheritance, a crown of glory, which will be given to all that love his appearing. Suffice it to say, that the scriptures have been fulfilled, in reference to our Saviour's birth, life, work, death, burial and resurrection; and while the Pharisees refused to exercise that faculty which they possessed of discerning or believing the signs, we see a striking similarity existing between professors of religion who lived at the period of the Saviour's first Advent, and some now living on the eve of our Saviour's second Advent. In Paul's second letter to the Thessalonians, 2d chapter, he teaches them that the "day of Christ shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." Has this falling away come?—Has the man of sin taken his place in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God? I answer; he has. The falling away to which the Apostle alludes has been fulfilled in the Church. Rome aspired to supremacy and established her popes to rule in the temple of God, or the Church; thus the pope sits in the temple of God, "showing himself that he is God." Do you ask how? He claims to be God's vice-gerent, to pardon sin, give indulgence to sin, or in other words to do those things which God hath forbidden. We have only to look at the history of the Roman Church to convince us that there has been a falling away from the principles of the Bible; bringing in heresies and doctrines which the Bible never taught—but which have been the seeds from which infidelity, deism and atheism have sprung; yea, and the worshiping of dead saints, and the pictures of Apostles, and the Virgin Mary, which is no more nor less than idolatry.—What a falling away there has been from the teachings of the Bible! And if it were confined to the Church of Rome it would not seem so deplorable; but, oh where are the churches that surround us? They declare that Christ did not die, only his body, when the Bible says Christ did die that we might live; they declare that all men will live forever, either in misery or happiness, when God declares that the wicked shall perish, &c.

We have not brought to view all we might relative to the falling away, and the exalting of the man of sin; but we trust the reader will see that there has been such an event accomplished in the history of the Romish Church. In the 24th of Matt. Christ tells us of the signs which were to precede his coming. He brings to view the tribulation wherein the Church was to be hated for Christ's sake. And here I would remark, this cannot refer to the Jew, for the Jew never was hated for Christ's sake; but on the other hand, they hated and rejected Christ, calling him an impostor. I will not stop here to prove that this great tribulation commenced in any particular year; but I will throw out a few ideas, that the reader may look at the subject, as it has been presented by others more capable of instructing the reader than myself.

Here is an abomination of desolation brought to view, which corresponds to the prophecy of Daniel and the visions of John, on the Isle of Patmos, where the abomination was to rule over the saints of God. Daniel was informed that the period for this power to rule, should be for a "time, times, and a part," which was afterwards shown to him to be 1290 days. Christ says, "those days shall be shortened;" after this he shows it to John to be 1260 days, which proves the truth of Christ's words. Let no one therefore say the days were not shortened.

Now he says, "immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." Those days, according to Christ's words, must have ended prior to May 19, 1780; for then the sun was darkened. Let us look at the evidence touching this point. Mr. Stowe, in his history of Beverly, says,—"The sun rose clear, but soon assumed a brassy hue. About 10 A. M., it became unusually dark. The darkness continued to increase till about 1 o'clock, when it began to decrease.—During this time candles became necessary. The birds disappeared and were silent; the fowls went to roost; the cock crew as at day-break, and every thing bore the appearance and gloom of night." Gage, in his history of Rowley, Mass., says, "The darkness was such as to cause the farmers to leave their work in the fields and retire to their dwellings," and "the darkness continued through the day." Hon. Wheeler Martin says, "Where he resided the darkness was so great at 11 A.M., that candles were lighted and placed on the table. The hens went to roost," &c. On the eve of the same day the darkness was supernatural, for the moon was full only the night previous. Mr. Tenney, of Exeter, N. H., says, "I could not help conceiving, at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been enshrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete."—Some have declared, that these signs refer to the destruction of Jerusalem, and that they were seen previous to its destruction. But this cannot be; for Matthew and Mark expressly say, the signs were to be "after the tribulation;" so you cannot call the tribulation the destruction of Jerusalem, then the darkening of the sun a sign of that tribulation, for it was not to be till after the tribulation, and the signs of an event always precede that event, not follow after; neither does history show the fulfilment of the declaration till May 19, 1780. Let me present an extract of a sermon by A. Farmer, published in Danvers, Mass., in 1780.—Text, Amos, 8: 9, "And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and will darken the earth in a clear day."

My friends and countrymen,—The late wonderful and unusual darkness on the 19th of May last, struck the inhabitants of this State with horror and amazement, and at the same time, filled them with alarming apprehensions. Yea, the very brutes seemed greatly agitated. If so, could a thinking being sit unmoved, while he beheld the sun (that splendid luminary, whose bright beams of light afford the utmost joy to the beholders,) veiled in darkness at noon-day? To view nature dressed in mourning attire; the earth enveloped in darkness; the husbandmen returning from the fields in great surprise; the midnight sentinels crowing in answer to each other; the dismal dire of peeping frogs; the night birds singing forth their dreary notes; the beasts gazing in wild consternation, every countenance seemed to gather blackness; yea, a dismal gloom, which filled the beholder with fear and astonishment, waiting with much anxiety for some great event. In fine, the darkness was such as we nor our fathers never saw its equal.

* * * * * *

If it be granted, (as doubtless it may,) that the late darkness of the sun and moon was from the force of natural causes, moving and operating in an unusual manner, or could we investigate ever so many true causes, for the solution of this strange phenomenon, yet it will still remain that it was the Lord's doings, and it was marvellous in our eyes. Nature's God hath given the power of motion and operation to natural causes, and always co-operates with them, otherwise they would effect nothing; clouds and darkness are about him; stormy winds, hail and snow fulfilling his word. All the elements are at His disposal, ready to obey his sovereign command. He maketh darkness, causeth the vapors to ascend, and doth whatever he pleaseth. As the late darkness must be allowed to be the effect of Divine Power, from hence it follows that we should take notice of such a great and memorable event. Not to be moved with circumstances, to have no apprehensions of danger, must argue the greatest stupidity imaginable. The Divine Being has some great and noble end by this dispensation, which becomes us to search out and promote. We may rationally suppose some singular judgment will follow; and this may be the very beginning of sorrows. We have many evidences that these are the latter days; the scriptures are daily, literally fulfilling. My friends, we have lately been carried through a short and unexpected night, and the shadow of death is turned into morning, and we have another opportunity to repent. Such an unusual judgment is sufficient to convince us that God is angry; and if we turn not, he will perhaps destroy, or give us up to hardness of heart, to treasure up wrath against the day of wrath.

Let us often call to mind the thoughts which in that dismal hour possessed our breasts. Some apprehended the Bridegroom was coming, and soon expected to see the heavens on fire over their heads, and the great cause of all approaching to take vengeance on those who obeyed not his gospel.

Do we find ourselves prepared for such an event? Was the prospect delightful? Did we judge ourselves prepared to stand before the Judge of all the earth? Doubtless this was the case with some. But were there not a far greater number who shrunk back and were filled with horror at the thought of entering into eternity!—Some perhaps were on their knees begging for a longer time. God has been better to them than their fears imagined, and granted their request. May we consider this world as not our home, that we are propationers for eternity. May we be reconciled to God through Christ, having a part in the merits of his death and sufferings; so that when he He shall appear, who is the believer's life, we may appear with him in glory. Finally, let us strive to live in peace, that the God of peace may be with us always, by which we shall be enabled, in that amazing scene, of a dissolving world, when our ears will be saluted with the dismal sound of rending rocks, quaking rocks, bursting tombs, and dissolving nature, to stand forth, unmoved, with calmness and serenity of mind, saying, 'This is our God, we have waited for him, now we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.'

Lastly, may we take suitable notice of the late dispensation; and let us turn to that God from whom we have so greatly fallen, so that we may be at peace, and his blessing may descend and rest upon us even life evermore. Amen."

We learn from this extract, that a great impression was made upon the minds of those living at that time, by the darkening of the sun and moon.

Permit me to give one more extract from a letter dated at Boston in 1780:—"Loving Brothers,—Inasmuch as we have so many undeniable proofs that the day of the Lord draws near, I think it more certified to us in the moon and stars being all smitten at once. No writing that I ever found, gave an account of such a thing before May 19th, 1780, neither can I find but one day and night of that uncommon darkness, mentioned in Scripture, previous to Christ's second coming. That these few lines may be a warning and a comfort to you is the hearty wish of your living brother, John Kennedy." He then quotes several passages of scripture, which he refers to May 19, 1780, viz: Is. 13: 6–10; Ezek. 32: 7; Joel 2: 31; 3: 15; Amos 5: 16, 17, 18. Never could there be a more correct fulfilment of scripture than has been in the darkening of the sun and moon immediately after the tribulation of the Church, when over fifty millions of Christians perished for the cause of Christ.

What is "Present Truth?"

There are many conflicting opinions in regard to this question. But it is a question of vast importance to all; and all should be equally interested in it.—There are many who entertain the idea, that all truth as revealed in scripture, has equally a present bearing on the Church; and in harmony with this view, they say, if we live as our fathers before us lived, we shall be saved as they were; but every reflecting mind will perceive at once, that such an idea is inconsistent; for if we refer to the case of Noah and others, we find that he would have disobeyed God, had he followed precisely in the track of those who lived before him. There was a "present truth," or a truth that had a present bearing on that generation; and those who had a knowledge of that truth, and its bearing, were prepared to act, and make their escape; while those who knew not the then "present truth," were unprepared for the emergency; so that the flood came and took them all away, and thus they were "destroyed for lack of knowledge."

By this it will clearly appear, that that portion of divine truth which is being unfolded to the world, might be called present truth: that portion which has reference to the past, may be denominated historical truth; while that which refers to the future, may be called prophetic truth.—There are, then, three classes of divine truth, past, present and future. This arrangement shows that God never designed to bring out all His truth for one generation; but to unfold it gradually to successive generations, and thus let the light shine "more and more unto the perfect day." Thus each truth, as it is unfolded to the Church, becomes "present truth" for the generation then living; and this is the truth that develops the true moral condition of every man. It is important, then, that there should be an understanding of the "present truth" in every age; for on that truth the Church is to act. If their arrangement of truth is wrong, their action will be wrong. The Jewish Church had a wrong arrangement of truth at the first Advent. They were willing to adhere to the ordinances observed by their fathers; but were not willing to change their stereotype course. They had set their stakes, and were not willing to remove them: the Lord was unfolding His truth, but they could not receive it. After entreating them by His servants, for a long time, to open their hearts to the reception of light, as it was being developed, and finding they "rejected the counsel of God against themselves," He gave them over to hardness of heart and blindness of mind;" but inasmuch as the mercy of God endureth forever, the car of salvation moved on. If they refused to execute the purposes of God, as instruments in His hand, they were laid aside. Those individuals, however, that are doing His will "know of the doctrine;" and hearing the voice of the good Shepherd, they must follow Him, although by so doing, they leave their mother church in the rear: for the Lord hath established their goings. Before the mighty Sanhedrim of the Jewish nation, they appear utterly contemptible; yet they persevere until "Jerusalem is filled with their doctrine;" and being imbued with "power from on high," they are prepared to proclaim the unvarnished truth, and that this is the very Christ, and that through Him, and Him only could there be remission of sins, and the resurrection of the dead. This was cutting to the Jewish Church indeed; for they were guilty of His crucifixion, and had said, "Let His blood be upon us, and on our children;" and when they saw these ignorant and unlearned men stand up and say, "There is no other name given under heaven whereby we must be saved," it appeared to them no doubt uncharitable in reference to those who had borne the burden and heat of the day. That God exercises a special care over the Church, to notify them of coming events involving their welfare, is seen in the announcement made to the Jews of their coming King. The mission of John the Baptist was intended "to prepare a people for the Lord" at His first Advent.

But all this was disregarded by the Jews. God sent His judgments upon them for the rejection of the knowledge that He had offered; so that they were "destroyed for lack of knowledge."—They had rejected knowledge, and therefore God rejected them; as is represented in Hosea, 4: 6. The Savior, in Luke 21: 20, gave the Church the sign of Jerusalem's destruction, at sight of which they were to leave the city. This was a test to the disciples that dwelt in the city. It proved whether they believed the Master's sayings or not; and there was a risk to run, they being under the necessity of leaving brothers and sisters, houses and lands, and going out into the mountains.—Here was a sacrifice to make; this was acting out the then "present truth;" for connected with every "present truth," there has been a sacrifice to be made.—Those who would not heed the instructions given by the Savior, could not avoid developing their true moral character. They might say they loved God, and were the children of God, and of Abraham, yet they were in the sight of God reckoned with murderers, and were guilty of the blood of Christ. The first house of Israel stumbled over Him, and made light of the blessings that were offered them, in accordance with Is. 8: 14, "He shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling, and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel; for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem." Now as His coming was to be a stone of stumbling to both the houses, the question comes up, how did the first house stumble? It was for lack of knowledge. True, but knowledge of what? Knowledge of the manner of His coming. Who says so? Ans. Inference. What cause does inspiration give? Luke 19: 44. "And shall lay thee even with the ground, thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the TIME of thy visitation."

Was the time for His first Advent revealed? It was. (Dan. 9: 25.) Did they know the [illegible] of their visitation? [illegible] answer, they did, to a certain extent; for when Herod "demanded of them where Christ should be born, they said unto him, in Bethlehem of Judea." Matt. 2: 5. They understood, 1st, that He was to be born—2d, that He was to be born in Bethlehem of Judea. Why could they not say this was the Christ? Because many others had been born there. The only way in which they could know for certainty that Jesus was the Christ, was by knowing the time when He was to appear. Thus their house was left unto them desolate," because they knew not the time of their visitation." God grant, we may not "fall through the same example of unbelief."

As we pass down the path of the Church, we find the come-out company walking in the light, and willing to embrace all additional truth that may be unfolded as they advance in the path of the just, until the great mass are corrupted by the falling away which the Apostle said should come. When they depart from the simplicity of the word, they next set themselves at work to ascertain "who we are." They now commence to set down their stakes, and draw up their articles of faith. They can then say, "this is our platform." They can mark out their boundary to be seen by all—can say what shall, and what shall not be admitted. As the Lord is still unfolding truth to the Church, it becomes necessary from time to time, to admit additional light, and thus change her position. To effect this, a Council must be called, to ascertain whether this new development of truth shall be received. In all such cases, the majority rules; and as the majority do not live in that close communion with God, that would enable them to see the light as it is developed, they of course must reject it. Then those who see the light must move onward with it; for they "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." They must not reject the light; for on the rejection of light condemnation follows. Thus they leave the mother Church again in the rear. The mass of the Church having rejected one truth, recede from the light, and thus become better prepared to resist the truth which may hereafter be developed, till they become stereotyped in their faith. Thus the Lord has called out His people at different times, and the movement of the Church has been in a manner similar to this through its entire history. On looking back we discover the different positions at which portions of the Church have stopped, like so many railroad stations through which the car of truth has passed. The true disciples of Christ have advanced with the advancing train through the various stations, until they have arrived near the last depot which is the terminus of their pilgrimage. The Lord has given the Church the means of knowing when the king is coming: He informs them that the sun should be darkened, and tells them when. It was to be immediately after the tribulation. That being in the past, demonstrates that the darkening of the Sun in 1780, was the identical event referred to by our Savior.

Again; the moon should not give her light, and the stars should fall from heaven; and after the appearance of these signs the Church was to know that the kingdom was nigh, even at the door. Then will be the time to call them which are bidden to the marriage supper, as brought to view in Luke 14: 17. "And sent his servant at supper time, to say to them that were bidden, come, for all things are now ready." There is a clear analogy between this proclamation, and that to the Jewish house. It was said to them, "I have prepared my dinner, and all things are ready; come to the marriage." But the first house did not heed the call, neither does the [illegible]. "They all with one consent began to make excuse." No matter how much they had been at variance on other points, they unanimously agree on this; [illegible] receive the [illegible].

When the servants of Christ [illegible] light on the coming of the Lord in 1843 [illegible]

they went to their Mother Churches with the glad tidings that the supper was ready; but strange as it may appear, there was not one of all the sects that was ready, as a body, to receive the message. It was not because the servants did not give them proof on their position; but they say, "I pray thee have me excused." They did not want to see their Lord, and have the marriage supper celebrated. They loved their farms, their oxen and their wives more than they did the things of the Kingdom. "So that servant came and showed his Lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry, said to his servants, go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind." This was the first going out of the servants; for they went in before to call them that were bidden. But this call was rejected. No doubt the servants were disappointed; for the supper was not celebrated. The professed bride had made her excuses;—she would not come, and the true servant's heart was sad, as facts demonstrated in 1843; but yet he goes out in search of a bride that will deal kindly and truly with the master. He is required to go out into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in the maimed, the halt and the blind; and this is to be done quickly, which was fulfilled in the movement of the church in 1844. It was the going out from opposing combinations, with the expectation of meeting their Lord at a specific point of time; but they were disappointed; for He tarried. Their hope was deferred, and they all "slumbered and slept." But the work was not yet all accomplished; they had called them that were bidden, they had gone out once, and the servants say, "it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room; and the Lord said, "go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled."—This is the last going out required of the Church, and I fear that many will fall here; for this is the last trial of the Church before their final deliverance comes. But they must go out, if it take a right eye; for God requires it; and it is plainly marked in the prophetic word. It will be fulfilled in their history. Let not those, who have been out once, draw back in this perilous moment. It was definite time that moved the Church in '44; and it can be nothing short of definite time, that will move the Church in '54.

But, says one, the Savior says in Mark 13: 33, "Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is;" and how can it be that the Church should go out on definite time, seeing they know not when it is? But mark; Christ does not say, ye never shall know; but requires them to watch and pray because they did not then know, which, at least, implies if they do watch and pray, they will know the time. To illustrate this; a man sends his children to school, because they know not how to read, not because they never will know, but by this means he designs they should learn how. So the Lord designed, that by means of watching and praying, the Church should ascertain beforehand "the time of their visitation."—The Angel says to Daniel, "the words are sealed till the time of the end." Dan. 12: 9.

Here are certain words closed up and sealed. This clearly demonstrates the principle on which God has revealed His truth, as before referred to; for this subject of which the Angel was speaking, was not intended to benefit the Church in successive ages, but in the winding up of the last generation; and when the seal is taken off from those words, then they will become "present truth" to the Church, that which requires the action of the Church at this time. Then, in order to settle what that will be, we have only to determine what was the import of the Angel's words, which were sealed up. The man clothed in linen was interrogated by one of the saints, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" He answered the question, and this answer was not then to be understood, but was sealed up. When this is developed, in the time of the end, it will be "present truth" to the Church in the closing scenes of her history.

May the Lord help us to be established in the "present truth," that we may go out with an unfaltering step, and meet the Bridegroom this year.

The World's Crisis.

Lowell, August 9, 1854.

The Doctrine of Natural Immortality.

But we have been so traditionated to believe there is something in man which survives the death of the body, that the question will come up again and again, is there not some immortal principle connected with his organization? If so, where is it to be found? Is it in the soul, or spirit.

I was forcibly struck with a remark made by Prof. Bush, in his highly classical work on the resurrection, in reference to the original term rendered soul. Although attempting to prove the immortality of the soul, he frankly admits that there is nothing in the original word rendered "soul," which necessarily implies that it is immortal; for the same word is applied to beasts, as well as to man; "but," he adds, "it is made immortal by its connection with the pneuma, or spirit." But on consulting his criticism upon the original word rendered "spirit," he admitted that that also was, in one instance, applied to BEASTS. This of course overthrew his entire position.

The Bible nowhere intimates that man is endowed with an immortal spirit. Turn to Job, and you will see clearly the Bible representation of this subject, ch. 33: 4, "The spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the almighty hath given me life," as presented in the creation. Ch. 34: 14, 15, "If He set His heart upon man, if He gather unto himself His spirit, and His breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust."—This makes the subject plain, and indubitable. It is not, as tradition asserts, that by taking away his breath, the body returns to dust; and by taking away his spirit, it ascends to glory; the scriptural sentiment is, by taking his spirit and breath man perishes and returns again to dust.—How lucid and unequivocal this view becomes, presented in the simple light of divine truth! Read Job 14, and if possible you will find the light still clearer. He represents the entire destruction of man by a striking similitude, viz: that there is less hope of surviving in the case of man, than of the fallen tree; for that may possibly have some offshoots, that will spring forth into life; but for man there is no hope till the resurrection. While under the dominion of death, he is like a flood of waters, which evaporate and are not to be found. What could be more expressive? "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not, v. 21. This puts an end forever to all the superstition and folly about apparitions and legendary tales concerning haunted houses, &c., &c., with which the world is filled. Read Job, ch. 3, and the subject seems more positive and unambiguous still;—"Why died I not from the womb? why did I not give up the ghost when I came out of the belly? Why did the knees prevent me? or why the breasts that I should suck? For now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest.—With kings and counsellors of the earth, which built desolate places for themselves; Or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver: Or as an hidden, untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light." Here we find him saying, if he had died in infancy, he would have been, (not in heaven according to the current theology, but) AT REST; and reposing with as much quietude as the nobles and monarchs of the earth who erected splendid mausoleums for their final resting place, or as an "untimely birth," he would not have been i. e., would HAVE NO EXISTENCE. Had Job died in infancy, then according to the dominant theology of our day, he must have gone directly to the realms of glory: but if this were his belief, how can we conceive he would talk so differently from modern theologians? Why not refer to the blessedness of heaven, to the choirs of angelic harpers, and the radiant glories of the celestial land?—Why not describe the scenery of the enchanting landscape, or the bursting splendors of unclouded day, instead of presenting the dark and gloomy picture of the tomb? Why delight to linger in his imagination in the recesses of everlasting night, amid all the horrors of unbroken silence in the domitories of the dead?—Why present a picture so revolting to human nature—so repulsive to every sensibility of the soul; and present it too as a matter of vehement desire, and self congratulation? O how triumphantly a modern author would have vaulted over the charnel-house—bounding away from earth and mounting as on wings of joy, till he reached the promised land—regaling himself with the crystal waters and the ambrosial fruits, and basking amid the sunbeams of an immortal paradise, and communing with the celestial hosts!!—True, this is all very delightful; but it lacks one element, and that is a Bible foundation.

In connection with this idea comes up the thought, why did not good old Samuel complain that his celestial joys were interrupted, and that he was annoyed by being recalled from the fruition of all the glories and songs of heaven, when raised by the witch of Endor? But no, not an intimation of the kind; but why hast thou disturbed my repose in the grave, and brought me up from my resting place? If the enchanting melodies of Zion had suddenly ceased to ravish his ear, and the glories of everlasting day had been suddenly extinguished from his enraptured vision, would he have forgotten all this, and thought of nothing but the decaying elements of the cast off clog? Would the loathsome clay have occupied more of his attention than the fruition of an immortal mind?

Again, when Rachel is comforted concerning her children, who fell as the first martyrs of the Christian faith,—the innocents of Bethlehem,—why did not the Prophet cite her to the joys of the redeemed to which those babes had now attained, instead of directing her to the end of this dispensation when the flock would be gathered, and sing on the height of Zion?—Then her beloved offspring would emerge from their dark prison-house—be delivered from the enemy death—and brought out of his dominion the grave—and return to the heavenly Canaan. Jer. 31.

Once more, when St. Paul was presenting consolation to the bereaved Brn. and Sisters of the Thessalonian Church, and offering reasons why they should not sorrow as those who have no hope, how singular that he did not remind them, that their beloved friends, at their decease, had been ushered into the presence of their adorable Redeemer—the object of their hope—the centre of their desires—the fountain of their joys!!! Had he forgotten the golden harps, the immortal vestments, the radiant crowns? But not a word of all this. They were consoled with the reflection, that as Jesus rose again, so those who sleep in Jesus (not reign with Him) shall God bring with Him. And lest his meaning should not be understood, he goes on to say that the living Saints will not have the pre-eminence in receiving the inheritance; but their endeared friends, whose loss they deplored, would rise on the descent of their Lord from heaven, and thus they would be reunited to their friends, and all ascend together to meet the Lord; "wherefore," says he, "comfort one another with THESE words." The expression "shall God bring with Him," is to be interpreted as we interpret a similar expression in Rom. 8: 17, "If so be that we suffer with Him that we may be also glorified together." We suffer with Him not in point of time, but manner; i. e. we do not suffer when He did, but as He did.

I think, dear reader, if you have candidly and prayerfully considered this subject thus far, you will perceive the theology of the day to be amazingly out of joint—at a vast remove from Bible truth—and on this point, if no other, the structure needs to be taken down; and being remodeled after the pattern shown in the mount, to be re-erected upon a Bible foundation. The theology of our times gives retribution both to saint and sinner at death; but Jesus told His disciples they should "be recompensed at the RESURRECTION OF THE JUST;" and in Rev., "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." Job wished to be hid in the grave until the appointed time when his change to immortality should come; and David expected to be satisfied when he awoke in Christ's likeness, and the dying thief desired to be remembered when Christ should come "into His kingdom;" and Paul expected the crown "in that day," and told the Thessalonian brethren they would be established in holiness "at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ;" and Peter told the elders they would receive a crown of glory "when the Chief Shepherd should appear;" and Paul says the saints will find rest when Jesus is revealed, and the wicked are "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord;" and both will be at the personal revelation of Christ from heaven, &c., &c. Now I feel assured, no candid mind can examine this subject without perceiving the discrepancy between human teaching and divine. Still, I am aware how difficult it is to unlearn the instructions of early life. It is hard drawing nails that are driven, and clinched, and corroded too. It requires effort to break from an apartment in which we have been confined by bars, and bolts, and barricades that seem impregnable. Must all the beautiful delineations of poetic fancy be regarded as visionary? Must the apparently strong castles, built by giant minds, be regarded as "the baseless fabric of a vision," and "leave not a wreck behind?" Must all the theories of good men yield to the authority of the word? Must the traditions of our fathers be swept away by the power of Scripture truth? True, it is hard giving up long-established prepossessions and educational prejudices; but, says the wise man, "Buy the truth and sell it not."

But still it will be inquired again, does not some constituent element of the man survive the dissolution of the body?—Well, let us look at it more minutely. It will be admitted, that the body with its animal propensities—the mind with its intellectual endowments—and the heart with its moral sensibilities constitute man. In relation to the body, there is no question. In relation to the mind, says the Psalmist, Ps. 146: 4, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth. In that very day his thoughts perish." Says Solomon, "the dead know not any thing." If they have neither thoughts nor knowledge, where is the mind? In relation to the heart, says the wise man, Eccl 9: 6, "Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished." If they have neither hatred nor love, where are their moral susceptibilities? But after all, is there not consciousness somewhere, or somehow? Job 14: 21, "His sons come to honour and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." This passage, together with Eccl. 9: 4-6 shew they have no interest, nor knowledge, nor concern with the affairs of this life most assuredly, and Ps. 88: 10-12, shews them incapable of appreciating the wonders of divine love, and Is. 38: 18, 19, draws the contrast between the living and the dead by saying, "The dead cannot praise thee; but the living, THE LIVING he shall praise thee as I do this day;" and David says, (Ps. 29: 13), "O spare me that I may recover my strength before I go hence, and be" (not in glory, but) "be no more." I know men say these expressions relate to the body; but that is a mere evasion. They are not at all applicable to the bodily powers; they allude to acts of divine worship, which are predicated of the spirit—to the knowledge of earthly and spiritual affairs, which are predicated of the mind, and to moral affections, which are predicated of the heart. If then the physical frame reverts back to dust, and all knowledge of affairs human and divine is lost, and all moral affections obliterated, and the man departs "to be no more," where is there, or where can there be consciousness in any degree?

CORRESPONDENCE.

Boscoe, Hancock Co., Ill., July 25, 1854.

Bro. Merriam,—Since I wrote you, June 19th, we have had refreshing times. Our weekly conference meeting has been more than usually interesting. Bro. Burnham and Morgan's visit was one of thrilling moment to many. Bro S. Chapman remained with us after their departure in waiting for bro. Litch.

On Saturday and Sunday, July 1 and 2, Bro C. was with us. It being our regular church meeting, nine individuals identified themselves with the church of Adventists here in Boscoe. Three followed the Lord in baptism, and there are several more who will identify themselves the first opportunity.

The 3d Sabbath in July, bro. S. Chapman was with the St. Albans Church—had a refreshing time—four came forward and indentified themselves with the St. Albans Brn. Bro. C. is a faithful watchmen, giving meat in due season, preaching the signs of the times even down to the present. He has done and is still doing a great work; but he cannot supply but a very inconsiderable portion of this vast western field. He has pressing calls from Iowa, Missouri and different sections of Illinois. Would to God that brn. Burnham and Morgan could be induced to become missionaries in this vast field, the few days that may possibly yet be ours in probation.

July 19th, according to expectation, bro. Litch came and preached in a grove at Boscoe; and again, in the evening, at our usual place of worship, to a very attentive and interested congregation. Thursday he left for St. Albans, occupying the same grove where a few weeks before we had listened to the soul-stirring and overpowering appeals of brn. B. and M. Bro. Litch had a good hearing, although in the most busy and pressing time of business which Illinois farmers ever know. He was very plain, intelligent and comprehensive upon the subjects presented. Nothing but bigotry and prejudice could stand between him and the admission of most of the conclusions to which he arrived; he dwelt much upon the promises of God. May his hearers not only be persuaded of them, but "embrace them and confess that they are pilgrims and strangers, looking for a better that is an heavenly country."

Bro. Litch and Chopman left on the 29th for Pike County. We feel thankful for these "Angel visits," though "few and far between;" we love to hear of a crucified Saviour, a risen Redeemer, a soon coming King, whose "dominion shall be from the river even unto the ends of the earth." May God continue in his good providence to send such preachers as "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." May the God of truth be with you to keep you in every temptation and trial, until the whole redeemed family sit together in the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

Adrian, Mich., July 27th, 1854.

To our Brethren and Sisters in the East:—As those who would like to hear from us in our wanderings in the West are numerous, and scattered over a considerable extent of territory, we thought of no better way of reporting ourselves than through the medium of the Crisis.

Monday, July 17th, we left Portland, calculating to proceed directly on to Wisconsin, but after arriving at Boston, and making the prerequisite arrangements for our journey, we felt that God would have us return to Salem and attend the tent meeting in that place, which we accordingly did. This meeting was one, to us, truly interesting. There we met with some whose faces were familiar, who by their fidelity have proved themselves friends to the best of all causes. Others, with whom we never met until then, whose faith has been spoken of throughout the world, we had the happiness of forming a Christian acquaintance with. It was truly refreshing to see so many lovers of truth together, who are willing to sacrifice all for the kingdom of God. Saturday afternoon we took our leave of them and returned to Boston, where we had previously engaged to spend the following Sabbath with the Advent church worshipping at Chapman Hall.

There are a few names, we trust, in Boston, who have not defiled their garments; and if faithful a little longer, will walk with Jesus in white. Monday, July 24th, left Boston for the West in the 9 o'clock train of cars, arrived in Buffalo, N. Y., 30 minutes past 7 A. M. Tarried there until evening, and then started again for Adrian, Mich., reached this place July 26th, at 1 o'clock P. M., in comfortable health, though much fatigued. Here we are cordially received by Bro. Rich and companion, who are rejoicing in hope of speedy redemption. This evening we calculate to resume our journey for Wisconsin, trusting in him who has said, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the consummation of the world." We hope to have the prayers of the Church, that a door of utterance may be opened; and that we may be saved from "wicked and unreasonable men: for all men have not faith."

More hereafter, I. Damman, A. Ross.

P. S. Will Bro. Jonathan Worthen of Wisconsin, inform Bro. Damman where he resides by writing him. Direct to Dunn, Dane Co., Ancient P. O., in care of Josiah Douglass, Wis. A. Ross.

She Sleeps in Jesus.

Bro. Merriam:—Yesterday I was called to the funeral of Sister Abigail, wife of Bro. Samuel Rogers of Stow, Mass. She fell asleep sweetly in Jesus, July 24, after a long and lingering sickness, consumption.

In the former part of her sickness, she was evidently unreconciled to her fate, and of course unprepared for the solemn scene that so nearly awaited her. But as she drew near the close of this mortal life, she became aware of her situation; and looking away to that Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, she cut loose and gave up all her idols, yielding herself fully a living sacrifice. Then, with calm resignation, and cheerful hope, she could bid adieu to all below, and say with Paul, "I am now ready to be offered." Now taking the companion of her youth by the hand for the last time, with strong consolation to both, she could say, Farewell. Her children, five in number, she could take one by one, and with a mother's strongest love, could beseech them by the goodness of her Lord to yield a speedy submission to the claims of the Gospel, so as to meet their mother in the Kingdom of glory. She thus commended them to the God of all grace, who is "able to build them up, and give them an inheritance among the sanctified."

Her faith was strong in the soon coming of her blessed Lord; and her last work was to warn and beseech her friends and neighbors to get ready for that great day.

She could, and did "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory," saying, "I shall go into the grave to sleep only a little while. Then the trump will sound, and I shall live again."

What a lively hope! The certainty that the dead in Christ will soon come forth, the living be changed, all winging their way to meet the Lord in the air, &c. "O glorious hope!" "O blest abode!"

In the name of my master Jesus, I would commend our dear, lonely, weeping Bro., with his mourning, motherless children, to Him who is the God of all comfort and consolation; and a present help in every time of trouble. God grant them such blessings as may make this sad affliction work for their good, and save them all in the Kingdom of life together. Amen.

Thy Bro. in hope,

Raymond, Me., Aug. 2, 1854.

Information Wanted. D. C. Wheeler, of Concord, N. H., is holding meetings and preaching the Second Advent doctrine in different parts of this State; and as certain reports are in circulation unfavorable to his character, said to come from brethren of unimpeachable reputation, therefore we wish that brethren who do know his present standing as a Christian, would give, through the Crisis, the information needed; and if his present standing is good, we want, not only every imputation removed, but every shadow of suspicion wiped away. Yours, &c. N. Staples.

The following letter will give what information we have just received from Concord. Ed.

Concord, N. H., Aug. 7, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—Bro. D. C. Wheeler was in our meeting yesterday, and made his confession before the whole congregation. He said that his course of life, previous to the last fifteen months, was bad, and that he was very wicked, but that he was and had been very sorry for the course he had taken in the past, and asked forgiveness of all that had aught against him. He says that for the past FIFTEEN MONTHS, he has done the best he could, and intends so to do. In reference to his life for the last fifteen months, WE know nothing why he has not done as he says. We do not know anything about it one way or the other, as he has not taken part in our meetings,* or indentified himself with the Advent people in Concord. We are not prepared to say anything, one way or the other, in reference to his life for the few months past.

T. H. Ford,
Oliver Hart,
John D. C. Wheeler.

*Bro Wheeler has been to our meetings, but he has not taken any part in them, that I am aware of, for the above specified time.

Oliver Hart.

TENT MEETING

There will be a Tent Meeting in Newburgh, Me., to commence Wednesday, Aug. 16, at 10 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. As the brethren in that place expect a large gathering of the saints, we hope all who can, will bring their tents, and be on the ground at an early hour, so that we can commence our meeting Wednesday morning. Brethren at and west of Portland, will proceed by steamboat to Hampden, where carriages will be in attendance to convey them to the ground. Boats run from Portland, Me., Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings. From Boston Tuesdays and Fridays. Bro. Couch and other preaching brethren, will attend. Boarding on the grorund. In behalf of the brethren. F. H Berick.

TENT MEETING at BODOWINGHAM, ME.

The Lord willing there will be a Tent Meeting in Bodowingham, Me, one mile from Harwood's Crossing, on the Portland and Kennebec Railroad, to commence Wednesday morning, August 23, and continue over the Sabbath. Provision for boarding and horse-keeping on the ground. Brethren who can had better bring their lodging tents. Bro. Berrick and other preaching Brethren are expected to be present.

J. Couch.

Those coming by Railroad will stop at Harwood's Crossing.

☞ The brethren abroad will be happy to learn that brethren Cummings and Berick had an interview in this city last week, and now have a mutual understanding of each other's views and feelings.

☞ A request has been made by Bro. S. J. Eaton for some of the laboring brn. to visit Southampton, N. H. Some interest to hear on the subject has been created in that place.

Cholera.

MARSEILLES, JULY 18. The cholera continues to commit great ravages in our city and its environs. The deaths yesterday were 167.—To-day, at eleven o'clock, 89 deaths were recorded at the Hotel de Ville. Upwards of 80,000 persons have left the city. Owing to the frightful epidemic now existing in the city, orders have been given for all the troops to embark at Toulon.

THE CHOLERA IN FRANCE. It is not generally known that for the last month cholera has been present in Paris; but such is the case — Through the interposition of the government, everything was done to keep the public in general ignorance of the fact, for fear of creating alarm, and influcing foreign states, who still believe in the exploded efficacy of quarantine, to put in force those absurd regulations with reference to vessels coming from an infected country. This was particularly felt with reference to the kingdom of Naples, the Italian States and Malta. A system of quarantine, at the present moment, would materially interfere with the military movements in the East. When ships and transports are daily—nay, almost hourly—calling at Malta, to have them detained there through absurd quarantine laws, would be very disastrous. Cholera, however, abides no man's time; it will not wait the convenience of any man. Notwithstanding the efforts which have been made to keep it under, it has within the last few days spread with a rapidity which renders its presence a secret impossible to be kept. In Paris there are daily a great many deaths, and their numbers are increasing. It has also broken out in fifteen departments, and in one of them more than 500 deaths have already taken place. It has also appeared in Genoa, and several of the northern Italian States.—[London Observer.

THE CHOLERA AT BARBADOES. The accounts from Barbadoes are to July 4th, at which time there was very little abatement of cholera on the island. At Bridgetown and St Michael's parish, where the disease had raged about six weeks, the deaths had been 4,678 out of a population of 34,344, which is about 13 per cent.—At Indian River the deaths were reported to have been 100 out of 167. The "West Indian" newspaper says:—

The pestilence is moving like a cloud up into the interior of the island. It has already spread over every part of the parish of St. Michael;—at Black Rock, Mylord's Hill, Hanson, Upton and Hastings, it has appeared, and nowhere with greater virulence than at Lower Berneys, where up to Friday last there were 22 deaths amongst the laborers. In the neighboring parish of St. George it has broken out at Gun Hill, among the artillery encamped there, among whom there have been 17 deaths; at Carmichaels, near Foster Lodge, in a place called Charley Rowe's Village, where there are several detached houses along the sides of a hill, where it has been most fatal.

In the Leeward Islands there is the greatest anxiety lest the dreadful disease should be introduced from Barbadoes; and steps such as seem best calculated to prevent it are taken in all of them; at the same time that the Board of Health adopt measures to provide for cleanliness and the preservation of the general health.—[Bos. Traveller.

THE CHOLERA AT ST JOHN, N. B. The cholera has created a panic in St. John, N. B. The report of deaths by the Board of Health for five days, from Tuesday to Sunday have been 20, 23, 24, 33 and 36—an aggregate of 136. The population of the city is about 30,000.—[Boston Bee.

WEST INDIES. A letter has been received by Mr Dennis Roberts, draper, of Doncaster, dated Barbadoes, June 11, which gives a frightful description of the ravages of the cholera. The writer states: we are now completely panic struck, the cholera in its most malignant form is raging among us, carrying off from two to three hundred a day. The deaths in the city amount to over 1,500, and are increasing.—Three or four days ago, our common gaol contained seventy prisoners, and at this time there are not more than ten alive. The disease has been principally confined to the black population, but its character is such that people are attacked and fall down in the public streets. It is truly horrifying to see the dead carts going about picking up the dead. Nor is it at all uncommon to behold six or seven corpses in each; some in rudely made coffins, and some in tarred sheets rolled up. Two hundred and fifty poor mortals were stowed away yesterday in a piece of land purchased for the purpose, which is the second piece, one already having been filled up, contaminating the atmosphere. The sexton, whose job it is to put away the dead, does wholesale business. He has large pits dug, and shoves them in fourteen at a time. This is an awful state of things."

LETTER FROM LONDON. [Correspondence of the Boston Traveller.] London, July 22.—The magnitude and uncertainty of the mighty struggle in the East, so covers, and, as it were, hides all other concerns, that the world seems to have its attention fixed upon that issue alone, to the exclusion of matters so important, that they would, at any other time, and under other circumstances, attract regards of the deepest interest. Among these, the episode involving the past, present and future of the kingdom of Greece, connected also as it is with, and bearing strongly upon, the main battle, holds a prominent place; and yet, amid the thrust and hurry of the principal action, seems to be strangely neglected by politicians and the press.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON. [Correspondence of the Boston Traveller.] London, July 22.—On Austria hinges the trim of the balance between a long or a shorter war—a war among four powers, or a war involving every nation in Europe. It is a frightful arbitrement for an enlightened age! As yet the aggressor has justly had the worst of it, and even in his finances feels the increasing pressure.—His loans are unnegotiable on the continent, and in England the aid of fifty roubles would be construable into high treason. In the north, his affairs wear no more auspicious aspect. We know not what a day may produce; every thing threatens an awful catastrophe.

LETTER FROM PARIS. [Correspondence of the Boston Traveller.] Paris, July 20, 1854.—The insurrectionary movement in Spain is spreading with the rapidity of lightning. Every day brings the news of another rising. The conflagration extends over the whole kingdom—in the East and the West, the North and South. Barcelona, Burgos, Saragossa, Valladolid, the Basque Provinces, Grenada, are all in arms against the Queen's Government. The Moniteur, which, until within the last few days, has been endeavoring to conceal the gravity of the occurrences in Spain, is now compelled, by the rapid progress of events, to register the unwelcome truth; the facts, however attenuated, disclose a precipice threatening to swallow up Queen Christiana and her daughter, if not royalty itself.

It is impossible, at this moment, to foresee the influence these events will exercise over the affairs of Europe, and the "Eastern Question." Whether instigated or not by the Emperor of Russia, they are certainly not destined to give "aid and comfort" to the Western Powers.—To the French Government the insurrection will be a "fire in the rear," which may reach this side of the Pyrenees. Already a certain trepidation is felt in "high quarters," whilst the gagged papers enumerate every day with an ill-concealed joy the exploits of the Revolutionists in Spain.

You may expect stirring times soon.

Later from Europe.

The War Progressing—Prince Paskiewitch Dead.

By the Alps at Boston, and by the Canada at Halifax August 1, we have seven days later news from Europe—four by the former, and three by the latter—dates to the 22d ult.—There had been a decline in cotton, breadstuffs &c.; and the harvest-prospects were good.—The Turks had been very successful. They had crossed the river in force, and attacked the Russians with success in various quarters.—The allied army was in motion towards the Danube, and would cross it, when a general engagement was expected; but if the Russians find themselves less than five to one in numbers, they will not risk a battle. Austria has not yet dared to offend the Czar, by ordering her troops to occupy the Principalities—she is urging negotiations for peace—and the Telegraph says that the Porte has requested that she will not hereafter. No news of interest from the fleets. The Morning Chronicle says that Sir Charles Napier has received permission to attack Cronstadt. All quiet in India. No news from China. In Spain the insurrection has become a revolution, and the insurgents are carrying all before them.

The following are the successive despatches by the telegraph:—

From Widdin, July 12th, we learn that the Turkish troops had crossed the Danube at several points, and occupied the principal places, in order to prevent the Russians from crossing the Aluta. The allies were in full march for the Danube on the 8th; only French troops had reached Rustchuk. The English were at Embeler, a little place midway between Shumla and Rustchuck.

The number of allied troops arrived from Shumla at Guirgevo is 20,000. The Turkish army, of 25,000, is advancing on Bucharest, in advance. Omar Pasha is said by the Presse to state his loss at Guirgevo on the 7th and 8th at 1700. The Russians at Frateschti are 70,000 with artillery, and continually being reinforced. It is said that while 6000 Russians were marching from Bucharest, one-half were struck down by sun strokes or inflammation of the brain.—The Russians are cutting down all the crops of wheat in Wallachia.

Private despatches at Paris state that the Turks under Omar Pasha have entered Bucharest. The Moniteur says, "that the army of Omar Pasha, with the English and French auxiliaries, amounts to at least 60,000 men; and that Prince Gortschakoff has 60,000 also; and that a battle between the two armies seems close at hand."

From Orsova it is stated that Mehmed Pacha defeated the Russian Brigade at Czarnavoda in the Dubrudcha, on the 8th, after five hours battle, and took possession of the place. On the 9th and 10th the Turks attacked Brigadier Pauloff and Soomnoff, with other Russian detachments, at Frateschti, north of Guirgevo.—The Russians were completely routed.

Three hundred persons had been arrested at St. Petersburg, in apprehension of an outbreak. In consequence of a dispute between the Czar and his heir, the latter will not join the army.

The Vienna Presse says: "We are informed that Prince Paskiewitch died on his journey in the neighborhood of Zytomir." This news is not authenticated.

Napier's fleet was at Alaar Island. The French expeditionary army of the Baltic will disembark provisionally in the Island of Zealand, and that Denmark will shortly abandon her neutrality.

Prussia and Austria, it is said, have asked France and England to state the conditions on which they are willing to conclude a peace.

A Russian party asserts that the "military operations of the allies are nearly at a stand still, and the attack on Sebastopol indefinitely postponed. An attack upon Cronstadt will not take place this year, and a great battle near Bucharest is problematical. Hostile operations are reduced to simple blockade, and in the end Russia will triumph by her diplomacy."

A private telegraphic despatch from Constantinople received in Paris, states that the Russians had met with a check near Batoum. 4000 Turks have been sent from Varna into Cercassia.

The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Chronicle says the Cabinets of Vienna and Berlin have communicated to the English and French governments that in their opinions the propositions concluded in the Russian answer, if not altogether satisfactory, appear to them calculated to serve as a basis for future negotiations, and they propose that Prague shall be fixed upon as the seat of further conferences. They moreover expressed an opinion that it will not be possible to call upon Russia to evacuate the Principalities, if it be not at the same time clearly understood that the allied powers shall stop all their movements in advance. In other words, Austria has fallen back into alliance with Russia. All the Austrian reserves are to be called out, and placed upon a war footing. Accounts from St. Petersburg state that the Czar is determined not to yield, but discontent prevailed in the capital.

The details received show that the recent victory at Giurgevo was achieved by the Turks unassisted, leaving the whole bank of the Danube, from Turna to Oltenitza, on their hands. The main body of the Turkish army is said to be marching towards the mouth of the Danube, leaving garrisons at Giurgevo and Czernavoda.

Excepting a handful of French at Giurgevo, none of the Anglo-French have yet been in action. The Anglo-French have repaired and occupied the Russian batteries at the Sulina mouth of the Danube, and are employed in removing sunken ships from the channel.

The free navigation of the Danube is again re-established.

General Aurep, having been disgraced from rank for want of success, shot himself.

The French and English are slowly drawing their lines closer round the Russians. Omar Pasha reviewed the Anglo-French force at Varna.

Great Britain.—In Parliament Lord John Russell informed the House that the Queen will send a message on the 24th, demanding an extra vote of credit of three millions sterling, for the general purpose of war.

France.—Marshal St. Arnaud has returned to Paris. The Emperor and Empress left Paris on the 19th, for Bayonne, on the way to the Baths at Barets. Count Cassimir Bathyany died at Paris on the 12th.

Asia.—Kerim Pasha surprised 12,000 Russians and defeated them, capturing six guns and 400 prisoners, at a pass in the mountains.

Greece.—The Porte consents to reopen Turkish ports to Greek merchants, but demand from Greece indemnity for losses sustained through the recent Greek insurrection.

Spain.—Insurrection is spreading rapidly.—Madrid and the garrison have pronounced against the Queen. The Cabinet is dissolved. San Louis, the premier, has fled. Narvaez has offered to form a new ministry. Espartero has placed himself at the head of the Insurgents and is marching for Madrid with the centre division, while Gen. Zebano advances with a force from the Basque Provinces. The insurgents were masters of Madrid, and the troops engaged against the barricades. Fighting was going on in several parts of the Capitol. A battle had been fought between O'Donnel and Blaser. Blaser was defeated, wounded and taken prisoner. The populace have sacked the palace of Christiana at Salamander near Grenada. The whole of Catalonia risen. The Captain General leads it, and there has been fighting at several points. O'Donnell, convinced that the country will not move for the mere purpose of making him Prime Minister, is more and more disposed to enter into the views of the Progressistas.

Victoria, Burgos, Valladolid, Grenada, Saragossa, Pampaluna, Barcelona, San Sebastian, and several smaller cities, also the Ballearic Islands have declared for the insurgents. Saragossa is expected to join the revolt.

Rumors were current that Queen Christina had fled to Bayonne, and that Queen Isabella left Madrid. Generals Concha and Gonzales Bravo have arrived in England. Manuel Concha has escaped from the Canary Islands.—Gen. Mazzarulo has fled to France.

The insurgents, if successful, may offer the throne to Don Pedro of Portugal. The French General is said to favor the insurrection. It is surmised that Russia is implicated in the insurrection with a view of distracting the attention of France and England.

Later from Europe.

Another Turkish Victory—The Spanish Revolution Successful.

By the Atlantic at New York August 6, we have three days later advices from Europe—dates to the 26th ult. There had been a further decline in the price of breadstuffs &c. No news from the fleets, Greece or Asia. Spain seems to be completely revolutionized. There is a prospect that diplomacy will soon give place to active fighting, and that the war will, as the phrase goes, "come to a head;" for it is affirmed with confidence, both that the Emperor of Russia will maintain the occupation of the Principalities by force of arms, and that the Emperor of Austria will, if necessary, by force of arms expel him. Prussia more than ever holds aloof from the Western Powers and favors Russia, and the fleets and armies remain as at last advices.

Another battle has been fought at Giurgevo. The Turks claim the victory, and state that two Russian Generals were wounded. The Anglo-French have not yet seen the enemy. Gortschakoff announces that he is determined to hold the Principalities, with two hundred thousand men if necessary. It is decided to take and keep Aland isles as an inducement to the Swedes to join the Western powers.

A despatch from Vienna, dated July 22d, says Prince Gortschakoff's mission to this court has entirely failed, and the Prince is greatly enraged. The Emperor Francis Joseph will not disappoint the expectations of Europe. It was expected in Vienna that if Prussia did not throw any immediate difficulty in view, a new and decisive protocol would be signed by the conference on the 19th or 20th July. A courier, with the official communication of the answer of Russia, left Vienna on Saturday, July 22d, for Paris and London.

The Russians continue to destroy the roads and bridges leading from Transylvania to Moldavia. General Baraquay D'Hilliers and staff have arrived at Copenhagen.

The Russian army at Bucharest has received large reinforcements. Orders, it is said, have arrived on the 11th from St. Petersburgh to drive the Turks across the Danube, at any cost. Princes Stuby and Ghika are named Hospodars of Wallachia and Moldavia.

An Austrian army of 50,000 men is to be concentrated between Zegedin and Arad. The reserves called out will amount to 30,000 men.

The Turks remain close to the Danube.—60,000 men are strongly fortifying Guirgevo.—The Russian centre is moving towards Fkshina, because the Austrians are marching from Transylvania northward for concentration in the Bakowina.

Baltic.—The British squadron of seven sail, containing the French troops, was at Kiorge Bay on the 24th. On the 25th the combined fleets steered for the Aland Islands. Twenty vessels of the fleet had been telegraphed off Laedram Light, on the Swedish coast.

France.—A considerable fall has taken place in most of the markets for corn. The crop will be one-fourth more than the average.

The advanced force of the British army had pressed no further. It is said the Generals in Chief have completed their plans for the campaign. It is said Paskiewitch will be reinstated in command.

The Bey of Tunis sent a present of 42,000,000 francs to the Sultan. Cholera has disappeared in the Baltic fleet.

Spain. The Spanish insurrection is triumphant. The new Rivas Ministry has resigned, and the Queen has besought Espartero to form a government. There was barricade fighting in Madrid on the 18th and 19th. Queen Christiana's palace, and the residences of her favorites, were sacked and demolished.—Christiana, with her minions, have fled into France, the people demanding her head. All the chief cities have joined in the insurrection. The Junta, distrusting the Queen's promises, has resolved to hold its own until the arrival of Espartero and the arming of the National Guards. General O'Donnell was expected with the troops of General Piaser, who had joined him. General San Miguel is named Minister of War. His nomination was received with enthusiasm by the people. The Infante Don Fernando, brother of the King, is dead. Queen Christiana has disembarked at Port Vendres, and at Mortes near Grenada.

A battle was fought between the forces of O'Donnell and Blaser. It is stated that the Comte De Vesta Hermost and General Blaser, Royalists, were wounded and taken prisoners. There seems to be no present intention on the part of the Insurgents to dethrone Queen Isabella. The Junta of Madrid, to whose proclamation the names of both Espartero and O'Donnell are attached, has reestablished the municipal institutions of 1843.

The French government is about to establish a Corps of Observation on the Pyrenean frontier. A revolution broke out in Parma on the 23d. The people fired from the house roofs upon the troops. The mother of Ledru Rollin is dead. The Germanic Diet has unanimously acceded to Austrio-Prussian treaty. Abbas Pacha, of Egypt, is dead.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting in Dartmouth, Mass., near Fance's Corner, commencing on Wednesday, August 9, at 5 o'clock, P. M., and continuing over the Sabbath. Brethren coming by Railroad will stop at the head of the River, about four miles from N. Bedford. Boarding on the ground. Let there be a general rally of those who are looking for the Lord. Bro. F. H. Berick and J. Couch will be present with the new Tent. Brother Hemenway, and other preaching brethren will be in attendance.

Provisions will be made for board and lodging on the ground. Those who come by way of Boston can obtain Railroad tickets at a reduced price by applying to Bro. Geo. T. Adams, No. 167 Hanover st., Boston.

THE HORRIBLE MURDER OF COL. LORING at the St. Nicholas hotel, New York, demands the severest penalty of the law for the murderer.—Two of the waiters witnessed the affray. The parties disputed in the hall, while moving towards one end of it. The dispute was about Dr. Graham making a noise and annoying him and his wife. In the course of this dispute, Graham called Loring a liar—Loring in return slapped Graham in the face, when the latter, who had a sword cane in his hand, made a blow. Loring took hold of the cane and in an instant Dr. Graham drew the sword from the stick, and stabbed his antagonist through the body. The weapon entered the small part of the back, and passing through the left lobe of the lung, came in contact with the bones of the breast, and bent nearly double. Loring dropped upon the floor, and died in about two minutes afterwards. The only words he uttered were, "I am stabbed—I am killed." Graham did not attempt to touch his victim after he had given the fatal blow, but threw his sword into the pantry, and walked up and down the floor, apparently very much agitated.

MURDER. In Brooklyn, N. Y., Wednesday night, whilst in a state of madness induced by rum, a monster named S. N. I. Tucker, editor of the Brooklyn Daily Freeman, killed his little son, four years old, and cut his wife's throat so that she is not likely to live. He also attempted to kill the officers when they arrested him.

Obituary.

Bro. John Leeraw fell asleep in Jesus, July 5th, aged 67 years, at his residence in Salem, Mass.

Bro. Leeraw was among the first that embraced the truth in the '44 movement, and also the '54 movement. He was a man capable of extensive sympathy, of great religious benevolence, and a firm friend of truth. Among his latest expressions, was marked his unwavering faith in the present truth, and deep concern for the salvation of his family, friends and fellow-men. He leaves a wife, family and friends to mourn for an affectionate husband, a kind father, and an affable, courteous and sympathizing friend. May God sanctify the affliction to the afflicted.

Conferences.

By leave of Providence, there will be a Conference of believers in the near approach of Christ, in Hubbardston, commencing Tuesday, Aug. 22, to continue over the following Sabbath. The meeting will be held in Mechanics Hall. There are tenements and rooms connected with it, where brethren from abroad can be accommodated, who wish to bring board and bedding. Those coming by Railroad will stop at Gardner Depot, a coach runs daily from that place to H. Distance 6 miles. Provision made for board and horse-keeping. Brethren in neighboring towns are cordially invited to come to this feast in the name of the Lord. Brethren S. S. Brewer, I. Adrian and J. Brittan are expected. In behalf of the Brethren,

J. D. MERRIAM.

There will be, by leave of Providence, a Conference meeting of believers in the near approach of the coming Savior, in Hubbardstown, commencing Aug. 22d, to continue over the following Sabbath. The meeting will be held in Mechanics Hall. Brethren from neighboring towns are cordially invited to come up to this feast, in the name of the Lord. We expect the Lord will send some of his Watchmen to give the trumpet a certain sound, that men may prepare themselves for the battle. There are tenements and rooms connected with the Hall, where Brethren can be accommodated who wish to bring board and bedding. Those coming by Railroad will stop at Gardner Depot, a coach running daily from there to H. Distance 6 miles. Provision will be made for board and horse keeping. In behalf of the Brethren,

J. D. MERRIAM.

Providence permitting there will be a Conference at

Colerain, Mass., Tuesday, Aug. 15, to continue over the Sabbath, Christian Hill.

Brother M. Grant will accompany me.

In behalf of the brethren, H. PRATT.

P. S. Will the Brethren make an effort to attend these meetings and especially to help the poor to attend. They must have the gospel.

Appointments.

CAMP MEETING IN WEST HAWLEY.

If the Lord will, there will be a Camp Meeting in West Hawley on the farm of Bro. Horace Thayer, commencing the 2d Monday in September, and continuing one week. We expect some of the Lord's Watchmen will be present to give the time of night, and give the trumpet a certain sound. Come brethren, far and near, all who can, to this pilgrims' meeting. Bring your tents and provisions as far as possible. We want to have such a meeting as will glorify God. The Lord has some sheep scattered over these mountains that need feeding and cannot attend the meetings at a distance. Come all who want to hear, it may be the last opportunity. In behalf of the Brethren,

J. E. HEALY.

CAMP MEETING IN WINSTED. Providence permitting, it is thought best to have one more great gathering of the Savior's friends at Winsted, Ct., on the old ground, commencing Monday, Aug. 28, and continuing one week. Brethren and Sisters, if time continue, come from far and near to this feast of tabernacles, and let us make the tented grove vocal with praise once more to the King of kings before we meet to sing the grand hallelujah chorus in the everlasting kingdom.

Brethren Burnham, Couch and Berick are expected to be present to preach the word.

Let all who can bring their tents and bedding. Board for all who wish may be had on the Camp ground, and all the profits, if any, will be appropriated to bear the expenses of the meeting, and feed the poor. Good accommodations for horses on reasonable terms, with a cheap conveyance to the Encampment from the cars, stages and hotels of Winsted.

SAMUEL G. MATHEWSON, MILES GRANT, } Committee.

TENT MEETINGS.

If the Lord will, there will be a Tent Meeting at Lewiston, Me., to commence Wednesday August 23d, at 5 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. As this is a new field of labor and but few brethren here, it is hoped that brethren from abroad will come full of the spirit of our Master, ready to labor for the salvation of this people. Brethren Berrick and Couch will be present to preach the word. Brethren from abroad who have lodging tents, will, as far as practicable, bring them with them; also bedding. Boarding on the ground. Come up, brethren, all who can, as this is to be the last meeting of the kind in the State.

In behalf of the brethren, JOHN JONES.

There will be a Grove Meeting in Waterbury, Ct., commencing Saturday, Aug. 12th, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and continuing over the Sabbath. Eld. Isaac Adrian will be present.

For the Brethren, GEO. W. DENNEY.

The Lord willing, there will be a meeting at Salisbury, Millville, the last Sabbath in Aug. Brethren Austin and Paine are invited to attend.

Third Sabbath, at Hill Centre; also Saturday previous. B. H. COUCH.

The Lord willing, I will, as the brethren request, be at the Bergen Neck, N. J., Camp Meeting, Aug. 14.

Also preach at Bridgeport, Ct., Tuesday and Wednesday, Aug. 22 and 23.

And at Springfield, Mass., Thursday evening and continue over the Sabbath.

Also attend the Camp Meeting at Houghtonville, Vt., Aug. 29.

Lowell, Mass. J. WESTON.

I shall preach at South Hope, Saturday, 19th, at 3 o'clock, and at Rockland, Sunday, 20th inst. S. K. PARTRIDGE.

The Lord willing, Bro. George Brown will preach, at Prospect, Maine, on the Sabbath, August 13.

CAMP MEETING IN BRISTOL, R. I.

There will be a Camp Meeting in Bristol, R. I., on Bristol Common, commencing September 13th, and continuing over the Sabbath. Bro. J. Cummings will be in attendance with his tents. Brothers I. Adrian and S. S. Brewer are expected to be with him. Come, Brethren and Sisters, come up to this feast of tabernacles. Come in the name of the lord of hosts. Let all that can bring tents and bedding. There will be provisions made for board and lodging on the ground.

JAMES H. GLADDING.

CAMP MEETING.

The Lord willing, there will be a Camp Meeting at Houghtonville, Vt., on ground owned by Bro. A. G. Gibson, commencing Tuesday, Aug. 22, and continuing one week. It is hoped that the Brethren and Sisters in all this region of country will come together at this meeting in the name and strength of the Lord. This may be the last meeting of the kind we shall ever have. We hope the Brethren, as far as possible, will come with tents and provisions, prepared to take care of themselves. There will be a tent for the use of those who cannot bring one. The Lord willing, Bro. I. Adrian, with other ministering Brethren, will be present to preach the word. Will Bro. L. Boutell inquire of the Lord whether it is his duty to attend?

Your Bro. in hope of life,

O. D. GIBSON.

There will be a Grove-Meeting, August 18, 1854, to be held at Hillsdale Co., Mich., half a mile south of the plank road leading from Hillsdale to Barswood Corners, on the town line of Cambria. Brethren coming on the cars will stop at Hillsdale the day before the meeting, where teams will be in readiness.

Will some of the Time preachers attend?

T. L. W.

The Lord will, I will preach in Manchester the 2d Sabbath in August.

B. P. MANNING.

M. Grant appoints to preach in Bridgeport, Ct., Sabbath, Aug. 13.

The Lord willing, we will hold a meeting in Grafton, height of land, Sunday, August 13.

D. M. LEAVITT.
D. F. LEAVITT.

The meetings at Reedsboro' and Colerain, are necessarily postponed. H. PRATT.

If God permit, we will meet the Brethren and Sisters at

Jay, Me., commencing Friday, August 11, to continue over the Sabbath. J. PARTRIDGE. R. R. YORK.

TENT-MEETING.

Dear Brother, I made the change in my appointments, by request of the friends North, you will see all is as it should be this week.

I. ADRIAN.

Attend the Camp-Meeting at Bergen Neck.

Hebron, Washington Co., N. Y., Aug. 28th, if they will get up a Grove or Camp-Meeting. Will they give notice in season?

Champlain, N. Y., Sept. 6th, and over the Sabbath.

Montgomery, Sept. 13th, and over the Sabbath. Will the brethren provide a grove if convenient?

I will attend to Bro. John Gibson's appointment if he can have the meeting commence the 21st of Aug. Will he inform me if he can change it?

Will the Advent brethren give me a hearing? I pledge myself to answer all objections against the truths I advocate. ISAAC ADRIAN.

Bro. S. W. Bishop will preach

At Boston, Mass., on Sunday, Aug. 13.

The Lord willing, I will meet with the brethren at Lake Village, Sabbath, August 13.

C. L. PAGE.

NORTH HAVERHILL, N. H., July 15, '54.

There will be a general gathering of the dear Saints of God at Sugar Hill, N. H., commencing Thursday, Aug. 10th, and continuing over the Sabbath. Come, my brethren and sisters, to this meeting, far and near, and have your faith strengthened, and your hearts made glad, by the glad tidings of the soon-coming King.—May the Master send some of his servants who have the spirit and power of the Gospel, to labor at this meeting. E. WHITNEY.

The Lord willing, I will preach

At Barnsted Red School House, 2d Sabbath in Aug.

At Meredith Centre, 3d Sabbath in August.

CAMP MEETING IN NEW JERSEY.

If the Lord will, there will be a Camp Meeting at Bergen Neck, 4 miles from Jersey City, to commence on Monday, Aug. 14th, and continuing one week. The brethren and sisters, far and near, are invited to attend this meeting. We hope all who can will bring their Tents.—Provision will be made for board, &c., on the ground. We hope the Preaching brethren will make arrangements to be there. The plank road stages run every hour from Jersey City to the ground. Fare 10 cents.

Committee,—Abraham Flavell, Mark E. Green, Joseph Cherry, David B. Seller, John Browe.

CAMP MEETING IN VERNON, VT.

Providence permitting, there will be a Camp Meeting in Vernon, Vt., on the old ground occupied the two past years, in a beautiful grove, about one-fourth of a mile from the North Vernon Depot, near the Connecticut river road leading from Brattleboro, Vt., to Springfield, Ms., about 4 miles south of the former, and 48 north of the latter named place, commencing Aug. 14th, and continuing one week. The sole object of this meeting is for the salvation of our fellow-men. Brethren, East, West, North and South, will you not exert every power of your being, knowing the time is about over for us to labor to save souls? We cannot do too much for the cause of our soon coming King, seeing he has done so much for us. O do come to this feast in the name of the Lord, full of faith and the holy ghost, with the whole armor on all ready, in working order to save souls from the awful gathering storm. We once more invite all of God's people to come and bring their tents and join us. Arrangements are made for board and horse keeping for all who may wish on reasonable terms. Arrangements will be made to reduce the fare on the railroads.

Committee,—E. G. Scott, E. Miller, C. Sevrance, A. Gage, S. Titus, J. Frost.

Brethren R. Burnham, J. G. Bennett, J. Couch, F. H. Berrick, are invited.

TENT-MEETING.

The Tent-Meeting appointed to be holden in the neighborhood of Syracuse, Onondaga Co., N. Y., will be held in Van Buren, Onondaga, N. Y., 12 miles west of Syracuse, commencing Thursday the 17th of August. The meeting will be 4 miles south-west of Baldwinsville, (on the Syracuse and Oswego Rail Road,) and 7 miles north of Canton, (on the Syracuse and Rochester Rail Road). Brethren, one and all, come to this meeting prepared to do good, and get good; bring your tents and provisions with you, and camp on the ground. For those that cannot do so there will be some way provided. Dear Brethren and Sisters, the Lord is coming this year. Come and hear the evidences from the word of God, and be prepared for that event looked for by the saints of every age. Bro. Cummings will be present, with his big Tent.

JOHN T. ODELL.

N. B. There will be a team provided to convey Brethren to and from the cars. J. T. O.

Special Notices.

We wish to communicate through the Crisis, with the brethren who are holding Tent meetings, and who are to be (according to appointment) at Syracuse on the 17th of this month.—We are very desirous of doing what we can for the salvation of the people of this place, and think that a Tent-meeting would be productive of much good. We therefore request the brethren to make their next appointment here, or as soon as they can arrange, and their expenses will be met. We hope the brethren will not fail to respond to this call. W. C. PECK.

I asked the man of Wealth, as he told o'er
His latest gains—which fast increased his store,
When he'd be satisfied; "When," he exclaimed,
[illegible]
I saw the man of Pleasure, as he came
From the last ball,—for balls he had a fame,—
To him I put the question; he replied,
"A few more nights as joyous, will suffice."

I saw the Warrior next, with visage glad,
Fresh from the conquest, in his armor clad,
And him I asked; said he, "One victory more,
I leave to others Fame's fair field t' explore."

The gifted Orator next, then came along,
From where his happiest speech the listening throng
Had just applauded, when the question came,
Said he, "A few more years will fix my name."

I saw the man of Genius, as he gazed
On his last task, which made the world amazed,
And him I asked, said he, "When I excel
This my best work, the world my fame will swell."

And each had his desire; the future came,
But unsufficed were Pleasure, Wealth or Fame;
Yet still they looked, and hope allured them still,
That earth had ample store, each void to fill.

At length I saw the Christian, he came by
With modest step, while Hope beamed from his eye,
And when the question came, "Never," he said,
"While on this sin-cursed soil my feet shall tread."

"But when my Lord shall come, earth's scenes to close,
And call His ransomed ones from death's repose,
Waked in His likeness, with His Heavenly Bride,
At that blest day, I SHALL BE SATISFIED."

For the World's Crisis.

The Affections.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I wish to say a word or two by way of exhortation to the brethren, on knowing themselves.—We have listened to the evidence which proves conclusively that Jesus will come this year. The truth has found a place in our hearts; the fact is settled in our minds; and now what shall we do for the preparation? It is surely a time when we should live upon our knees. The last moments of probation are running out; our characters are not yet perfected; our destiny is not yet fixed; but these last few moments are to decide the matter forever. O, what manner of persons ought we to be, seeing we look for such things? How shall we spend the time so as to meet the approbation of God, and the acquital of our judge in that day? During my recent trials and temptations, I learned one thing that I was not aware of before. It is this—that temptations are generally presented to the affections, that if possible, our love may be debased; for whatever we love, we are sure to follow after; and if our affections are misplaced, we shall just as surely go to destruction as we exist. Solomon never uttered a truer sentiment than the one where he describes the power of love. Says he, "many waters cannot quench it, neither can the floods drown it." If a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be contemned. Its all-controlling influence is manifest in the lives of both good and bad men. How important, then, that God should absorb it all! so that the language of our hearts and the acts of our lives may say, "not my will, but thine be done;"—and then when Jesus comes, we shall hail him with gladness, and he will admit us into the joy of our Lord. The loving John shows where his affections were, when he cried out, "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but when he shall appear, we shall be like him." Judas manifested its all-controlling influence over him, when he bargained with the high priest to sell his master for thirty pieces of silver. The love of money, as the Scripture says, is the root of all evil. Paul makes it very plain where his affections are, when he exclaims, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these we are more than conquerors through him that loved us." Yet Demas forsook Paul, because he loved this present world. Peter shows where his love is, when he exhorts the brethren, in view of the fiery trials they were to endure, to rejoice inasmuch as they are made partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, they may be glad with exceeding joy. But [illegible] was so in love with the wages of unrighteousness, that he desired to curse those that God had not cursed, for the sake of the reward.

Ruth's attachment to Naomi called forth [illegible] when told to return and [illegible] "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go;—thy people shall be thy people, and thy God, my God: where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried." Love to Christ led the martyrs, both men and women, to embrace the stake, and glory in the fagot fire, rejoicing that they were worthy to suffer for his name. And here, in these last days, the same love is required, in order to stand when he appeareth. Love that will die for his sake; for whoever loveth father, or mother, or wife, or life, more than him, is not worthy of him. How important, then, that our affections, our love, should all run in the right direction. And if my experience is like that of my brethren, here is where our trials and temptations now come. It seems as though the old man was making one more desperate effort to sever us from "him, whom having not seen we love." By some means he will so hide the glories of the world to come, and present in so fascinating a garb something that pertains to this life, in order to entrap the affections, that like Bunyan's pilgrim, I have had to put my fingers in my ears, and run on crying, life! life! Eternal life! And it is only by falling back upon the facts in the case, and calling mightily upon God, that I have been able to repel an attack make upon the affections. We must fight the good fight of faith, and love, laying hold on eternal life; for to surrender the affections is to surrender all. This shews the reason why the love of many waxes cold. They listen to the voice of the charmer, lose their first love; and if ever gained again, it is by bitter repentance, and returning to their first works. O let us be humble in view of what we have been,—what we now are,—and what we expect to be. Loving God with all the heart, duty and desire going in company, our journey will be pleasant, and our home made sure.

Thy brother, earnestly desiring Salvation,
RICHARD PLUMER.

PROPHETIC PERIODS.—1260, 1290, 1335 Years of Daniel and John.

The daily sacrifice taken away, and the Abomination of Desolation set up, and the Saints given unto the hand of the Little Horn. .... 519.

1260 years of tribulation.—Rev. 11: 2, 3, and 12: 6, 14, and 13: 5. The sun darkened May 19, 1780, to show its termination. .... 1779.

1290 years, or time times and the dividing of time—or time times and a part, in which the TIMES and LAWS are in the hands of the Little Horn. .... Napoleon takes away the civil power of the Little Horn. 1809.

Fall of the Stars 1833.

1335 years, reaching from the setting up of the Abomination of Desolation, or the time when the Saints' times and laws were given into the hand of the Little Horn, to the end, when Daniel with all the Saints will stand in their lot........ 1854.

THE END.

☞ The above Diagram is designed to illustrate the measurement of time from the rise of the little horn, with eyes and a mouth (the civil power of the Greek Empire, or Eastern Rome incorporated with the Ecclesiastical Power of the Papacy.—Dan. 7: 8) until the coming of Christ at the resurrection of the saints.

The 1290 years, or time, times and the dividing of time, (Dan. 7: 25) measure the period during which the saints, times and laws were to be given into his hand—The period of the saint's tribulation, we understand, were shortened to 1260 years, (Rev. 12: 6, 14—11: 2 and 13: 5) ; but times and laws were to remain in his hand during 1290 years, extending 30 years beyond the 1260. "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end." 45 years from the close of the 1290 make 1335 years, when Daniel will stand in his lot, which must be at the resurrection of the saints.

Christ, speaking of this desolating power—the papacy—says, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened,"—which marks a point previous to which the saints were taken out of the hands of the little horn power. Thus we perceive that 1260 years of the 1335 ended prior to the 19th of May, 1780, when the sun was darkened. Add 75 years to 1260 and you have 1335 years, which must end before May 19th, 1855, according to the evidence from the darkening of the sun. But we have abundant historical evidence that the papal power, i. e. the abomination that maketh desolate, was set up in 519, hence the 1335 days (years) end in 1854, which brings the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the saints the present year.

SAMUEL PAGE.

For the World's Crisis.

We are Passing Away.

Brother Merriam:—As the sun rises in the morn, and throws its bright beams o'er the horizon, and in its strength and splendor, dazzling the eye of the beholder in its meridian, and passing onward in its course towards the western hills, till it is shrouded in the sunset clouds, so man arose, fashioned in the image of his Creator, ruled over all things terrestrial, passed the morn of his glory in the Garden of Eden, committed a sin by disobeying the command of God, passed the sunset of his existence by hearing the sentence pronounced upon him, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Except we have immortality through Christ, dust must be our ultimate end. Death, the grim monster, the last enemy of man, is filling up the great charnel house. But the bounds of his domain is the groaning earth, which has been wet with the blood of saints, crying for vengeance. But soon, ah, soon, the prophetic wheel will cease its revolution; the trumpet will sound; angels descend; the saints of all ages, clad in immortal beauty, together with the living, changed, and escorted by the heavenly host to the regions above.—A shout goes up; it vibrates through the heavens. All is glory. Not unto us; but to thy name. The exiled Heir, the prince, our Redeemer, is come to put an end to strife, sin and death. The last enemy to be destroyed is death.

Our friends who died in the enemy's land, and sleep in the cold ground, will rise to die no more. O, glorious hope to the longing, sighing, groaning church of God! We have been led to contemplate, and bring our mind to dwell a few moments on the scenery before us, by seeing one of our number sicken and die. Bro. John Escraw has gone; he sleeps as did Lazarus. But we will not weep as though he died having no hope. He passed the dark shadow of death, serene and calm as the evening breeze, believing that he should be resurrected this year! When he was apparently in health, he spoke as though God was about to work a change in him; he failed not day nor night, wherever he might be, to warn the sinner against procrastination. He warned his fellow men that the Lord was at hand. His whole soul was full of the theme of the coming of our Savior this year. His place in the prayer and conference meetings is vacant—the sound of his voice is heard no more.—Friends and neighbors have heard his warning—he has finished his zealous, ardent course; and we trust there is a crown of glory laid up for him. The last rites to our brother being finished, we sung the hymn, "Thou art gone to the grave," &c.

Yours in hope, H.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEW YORK, July 4, 1854.

Brother Merriam,—As there are some doubts in some minds whether the 1290 and 1335 days in Daniel 12: 11–13, mean literal days, or symbols of years, I send you an extract from "the divine history of the Church, by Frederick Fysh," page 232. He says,—"The 1335 years of Daniel are divided into three portions, namely, 1260 years, 30 years, and 45 years." (He asks the question) "Is there any peculiarity in the construction of the original in Daniel 12: 11? Yes. It may be a question whether 1290 days is the correct translation. The Hebrew is 1290 yomin. Now, if 1290 days were meant, the Hebrew would have been 1290 yom, according to the rule in Hebrew syntax, which requires that when the numeral signifies any number exceeding ten, the thing numbered be put in the singular number.—(Prof. Lee's Hebrew Grammar, p. 310.)—The word yomin is sometimes used to denote a year. It is so rendered in the marginal translation of Gen. 24: 55, and 1st Sam. 11: 19. In Leviticus 25: 29, yomin is translated "a full year;" and indeed this is the correct rendering; for it is an ellipsis for "a year of days." It may, therefore, fairly be questioned whether 1290 full years be not the correct translation of 1290 yomin. At all events the expression is a remarkable one, and the advocates of the day day theory must deal with it as best they can. The same peculiarity of construction is found in the following verse: "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 yomin, or to the 1335th yomin." We have observed before, that the cardinal number is not unfrequently used by the Hebrews for the ordinal.—This may either denote that he is blessed who comes to the end of the 1335 years, or he is blessed who comes to the 1335 years. Mr. Fish, on 315th page of his work, translated Daniel 12: 13, thus,—"Go thy way, Daniel, for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the yomin, or full year, that is, the 1335th year."

If this be the true rendering of the word yomin, it is in keeping with the whole historical prophecy of the 10th, 11th and 12th chapters of Daniel. The text in Dan. 10: 13, is as likely to mean 21 yomin, or years, as 21 days. Although I am looking for the coming of the Lord every day, time may continue until the Lord's full years come round, which, according to his word, end at the feast of the ingathering at the year's end, or revolution of the year, Ex. 34: 22, which will make full time from the time he set this world in motion. It will be the end of this age, and the end of the world, when Daniel stands or rises up in his lot; for Job says, "man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more; they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."—Job 14: 12. If we want to know how these heavens are disposed of, turn to 2d Peter, 3: 10, and other parallel scriptures. There is no one that will be able to stand in that day, except those who have got one like the "Son of God" in their midst, like the three Hebrew children, which the King of Babylon tried to burn in that furnace of his.

Yours truly, looking for redemption this year,
M. E. GREEN.

SALEM, June 17, 1854.

Beloved Brother:—The King in His beauty is coming soon, blessed be His name. His children will all be glad and rejoice in the day of His coming. Those who now mourn the absence of their children and friends who have died in the Lord, will soon hear them shout victory o'er death and the grave, through Him "who hath washed us in His blood, and made us kings and priests unto God." O the joyful hope of the Resurrection! Joy and gladness will then succeed to mourning the loss of deceased friends. What precious promises there are in the blessed book. They give us courage to bear the ills of life,—we feel willing to suffer on; for we know that our redemption draweth nigh. The things of this world appear of so little consequence, that we almost forget that we are identified with them. We have set our hearts on things above; we are looking and waiting for our Beloved to return; we expect Him this year. We have no time to idle away in vain conversation, for the moments are too precious to waste. A very little while and we enter upon eternity; and the saints will be beyond the scoffs and frowns of unbelievers. My heart is sad when I think how few are willing to obey His commands.—Christians of the primitive age were a separate people; why should they not be so now? The bible is the same, the commandments of the Lord are the same now as they were then. O that professed Christians would come out from all that is contrary to the word of God. What if it be the fashion in these last days to believe in fables, to throw away part of the bible, to imitate the worldling in the follies and fashions of this life, which are so soon to pass away? But, thank the Lord, there are a few that are not ashamed to appear singular in the eye of the worldling; for they heed not the praise of man; they have a nobler end in view; their desire is to obey God, and trust His promises; therefore they can even now lift up their heads and rejoice, knowing that deliverance is nigh: that Jesus is surely about to come. O that we may all be ready to exchange this world of sorrow and turmoil for that blessed home, where all is peace and love. My prayer is, Lord help us all in this trying hour; we need thy constant care; help us Lord to be decided to come out from all that is not of God, and obey our Divine Master; trust all into His keeping, and be not over-charged with the cares of this life.

ALICE B. DRAPER.

PORT PERRY, C. W., June 3d, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—The Crisis is a welcome visitor in this Northern region.—It truly brings to us the glad tidings of the Kingdom. O how I love the time! It was a desirable subject to the Angels and prophets, and the Saints in all ages could cry out, "How long, O Lord?" It gives life to the cause; it is the mainspring of the Advent movement. O, how it wakes the wise virgins to trim their lamps afresh! O, how I regret to see so many turning back, like the foolish virgins. Their lamps are gone out; even of those who were the most sanguine on time. They now oppose, because they love their own cherished notion of the age to come. I am a believer in that age; but I look for the Messiah first to introduce it. Gathering of Israel? No. Unwalled villages? No; but overrunning of the land by the king of the North. The King must first come and establish his kingdom on Mount Zion, and gather his saints as the first events marked in prophecy now in the future. This will cause the ten kings to unite, and instead of warring with Nicholas, they will make war with the Lamb. See Rev. 17 and 19 Chaps. See also Dan. 12. Michael must first "stand up," which will be the cause of the "time of trouble."—In Rev. 15, the third woe and seventh trumpet introduce first the setting up of the kingdom, and the nations are angry. Why are they angry? Because the kingdoms of this world are given to Messiah, and he shall reign forever. Amen. The stone first appears before it breaks in pieces the metallic image. "In the days of these kings shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom." What does it effect?—(Mark, it is first set up.) "It break in pieces and consumes," (a progressive work,) "all these kingdoms; and it shall stand for ever. Amen."

The coming of Christ, gathering of the saints and establishing of the kingdom, is what will gather the nations to the valley of Jehoshaphat, for the battle of the great day of God Almighty. O how consistent with the present state of the nations!—Their bone of contention is that land that belongs to Abraham's seed, (Christ); and when he comes and claims his right, the nation will then be angry in good earnest.

May God preserve us in the patient waiting for Christ.

Yours, in haste,
JOHN BOWER.

NEW YORK, July 31, 1854,
31 Division street.

Brother Merriam,—Yesterday we had some good meetings. The brethren are strong in the faith, that Jesus will come this year. Last evening I preached in the Advent Meeting House, where Elder L. D. Mansfield is the Pastor; and as he took the position the last two Sabbath evenings from the text in Mark 13: 32–37, that no man would ever know the day, the hour, the month, or the year of the Lord's coming; and said that our whole time-system was exploded, and a complete failure, I took the position from the same text, to show that instead of the text and context teaching any such doctrine, it taught just the opposite, and gave Dr. Jarvis' criticism with Tindall's old translation "of that day and hour maketh known no man; no, not the angels in Heaven, nor the Son, but the Father only;" and showed that God, the father, had given the time in Daniel 8: 12; and that it was for those living in the time of the end to understand it, and that the time would be known as certainly as it was in the days of Noah. That is my faith, which rests upon a positive declaration in God's word. But oh! is not the vision, spoken of by the prophet Isaiah, "become as a book that is sealed;" for Elder L. D. Mansfield now takes the position that the prophetic periods were only given to teach us when that event was nigh; the same as the signs, and that nothing definite can be known.—If I were to take that position, I would go back to the Episcopal Methodist Church, where I could preach that event near at hand, and have greater opportunities of doing good, and be respected, and have a good name and be patronized in business. But no, I would rather suffer all the odium that can be heaped upon me for preaching what I believe to be truth, and be a companion of those who are called the odds and ends of the Advent ranks. I have nailed my colors to the mast, and I am determined to go through by God's grace assisting me to the end, which I believe is just upon us. My prayer is that I may be faithful and humble, so that I may hear the master say, "well done, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Yours looking for the king this year,
WILLIAM ROWORTH.

SANDGATE, VT., July 20th, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I am thankful, and feel to praise God for the privilege of reading the Crisis, which you have been so kind as to send freely to the people, and leave it for them to contribute for its support. I hope it will be sustained while it gives the cry of alarm to the sleeping virgins, and the sleeping world.

This is indeed a trying time to the faithful, who are looking for the blessed hope, and glorious appearing of Jesus Christ, while the proud scoffers are deriding those that are watching for the Savior.

My heart responds amen to what the Brethren say in their communications from time to time. However, I cannot say this year with as much confidence as some do, yet my heart says, "Come, Lord Jesus."

I am looking for some signs to make the sinner tremble and mourn; perhaps we have had enough already. Brn. Packard and Johnson were here last winter, and held a few meetings, presenting the chart, to convince the people that this was the year, with some good effect, I trust.

The people seem to reject the idea of knowing the time; yet we read the day is appointed. Do we need to know the time in order to be ready? If so, let us search the scriptures, to learn the whole lesson of salvation.

Yours, &c.,
J. SNOW.

SAVOY, MASS., May 19th, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I wish to convey a few thoughts through the Crisis to the Brethren and Sisters. I thank the Lord that we can know each other's feelings [illegible] on this great subject. [illegible] the highest importance. I was not led in to this faith by the opinion of others, but by the instruction of the word. I could no longer [illegible] times feel anxious to see the bright [illegible] of the eternal world. When I contemplate what a glorious sight it would be, to see the unnumbered throng with the Savior come shouting through the air, circle above circle, filling the heavens with dazzling robes and crowns of glory. I feel small, but I do believe I should be happy, and shout glory to Him who is worthy of all praise. O sinner, you will tremble although you may scoff now and disbelieve; but when you see him coming in the clouds of heaven, from whose presence the heavens and the earth shall flee away, you will tremble with most tormenting fear. But now is the time for repentance and preparation for that trying scene. My prayer is, that God would convict and convert sinners, and O that they may be willing to be saved in his kingdom, through Christ, Amen. O let us be faithful to him that is able to save us this year in glory.

Yours in love,
NEWELL WHITE.

FREEDOM, N. H., June 13, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—While casting my eye over the pages of the Crisis, week after week, my heart is cheered with the glorious effects of the Midnight Cry, which I believe, with all my heart, is sounding through the land. It is to the household, meat in due season, glory to God. When first I received this doctrine, I began to watch the effects, to see if the truth, as I believed it was, moved the Virgins; and, glory to God, I not only see it through the universal testimony of my brethren through the Crisis, but think I am a witness to its effects myself in many places that I have visited the past winter and spring. There has been a good work in this place.—Many have believed and been baptized; others are coming.

I am travelling mostly in new fields; and there seems to be an interest awakened in the hearts of men to hear the truth.—O, my brethren, enter heartily into the work of the Lord, for all will be over in a few weeks, at the longest. What we do for our fellow-men must be done soon.—O that God would give us a sense of the position we occupy!

Your brother, expecting deliverance this year.
T. W. PIPER.

CHESHIRE, Mass., June 9, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I wish to say a few words to the scattered flock, through the Crisis. It is with joy that I read the Crisis; knowing that I shall find good instruction therein; and I love to read the letters which are written by different individuals. I feel as though I knew them all; and truly we are all children of one Father, journeying to a heavenly country, having no abiding city here; but as pilgrims and strangers, we are wandering in this dreary wilderness of sin, assailed by temptation and trials, scorned and derided by the world, held in contempt by those professing Christianity. But we know that our Redeemer liveth, and if we prove faithful a little longer, we shall stand in our lot with Daniel, at the end of the days. O, then, we will toil on a little longer, till "He that shall come, will come and will not tarry." Soon we shall ascend the table-lands of glory, there to shout our sufferings o'er with all the blood-washed throng. Soon the old ship will enter the harbor, to go no more out forever.

What a shout will rend the blue dome of Heaven, as the pilgrims land, and as their feet first press the holy ground!—Their song of victory will make high heaven ring. O, who would not be there, to join the swelling hosts of God's elect, and share with Him His endless joy?—Sinner, prepare to meet thy God. The day hasteth—it hasteth greatly.

O, who shall abide the day of His coming, and who shall stand when He appeareth? May we all be faithful a few days more, and we shall enter in, and sit down at the marriage supper of the Lamb; for the Bride hath made herself ready. God grant, dear reader, that you and I may be there.

Your sister, in the blessed hope of seeing Jesus this year.

THE STEAM FRIGATE. The keel of the U. S. steam frigate to be built at Charlestown, is 252 feet in length. The extreme length of the vessel will be 280 feet; breadth of beam 52; depth of hold 27; tonnage, by government measure, 3400. Her armament will consist of 52 guns, two monster Paixhans on the spar deck, and the rest mostly long 32's.—(Bost. Bee.

Difficulty between the United States and Russia.—The Courrier des Etats Unis, of New York, states that a difficulty has arisen between the Russian Governor of Kamschatka, and the American Consul at New Archangel. The Russian had seized an American ship for fishing in what is now for the first time claimed as Russian waters.

The Signs of the Times.

The next sign is the falling of the stars, which was literally fulfilled, Nov. 13, 1833. I am aware that some view that phenomenon as an exhibition of meteors, and not of stars, and therefore no fulfilment of that sign. I ask what kind of a star piloted the wise men to the birth place of our Saviour? It could not have been a planet, or fixed star. And I am informed that the distinction between meteors and stars is of modern invention, the discovery of modern astronomers. It is well known the ancients understood by the Greek word aster, (used in Matt. 24: 29), the smaller lights of heaven. It is therefore evident that this sign must have a shower of meteors, or small stars for its fulfilment.—One declared that the phenomenon was "the greatest display of celestial fire-works that has ever been seen since the creation of the world."

Prof. Olmstead, of Yale College, says, "they did not fly at random over all parts of the sky; but appeared to emanate from a point in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the bend of the sickle." This shows the manner as described by the Revelator, "as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs when it is shaken of a mighty wind."

Hear what Henry Dana Ward's testimony is,—"At the cry, 'look out of the window,' I sprang from a deep sleep, and with wonder, saw the east lighted up with the dawn and meteors. The zenith, the north, and the west also showed the falling stars, in the very image of one thing, and of only one, I ever heard of. I called to my wife to behold; and while robing, she exclaimed, 'see how the stars fall!' I replied, 'that is the wonder;' and we felt in our hearts that it was a sign of the last days. For truly 'the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Rev. 6: 13." More might be quoted from it found in the Journal of Commerce of Nov. 15, 1833; but we will leave that, and present two more short extracts, the first from the Connecticut Observer of Nov. 25, 1833:—"We pronounce the raining of fire, which we saw on Wednesday morning last, an awful type, a sure forerunner, a merciful sign, of that great and dreadful day, which the inhabitants of the earth will witness when the sixth seal shall be opened. The time is just at hand, described not only in the New Testament, but in the Old. A more correct picture of a fig tree casting its leaves when blown by a mighty wind, it is not possible to behold."

Burnet, author of "Sacred Theory of the Earth," published in 1697, referred to this in the following language:—"The last sign before the coming of Christ is the falling stars. No doubt there will be all sorts of fiery meteors at that time, and amongst others those called falling stars, which though they are not considurable singly, yet if they were multiplied in great numbers, falling as the prophets says, as leaves from the vines, or figs from the fig-tree, they would make an astonishing sight."

Joel 2: 30, "And I will show wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke." This may refer to the Aurora Borealis, or Northern Lights; but I will not stop to speak of this, only to say, that they correspond to the prophecy, and they never have been accounted for, or explained by any of our Astronomers, or Philosophers, up to the present time; therefore they must be a sign of the last days.

In Luke 21: 25, 26, after the signs are brought to view, Jesus says, "upon the earth, distress of nations with perplexity; the sea, and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

Do we see any of this prophecy fulfilled before our eyes? Has there been distress of nations, the sea and waves roaring?—Let the history of the past ten years answer. Look at the financial, political, moral and religious embarrassments, tha have and still do exist, filling the earth with perplexity. Every thing in society seems unsettled. No stability, no confidence; change and revolution all over the earth. It is not confined to individuals, nor associations; but it equally affects all nations.

Turn your attention to the Eastern world. What means all that commotion? Every throne in Europe is tottering, and the occupants thereof tremble with fearful apprehension. The Eastern war has caused a famine, to a greater or less extent, and all faces gather blackness, while they view the scene before and around them. What does it mean? God declares there shall be "upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity."

The sea and the waves have roared mightily for the last ten years, in the destruction of life and property unparalleled in the history of any period, except that of Noah's flood. In one storm, 238 vessels were reported to have been lost; in another, 351. In 1845 or 6, 3,000 lives were lost by the inroads of the sea at Farmose, an island near Canton.

There has been a wonderful overflowing of rivers for the past few years. In the old countries the destruction of property and the loss of life during the years 1845 and 6, was astonishing. In the north of China whole provinces were almost entirely submerged. The retreat of the waters left corpses in thousands. A Paris paper states that in these years "the Rhine, Elbe, Vistula, &c., had in succession overflowed their banks, not in a day, but in an hour! Several thousands villages were covered with water.

This is only a sample of the roaring of waves, and the distress of nations up to the years 1847 or 8. And since then this prophecy has been wonderfully fulfilled in our land.

It would be impossible to tell the exact amount of damage, and the extent to which men's hearts have failed them "for fear, looking after those things which are coming on the earth," by the overflowing of rivers, the ravages of fire, famines, earthquakes, pestilences, wars, &c. The world is looking for some great overturn; they know not what. Let us be looking for the coming of our Lord. In the I of Tim. 4: 1, we read, "that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." Now what could be more clearly fulfilled than this passage in the history of the Rappers, so called? How many have left the Bible, and have gone to spirits of devils for instruction? The Bible declares "the dead know not anything,"—"man returneth to his earth, and in that very day his thoughts perish." If he has no thoughts, how can he communicate knowledge to others? They are truly seducing spirits, and many have left the faith for a few years past and joined them. In 2 Tim. 3 ch. we read,—"This know also that in the last days, perilous times shall come." He tells us what shall cause these perilous times,—"For men shall be lovers of their own selves."

Was there ever a time when men loved themselves as at the present? Was there ever more need of enforcing the Saviour's injunction, "Love thy neighbor as thyself?" Never. Men will take care of themselves, and let the rest of their fellowmen take care of themselves.

"Covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affections, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good. Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." How clearly the state of the world at the present time is here pictured out. The prophet could not have drawn a more correct likeness had be lived in this our day. How selfish men at this time manifest themselves to be! They grasp whatever comes within their reach, and keep all they can obtain. There are members of churches that profess to have laid all upon the altar of God, who, if the Lord should require their substance, or any portion of it, would at once declare "it is their own and they have a right to do with it as they please." Many "boasters" are also seen stalking through the world, as if they could perform great wonders; and we even have a class of persons around us, that pretend they can perform all the miracles that Christ did, thereby asserting that Christ was but a mere man. How "proud" also the men of this age have become Pride fills our land, and it is not confined to the worlding, but in the professed Church of Christ, which ought to appear meek and lowly, we see pride manifested in a great degree. Look into a church a hundred years ago, and it was all plain. Churches a hundred years ago were without ornaments, or glittering show; the worship was not a form of godliness without the power; but the power of God and the Spirit of Christ were there.—The churches of our age are decorated with cushions, carpets, tassels, chandeliers, and the music of an organ and choir is substituted for the simple melodies of those who sang in the spirit and with the understanding. Alas! How sadly the Church has degenerated!

"Blasphemers." From the boy of ten to the old man, whose locks have been whitened by the frost of fourscore winters, we are constantly hearing our God blasphemed.

Children "disobedient to parents."—Every parent knows that this is true at this period of the world; and we hear almost every parent saying, "my children will not obey me as they used to; they seem to delight in disobedience." Ah, parents, it is the last time; and God hath declared it should be so.

"Unthankful, unholy." Where are the holy men? Gone, gone; but few left; the majority of even professors are not leading holy lives because they do not believe they can.

"Without natural affection." Parents hating their children—children hating their parents—truly this is an age "without natural affection."

"Trucebreakers," covenant or bargain-breakers. How wonderfully this item is fulfilled in our day.

"False accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good." The good were once reverenced; but they are now despised; and one that endeavors to lead a holy life, cannot remain in the Church; but must be excluded as a heretic.

"Traitors, heady, high-minded." Of this class I will simply say all can see, that friend betrays friend; and there is no confidence to be placed in man.

"Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." How manifest is this to every beholder! The party, the picnic, the riding and sailing excursion are looked upon with greater delight than the place of worship, where God's children meet to enjoy that blessedness which far surpasses all earthly pleasure. The place where God delights to own and bless, is looked upon as gloomy and uninviting; but the place of bacchanalian song and the merry dance is preferred by the majority of men; and sad to say, many professed Christians are seen there, uniting with the world, when God says, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."

"Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." A form of prayer, &c., is sufficient for a majority of the world; but the power of godliness in the heart is regarded as non-essential.—Many professors will go to the house of prayer, partake of the Supper of the Lord, and then live like the world. Do you ask the reason of this? They have a "form of godliness, but deny the power thereof,' "from such," we are commanded, "to turn away." Would to God that those who profess to believe the Lord is coming, would obey the command.

"In 2 Pet. 3 ch., we read, "knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days, scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."—How literally we see this fulfilling! But the Lord says, "for this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water, perished: but the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." "Willingly ignorant;" no excuse: what a charge from the Almighty! Let us be careful that it is not said of us, ye "are willingly ignorant" of it, when it is our privilege to understand it and keep our garments."

Is there anything else occurring around us that looks like a fulfilling of the word of God, in the last days? Let us see.—After our Lord and Master had presented the signs of the last days, viz., those in the sun, moon and stars, he then presents two classes of persons, one represented by a good servant; the other by an evil servant. The evil servant is saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming;" the scoffer is saying, where is the promise of his coming?" Do we see this fulfilled? We do. The history of the Adventists fills the picture. In 1820, Joseph Wolf began preaching the second, speedy coming of our Lord; he was followed by others, until at length, William Miller, a humble farmer, of Low Hampton, N. Y., inspired with more than mortal energy, sounded the alarm in God's holy mountain, which has echoed and re-echoed through these United States, like the shrill notes of the mighty trumpet, awaking the sleeping, dreaming Church; multitudes were aroused by the sound of the coming of Christ in 1843, and went forth to meet the Bridegroom. At length they thought by the types, &c., that the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, must bring the Lord: therefore they proclaimed it to the world, and many looked with longing eyes on that day to see their King, coming down the bright pathway of heaven; but in this they were disappointed. Here came the tarrying time. Then we have another portion of God's word fulfilled, viz., Ezek. 13: 22. "The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth." And here let me say to those that disregard the time, God's word could not have been fulfilled had there not been a set time for the return of the Bridegroom. How can there be a disappointment without an appointed time? To illustrate. Suppose I say to my friend, I will meet you at Boston, not stating when, can he say that I have disappointed him after a week has passed? No; for I have not told him when I would meet him.—But if I were to promise to meet him on the 10th of August, then after the tenth has past, and I do not fulfil the promise, I have tarried, he is disappointed. So you can plainly see, that unless they had set the tenth day of the seventh month, the proverb could not have prevailed in the land, "The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth."

It may be affirmed, that this proverb refers only to the time of the Jews. But let me ask, is it not used in our day? You will say, "yes." If so, it could not have been used then; for the Lord says they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel.

Some are saying, "the vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off." The Church are literally fulfilling this scripture to-day. They assert that there must be a thousand years of millenial glory before the coming of Christ. But I am constrained to believe this idea to be one of the fables of the last days, designed to lead men from the truth, and cause them to be "at ease in Zion."

But thank God the Midnight Cry is sounding, and we are to meet him, whom our souls love.

Let me review a little. We have seen the "scoffer," mocking, and ridiculing the coming of the Lord.

We see the "proud, haughty, blasphemers, lovers of pleasure," walking our streets, almost bidding defiance to the Spirit of God; nations are in wild disorder, "men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth." The "sun has been darkened" in its going forth,—the "moon has been turned to blood,"—"the stars have fallen from heaven, as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." These things were to take place under the sixth seal; and before the seventh opens, the nations are to cry, "fall on us," O rocks and mountains, "and hide us from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand."

Dear reader, will you be wise for yourself? Do not say your calculations will all fail again. Let me say to you, "come with us; for the Lord has spoken good concerning Israel." The vision has been written upon tables, so that he may "run that readeth it;" it is speaking, and will not lie; it has seemed to lie, to the world, but now it is to come to pass, and will not tarry. What a scene is before us! Rocks rending, tombs bursting, and the dead arising, the living saints crying, "lo this is our God; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation!"

What encouragement we have, dear brethren, to give meat in due season to the flock of God, which is, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." The signs are all fulfilled. Then lift up your voices like a trumpet, cry aloud and spare not; sound the alarm in all the earth; the Lord is coming, the Lord is coming quickly to judge the world in righteousness. O sinner, your time is short. May God help you to repent and prepare to meet your God; that "when the last loud trumpet shall rend the vaulted skies," you may be safe in the arms of Omnipotence, and be gathered with that innumerable company, that shall come up through great tribulation, having their robes washed in the blood of the Lamb, and unite in that song that angels cannot sing, triumphantly walk the golden streets, waving the palms of victory over death, hell, and the grave, saying, "ALLELUIA, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

GEORGE L. TEEPLE.

Bethel, Conn.

Jubilee Year.

It has been some weeks since I have claimed the blessed privilege of speaking to the waiting ones through the columns of the Crisis. I now wish to say first of all, my heart is moved with gratitude to God for his gracious mercies to poor, unworthy me. Unceasing thanks be unto him now, henceforth and for ever,—that I was not left to reject—this last solemn message. Last fall I had read and heard much of the hard spirit of persons believing in the time; after a candid and unprejudiced observation of this subject since the time above specified, I have witnessed in almost every instance the hardness has been on the part of an opposite influence. Unbelief has carried some to such an extent in opposition to the time and some of its concomitant arrangement, that they consider it seemingly a virtue to oppose time; and in so doing they have, in my humble opinion, lost much of the enjoyment of religion. O may the Father of light and life graciously condescend to keep me from ever practising what I see wrong in others.

Never—no, never, in my experience in this last, very last movement of God's dear saints, have I felt such unlimited confidence, and unwavering faith in the Advent of our dear Redeemer, as I do this moment, as also for months in the past—as time rolls away,—my faith increases.—Glory, glory, hallelujah, to God, that I am not left to grope in Laodicea. My faith embraces the ending of the days, with Daniel and all the saints in their lot, as a certainty—between this and spring—in all probability in October. While I have been toiling and laboring unceasingly for the salvation of my fellow-travellers to the bar of God, the great deep of my heart is moved for my children. O God, hear a Father's and a Mother's prayer for their loved ones. While I have read the precious promise of Jesus in Mark ix: 23d, how often have I come to him as the 24th v. presents that Father. I have [illegible] encourage me. They shall be followed by the prayers [illegible] and the exceeding great and precious promises of our Father in heaven, till we reach the land where all tears shall be wiped away,—and anxious, [illegible] hearts will cease to be the [illegible] fountain of groans and sighs. O ye Fathers and Mothers, now looking for and expecting the coming Saviour, look around upon your offspring hurrying to judgment! "Alas! alas!" will then be heard, "where are my children? Lost! lost!" O God, what a theme for your consideration! Now, then, work with all the means within your power. If they are saved they must be brought in very soon. O my soul, reflect and wonder. The world ripe for the harvest—the judgement rushing on,—the last notes of mercy sounding,—the spirit gradually withdrawing from the world. The nations are angry. The opening scenes of that great day of God Almighty are passing in solemn review before the eyes of all that understand the signs of the times. I have much on my own part to humble me in view of the above facts. Dear Brethren, the 14th verse of Heb. xii, is now a present truth; and it will be a requisite in a very few days or weeks from this.

Let me say to the tempted, tried and lonely ones, be watchful, hopeful, "nothing fearing." We are most certainly on the right position as it regards time, all the opposition to the contrary notwithstanding. Dearly beloved, all that receive the divine approbation must be found as the Apostles describe the bride of Christ, in Eph. v. 27, and Rev. xix: 7, 8. Turn and read. Hunger and thirst for that purity of heart, and God will bestow it on you. A few faint groans, a cold formal prayer with an unguarded life and conversation will not obtain it. Cease to trifle—cease to surmise evil—cease to spend hours in frivolous remarks—cease unnecessary disputation—cease spending hours in unnecessary conversation,—spend more in prayer, in meditation. O what a day is at hand! How it rolls up in my imagination, with all its attendant scenes of awe, and magnificent grandeur!! The Trumpet sounds—the dead arise—the Heavens part asunder—the great white Throne appears—its wheels roll in fire—the awful occupant encircled in light and enshrouded in glory, and the books are opened. Prepare, O prepare, reader. Saints of God, gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, watch unto prayer; and above all things have fervent charity among yourselves.

I close by subscribing myself a firm believer in the speedy coming of my once despised King.

Westboro', Mass., August 3.

MACOMB, ILL., July 30th, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—Being desirous of the continuance of the World's Crisis, I write to inform you that I am one of the poor of this world, looking for the glorious appearing of our blessed Master. It does my soul good to read the testimony of those of like precious faith. My heart responds Amen, glory to God.

MARY M. BURNELL.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. [illegible], 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I wish to say a few words through the Crisis to the Brethren and Sisters, looking for the Lord. It appears to me that the event is nearer than some expect. Some think that [illegible] must be overthrown, and the [illegible] gathered to the valley of Megiddo before the Lord appears. But I think the [illegible] of God teaches differently. The man of sin [illegible] is to continue till the judgment [illegible] the books opened. [illegible] prophet are to [illegible] the prophets and apostles [illegible] over the [illegible] and as dead [illegible] be raised [illegible] in, while the [illegible] hold I [illegible] a faithful [illegible]

Brethren, I believe that our [illegible] on the time are [illegible]

God has revealed the [illegible], and intended it to be understood; and I believe that we ought to thank his great name for such heavenly light in these days of wilful darkness and unbelief.

Brethren, let us have faith in God and in his word, remembering that it is those who are of faith that are blessed with faithful Abraham.

Yours, looking for eternal life, through Jesus at the end of the days,

ROBERT HUMPHRIES.

The Doctrine of Natural Immortality.

But, although I think no one can bring an item from the Old Testament to prove the contrary to the views advanced, yet some expressions of the New Testament might seem to favor that side. Admitting there be certain isolated passages, say one to go against a hundred, still our minds ought to be swayed by the strongest evidence. I think Phil. 1: 23, is the strongest objection that can be brought. Paul in v. 20, says, Christ will be magnified in his body "whether by life or by death." V. 21, "For me to live is Christ." This is not good English. I perceive in the Greek Marg. it reads, "for me to live is profitable;" i. e., to the Church, "and to die is gain," i. e., to Christ, or His cause. V. 22, "But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor," (viz., to be of advantage to the Church.) V. 23, "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire" (the word in the Greek expresses an intense desire,) "to depart and to be with Christ" (as Enoch and Elijah did; not by death, but by translation,) "which is far better," (than living in the flesh.) I view it in this light because Jesus directed His disciples to look for His return as the event which would re-unite them forever with Him. They were not to go to Him at death; but He would "come and receive them to Himself," (in order) "that where He is, they may be also." Again, Paul says, when the saints rise to meet the Lord in the air, "so shall we ever be with the Lord." He could not, therefore, according to the word, expect to be with Christ until He comes, unless by translation; and we know from other passages he did not expect immortality, or the crown till that day, although he earnestly desired to depart, and be with Christ. In Phil. 3, we find the goal at which he aimed was the resurrection of the dead. This word in the Gr. is not the common word translated resurrection. It should, as Professor Bush admits, be rendered resurrection from the dead, which implies it was the first resurrection, i. e., the resurrection of the righteous, which could not have been his aim if he expected to be with Christ at death. He then counsels the Church to imitate his example, and expressly states that he is looking for the coming of the Saviour who will "change our vile bodies," &c.

The answer of Christ to the thief on the cross, "To day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," is often brought as an obj.—But Jesus poured out not only His blood, as it were, but also His soul "unto death," and David, in allusion to the subject, says, "thou wilt not leave my soul in hell," (hades, the grave,) "neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption."—(Ps. 16: 10.) Peter quotes this expression, (Acts 2,) and applies it to the resurrection of Christ; so that the reason why the soul of the Saviour was not left in the grave, was, He was resurrected. He speaks of David as dead and entombed, and not having ascended to heaven; and Jesus himself said after He rose, "I have not yet ascended to heaven," and we are assured that the Son of man was "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," which could not have been if He had ascended to the regions of glory in a celestial Paradise. I observe a different punctuation in the Greek Margin, which would make it read thus; "Verily I say unto thee, to-day, or as it might be rendered, "Verily I say unto thee now, thou shall be with me in Paradise." That is, I now assure thee, that when I come into my kingdom, thou shalt share with me in its glory.

Rev. 22: 9. This passage is quoted against the idea that the dead sleep, but it is only because the verse is misunderstood. The Greek stands thus, "I am a fellow servant of thee, and of thy Brethren the Prophets." I have heard 1. Thess. 4: 14, triumphantly quoted against us; but as I have attempted to show, it is one of the [illegible] proof texts in our favor. Luke [illegible]. This passage is also brought as an objection; but it is a strong [illegible] proof of the unconscious state. According to the common theory, Jesus here gives no proof whatever of a resurrection, to which the discourse wholly relates, but only of an intermediate state. The true idea I conceive to be this: inasmuch as God styled Himself the God of Abraham, &c., and it is absurd to suppose He would be the God of one who has no existence; therefore Abraham, &c., must be made alive again, i. e., have a resurrection, else the Lord would not be his God; and as his rest is temporary, and not eternal, therefore in the eye of Omniscience he is regarded as having life; "for all live unto Him" who sees the end from the beginning, and calls things that are not as though they were.

One of the clearest passages in all scripture on this point, I have not alluded to, viz., 1 Cor. 15. If you trace the reasoning of that whole ch. you will find his premises are entirely based on the resurrection; and the conclusion of his logical argument is, that without a resurrection of the entire man there is neither hope for the living, nor happiness for the dead. He clearly teaches that other-wise the believer in Christ, if deceased, has "perished ultimately;" and if living, has no hope beyond the present life; and shows conclusively that there is no future life, or entrance into a world to come, except through the medium of the resurrection.

The reason why we have been called semi-infidels, and cast out of the synagogue, is simply because we attach to the word its literal and appropriate signification. We believe that death is the privation of life—that when a man dies he no longer lives, but after death he is dead, and when asleep in Jesus he is not awake in His service, that when he knows not any thing and his thoughts perish, that he is unconscious of whatever passes, that when he cannot praise the Lord he is not striking his golden harp in heaven. We do not believe with the Poet, that "When this feeble, stammering tongue,

Lies silent in the grave;
Then in a sweeter, nobler song,
I'll sing thy power to save."

We believe the Scripture, "In death there is no remembrance of thee." We no more believe in a death that never dies, than in a life that never lives. We stand upon plain, positive, literal Bible truths; and those who discard, and hate, and persecute us for our close adhesion to a strict construction of the word, are little aware what they are trampling under foot.

But of what consequence is this subject any way? Much every way. Provided natural immortality be truth, it cannot be made responsible for evils that may arise from its advocacy; but provided it has no scriptural foundation, it must be held responsible, so to speak, for all errors and superstitions that may result from its propagation: and rely on it, it will be a fearful array of errors and darkness, and superstition, and death. Says Jacob Abbott, "the gods whom the ancients worshipped, were in fact only deifications of old heroes and kings, who had lived in early times," &c. Again, "the most famous divinities of Egypt, India and Greece, were deified men, heroes, founders of cities and public benefactors, consecrated after their death to the privileges of celestial beings." So nearly all the idolatry of the ancient world depended on the unscriptural doctrine taught by such philosophers as Plato and Socrates, that men were immortal by nature. Thus the famous god of Babylon, Baal, was its first king. The religion of Thibet which prevails, it is said, more extensively than any other, is kept up by the idea that when the Grand Lama dies, his spirit enters the body of some infant; and thus by the doctrine of the soul's immortality this system of heathen worship is perpetuated.

In fact this doctrine is blended with nearly all the systems of heathenism in the world.

When the Catholic power was set up as a persecuting power, there was a great dispute respecting the two natures of Christ; the Monophysites contending that he had but one nature, and the Catholics that he had two distinct natures; and when one died, the other lived. This is connected with our views of immortality. The decrees of the Council of Chalcedon favored the two natures, and those decrees must be enforced. Here commenced that long series of dreadful persecutions under the Papal power. The Catholics seeking to exterminate the heretics from the earth, because they believed as we do; and for their Bible doctrines the martyrs of Jesus fell under the hand of the executioner, by flame, captivity and spoil many days.

Gibbon, speaking of the Catholic doctrine in relation to the incarnation of Christ, says, "In the name of the fourth general Council, the Christ in one person, but in two natures, was announced to the Catholic world. * * * * * During ten centuries of blindness and servitude, Europe received her religious opinions from the oracle of the Vatican; and the same doctrine, already varnished with the rust of antiquity, was admitted without dispute into the creed of the Reformers, who disclaimed the supremacy of the Roman Pontiff. The synod of Chalcedon" (upon which the Catholic Church was based) "still triumphs in the Protestant Churches; but the ferment of controversy has subsided, and the most pious Christians of the present day are ignorant, or careless of their own belief concerning the mystery of the incarnation."

As the divine nature was united to the human nature of Christ during the days of His flesh, but afterwards was separated from it by death; so the Catholic Church believe that an immortal nature is united to the animal or mortal nature of man during his existence in this life, but is separated from it at death, surviving the dissolution of the body, and mounting up to glory, or sinking into purgatory.

The origin of the doctrine of immortality is given by Gibbon thus: "Since the introduction of the Greek or Chaldean philosophy, the Jews were persuaded of the pre-existence, transmigration and immortality of souls."

Standing as we do on the same platform, in consequence of which the early Protestants were hunted like beasts of the forest, a degree of the same spirit is manifested towards us; and it is hardly thought fitting that we be admitted into pulpits, or recognized as followers of Christ.

The practice of the invocation of saints is of course entirely based on the doctrine of immortality; and the same is true of their purgatory. The support of the Catholic system depends much on their prayers and mass for the dead; so that the doctrine of immortality is the corner stone of the abomination that has made desolate the Church of God.

The system of Swedenborg is also dependent on the same idea. Universalism leans much on the false and unscriptural notion that all men possess immortality; and that being a part of God, all men consequently will be saved.

The rapping mania, which is sweeping over the civilized world as a strong delusion sent upon all who reject the truth, and have pleasure in unrighteousness, is founded in the same error of heathen philosophy.

Thus we find that instead of this principle lying at the basis of Christianity, it underlies every system of error and delusion. It is the main pillar of heathenism and idolatry, as well as of the antichristian apostacy, and erroneous theories in the Protessed Church. Just let this single principle, this one enormous block be knocked away, and a large proportion of heathen superstition and idolatrous worship falls to the ground; and the gigantic system of oppression under which the earth groans, follows in its train; and in connection down go Swedenborgianism, Universalism, and various systems of error in the Church; and finally all the necromancy, haunted houses, ghosts, rapping mediums, and a thousand delusions with which the earth is filled. So that I cannot, after investigation, regard it as one of the errors of the world, but as THE great fundamental error in theology, the starting point of delusion in matters of faith.

Now for the question, how came it in the world? I understand its first advocate to be him who said, "ye shall not surely die; but shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." On this principle the heathens have acted, and regarded their departed heroes as gods. Heathen philosophers as Plato, Socrates, Cicero, &c., undertook to defend the doctrine by logical arguments. Consequently, when the Platonic philosophy was introduced into the Church by some adherents to that school who had been converted, they defended the doctrine of immortality by philosophical, instead of scriptural arguments. This was in the latter part of the second century. At length, to decide the dispute in the Church, the infallible authority of Pope Leo 10th was brought in requisition; and he decided in favor of immortality in these words,

"Whereas, in these our days, some have dared to assert concerning the nature of the reasonable soul, that it is mortal, and one or the same in all men; and some, rashly philosophizing, declare this to be true, at least according to philosophy.—We, with the approbation of the sacred Council, do condemn and reprobate all those who assert that the intellectual soul is mortal, or one and the same in all men, and those who call these things in question: seeing that the soul is not only truly, and of itself, and essentially the form of the human body, as is expressed in the Canon of Pope Clement the Fifth, published in the General Council of Vienna, but likewise immortal, and, according to the number of bodies into which it is infused, is singularly multipliable, multiplied and to be multiplied. * * And seeing that truth never contradicts truth, we determine every assertion, which is contrary to revealed faith, to be false; and we strictly inhibit all from dogmatizing otherwise, and we decree that all who adhere to the like erroneous assertions shall be shunned and punished as heretics."

The discoveries of the age in physiological science tend strongly to confirm the view presented. Says J. S. Grimes, "Cousin Lock and myself are in the same dilemma, which forces us to admit the tendency of all human philosophy is to materialism." i. e., that the mind is dependent on the physical organization. He goes on to state that scientific writers have not dared to speak out their honest convictions for fear of "persecutions which arise from bigotry and superstition." All this from one who evidently believes in immortality; and says revelation is above all philosophy. True, but it always coincides with true philosophy, and certainly we can see no common sense in the Indian's burying provision or utensils with his deceased friend, for the purposes of another world; or the Catholics lighting their departed friends through purgatory, by wax candles: or Protestants singing without a tongue, or seeing without the organs of vision.

The discussion of this subject is awaking great interest; and in England two Congregational ministers have started a paper for the advocacy of the unconscious state. I think it time that intelligent minds were informed on this subject. Let us pray much, and prove all things, and hold fast that which is good; and may the Lord direct us into all truth. I, for one, have felt His sweet approving smile in thus believing.

The Hand of God in the Cholera.

I can never forget the sensation I felt in 1831, in relation to the hand of God being manifest in the ravages of the Cholera. This fearful pestilence seemed different in its history and effects from any other disease incident to man. The characteristics of this malady are certainly peculiar. It affects more especially, tho' not exclusively those who are addicted to vices of different kinds, which enstamps on it, in an emphatic sense, the impress of the divine hand. It is inscrutable in its operations, and the ever varying laws by which it is governed. It baffles the skill of the physician, and hurries its victims into the grave with such unparalelled rapidity, that a complete panic usually attends its progress. This phenomenon, together with the falling of the stars in 1833, has ever appeared to me different from any other physical phenomena that have been witnessed in our day. Although at that time, I entertained no idea of the immediate termination of the Gospel age, yet my impression was very strong that there was something marked and startling in those developments of Providence, speaking in thunder tones to warn a guilty world of something impending. What these things indicated, I could not comprehend, until my mind was enlightened on the subject of the Advent faith. It is certainly a remarkable fact, that this most formidable of all diseases should appear, for the first time, in this last age of the world; and just after the darkening of the sun in 1780, which was the great sign hung out in the heavens, to shew the tribulation was ended, and the day of deliverance at hand.

The following interesting and sensible remarks are extracted from the Religious Intelligencer, printed at St. John, N. B.—They were contained in a discourse preached on the subject of Cholera by the Editor.

"That it is a plague from God, and is designed by Him to be a scourge of nations and people, we have not a doubt.—Although we do not wish to express any opinion in relation to it, which strictly should only be expressed by those who possess medical science; yet we believe it is not contagious in the same manner as some other diseases. Those are sometimes seized by it, who have had no approximation to it; while others who have lived in its very atmosphere, entirely escape. Its origin—its history—its mode of attack—its rapid disposal of its victims—and its general defiance of medical skill—all go to prove that it is without a parallel in the long list of human diseases. The number of years allotted as the age of man, have only just elapsed, since amidst the putrid mass of 50,000 human victims to Juggernaut, on the plains of Hindostan, the Asiatic cholera is said to have its birth. It is said by some, that two years prior, some soldiers near Madras were attacked by it. But it is quite certain, that in 1783 it attacked the native inhabitants of India, and 20,000 died. From this period its real existence may be dated. And we would ask, could a plague from heaven on mankind be conceived in a fitter womb, than the putrifying flesh of 50,000 human beings, annually sacrificed to a heathen god? From the period referred to, until 1817, it slumbered, having little or no existence. Then it awoke, like a giant refreshed with slumber, and in its course through India and Europe, until it reached America, it is said to have swept away over fifty millions of human beings—eighteen millions of these were in Hindostan, its birth-place. It has annihilated families, and depopulated cities. It is the sword of heaven, and the terror of earth; God's avenger, and men's executioner. Judging from present appearances, there can be no doubt, that unless arrested by the interposition of God, in a short time, it will be as common, and as fatal, in proportion to the population in rural districts, as in seaports and cities. It may be said that this cannot be, as sanitary and other means calculated to prevent it, exist in country places, which do not exist in cities. We reply, that the accumulation of impurities, and the want of sanitary improvements, are not the causes of Cholera, but the aids to its destructiveness; although in many cases they no doubt attract it, as the iron does the lighning. The real cause is found in THE SINS OF THE PEOPLE; and God has said, "Shall I not visit them for these things?"

Bro. Burnham's Letter.

In respect to the subject introduced in Bro. Burnham,s letter on the first page, I would say that there are in almost all such cases two extremes; and in every great and powerful movement in the history of the Church there have been some elements of excitability that were prone to rush too fast, and thus make shipwreck of their faith. But the great safeguard in all such cases is, to keep our feet planted firmly on the rock. Do not be drawn from the Bible foundation, and all will be well. This is the only sure test of truth and of christian duty. If any teach otherwise, go not after them, nor follow them. This is also the true criterion to test the spirits that have gone out into the world, and to decide whether they are of God or not. The Lord may call some as public speakers, and some as exhorters, it may be, some to one employment and some to another; but the scripture makes it plain that our whole time is to be occupied for the glory of God. The affairs of the world to come should occupy our hearts, and absorb our affections. This is more blessed and glorious than all earthly pleasure. We may have a foretaste of the joys of the redeemed; and should exert every faculty to induce others to see the light, and go with us into the kingdom of God, so soon to be organized, even as we trust this current year; aud we cannot, as I view the subject, provide for future years, without invalidating our testimony, and undermining our own faith in the immediate coming of the Lord.

The spirit of the kingdom should reign within, our hopes should centre there, and our lives be "hid with Christ in God"; so that "when He who is our life shall appear; we may also appear with him in glory." But to drop all earthly care and physical labor, is, to my apprehension, not according to the instructions of the word.

In respect to selling and giving alms, I expressed my views in a late No. of the Crisis. I believe that our substance should be consecrated to God, and held ready to be disposed of at His pleasure—that this principle has held good in all ages of the Church; and that now while we are in expectation of the immediate revelation of the Son of God in His glory, there is special danger in holding on to the world, and being overcharged with its cares, and drinking into its spirit. Herein lies our greatest danger. Let us, therefore, cut loose from the world, and make sail for the kingdom. If I were infallible, I could mark out the precise course in which each one is to move; but as I do not claim this, I can only direct them to the word of God which is able to make them wise unto salvation, and to "the grace of God which bringeth salvation, which hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, aud godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."

If I know my own heart, I wish God's will to be done. I desire on the one hand, to give no lenity to worldly lusts; nor, on the other, to encourage any neglect of the social relations in life, or christian duty in the employment of all our powers to the honor and glory of God.

In respect to a man's not providing for his own household, the scripture makes it plain that such "have denied the faith, and are worse than an infidel."

I sincerely hope to have an interest in the prayers of the saints, that the Crisis, at this critical moment, may be directed just right, and all shall be for the glory of God. Beloved Bro. and Sisters, let us have a single eye, that our whole bodies may be full of light. The Deliverer is coming to Zion; let us be willing to make every sacrifice for His sake, that we may inherit glory in the holy mountain when He shall come.

Beloved Brethren:—The meeting to be held in Champlain Sept. 6th, is designed for a Tent, or Camp meeting. Bro. Cummings and Mathewson will be with me to assist in the work. Come Brethren, come to this meeting. Lay aside your worldly business for a few days. I desire to see you all who so nobly stood by me at the very beginning of this struggle. You are witnesses of my labors among you in bye-gone years; how I have faced the rude winds and storms of your nothern winters, to spread the light of truth among you.—And now I invite you to come with your tents, and give us a hearing. We have good news to tell you. Brethren in Canada and Vermont, come to this meeting, Oh come and hear the world's last warning. We shall be able to give the particulars soon.

ISAAC ADRIAN.

Since Bro. Miller's letter was in type we have received a copy of the same from Bro. B. P. Manning. Upon which Bro. M. makes the following remarks:—

Dear Brethren,—This is in accordance with my faith. O my dear brethren, the Lord is coming this fall in the seventh month, and are we ready for the scene? It will be a glorious day to the saints; but O what will the sinner do in that day?—O Brethren, hold on to the Lord and his word.

Thy brother, striving for the kingdom,
BENJ P. MANNING.

☞ We are requested to say, if any laboring Bro. are at liberty, a visit to the Church worshiping at Chapman Hall, Boston, would be very acceptable.

REMARKABLE DISCOVERY IN ITALY. It is stated in a letter quoted by the Parlamento of Turin of June 2, that the tomb of Odoacer, King of the Heluli, has been discovered at Ravenna by some workmen, who, it appears, found the body encased in a suit of armor of gold, which they broke into pieces and secretly sold. The matter was, however, soon divulged, and further investigation has led to the discovery of some precious articles, which had escaped the rapacity of the culprits, and of a monumental inscription confirming the fact of its being the tomb of Odoacer. Odoacer was king of the barbarians who overthrew the western Roman empire in the year 476. He was murdered by his conqueror, Theodoric the Great, A. D., 493, and was buried at Ravenna, where, after the lapse of 1360 years, it appears his remains have been found.

LATEST FROM ST. LOUIS. The St Louis Republican of the 10th, says that quiet has been restored in that city. As nearly as could be ascertained ten persons were killed in the riots. A few of the wounded were not expected to recover. Discoveries of killed and wounded were yet being made.

GREAT FIRE AT NEW ORLEANS. A destructive fire broke out at New Orleans on Saturday, at noon, on Tchoupitoulas st., and spread with great rapidity to Foucher, Lafayette and Magazine sts., destroying many stores and a large quantity of provisions and naval stores. The loss is estimated at one million dollars.—[Boston Traveller.

The number of great crimes which we are called upon daily to record is absolutely apalling. Murders and homicides, shooting and stabbing, et cetera—these are the staple of news, until we become tired of publishing them, and would suppress the whole record were it possible.—[Boston Mail.

ROMAN CATHOLIC TEACHERS DISCHARGED.—Philadelphia, August 11.—The newly elected School Directors in the lower section of the city, have removed some fifteen of the teachers in the public schools within the last few days on, it is understood, sectarian grounds, all the discharged teachers are belonging to the Roman Catholic Church. Much feeling is being manifested here among the friends of the teachers, and the matter seems likely to widen, to a great extent, the already existing breach between the Protestants and Catholics in this city.—[Commonwealth.

RIOT IN ST. LOUIS.—FIVE PERSONS KILLED. St. Louis, August 8.—A dreadful riot occurred in this city, this evening, about 5 o'clock. At the Fifth Ward Polls, during an altercation, an Irishman stabbed an American. This was a signal for a general attack, in which pistols were fired, stones thrown, and other missiles freely used. The mob destroyed a large number of drinking houses, and broke the furniture to atoms. The crowd supplied themselves with axes, and smashed everything that would yield to blows. It is rumored that five persons have been killed and a large number wounded. The mob threatened to attack the college. The office of the Anzeiger has been attacked, and is now threatened again. Eight military companies are now marching towards the point threatened, and a number have formed in line to protect the Anzeiger office. Two arrests have been made. About sixty houses, mostly Irish groceries of the lowest order, have been destroyed. On Morgan Street there is not an Irish grocery left.—[Commonwealth.

LATEST. Cincinnati, Aug. 13.—Our latest advices from St. Louis are up to Wednesday, and from them we learn that the riot had not then been subdued, great excitement was prevailing.

TERRIFIC STORM. One of the most violent and destructive storms that ever visited Fairmont, Va., and its vicinity, passed over that [illegible] Thursday afternoon. A great part of the roof of the Presbyterian Church was taken off. The roof of the banking house of the Fairmont Bank was swept clear off. An old stable was blown over. The top of the eastern wall of the new parsonage of the M. E. Church, with the window frames that had been inserted, was blown off. Forest trees, fruit and ornamental trees, were uprooted and wrenched off. Houses and furniture were drenched with rain. The losses cannot be enumerated. A memoranda furnished the Virginian by a gentleman of Palatine says, the way train, when about a half a mile from town, three trees were hurled across it, stopping it instantly. No one injured. Ten or twelve trees were thrown across the track between there and the bridge, breaking the telegraph wire in various places.—The corn-fields present a scene of almost entire destruction.—[Balt. American, Aug. 7.

ELECTRICAL PHENOMENON. Evening before last, between the hours of eight and nine o'clock, our attention was attracted to the curious appearance of the sky, by the almost continuous flashes of lightning which followed each other without a moment's intermission. We, in company with many others, were tempted by its singular brilliancy to watch it for a considerable time. Stretching from South East towards the North, a mass of grotesque and fantastic clouds, occupying about one sixth part of the circle of the horizon, formed as it were a vaporous wall, behind which a sea of intense electric light, possessing somewhat of the appearance of the aurora borealis, filled the entire space; whilst momentary flashes of what is called chain and forked lightning rent asunder the masses of the clouds with streaks. These streaks varied in color from the pale effulgence of a silver line to the fearful blood red streak of angry omen in superstitious minds. Its forms were still more wondrous, far eclipsing the noblest efforts of the pyrotechnic art. Letters of the alphabet were distinctly visible. L, J and K were as plainly seen as the moon then calmly filling her accustomed place in another part of the heavens.—[Savannah Republican.

The wheat crop has been gathered in Ohio and Virginia. In the former, the crop has been much better than anticipated, the fly having done much less injury than was supposed. In Virginia the yield is more than an average in quantity and quality.—[Weekly Chronicle.

All kinds of agricultural products in California are said to be abundant, and we hear the most favorable reports in relation to the crops from almost every section of the globe. In some instances, however, drought has been very severe, especially in some parts of Canada, Maine, New York and Ohio.

A most distressing drought continues to prevail in the southern part of the state of Maryland. The crops are abandoned, cattle suffering for want of pasture, and water becoming scarce in the wells and springs.

The Baltimore Clipper, of last Saturday, has the following comment on the recent sad occurrence in Brooklyn:

THE BROOKLYN MURDER. The announcement in the papers of the murder on Wednesday evening, in Brooklyn, N. Y., of his darling boy, by J. N. T. Tucker, while crazed with liquor, has sent a thrill of horror throughout the length and breadth of our land, and furnishes another powerful argument in favor of the enactment of a prohibitory liquor law. Who that knew the unfortunate Tucker some fifteen years ago as a talented and deeply pious clergyman, would have supposed that he would ever have fallen a victim to rum? He was a man of no ordinary abilities, of a good heart and noble impulses, but alas! he has fallen a victim to a vice that has and is slaying daily more men and women than war, famine, or all the diseases that flesh is heir to combined.

FEARFUL STATE OF ANARCHY IN CHINA. Private letters and circulars received in this city from China, by the Arabia, give accounts of a sad state of affairs in that country, the result of the civil war which has been so long raging there. The old government having its hands fully occupied in repelling the attacks of the insurgents in the vicinity of Pekin, bands of armed robbers are devastating the country, particularly the Central Provinces. One letter says that forty-eight tea companies had returned to Shanghae from the Central Provinces, having been robbed of all their means of purchase. The great Commercial mart of Honan has been burnt by an armed mob. Ningchow, the district from whence the Moning Teas are brought, is stated to be in possession of an armed rabble, who have beheaded the Mandarins and taken possession of the Government.

King Otho clings of course to the kingly prerogative of not feeling himself bound by any public promise he may have given either to his people, or to foreign powers. Still, should he continue for a while in this course, he too might forfeit his throne.

The Servians lately began to organize their National Guard, and were drilling it three times a week. Their force amounts to 100,000 men, and Austria became so much alarmed that she required explanations from Prince Alexander in Kragujevatch. Of course the explanations were given, the drilling was restricted to one day in the week, and Austria declared herself satisfied, though the Serb National Guard, which hates Austria on account of the perfidy with which the Government has treated the Serbs in Hungary, may feel inclined to try the force of its musketry against the Austrians as soon as Francis Joseph shall openly declare against Russia.

The Czar is now employing every means to induce the Christian population of the districts which he is forced to evacuate, to accompany his army, and to emigrate to Russia proper.—Where promises and blandishments are not sufficient, the cattle of the peasant are seized, and his crops mowed down, in order to force him to emigration. About 6,000 Bulgarians from the Dobrodja were in this way induced to cross the Danube with the retreating Russian army, and it is said that the same system is to be carried in Wallachia. INTELLIGENCE FROM VIENNA.—July 23.—Austria and Prussia are agreed upon the appreciation which the last Russian note deserves. The two Governments only disagree on minor points—but they agree in asserting that the occupation of the Principalities by Russia is dangerous to the integrity of the Porte, and the Russian propositions cannot be taken into consideration until the Principalities are evacuated.—The joint answer of Austria and Prussia will be addressed, not to Count Nesselrode, but to Count Esterhazy.

SPAIN—Tuesday, July 25.—Madrid was quiet. Espartero would arrive on the 28th. General Manuel Concha had arrived, and acted cordially with the Captain General. At Alicante a deplorable accident happened during the revolt. A large number of women were at work in a cigar factory when the conflict began in the street. In alarm they rushed down the staircase, the balustrade gave way, and they were precipitated into the "well." Sixteen were killed and many frightfully injured.

THE WAR.—The present state of affairs.—It seems at length acknowledged by the British Government—as well by the admissions of Ministers in both Houses of Parliament, as by the tone of the editorials in their acknowledged organs—that the Emperor of Russia will not abate one jot of his original demands, and that the war will be long and protracted. The official answer of the Czar to the Austrian summons—on which all hopes of a peaceful settlement hung—has not been suffered to transpire, beyond the fact that it was haughty and unfavorable.

ITALY.—The insurrection in Parma is suppressed. There is great uneasiness in Modena. An outbreak is expected. Elsewhere throughout Italy much discontent prevails. The French garrison of Rome is to be reinforced.

THE ENGLISH ARMED BOATS.—The regulations which have been recently established for the organization of the armed boats of the English fleet in the Baltic, provide that the flotilla shall consist of eighty or ninety boats, one half of which shall carry howitzers. These boats are to be divided into three squadrons, and each squadron into three divisions. A reserve squadron will be formed by the boats of the paddle and screw steam sloops.

The Emperor Nicholas has now changed his tactics. It is asserted positively that he has preferred to fight the Austrians to the Turks; he has been waiting and expecting that Austria, from the line of conduct she has pursued toward him, would declare war; and, as every one knows, he has been constantly collecting troops on the Austrian frontiers. He now declares publicly that, since Austria has given him the casus belli, his first move will be on Vienna, which he means to take and hold Hungary, which has more love for Russia than for Austria, sympathizes with the movement, and it is through Hungary that the main attack is to be made. Nothing is said by the Emperor about declaring the independence of either Hungary or Poland. No hopes for the independence of the latter country, at least, need be entertained. For some reason, the Emperor seems gratified at the opportunity which is presented to march on Vienna, perhaps because he knows that Austria will receive neither the sympathy nor aid of England and France, and perhaps also because Austria has treated him somewhat contemptuously on the Turkish question.

The wind is just now setting in favor of Austria joining the alliance, and I only hope she will for Hungary's sake. When the Czar gets the Hungarians up and promises to sustain them in their struggle for liberty, it will become a curious question whether England can assist Austria in again reducing them to bondage. If the English people will not consent to support Austria against Hungary revolted and struggling for freedom, then the Holy Alliance is broken, and the great game up. You may rely upon it, this is Nicholas' policy, to detach England from France through the Hungarians.

THE CHOLERA IN FRANCE. The National Intelligencer publishes the following letter from an intelligent American gentleman now in Marseilles. It is dated July 17:

"I am induced to make some remarks about the cholera, now in twenty-six departments in France. Perhaps they may throw light on the strange journeyings of this dreadful scourge of God. It appears to have flown over Lyons, that large city watered on both sides by the Rhone and the Saone, and in every way surrounded by fresh water. It has never been there. It lighted at Avignon, at the Pope's palace, the highest ground in the city, occupied by French troops. Out of eight hundred in that palace, two hundred and forty-five died; the rest marched to Arles, carrying the disease with them, and it there raged in the most dreadful manner. Such was the panic that in a population of twenty thousand only five thousand remained, the rest having fled no one knows where. The deaths are at present reduced to fifty per day. Some of the soldiers were ordered to Marseilles to embark for Algeria; they introduced it into this place.

Eighty thousand inhabitants have emigrated; many fled to encamp in the woods. Soon their little means will be exhausted, and they will be forced to obtain employment in or near the city, which will add to the victims. Many die from sheer fear. If the Russians were within five miles of the city, the Cossacks, correctly remembered in France, within sight, the panic could not be greater. It is said that fathers have fled, leaving wives and children to follow as soon as necessary articles have been collected; also that mothers have done the same thing. This I will not believe of a mother. Families hire wagons, carrying bedding, &c., not knowing, so that they get clear of the city, where they shall go, as the bastides, (country houses near the city,) six thousand in number, shanties, &c., are crowded. Our streets look as though a second fatal plague existed. At six o'clock the shops close, and every body retires, while a death-like stillness prevails even upon the beautiful promenade Bonaparte, which is usually crowded till midnight. The deaths in the remaining population of 129,000, have been within a few days from 130 to 187 per day, the usual number being only twenty-five.

A government vessel sailed from here on the 10th for Constantinople with troops; the cholera appeared on board and they put into Malta, having lost forty-five. Soon this fearful disease will be introduced into the armies of the Moslem and their allies, the Western Powers.

From what I have said it would appear that this scourge is not wholly in the air, as is believed in the United States, but is also communicated by travellers. It does not follow the course of rivers; it avoided Lyons, and, as I state above, has never been there. That city, as regards fresh water, is washed on all sides by mighty rivers; and coming from the North of France, passing by Paris, where the cholera is bad, the other from Switzerland. Marseilles is surrounded by the sea; no fresh water is near, and yet see how it suffers."

At Marseilles, at last accounts, the deaths had reached four hundred per day.

LONDON, Friday, July 28, 1854.

The last debate in Parliament about the war has again given evidence of the discrepancy, I might say antagonism, of the views entertained by the Government and the people of England. The present war is really popular in England, and people cheerfully pay the increased taxes; but if we inquire into the causes of that popularity we soon will find that originally it was neither with the Turks—though their gallant resistance has now generated a friendly feeling toward them—nor the apprehension of the disturbed balance of power—since the people of England do not understand such abstract doctrine. Nor was it the sense of their duty to interfere on behalf of the weaker party, wronged by a strong and unscrupulous neighbor—since the English have uninterruptedly acted quite the same way in India as the Russians in Turkey. It was not even the danger to the overland route to India, which was threatened seriously by the fall of Constantinople. The war was and is popular, because it is a war against the Czar, whom the English people hate as the oppressor of Poland, of Hungary, and of all Continental Europe; the war is popular, because the bulk of the nation believe that it is a war against despotism, on behalf of freedom. The Government and the governing classes, on the other hand, do not wish to harm Russia seriously; indeed, the despotism of Russia is so necessary for their schemes, that they would most anxiously endeavor to leave it undisturbed, if the Czar would only pledge himself not to extend his dominions toward the South. Therefore Poland is not called to rise; therefore even the formation of Polish legions in Turkey was discountenanced by England and France; therefore the Auxiliaries have not yet fired a musket against the Russians in earnest; therefore we hear only of sham bombardments, of soundings, of reconnoiterings, but not of serious attacks; the armies are always at a respectful distance from the enemy, and the support of England and France has been, up to the present moment, of no avail for the Turks.

Still, the Turks have defeated many well-laid diplomatic schemes by their bravery, and frustrated the plans of the politicians, which were all based upon a Turkish defeat. Such discomfiture must be avoided in future, and Turkey must be prepared to have her administration transferred little by little to such honest and straightforward hands as those of Marshal Saint Arnaud, for instance. Therefore, it has been planned that a portion of the Turkish army should be incorporated into the army of the allies; it is to be paid, clothed and officered by the allies, who in that way, will soon deprive the Sultan of the control of his army, and of the direction of his own affairs. It is the first step toward superseding him altogether, and making him a prisoner of England and France, such as the Grand Mogul at Delhi. The present scheme forms only a portion of the whole plan, of which I informed you several months back. We may soon see that step by step the government of Turkey will pass into the hands of Western Europe. As to foreign affairs, the Sultan has already tied his hands by the treaty by which he accepted the support of England and France, now the Turkish army is to be controlled by them; the next step will be the finances, and the independence and integrity of Turkey will soon be moonshine.

Later from Europe.

By the Arabia at New York on Wednesday, we have three days later advices from Europe, to the 29th ult.

The Emperor of Russia is stated to have said to the Austrian representative, "Tell your master that if he wishes war he shall have it, but probably neither he or I will see the end of it." His reply to Austria's final summons is not yet published, but it is known to be haughty and unfavorable. The Austrian government, meantime, says in general terms: "Austria will not disappoint the hopes of Europe." Prussia daily shows less and less inclination of siding with the western powers.

Gortschakoff, owing to the Turkish movement, is withdrawing his centre on Bucharest, and wings back upon the line of the Sereth.—The Czar approves Gorschakoff's plan of campaign, and orders him to continue offensive operations.

There has been no fighting since last advices, but Omar Pasha has proclaimed an amnesty to the Wallachians.

The Spanish insurrection remains triumphant. The position of affairs is unchanged.—Fighting all over, and all the country for a moment quiet, awaiting Espartero's arrival at Madrid. Queen Christina is still hiding.—Queen Isabella keeps close in her palace. Salemana has escaped in the disguise of a lamplighter. France and England favor a Ministry and Despartero, but disapprove of a Regency.

In the British Parliament Lord Dudley Stuart's motion of a want of confidence in the Aberdeen Ministry was negatived.

An insurrection was suppressed at Parma.

The American Minister to China had visited Loo Choo, and also proceeded up the Yang Se Kang river, and intended visiting the Yellow river.

Constantinople letters state that the Austrian Internuncio has expressed himself very strongly at Omar Pasha's presumption in crossing the Danube, after it had been agreed that the Principalities should be occupied by Austria.

According to the Paris Patrie, the Russians have evacuated the Dobrudsha. The Russians are fortifying Brailow in the strongest manner. The French transport Pericles, with 200 000 francs on board for the army in Turkey, came in collision with a steamer off Malaga, and sunk with her treasure.

Gen. Ney, son of Marshal Ney, died at Gallipoli of cholera. Jerome Bonaparte and son of Baltimore, were received with all the honors due to the Princes of the Imperial family.

There is no news of O'Donnell, but it is said he has seen Espartero, and would enter the capital with him.

Latest. Russia asks for an armistice. It is reported that at a recent Cabinet Council at Vienna, (no date) Austria and Prussia decided that the Czar must first leave the Principalities, before his proposals can be considered.

Advices from Baro Sound are to the 25th.—Three ships were there, and eight cruising between Helsingfors and Cronstadt. The rest of the fleet were at Aland Islands. No cases of cholera reported. The Danish government refuse to allow the establishment of a cholera hospital for the allied forces.

Madrid, July 25th. All tranquil at Barcelona; order prevails. Gen. Manuel Concha has arrived, and acts cordially with the Captain General.

Italy. Turin, July 27th. Permanent council of war sitting. Two soldiers were sentenced to death and shot at Parma.

TENT MEETING AT BODOWINGHAM, ME.

The Lord willing there will be a Tent Meeting in Bodowingham, Me., one mile from Harwood's Crossing, on the Portland and Kennebec Railroad, to commence Wednesday morning, August 23, and continue over the Sabbath. Provision for boarding and horse-keeping on the ground. Brethren who can had better bring their lodging tents. Bro. Berrick and other preaching Brethren are expected to be present.

J. COUSE.

Those coming by Railroad will stop at Harwood's Crossing.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, July 31, 1854, Bro. John C. Boutwell, son of Chandler and Eunice R. Boutwell, aged 19 years and 6 months.

Last April Bro. John was led to seek the Savior, and found him precious to his soul. Through the goodness of God I was permitted to point him to Christ as his only hope. Thank God, I saw him weep when wounded, and heard him shout when made whole. It was truly heart-cheering as he obeyed the Savior's command, and was buried with him by baptism, to hear, as he came up out of the water, those shouts of praise, which were the fruit of his lips, offered from a full soul. Truly he rose to walk in newness of life a little while, and then sleep in the grave till the Heavens shall be no more.

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep.

His parents, brother and sister deeply feel and mourn the loss of him; but they mourn not as those who have no hope. He was sick five weeks and suffered much, but was very patient. The disease was such that he was wandering much of the time, but when his mind was clear he gave good evidence of his acceptance with God. He was a believer in the coming of the Lord soon. When he was dying he was heard to exclaim, "come, Lord Jesus, come quickly, Jesus come;" and when his mother asked him if he felt that he should fall asleep in Jesus, his reply was, "yes." Thus he died in the faith that he should sleep but a little while, and then awake to immortality.

O may his friends prepare to join with him in an anthem of praise in the kingdom of God—I preached to a good and attentive congregation from Job 14 : 14.

J. A. PACKARD.

Stockbridge, Aug. 2, 1854.

Died at the residence of my wife's father, in Dalton, Georgia, on the fifteenth of July, our little son, John S. A. Howell, aged about six years, after a very distressing illness of several weeks. His disease was dropsy of the brain, which he bore very patiently till the last. He has fallen asleep, but it will be for a short time. We bury him in hope of seeing him again this year. I could not be present to see him die; but hope to meet him in the resurrection morn. He will "come again from the land of the enemy," and although we mourn now, we hope to rejoice with him then.

My companion is with me at present, she having arrived here last Saturday. Our P. O. Address is Union Mills, La Porte Co., Ind.

Yours in living faith that Jesus will come this year, 1854. JOHN HOWELL.

Union Mills, Aug. 9, '54.

Died, in Burlington, Conn., April 21, Jane, daughter of Orren and Mary Moses, aged 22 yrs.

During her stay in Terryville last summer, she sought and obtained pardon for sin. In September her health failed, and she returned to her home the first of October, hoping to recover soon. Her father took the fever and died in November.

At this time her friends fondly hoped that she would be spared to them, but were soon convinced that a fatal disease was seated on her lungs, and Jane must be laid beside her father and a loved sister who had slept but a few months.

She said to her afflicted mother, "I did hope when father died that I should be spared to be a comfort to you, and assist in the care of the younger children." "But," said she to them all, "do not mourn for me when I am dead, but prepare to meet me in the kingdom."

Just twelve weeks before the burial, after a time of severe suffering, when the family were gathered around expecting to see her breathe her last, she asked for her Bible, showed her mother the text she desired to have used, and selected the one whom she wished to preach on the funeral occasion.

On the 23d of April, a concourse of neighbors, friends and relatives assembled at the house of mourning, and listened to a discourse from 1 Thess. iv. 13, 14.

O, may the widowed mother, sisters and brothers be abundantly sustained by grace from on high, and with their beloved Jane, have an entrance ministered unto them into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

"She was to death resigned,
No terror in her looks was seen—
Her Saviour smiled dispelled the gloom,
And smooth'd her passage to the tomb."

—[Second Advent Watchman.

Conferences.

The Lord willing, there will be a Conference at Whitefield, N. H., commencing Thursday, Aug. 24. Brethren and sisters, come to the meeting, and labor for the salvation of souls.

E. WHITNEY.

By leave of Providence, there will be a Conference of believers in the near approach of Christ, in Hubbardston, commencing Tuesday, Aug. 22, to continue over the following Sabbath. The meeting will be held in Mechanics' Hall. There are tenements and rooms connected with it, where brethren from abroad can be accommodated, who wish to bring board and bedding. Those coming by Railroad will stop at Gardner Depot; a coach runs daily from that place to H. Distance 6 miles. Provision made for board and horse-keeping. Brethren in neighboring towns are cordially invited to come to this feast in the name of the Lord. Brethren S. S. Brewer, I. Adrian and J. Brittan are expected. In behalf of the Brethren,

J D MERRIAM.

There will be, by leave of Providence, a Conference meeting of believers in the near approach of the coming Savior, in Hubbardstown, commencing Aug. 22d, to continue over the following Sabbath. The meeting will be held in Mechanics' Hall. Brethren from neighboring towns are cordially invited to come up to this feast, in the name of the Lord. We expect the Lord will send some of his Watchmen to give the trumpet a certain sound, that men may prepare themselves for the battle. There are tenements and rooms connected with the Hall, where Brethren can be accommodated who wish to bring board and bedding. Those coming by Railroad will stop at Gardner Depot, a coach running daily from there to H. Distance 6 miles. Provision will be made for board and horse keeping. In behalf of the Brethren,

J. D. MERRIAM.

Providence permitting there will be a Conference at

Colerain, Mass., Tuesday, Aug. 15, to continue over the Sabbath, Christian Hill.

Brother M. Grant will accompany me.

In behalf of the brethren, H. PRATT.

P. S. Will the Brethren make an effort to attend these meetings and especially to help the poor to attend. They must have the gospel.

Appointments.

By help from the Lord, we will go to Buffalo, N. Y., with the Tents, and commence a Meeting, Wednesday, Aug. 30th, and remain over the Sabbath. Several preaching brn. from the East will attend. J. CUMMINGS.

If the Lord permit, we will meet the brethren and sisters at Woolwich, Me., on Saturday, Aug. 19, and remain over the Sabbath.

I. PARTRIDGE,
R. R. YORK.

The Lord willing, I will preach at Salem, Mass., the first Sunday in September.

J. WESTON.

NOTICE.

There will be a meeting at the Clark Meeting-house, in Barnstead, N. H., to commence Thursday, August 31, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn. J. Hemenway and J. G. Smith are expected. E. S. [illegible]

The Lord willing, I will meet with the Brethren

In West Alton, N. H., on the 3d Sabbath in August. G. H. RUSSELL.

The Lord willing, I will be at Bethel, Ct., Aug. 24; Danesville, 26 and 27; Roxbury, 29.

I would say to the brethren at Chester Factories, if the Lord will, I will meet with them soon after the Camp Meeting at Winsted.

G. L. TEEPLE.

TENT MEETING.

The Lord willing there will be a Tent Meeting near the depot in Epping, N. H., commencing Wednesday Morning, Aug. 23d, and continuing over the Sabbath. We hope the brethren will come from the adjoining towns, so as to be on the ground Wednesday morning. We also hope the brethren will make arrangements to lodge on the ground, as it will be rather difficult to find lodging for all. Provision for board on the ground. J. HEMENWAY.

CAMP MEETING IN WEST HAWLEY.

If the Lord will, there will be a Camp Meeting in West Hawley on the farm of Bro. Horace Thayer, commencing the 2d Monday in September, and continuing one week. We expect some of the Lord's Watchmen will be present to give the time of night, and give the trumpet a certain sound. Come brethren, far and near, all who can, to this pilgrims' meeting. Bring your tents and provisions as far as possible. We want to have such a meeting as will glorify God. The Lord has some sheep scattered over these mountains that need feeding and cannot attend the meetings at a distance. Come all who want to hear, it may be the last opportunity. In behalf of the Brethren,

J. E. HEALY.

CAMP MEETING IN WINSTED. Providence permitting, it is thought best to have one more great gathering of the Savior's friends at Winsted, Ct., on the old ground, commencing Monday, Aug 28, and continuing one week. Brethren and Sisters, if time continue, come from far and near to this feast of tabernacles, and let us make the tented grove vocal with praise once more to the King of kings before we meet to sing the grand hallelujah chorus in the everlasting kingdom.

Brethren Burnham, Couch and Berick are expected to be present to preach the word.

Let all who can, bring their tents and bedding. Board for all who wish may be had on the Camp ground, and all the profits, if any, will be appropriated to bear the expenses of the meeting, and feed the poor. Good accommodations for horses on reasonable terms, with a cheap conveyance to the Encampment from the cars, stages and hotels of Winsted.

SAMUEL G. MATHEWSON, } Committee.
MILES GRANT, }

The Lord willing, there will be a meeting at Salisbury, Millville, the last Sabbath in Aug. Brethren Austin and Paine are invited to attend.

Third Sabbath, at Hill Centre; also Saturday previous. B. H. COUCH.

The Lord willing, I will, as the brethren request, be at the Bergen Neck, N. J., Camp Meeting, Aug. 14.

Also preach at Bridgeport, Ct., Tuesday and Wednesday, Aug. 22 and 23.

And at Springfield, Mass., Thursday evening and continue over the Sabbath.

Also attend the Camp Meeting at Houghtonville, Vt., Aug. 29.

Lowell, Mass. J. WESTON.

I shall preach at South Hope, Saturday, 19th, at 3 o'clock, and at Rockland, Sunday, 20th inst. S. K. PARTRIDGE.

CAMP MEETING IN BRISTOL, R. I.

There will be a Camp Meeting in Bristol, R. I., on Bristol Common, commencing September 13th, and continuing over the Sabbath. Bro. J. Cummings will be in attendance with his tents. Brothers I. Adrian and S. S. Brewer are expected to be with him. Come, Brethren and Sisters, come up to this feast of tabernacles. Come in the name of the lord of hosts. Let all that can bring tents and bedding. There will be provisions made for board and lodging on the ground.

JAMES H. GLADDING.

CAMP MEETING.

The Lord willing, there will be a Camp Meeting at Houghtonville, Vt., on ground owned by Bro. A. G. Gibson, commencing Tuesday, Aug. 22, and continuing one week. It is hoped that the Brethren and Sisters in all this region of country will come together at this meeting in the name and strength of the Lord. This may be the last meeting of the kind we shall ever have. We hope the Brethren, as far as possible, will come with tents and provisions, prepared to take care of themselves. There will be a tent for the use of those who cannot bring one. The Lord willing, Bro. I. Adrian, with other ministering Brethren, will be present to preach the word. Will Bro. L. Boutell inquire of the Lord whether it is his duty to attend?

Your Bro. in hope of life,

O. D. GIBSON.

There will be a Grove-Meeting, August 18, 1854, to be held at Hillsdale Co., Mich., half a mile south of the plank road leading from Hillsdale to Barswood Corners, on the town line of Cambria. Brethren coming on the cars will stop at Hillsdale the day before the meeting, where teams will be in readiness.

Will some of the Time preachers attend?

T. L. W.

Attend the Camp-Meeting at Bergen Neck.

Hebron, Washington Co., N. Y., Aug. 28th, if they will get up a Grove or Camp-Meeting. Will they give notice in season?

Champlain, N. Y., Sept. 6th, and over the Sabbath.

Montgomery, Sept. 13th, and over the Sabbath. Will the brethren provide a grove if convenient?

I will attend to Bro. John Gibson's appointment if he can have the meeting commence the 21st of Aug. Will he inform me if he can change it?

Will the Advent brethren give me a hearing? I pledge myself to answer all objections against the truths I advocate. ISAAC ADRIAN.

TENT-MEETING.

The Tent-Meeting appointed to be holden in the neighborhood of Syracuse, Onondaga Co., N. Y., will be held in Van Buren, Onondaga N. Y., 12 miles west of Syracuse, commencing Thursday the 17th of August. The meeting will be 4 miles south-west of Baldwinsville, (on the Syracuse and Oswego Rail Road,) and 3 miles north of Canton, (on the Syracuse and Rochester Rail Road). Brethren, one and all, come to this meeting prepared to do good and get good; bring your tents and provisions with you, and camp on the ground. For those that cannot do so there will be some way provided. Dear Brethren and Sisters, the Lord is coming this year. Come and hear the evidences from the word of God, and be prepared for that event looked for by the saints of every age. Bro. Cummings will be present with his big Tent.

JOHN T. ONGLEY.

N. B. There will be a team provided to convey Brethren to and from the cars. J. T. O.

Special Notices.

It is requested that Bro. Edwin Burnham or some other ministering brother, capable of presenting the argument on definite time in a clear manner, would visit Lee, N. H. [illegible] any one comply with the request he will please give notice through the Crisis.

BENJ. DEMING.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

Will Bro. Berrick and Couch come into this region and hold one Conference more? We are exceedingly anxious to have them come. I believe they will have a good hearing. "Do come over and help us." If they cannot come, will not Bro. I. Adrian, or some other of the Watchmen come and sound the alarm in this section once more? There is not a Watchman in all this region to tell the people when the Lord is coming.

In behalf of the Brn.

C. L. [illegible]

[illegible]
Then gird the gospel armour on,
And wash your robes from sin.
Give all your heart to God, for he
Thy holy soul will bless;
Believe his word, and crucify
The members of the flesh.

Do joys untold thy young heart cheer,
And hope, thy pathway all
With flowers of gladness? yet, O ne'er,
Ne'er lay aside thy shield;
For there's a vile and subtle foe,
That seeks thy joys to mar;
The road to Heav'n with thorns he'll strew
Its travellers to deter.
With earth's delusive joys he tempts
All Pilgrims Heavenward bound;
But trust in God, and ne'er consent
To tread the unhallowed ground;
For God has said he'd ne'er forsake
Those of a contrite heart;
Who daily Jesus' cross do take
And quit each vain delight.
All things of earth will soon decay;
For death is stamped thereon;
But joys of Heaven's eternal day
Through endless years will bloom.
Then, Convert, rise, put on thy strength,
And gird thy armour on,
That when God makes his jewels up
Thy work be found "well done."
A few short months and Christ will come
And take his tried ones home,
To share with him those joys untold,
In New Jerusalem.

Bro. Miller's Letter on the Types.

Dear Bro. Himes:—"I want to see Brother Bliss in relation to his calculation of the termination of the prophetic periods. I hope he may be right, but I think he is not. I will tell you why. If you will examine, you will find all the ceremonies of the typical law that were observed in the first month after the vernal equinox, had their fulfilment in Christ's first advent and sufferings; but all the feasts and ceremonies in the seventh about the autumnal equinox, can only have their fulfilment at his second advent. Let me notice some.

1. The ark rested on the seventh month, seventeenth day. This has an appearance of a type, the rest of the gospel ark at the judgment. Gen. viii. 4.

2. The sanctuary and worshippers, and all appertaining to it, were cleansed on the seventh month, tenth to seventeenth day, Lev. xvi. 29—34, surely this is a type.

3. The Israelites of God were to afflict their souls, from the evening of the ninth, to the evening of the tenth day, seventh month. Lev. xxiii. 27—32, a type of the troubles, Dan. xii. 1.

4. The holy convocation of all Israel, seventh month, 1—15th day, Lev. xxiii. 24; Num. xxix. 1. Is not this a type of the gathering of the elect, Ps. lxxxi. 3, 4; xcviii. 6—9.

5. The great feast, seventh month, fifteenth day, all Israel appeared before the Lord. Lev. xxiii. 34; 1 Kings viii. 2.—Type of the marriage supper. Heb. xi. 9, 10.

6. The jubilee trump sounded, seventh month, tenth day, throughout all the land. Lev. xxv. 9, 10. Type of final redemption. 1 Thess. iv. 14—17.

7. The time of release of all Hebrews in bondage, seventh month, fifteenth day. Deut. xv. 1—15; xxxi. 10, 11; Jer. xxxiv. 8—14, at the feast of tabernacles. This evidently is typical of the release of the Israel of God.

8. The atonement was made on the tenth day, of the seventh month, and is certainly typical of the atonement Christ is now making for us. Lev. xvi. 1—34, antetype. Heb. ix. 1—28.

9. When the high priest came out of the holy of holies after making the atonement, he blessed the people. Lev. ix. 22, 23; 2 Sam. vi. 18. So will our great High Priest. Heb. ix. 28. This was on the seventh month, tenth day.

10. This was in harvest time, the feast of harvest was kept in the seventh month, from the tenth day to the seventeenth.—Lev. xxiii. 39. And the end of the world is compared to the harvest. Matt. xiii. 30. Christ says plain in "harvest time."

11. Also in the feast of tabernacles, in the great day of the feast in the last day. John vii. 2, 37. So in the last great day, Jesus' voice will call forth the righteous dead. John v. 28, 29; 1 Thess. iv. 16.

Will you and brother Bliss examine and tell me, what you think of my scribble on this point. If this should be true, we shall not see his glorious appearance until after the autumnal equinox. A few months more of trial and calumny, and then all will be over." WM. MILLER.

Low Hampton, May 3d, 1843.

We believe that God has honored the anniversary of the two first two great feasts by great event under the Christian dispensation. The last and greatest of the type [illegible] know of no point in the year more likely to be honored by the Advent of the Savior than the anniversary of the feasts of the seventh month. This event is so momentous, the observances of this month were of so much importance, and the present movement in reference to it, is so universal and astonishing, that we feel called upon to present all the evidence and all the light which may be brought to bear upon the question. It is a question of the most thrilling interest, and of the most vital importance; and should be most solemnly and prayerfully considered. And with the light we now have on this subject, it is our deliberate conviction that the institution of the seventh month—the feast of trumpets, on the first—the day of atonement on the tenth—and the feast of tabernacles on the fifteenth will be honored by the great events of the end of our probationary state. We commend the arguments of Brethren Snow and Storrs, to the consideration of all; and let each one remember that at the bar of God, he must stand or fall for himself. Yes, your blood, O reader! will be upon your own head. Take heed, therefore, that your loins be girt, and your lamp trimmed, and your wedding garment prepared; for NOW hath the MIDNIGHT CRY entered ALSO into YOUR ears.—[Advent Herald, Oct. 9, 1844.

"Watch and Pray, for ye know not when the Time is." Mark 13: 33.

As I was reading the Crisis, I saw a Bro. requested some one to write on this passage of Scripture. This text, I think, has prevented many from embracing the time argument. It has stood in my way until now. I had made up my mind to write a short article on the above named text, before I saw the Bro's. request. I shall be brief, but think I shall be able to show to every candid mind, that this text does not conflict with our present position on time. In the first place, we will commence back at the twentieth verse of the chapter. There we are told of the great tribulation that shall come on the elect whom he hath chosen—not on the Jews whom he hath scattered to the four winds of heaven. In the 24th verse Jesus says, "in those days after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken." These signs, I think, are all in the past. Next he says, will be seen "the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory."—Who shall see him coming? Jesus says they, not you, not those He was talking with then; because those things were reserved for the last generation living on the earth. 29th verse. "So ye in like manner when ye see these things." What things? The signs. Then "know that it is nigh, even at the doors." The word "ye," here refers to his Church, that is living at the present time, viz., the last generation. This, says Jesus, "shall not pass till all these things be done." What things? The coming of Christ and the gathering of his elect—not the wicked Jews who remain in unbelief. He has now pointed us to the future, and carried us down to the Judgment. He then comes back to the time in which he was speaking, and tells them that no man knoweth the day nor the hour. "No, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Here he uses the present tense, and says unto them, take ye heed. Who must take heed? Those persons whom he addressed. But some objector may ask how I know the word "ye" had particular reference to those to whom he was speaking. I think we may know from the connection in the next verse, viz., the 34th, "for the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey," &c.—Can we not all see that these words were spoken expressly for those who were living at that time? If we are in search of truth, I think we can. Now let us look at Matt. 25th. Here is a parable that must be fulfilled somewhere in the history of the Church. We learn from the latter part of the 24th ch., that there will be two classes of servants, one is giving meat in due season, that is saying the Lord is coming; the other, he delayeth his coming. Then the parable is introduced. It seems very plain where it has its fulfilment.—The virgins are being aroused from their sleep; the Midnight Cry is sounding;—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh." This parable must have been given for the benefit of the Church about the time of his coming. We are here again carried down to the judgment, or to the shutting of the door. In the 13th verse he exhorts them to watch, and tells them they know neither the day nor the hour. The same as in Mark, watch for ye know not when the time is. Read the 14th verse, and you will see he uses the same language as in [illegible] the [illegible] country." Then if the 33d verse in Mark refers to the time he was speaking, Matt. 25: 13 does also. So we find there is a harmony after all, and that the wise will understand. Says Paul, "that day shall not overtake you as a thief."

J. B. DODGE.

I now wish to say a few words in regard to the position some have taken, that the angels would sound the midnight Cry, or make the time known. We are informed that the word knoweth in Mark 13: 32, should be rendered "maketh known." If this be right, then let us read it so; but of that day and that hour maketh known no man, no not the angels, which are in heaven, neither the son but the Father.—Then the position that the angels will make it known, is not true. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret to his servants, the Prophets." Now we believe he has revealed the year of the Advent unto us, by his servants, the Prophets. See Dan. 8: 13. The question is there asked, how long the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation? I understand this to be the same as the abomination of desolation. "To give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot." I understand the sanctuary to refer to the land of Palestine, and the host to the Church, or Holy City of Rev. 11: 2. It is there said it should be trodden under foot forty and two months. The 2300 days reach from 446 before Christ to the end of the world, or to the coming of the Lord. Daniel saw the vision and sought for the meaning. He was full as inquisitive as we are to know the time of the Lord's coming; and yet he was greatly beloved. He then heard a voice saying, "Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision;" what part of the vision? Already he understand the number of days from a certain time to the judgment; but he knew nothing in regard to the starting point. Gabriel told him in the 17th verse that the vision was at the time of the end, or in other words, it should then be understood. Daniel said in the 27th verse, he "was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." He then commences praying. In the midst of his prayer Gabriel came to him again, and says, "I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding." He then gives him the starting point of the vision, or the 2300 days, and points him to the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. The last information he gave Daniel was for the instruction of the Church in the time of the end, and has been sealed until the present time, when many are running to and fro and knowledge is being increased. We now turn to the 12th ch. of Daniel, and we there find another starting point a little nearer by. The question of time comes up again. The Angels first inquire in regard to it; then Daniel; but none of them understand when the end would be. Why not? Because it was sealed until the time of the end. But the Lord has not left us in darkness; he has given us the starting point. This information could not have been for Daniel's benefit; for he did not live to see the abomination of desolation set up; then it must be for the Church in the time of the end. He tells him, from the time this desolating power is "set up" there shall be 1335 days; and he shall stand in his lot at the end of the days. I verily believe this refers to his resurrection; for this is the subject they are talking about in the commencement of the chapter.

Time has rolled along—century after century has passed away until the time has arrived for this prophecy to be understood. We have learned, I believe, when the abomination that maketh desolate was "set up." If this be true, we know the year when the Lord will come, or when Daniel will stand in his lot. These dates have always been in the Bible, but God designed that the Church should overlook the time until now. This is the way, as I understand, that God has made known the time to us by the Prophets. The condition of the world at this present time, I think, indicates a general uprising, and the breaking up of all the kingdoms of this world. We can truly say, that "the nations are angry;" and I, for one, believe the time has about come for the dead to be judged. Oh brethren, this is a blessed hope. May the Lord help us to purify ourselves "EVEN AS HE IS PURE." Let us watch and be sober.

Read and Ponder.

Dear Brethren:—We are living in times of fearful peril, and it becometh us to walk before the Lord with care. There are a few persons among us, who teach some things that may do much harm to the flock of Christ.

1. They teach "Do not work," "live out your faith." Let me say to such, why not then carry out your own principles? Do not the persons who cook and wash for you have to work; why not excuse them? Do not ministers have to work, and hard too? and you idle? Was not idleness one of the crimes for which God destroyed Sodom? Does not the "Word" say "if any will not work, neither shall he eat?" What is said of those who "wander about from house to house, working not at all?" But you say, "I must live out my faith." O yes, live it out, but do not idle it out. And the manner of living it out is laid down in Rom. 12. "NOT SLOTHFUL IN BUSINESS, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." I do not say work to lay up anything; but work because God commands it—it is right—and it is a crime to be idle. Although you do not desire to lay up for the future, yet labor for present necessities, and that "ye may have to give to him that needeth."

2. Some teach, "sell all because Christ is coming this year." Let me ask is it not rather a mean sacrifice for us to give up our property because the Lord is coming this year, and we cannot have it any longer? It is virtually saying, "if he were not coming I would keep on in my selfishness!" But some will act on such a low principle! Is it not better to sell and give alms because God commands it?

3. Let me ask certain ones where in the Scriptures we are taught husbands may neglect their wives, or wives their husbands, because the Lord is coming? Do not the Scriptures teach "Husbands to love their wives as their own bodies—not to be bitter against them—and wives to REVERENCE their husbands—be chaste, keepers at home," &c.? Can we be saved merely because we believe a theory, if we do not live out the doctrine of the New Testament? I think not. O children, remember "the meek shall inherit the earth."

There are some elements in community, let them engage in what they may, they ever are prone to go a little too far, and thus suffer their "good to be evil spoken of," and wound the cause of the Redeemer; but with this evil, my dear brethren, we must have patience. Let us not smite, but speak in plainness and love, to reprove them in a proper measure. Doubtless they are honest, and will forsake the error when it is shown them. Let us not fret and be troubled when the "oxen shake the ark:"—God will take care of his own cause. I pray he will keep us from all fanaticism—of all kinds.

Before closing I wish to say, some persons have reported that I did not go out West to preach "time," and that I "do not believe it fully," &c. Now all this is false from beginning to end. I have believed the Lord would come in '54 ever since last winter, and I believe it now. I believe it! if I get mistaken, so it must be—I must bear it. I do not know that Christ will come in '54, it is a matter of faith on the evidence before me. I make it no test of Christian character; and I have preached it North, South, East and West, in every place where I have gone,—the results are recorded on high.

I admire the spirit of the Crisis, it seems to me to be the spirit of Christ indeed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ROXBURY, CT., June 18th, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I do esteem it a blessed privilege to write for the Crisis. It is truly a welcome visitor to my dwelling; and I should not know how to be deprived of it. It feeds, it nourishes, it strengthens the wayworn pilgrim as he is journeying on to that better land—the home of the blest—where "the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick," and where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. I feel glad it is my lot to be cast among the despised ones who are looking and longing for that day, and expecting that this year is the jubilee.—Can we say this year? Yes, blessed be God, I believe it with all my soul. And I feel like lifting up my head and rejoicing, knowing that all our trials will soon have an end, and this mortal will have put on immortality, and the last enemy be destroyed, which is death. Glory to God. Death is to have no more dominion—tears are all to be wiped away—wickedness to have an end. We will say with John the Revelator, "Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus," and come quickly. I do not know that I have a single doubt but the Lord is at hand, and the true Midnight cry is sounding; and it speaks in mercy to all, "go forth to meet your Lord." All are invited to accept of offered mercy, all may come, if they will, and find pardon at the hand of God. How cheering the thought that soon it will be said to the faithful, "Child, your Father calls, come home." Oh how sweet the word home sounds to the poor pilgrim who has long sighed for home. Bless God we shall not be disappointed, although the world scoff at our hope, and see no signs of the approaching judgment, the blessed word declares we are not in darkness, but we are children of the light. And we are heirs to an inheritance which is incorruptible undefiled, and that fadeth not away. We who have the hope of soon seeing Jesus, are willing to be scoffed at; and I, for one, would not exchange this hope for ten thousand worlds like this. It is a blessed hope—it is a living hope—it maketh not ashamed—it reaches to that within the vail, and best of all, it is soon to be realized.

"Oh how joyful then to hear him,
While all nations shall revere him,
Saying to his flock who fear him,
I have come on earth to reign."

We, being few in number in this place, have been much encouraged of late. The Lord has been with us in power. One backslider has been reclaimed, and the slumbering ones have been waking up.—Love has been increasing, and we have become more united, more steadfast in the faith of the Lord's speedy coming. And we think the little band stands better now than it has for years. To God belongs the glory, and the praise to Him that liveth forever and ever. I never had more confidence in my God than I have had for a few weeks past. Such peace and such joy the world knows nothing of, neither can tongue nor pen describe it. I have written more than I intended, and must close by asking heaven's blessings to rest on the reader and also on the writer, and save us one and all in the kingdom which we expect will be set up this year. Glory to God, Amen, and Amen.

SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

WEST HAWLEY, MASS., July, 1854.

Dear Brn. and Sisters:—In obedience to the command, to "exhort one another daily, and so much the more as we see the day approaching," I exhort you in view of the glory so soon to be revealed, to press forward towards the "prize of high calling in Christ Jesus," for soon, in due tmie, "we shall reap, if we faint not." Yes, "soon the reaping time will come, and angels shout the harvest home!"—Then our fond expectations will be realized; for God will gather all of the wheat into the garner. Not the least grain will escape his notice, when he comes to make up his jewels. O, how changed the scenes of the coming age. Now, subject to all the miseries resulting from the curse, we sigh and groan for deliverance, the redemption of our bodies. Then, having been redeemed, we shall rejoice and make glad the city of our God, all endowed with health and happiness, the blessing of life; for, in those regions of bliss and glory, "the inhabitants will no more say I am sick, and the people will all be forgiven their iniquity," and sorrow and sighing will flee away; for God himself will dwell with men, and wipe away all tears. O, what untold glory! and so soon to be realized by the faithful few! May the anticipation of it nerve us up to gird the armor closer on, "quit ourselves like men, and be strong," that we faint not in the day of adversity, but be enabled to withstand the scenes of that trying day. Holiness and purity of heart, are indispensable, if we would see our Jesus, and be made like him; for "without the mind of Christ, we are none of his." O, let us be sober, and watch unto prayer; for if we are not on our guard constantly, the enemy will exert his influence over our hearts, and cause us to sin. But take courage, fellow pilgrims, our travels through this howling wilderness are almost ended, home is almost in sight, already does the eye of faith view with transport the reflected rays of its glittering sun. O, land of rest, shall I be a partaker of thy glories, such as "eye hath not seen, ear heard, nor the heart of mortal man conceived." Not unless I square my life by the word of God, and bring forth the fruits of charity, which the sainted apostle Paul thus describes, "Charity suffereth long and is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." We are told, that without the adornment of all these Christian graces, our religion wil avail us nought at the day of Judgment. O, let us see to it that we are thus adorned, having our garments free from spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing.

"How careful then ought we to live,
With what religious fear;
Who such a strict account must give
For our behavior here."

ELIZABETH I. S. RICE.

BRISTOL, R. I., Aug. 3d, 1854.

Dear Brethren:—We are living in that period of time that all the worthies look with interest to for the consummation of their hope; and as we have entered, and are nearly at the close of the last year, it stands us in hand to be ready; having our lamps trimmed and burning, with oil in our vessels, that we may obey the command that accompanies the Midnight Cry, "Go ye out to meet him." We have a sure word of prophecy whereunto we do well to take heed as unto a light that shineth, or does now shine, in a dark place, and will shine more and more unto the perfect day. There is great light in the 17th ch. of the Revelation of John, respecting the judgment of the mother of harlots, and the beast that had a deadly wound, and that was healed. This beast came up out of the bottomless pit, which is, I think, infidel France. We find by looking at the eleventh ch., that they made war on the two witnesses for three days and an half. Look at these things and see where we are standing. It will not do as some have done, to come to the conclusion that we have learned all that is necessary for us to learn, and graduate. No, no.—We must still continue in the school and learn, for there is a great deal to learn yet, and but a short time to learn in; and we must learn fast. And if we lack wisdom, we can ask God, and he has promised that whatsoever we ask in the name of Jesus, he will give it; and if we have that wisdom we shall understand both time and judgment. O may we all come up to the Judgment, understanding Christians, is my prayer. Amen.

J. H. GLADDING.

BOWDOINHAM, Aug. 6th, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—Is this the year of jubilee to God's people? I think it is—I so understand God's word to teach—it does seem to me that the days will end this year. Oh! Brother, these are great and important truths to this world—to think that probation ends in '54—no more souls saved—solemn thought! Is it possible that in a few weeks Jesus will come to take his children home? Blessed hope! "O I long to be there" with all of Father's children, to shake the friendly hand with God's ransomed ones. I have some friends sleeping in Jesus—I want to see them—I hope to see them this year in the kingdom of God, no more to part.

The little band in Bowdoinham are trying to hold on to God's word. Remember us, dear Brother, in your prayers.

Yours, waiting for deliverance,

DAVID HATCH.

PROPHETIC PERIODS.—1260, 1290, 1335 Years of Daniel and John.

The daily sacrifice taken away, and the Abomination of Desolation set up, and the Saints given unto the hand of the Little Horn. . . . . . 519.

1260 years of tribulation.—Rev. 11: 2, 3, and 12: 6, 14, and 13: 5. The sun darkened May 19, 1780, to show its termination. . . . 1779.

1290 years, or time times and the dividing of time—or time times and a part, in which the TIMES and LAWS are in the hands of the Little Horn. . . . Napoleon takes away the civil power of the Little Horn. 1809.

1335 years, reaching from the setting up of the Abomination of Desolation, or the time when the Saints' times and laws were given into the hand of the Little Horn, to the end, when Daniel with all the Saints will stand in their lot . . . . . . 1854.

THE END.

☞ The above Diagram is designed to illustrate the measurement of time from the rise of the little horn, with eyes and a mouth (the civil power of the Greek Empire, or Eastern Rome incorporated with the Ecclesiastical Power of the Papacy.—Dan. 7: 8) until the coming of Christ at the resurrection of the saints.

The 1290 years, or time, times and the dividing of time, (Dan. 7: 25) measure the period during which the saints, times and laws were to be given into his hand—The period of the saint's tribulation, we understand, were shortened to 1260 years, (Rev. 12: 6, 14—11: 2 and 13: 5); but times and laws were to remain in his hand during 1290 years, extending 30 years beyond the 1260. "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end." 45 years from the close of the 1290 make 1335 years, when Daniel will stand in his lot, which must be at the resurrection of the saints.

Christ, speaking of this desolating power—the papacy—says, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened,"—which marks a point previous to which the saints were taken out of the hands of the little horn power. Thus we perceive that 1260 years of the 1335 ended prior to the 19th of May, 1780, when the sun was darkened. Add 75 years to 1260 and you have 1335 years, which must end before May 19th, 1855, according to the evidence from the darkening of the sun. But we have abundant historical evidence that the papal power, i. e. the abomination that maketh desolate, was set up in 519, hence the 1335 days (years) end in 1854, which brings the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the saints the present year.

Definite Time.

When we open our Bible, we read, "In the beginning, God created the Heaven and the earth"; and we find that in six days He completed the work of creation: that He distinctly marked the days, by the evening and morning of each; and that at the end of six, He ceased from His work, and blessed the seventh day," and "sanctified it a Sabbath of rest." It has often been asserted that "we have nothing to do with the time; that we can know nothing about it; and that very few, except the poor, illiterate, and low classes of people, attempt to pry into it."

But, friend, I have something to do with the time; for "what God has revealed, belongs to us, and our children forever"; and "all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works"; so that we can know something about any doctrine contained therein; and all, who make this assertion, prove that the subject is hateful to them, or that they are too indolent to search it out.—I rejoice and glory in being identified with the meek and lowly children of God. I esteem them as my brother, and sister, and mother; they alone have the promise of a glorious inheritance. Poor indeed, we are, and God hath "chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which He hath promised to them that love Him." As to our want of knowledge, we do not profess much; but I do thank God, that some of us do know enough of pure mathematics to add 446 and 1854 together, and learn the amount of the sum total; and when we do this, it always brings a pleasant reminisence of a similar number contained in Dan. 8: 14. If we have nothing to do with time, why did God stoop so low, as to tell us all about the time of the creation, and that He made each day; for He could as easily have told us that He executed it, without telling us how many days He was doing it, as to have marked definitely, as He did, each day, if it were no concern of ours. That it was given us for instruction, is evident from the above passage; and if we are patient, industrious, persevering scholars, we shall learn a good lesson from the description of the first seven days of the world. From 2. Pet. 3: 8, we learn that "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years; and a thousand years as one day." This proves (typically,) that each of the six days of creation, were the representatives of each of the six thousand years, which have since passed away: and the Sabbath that of the day of judgment, and therefore we feel authorized to set them down as chronological in every respect. We find likewise that God, has reserved times and seasons, in His word, many instances of which stand as beacon lights, which signalize the truthfulness of God to His word, and demonstrate that He has never failed to fulfil it at the specified time, sometimes in literal days, or years, sometimes in typical, and at others, in figurative, or "prophetic time," a day for a year."

"And the Lord said unto Noah, Come thou and thy house into the ark; for thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation. For yet seven days and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth." Gen. 7: 4. This we find literally fulfilled as the 11th and 12th verses testify. The dreams of Pharaoh and his officers, which were interpreted by Joseph, while in Egypt, were literal days, and years, and so fulfilled. Gen. chas. 40, 41. The wandering of the Israelites forty years in the wilderness, was foretold, and literally accomplished. Num. 14: 34. The seventy years captivity was foretold in Jer. 25: 11, and so fulfilled from B. C. 606 to 536. The foregoing prophecies have been fulfilled, and many others that could be adduced, (where each have had a literal accomplishment) at the specified time; and if God has proved His word by the prophets true, in every case of literal time, is it unreasonable to suppose that He will also fulfil those of prophetic time?—He has told us of "the times of restitution of all things," by all the prophets from Samuel down; and "determined the times before appointed," of all nations, "and the bounds of their habitation."—And do you ask why? "Because He hath appointed a day in the which He will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Amos says, chap. 3: 11, "Surely the Lord will do nothing but He revealeth His secret to His servants the prophets"; and if we do know that the most startling prophecies will shortly be fulfilled, the great secret of them is when? And as God has revealed it in those prophecies which are "a light, shining in a dark place," shall we not do well to inform ourselves of them, take heed, and be mindful of the words which proceeded from holy men, both prophets and apostles, who "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost?" In 1st Chron. 12: 32, we read of a certain class, "of the children of Issachar," which were "men that had understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do; and all their brethren were at their commandment": and it would be a happy thing if men of that class of leaders lived in these days; and still more happy if their hearers were as teachable as their predecessors.

If it is the wise man that discerns both time and judgment, what is the character of him who does neither? Well did the Saviour say, "Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, and of the earth; but how is it ye do not discern this time?" Luke 12: 56. And oh what fearful curses did he denounce on those wicked Jews, "because they knew not the time of their visitation! And if the discernment of the time in which we live, is so highly commended by the scriptures, who shall dare to stand up and say, "ye have nothing to do with the time?" And if a want of a knowledge of the time be fraught with such terrible denunciations, what will be the final fate of those ignorant ones, who neither know themselves, nor suffer any under their control to inform themselves of it?

"The prophets enquired, and searched diligently, what manner of time, the Spirit which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow": and even an angel asked "the man clothed in linen," "How long (time) shall it be to the end of these wonders?" Now if God has always been true to His word, in the chronology of all the prophecies, and a want of knowledge of it is fraught with such tremendous consequences, surely we may expect that day "will come as a snare on all" who reject His testimony; for not one jot, nor one tittle of His word will pass away without a perfect fulfilment. God has appointed the time of the end of the world, and He has revealed it in His holy word; and we feel that He has unfolded it to us in unmistakable terms, by that Spirit which cannot lie; and shall we hide our light under a bushel? No, "we have not so learned Christ." What light we have, we must give to the children, that they may walk in the same faith, enjoy the same hope, and glorify the same Father in heaven. Still, to get the last word, the same reverberating sound echoes, "you know nothing about it, and you have changed from the original advent doctrine, and must be called an innovator." As for names, we have already a sufficient supply, our friends having been peculiarly lavish of late; but as long as they gratuitously load us with such "flattering titles" as fanatic, heretic, crazy, fool, mad, and the like, one cheek is smitten; and to receive the last mentioned, we must "offer the other also." Blessed, blessed; tell me what it was, that Moses esteemed so much greater riches than the treasures in Egypt?

Our way is now open before us, thank God; and we feel it to be our imperative duty to promulgate what God has given us, to the extent of our ability: but I am utterly at a loss to perceive wherein I have departed from the original advent doctrine: only as the time passed, we know that that computation was not commenced right. I was once a believer in 1843; (at least I desired it might prove true,) but never a strong one; for I knew then, that there was a later "commandment to restore and build Jerusalem", than that of the seventh year of Artaxerxes; and one too, which bore the original features of the parent-prophecy; (viz.) that of the building of "the streets, and walls", of the city: and I knew that God was always long suffering; and therefore had reason to expect that he would extend his merciful forbearance to the very last extremity; which to the praise and glory of His name (be it spoken,) He has done; and this extremity will reach no farther than next spring, when "the sanctuary will be cleansed."—But was not definite time preached then, and did it not terminate in 1843? "Yes, about 1843; and there is where we ought to be now, and keep close to the original view". Now, friend, common sense and common honesty require that we should away with all this; for after the time passed, we were constrained to acknowledge that we had been premature in our conclusions; and shall we go back there, and say, "here is the point where the sanctuary should have been cleansed? God forbid.

Would such a course be honoring God? and, besides, it is now ascertained to a mathematical demonstration that if the vision had commenced in the seventh year of Artaxerxes, it would have terminated in A. D. 1841 or '42; for the chronology of Artaxerxes' seventh year is B. C. 459. These are facts which cannot be disproved nor denied, with any color of truth; and as we now look back and see that 1841 would have fulfilled the vision had it begun in the seventh year of Artaxerxes,—we see that even Bro. Miller would have been taken unawares. But thirteen years after 1841 will close the vision; and all his ready, waiting, laboring, suffering servants will be greeted with "well done."—We patronize no crusade against any class, but "the powers of darkness;" and we are called to wage an uncompromising war "against the rulers of darkness in this world; against spiritual wickedness in high places." These are our avowed enemies, and traitors to our King; and we desire all who have any regard for their future well-being, to leave their wicked companions, and come and join us; and join under the direction of our Leader, we will march shoulder to shoulder into the Kingdom, in defiance of Satan. But he is our adversary, and a powerful one too, and he will blind and hinder all over whom he can have any influence. I hope all will remember that "other foundation can no man lay, than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ;" but if chaff and stubble be the materials with which you build, it will not stand the fire of "the last day;" and all such will find a narrow escape as from a burning city; with the lamented loss of all things; all his reward lost; and if possible, himself covered with sorrow and shame, even though the soul be barely saved.

But the builder with precious stones, (precious truths of God's word,) will only find his work purified, and his salvation and reward secured; and if even at best, "we are unprofitable servants," how much more will it appear so when we behold him and ask our dear Lord, "what are those (deep and cruel) wounds (which I see) in thine hands?" "Those which I received in the house of my friends."

Said Paul, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me at that day; and not to me only, but to them also that love his appearing." Will any one get that crown who does not love his appearing? Again, "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." Will he appear the second time to the salvation of those who do not look for, nor desire to see him?

Said "the man clothed in linen," "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." A question naturally arises here, who is it that is waiting for the end of these days? Is it the Universalist or infidel?—No. Is it the careless unbeliever, or scoffer? No. Is it the hypocritical professor? No. Is it the cowardly rejecter of "the cross of Christ," and of the evidence of his soon coming? Alas no. Well, who is it then that is waiting and coming with his whole heart, to "the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days?" It is the penitent, believing, whole-hearted follower of the Lamb, "who counts all things but dross, that he may win Christ, and be found in him," not in his own righteousness, "but the righteousness of God which is by faith;" that he may not only be found in peace "in that day," but become a conqueror, through grace, of the enemies of his Lord. By a living faith in Christ, and the power of his word and spirit, he sees with joy the day approaching; catches every spark of light, both from Providence and inspiration, till it gleams up so bright that he is constrained to rouse his sleepy companions and admonish them, that "the day is breaking."

But says one, "I see no light; all things continue as they were from the beginning." "A little more sleep." But, friend, does not the wise man say, "The idle soul shall suffer hunger?" and not only so, but "through idleness the house droppeth through," which is morally, as well as literally true? If the labor of watching and searching the Bible is too much for you to do, you will be overtaken as by a thief; and then "a great ramsom cannot deliver you." But where, says another, do you get your light? I discern light of the near approach of the end of the world, by the analogy of God's word, when I compare circumstances and things respecting the prophecies, and promises, in connection with history, and find a resemblance.

We receive light on the types, when we take pains to "search them as for hidden treasures;" but we must crack the shell of the nut before we can obtain the meat. We receive light from the "Seven Times" depression of the Jews, from Manasseh's captivity, and from the institution of the jubilees. But the greatest of all we derive from the vision of 2300 days, and the seven periods into which it is divided; the "seventy weeks" of which contain four of these periods; and we feel warranted to affirm that that vision reaches to the end of the world; for Gabriel said, "at the time of the end shall be the vision; and afterwards, "at the time appointed the end shall be:" and he explained the vision in part to Daniel, but not fully; for Daniel says, "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." He did not understand when it would begin; but Gabriel came again and told him "at the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem;" and as the last decree went forth in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, Neh. 2: 1, and that year is proved by astronomy and history both, to have been B. C. 446, it follows that we can ascertain to a nicety when the vision will terminate. But, says another, the seventy weeks do not belong to that vision; "they are by themselves and cannot be a part of it." Then please to tell me what vision they do belong to; for they "seal the vision," and must consequently be a part of that vision which they ratify. "Well, you have no evidence that Nehemiah's administration reached to the termination of the first period," says another. Josephus is very explicit about the indefatigable exertions of Nehemiah to build up the city generally, besides affirming that the walls were left as a standing, "eternal monument" of Nehemiah; and the second commission, which he obtained at the court of Persia in the 32d year of Artaxerxes, (after he had been governor of Jerusalem twelve years,) and likewise, his spending all his after life at Jerusalem, till "he came to a great age," and his dying there, leave the strongest presumption on the mind, that he fulfilled that period.—Says Gabriel, "Seventy weeks are determined, (cut off) upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish transgression, to make an end of sins, to bring in everlasting righteousness, to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy." The canonical prophecies were doubtless sealed and closed at the end of the first period, which is as good a mark for the first forty-nine years, as if we could prove that Nehemiah's administration continued that term of time; and it is certain that Zechariah and Malachi ceased prophesying about that time, (viz.) B. C. 397, and I believe Nehemiah's works and death and the closing of the prophecies both fulfilled the period; both are mentioned in the prophecy, Daniel 9: 24, 25, and both, beyond doubt, terminated the first period.

The second period began at the end of the first, and reaches sixty-two weeks, or 434 years, and was filled up at the Baptism of Christ, when he was 37 years old, the first day of the 4th Jewish month of A. D. 38. Here an objector starts, and says, "you depart from the gospel when you say he was 37 years of age at his baptism, for Luke says he began to be about thirty, and that was the age required by the law, for all the priests to be inducted into the priestly office, and enter their ministry." How long will mankind "make the word of God of none effect by their traditions?" There is no requirement in the law that even the high priest should be thirty years old, or any other number of years when he takes the priesthood. It is well known that the eldest son of the high priest was heir to the office from Aaron down; and at whatever age he was, when his father died, whether thirty, forty, or eighty, or even if he was no more than twenty, the priesthood was his, unless ceremonially incapacitated to hold the office. God's word must and will be fulfilled; and if we say that Christ was no more than thirty years old at his Baptism, we deny that God can fulfil his word; for the Angel said it should be sixty-two weeks after the seven were expired; and A. D. 30 true era, is only sixty-one; and we know that the sixty-two were fulfilled, because he said himself, "the time is fulfilled;" and "the Spirit of the Lord hath anointed me." Luke, in his third chapter, records the events of no less than five years: but not in the order in which they transpired, as is his custom; for he speaks of the imprisonment of John, and afterwards of Christ's baptism. Luke says he began to be about 30 years of age, which was doubtless true; for the word about is not definite, and he would be, even if he were 32, in the 15th year of Tiberius, which I believe to be true; and after John had preached five years, he would be thirty-seven at his Baptism. But if any man is so tenacious of the letter of those records, why not say without any qualification that he was "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth?" for there is the same evidence for the one that there is for the other. But if the necessary latitude be given to both, all is harmonious with other scriptures and both passages true, according to the use of language among the Jews at that time. We often find the words of the evangelist "eight days;" "about eight days;" "after eight days;" which invariably means a week; such was their custom, so that we feel satisfied that his rising again from the dead, the third day, fulfils that passage in every import of the expression. I have not one doubt but that Luke was an inspired man; though he often recorded events together which did not immediately follow each other, as chap. 2, v. 39, will show. He there speaks of the holy family returning "to Nazareth" from Jerusalem; but they must have fled into Egypt first, and when they returned from Egypt they settled in Nazareth in Galilee. Now it will be seen that if the second period of the vision was fulfilled at the Baptism of Christ, then he must have been 37 years old on the first day of the first Jewish month of A. D. 38, true era, when four hundred and eighty-three years of the vision had [illegible]

The third period was fulfilled in a little over three years after the Baptism, when he suffered on the cross and sealed the vision, as is allowed by all; and he must have been a little more than forty years old at that time; and if the arguments used to prove that he was 37 at his Baptism are satisfactory, the age of forty at his death will not be disputed.

The fourth period, I fully believe, was filled up at the conversion of Saul of Tarsus; for it appears he was the last Israelite, of that wicked generation, that was converted to God, and that all miracles ceased at that time, except those which he wrought himself, which power it was necessary he should have and exercise to prove that his apostleship was from God. This was in A. D. 45 and completed the seventy weeks.

We now come to the commencement of the three last periods, or in other words, the 1260 years, being the fourth period of the vision, which by the extension of 30 years at the end filled the sixth period of 1290 years; and again by the extension of forty-five years will close the vision at the end of 1335 years; and as some of our Brethren have given a clear and lucid view of the existence and termination of the papacy (which we believe to be "the abomination of desolation," and to mark this period,) between the years 519 and 1809, we see nothing to object to, and feel persuaded that they are right. But, says an objector, "there was nothing in 519 to mark the setting up of the papacy, not half so much as there was in 518, for that year Anastasius died, and Justin succeeded to the throne. But they settled some of their quarrels in A. D. 519.

But, friend, you believe that the papacy was Daniel's "little horn," Paul's "man of sin," and John's leopard "beast with seven heads and ten crowned horns?"—Yes.

Well, let us enquire what would be necessary to transpire, in order to mark the setting up of this power.—1st. He "came up among the ten horns, and before him three fell;" 2d. He "made war with the saints, and prevailed against them;" 3d. "He sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God;" 4th, He speaks great things and blasphemies against God and his people; 5th. His kingdom is universal and he continues 42 months.—By coming up among the ten horns, must we not suppose him to rise after the ten, and by three falling before him that he conquered three of the ten, and swallowed them up in his own dominions? Yes.—Well were not ten kingdoms formed out of the Roman empire, and all standing in A. D. 507? No, for one was tributary to France. What if it was, it was none the less a kingdom, enacting their own laws, choosing their own officers, and even fighting bravely their own battles. So was Syria and Egypt tributary to the Romans long before they were attached to the empire; but they were nevertheless kingdoms (though they might be "base" ones) long after they became tributary to the Romans.

Well, says another, even if we admit this, it does not prove that the papacy was set up in 519.

No, but it proves that the ten horns were on the beast, and the way was now open for the little horn to make his appearance, and I believe all historians agree in saying that the Vandal kingdom fell before the little horn in 534; and if so he must have arisen before that date and after 507, so that in one of those 27 years we must find a power that agrees with the prophecy. The man clothed in linen said, "They shall pollute the sanctuary, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." "Sanctuary" [illegible] the Church of God; and to pollute it, the introduction of something morally corrupt. "Daily sacrifice," and "abomination [illegible] desolation," appear to be opposite in their character; the former a system of good, and the latter the opposite extreme. [illegible] "take away," is to remove, to suppress; and we should all suppose that "daily sacrifice" meant the "pure worship of God," and "abomination of desolation" a power that should [illegible] [illegible] (as a mark to this period) to find the daily [illegible] of the saints suppressed, and a blasphemous system of iniquity established and supported in its place.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, AUGUST 23, 1854.

The Doctrine of Natural Immortality.

As we are of yesterday and know comparatively nothing, we are under necessity to follow divine guidance, and submit to the teachings of the word as the spirit may lead to an understanding of that word; and when we come to a correct exposition of the divine testimony, we shall find there is a harmony and simplicity in the scripture, that commends itself to our judgment and understanding. In nature there is beauty and simplicity. As philosophy opens to our view the economy of the material world, we are astonished at the wonderful and harmonious plan of the Creator; and we find the operations of nature are capable of being resolved into simple laws. There is one simple, universal law of gravitation acting on all matter; and hence Newton by applying the principle that brought the apple from the tree to the ground, to the motion of the moon in its orbit, laid the foundation of his distinguished fame.

But to illustrate from scripture, take the passage, "the meek shall inherit the earth." Philosophy and common sense require us to understand by "the earth," the globe we inhabit. Why so? Because no other earth is known in the creation of God.—Were we to meet with the term in any other volume, no one, whether a child or philosopher, could understand it otherwise.—But when it occurs in Scripture, a mysticism is thrown around the phraseology, and learned critics cannot tell whether the earth is a place in the heavens above, or the realms beneath the sun; they cannot tell whether it is a solid globe, or empty vacuity; whether it is a physical or moral state; whether it is to be the abode of the wicked according to Jonathan Edwards, or of the righteous; whether it will be a prison of despair, or an Eden of glory; whether shall inherit has reference to the present, or future. And all this because they would be wise above what is written; because of a departure from the principles of common sense and sound philosophy. It is a dereliction from the simple word—the plain, unequivocal declaration of scripture. By setting up a standard of human wisdom, and erecting a system of hermeneutics, as they denominate it, they have plunged into a labyrinth of confusion; and men have become so bewildered in the mazes of criticism, that they have lost the points of compass, and cannot tell in what locality to find the earth. Thus much have I said on this point, that the fact of our position being on Bible truth, plain, simple, literal Bible, may be understood. True there are many symbols in scripture; but simple, didactic teaching, like the passage quoted, we understand in its natural import. So that when the idea is presented, that on some points we are infidel, this is reversing the fact. It is our fidelity and adhesion "to the law and to the testimony," that renders our views obnoxious, and not our infidelity and aberration from the word of God. It is because we plant our feet firmly on the rock, so that neither men nor devils can drive us from that position, that we are regarded as the offscouring of the earth, and the saying of Jesus is fulfilled; "They shall separate you from their company."

The grand difficulty in communicating truth is, to induce men to look directly at it. Ask the question, is it right to hold our fellow men in bondage? and a Henry Clay answers, why the slaves cost twelve hundred millions of dollars. Well, what has that to do with the moral rectitude of slavery? Says a Daniel Webster, the integrity of the Union must be preserved. Well what bearing has that on the justice of slaveholding? Says another, we should should be over-run with negroes at the North, if the slaves were liberated. Says another, why amalgamation of the two races would certainly take place, &c., &c., &c. The true answer is clear as light, if people would only look at the subject and nothing else. Just so in this case. Ask an individual if he believes in the Advent doctrines, including the destruction of the wicked, and his thoughts immediately revert to the faith of his good old father and mother, from whose lips had been instilled into his mind an opposite view; or he remembers the instructions of a beloved Pastor of the Church, with which he is connected; or he listens to his comments in religious newspaper, or the creed of his church, or the traditions of the Elders; or it may be he begins to calculate like Clay, how much will it cost me of reputation, &c., to believe Bible teaching; or like Webster, will not the integrity of christian union be broken? and so on to the end of the chapter. Any thing, and every thing, before inquiring what says the scripture. All men would know the relation of master and slave to be wrong were they not biased from some consideration foreign from the subject; so it seems to me would all men see eye to eye on the main doctrines of the word, were they but willing to abandon preconceived opinions, and look at the doctrines of the word.

But to the subject. James 1: 14, 15. "But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Here, it will be perceived, that in consequence of a corrupt, sinful nature, unholy passions are excited, and the various evil propensities of nature are developed in actual sin.—Now it is asserted by theologians, that the death of the sinner is spiritual death, i. e. death in trespasses and sins; but here it will be observed, a distinction is made between sin, and death the penalty of sin; for in this passage you find that death is not a sinful nature, nor actual transgression; but the result of both; and that not immediately, but when sinful affections have completed their work. Sin is the offshoot of a corrupt nature, and death is the product or final result of sin. Rom. 6: 21, "For the end of those things is death." V. 23, "For the wages of sin is death." To settle the meaning of terms satisfactorily, we need to go back to original principles. We enquire, then, since death is the penalty of the law, to be finally executed on the transgressor, what is death? As defined by Webster, it is "the state of a being, either animal or vegatable, in which there is a total and permanent cessation of all the vital functions, when the organs have not only ceased to act, but lost their susceptibility of renewed action." This, then, most certainly cuts off the teaching of modern theology, viz. that the bodies as well as souls of the wicked will be indestructible. I have given the Bible term, and the primary and proper definition of that term, and if the word has a different and almost opposite meaning, the burden of proof is upon those who deny the appropriate signification of the word. If the standard of the Lexicographer is not sufficient, let us consult Bible usage. When we read that Jesus poured out his soul unto death—that His murderers judged Him guilty of death, and again, in the body of his flesh through death, &c., we do not doubt that the term death signifies just what Webster says it does. We have then the usus loquendi of Scripture on our side, as well as the authority of the literati, and common understanding of all men, that death is the privation of life. "Yes," says the objector, "but the question is, what does it mean in relation to the world to come? This is what is required to be proved." But no, if words when applied to a future life, do not mean what they do when applied to this life, who has authority to say what they do mean? In that case, we need a new dictionary; and if so, who is authorized to create one, but Him who sees the end from the beginning?

To say that death is a guilty conscience, or state of suffering, is but confounding language; for no man can suffer condemnation or sorrow when in a state of death proper. The scripture itself says, "He that is dead is freed from sin," and of course can neither suffer remorse or pain (Rom. 6: 7.) Ezek. 18: 4. "The soul that sinneth IT SHALL DIE." Rom. 8: 13. "For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die." Now to go into this subject deeply, take the definition of the term "die," as given by Webster, or any other Lexicographer, viz. "to be deprived of life, animal or vegetable." This is the primary, appropriate sense. Then consult scripture usage by Cruden's Concordance Look for instance at Jer. 27: 13. "Why will ye die, thou and thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by pestilence?" and ascertain thus in what sense the term is to be understood according to Bible. Luke 13: 5. "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Consider the appropriate meaning of the term perish, viz. "to die." Indeed the context of this passage shews its meaning. There can be no (spiritual) death alluded to here because the Gallileans, and those upon whom the tower of Siloam fell, died, or were deprived of life; and unless the impenitent die, or lose their life, they will not "LIKEWISE perish." 2 Pet. 2: 12. "And shall UTTERLY PERISH in their own corruption." Here the expression is still stronger, and shews that if brute beasts, when taken and destroyed, lose their lives, so also will the incorrigible sinner. 2 Pet. 3: 7. "Perdition of ungodly men."—Ps. 145: 20. "The Lord preserveth all them that love Him, but all the wicked will He destroy." By consulting Webster it will be found that destroy is an exceedingly strong term to express deprivation of life; and in this v. it cannot be understood spiritually, because put in contrast to their preservation. If the one is preserving their existence, the other is taking it away. Ps. 104: 35. "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." Now we must either deny that this is inspiration, or else believe the time will come when the wicked will be destroyed; and certainly it cannot be spiritually interpreted; for when they are destroyed they shall "be (or exist) no more." There is a bulwark of strength in this entire verse, which I think is impregnable. Ps. 37: 28. "Forsaketh not His saints; they are preserved forever; but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off." The term "cut off," must mean privation of life, because put in opposition to the preservation of the saints forever, in the heavenly land, as expressed in v. 34. Consult Obadiah, 9: 10, and you will see what is intended by cutting off. Rev. 20: 9. "And fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them." The terms consume and devour seem to be among the strongest terms of which language is capable, to express utter extermination. Luke 19: 27. "But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me." No other idea can be attached to the word "slay" than deprivation of life. Obadiah 16. "And they shall be as though they had not been." What can this passage mean, but blotting out their existence? Ps. 37; 20. "The enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs, they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away." What more striking expression could we have to convey the idea of utter extinction? In Mal. 4, we are assured "the wicked shall be stubble, and shall be "burned up" root and branch, and be ashes beneath the saints' feet; i. e. there will be a destruction by fire of their entire being. In 2. Thess. 1: 7–9, we road of the same thing, termed by the Apostle "everlasting destruction."—These expressions are not isolated passages scarcely to be found; they are inscribed almost on every page of the sacred oracles. The truth that the sinner is condemned to death, flashes out in vivid and fearful light from every portion of divine writ. It is also expressed in almost every form conceivable. The transgressor is to 'die,' to 'perish,' to 'be cut off,' to be 'devoured,' to be 'consumed,' to suffer 'death,' 'perdition,' 'everlasting destruction,' &c., &c. The position usually taken is that death means suffering; but no suffering however intense can constitute death.

If the view I have taken be correct, that the denunciation of scripture upon the impenitent is privation of life, then the promise to the repentant will be just the opposite, viz. eternal life. On the other hand, if it be misery that is denounced, then it will be happiness that is promised. What the fact is I need not say; so oft repeated are the promises to the righteous that they "shall never die," "SHALL NEVER PERISH," shall not be lost, but RAISED UP at the last day, shall never "taste of death," (i. e., final or second death), "shall live forever," shall have "eternal life," "everlasting life," "shall put on immortality," &c. The position I have taken is, therefore, greatly strengthened by looking at the contrast. By what authority are these plain, simple averments of scripture frittered down and spiritualized away from their primary and appropriate signification? When the threatening comes to the sinner from the throne of God, as with the voice of seven thunders, "thou shalt surely DIE;" how dare erring mortals to annul that sentence of the divine law, and promise the sinner life without end?

But there are objections. Well let us look at them. Does not the scripture say, that "he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness; but are in danger of eternal damnation?"—True,—if the penalty of death be executed, they will never have forgiveness; and if there be no resurrection, their damnation will be eternal. Does it not say, "these shall go away into everlasting punishment." If the punishment of the wicked be death, it is everlasting, and as perpetual as the life of the righteous, the one standing in eternal contrast to the other.—Does not the scripture speak of "everlasting fire?" Yes, the fire that destroyed Sodom was "eternal," or everlasting fire, Jude 7. But does it not speak of "unquenchable fire?" Yes, the chaff is to be burned up with "unqenchable fire," Matt. 3: 12. What could be more expressive of a consuming process? Suppose I say a certain building took fire and it was impossible for the engine companies to quench it. This would only shew the destruction by the devouring element. It does not prove the preservation of that building; but the reverse. The expression used by our Saviour, "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," (Mark 9) is thought to refer to endless misery; but that it is not necessarily so will be seen from Is. 66: 24. In this verse the same phraseology is applied to the carcasses of men that were slain; and it would be an absurdity to suppose those carcasses had a perpetual existence; so that those terms do not of necessity imply endless existence. The expression is taken from a custom of that age. The Greek term, Gehenna, rendered "hell," was a valley near Jerusalem of that name, which was a receptacle of refuse animal matter, consisting of bodies of animals, &c. Here a fire was constantly burning, and worms feeding on the carcasses of the slain; and from these circumstances it became a fit emblem of the final destruction of the souls and bodies of men. As the earth would be cleansed from all pollution by the fires of the last day, the fires of Gehenna, the valley of Hinnom, were a striking illustration of the scene; and hence our Savior alludes to it, calling the devouring element "hell-fire," or more properly, according to the Greek, a Gehenna of fire, or as John says, a "lake of fire." One objection more. "The smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever, and they have no rest day nor night," &c., Rev. 14: 11. This passage evidently, I think, refers to a scene prior to the judgment, or at least during the existence of those two great organizations of Government the Beast and his image. But however that may be, turn to Is. 34: 9, 10 and you will find the land of Idumea is said not to be "quenched night nor day, the smoke thereof shall go up forever—none shall pass through it forever and ever." This expression is tremendously strong, yet on turning to ch. 35, we find this land is ultimately however to be restored. All that is necessary for me to shew in relation to these expressions is simply that the same terms are applied to events of a limited duration. Consequently if any one endeavors to shew the endless perpetuity of the sinner's conscious sufferings, I have only to present the passages which prove the cutting off of their existence; and those passages, being positive declarations, cannot be met by other passages of doubtful import. There must be found unequivocal proof that the misery of the finally impenitent will be endless, or the argument falls before positive testimony.

(To be concluded next week.)

The Going Forth.

We publish to-day some very interesting items from the Advent Herald of 1844. It is really refreshing to turn over the pages of that good old volume, and see the deep, heartfelt interest manifested then to move the Virgins at their going forth; and now, when the same spirit is waking the Virgins again, it is passing strange that it cannot be recognized by those who were identified with the former movement.—The fact is evident that the going forth in '44 was all delusion, or this is the finger of God; either they went forth unauthorized by the command of God, and at a wrong point in the Christian economy, or we are now obeying the Shepherd's voice, fulfilling the remainder of the Parable; and therefore this is that which was spoken of in the Scriptures of truth.

The following is from the Herald of Oct. 9:—

"We have taken the position, that the time of the Advent of our Lord might be known. The reasons for this have been given in the columns of this paper, as well as the Advent Library, during the last four years. The dates, as given by Mr. Miller, and others, in those works, it is well known, expired last spring, when we expected our King in his glory. We were then disappointed. We could not then explain, neither can we now, where our error was, except in the fact, that the prophetic times were not all filled up.—While with the best data the most of the periods were full, it was clear that the seven times do not terminate until this Autumn; and as this number is the longest, and spans the whole arch, we see no possible way to avoid the conviction, and even assurance, that the Lord will come this Autumn. The definite time, as to a month or a day, cannot be determined, by the prophetic periods, as no one of them, or all of them together, can be harmonized in any one month, or day of the month.—If then we have definite time, we can get it only by the typical institutions, which were observed in a specified month, and day of the year. Of these we can only look to the Autumnal Festivals, in the seventh month of the Jewish year. This is the only month in which we can look for a fulfilment; and as the tenth day of this month is the only day in which the type of the coming of our High Priest can be fulfilled, we are shut up to this faith, and shall, by the grace of God, look for the event, and act accordingly. Our reasons are given more at length in another portion of this paper, to which we refer our readers. May the Lord prepare us all for this glorious event.

JOSHUA V. HIMES,
S. BLISS.

Boston, Oct. 1, 1844.

I wish to say to all my dear brethren and sisters, who with me have been waiting for the kingdom of heaven, that I am thoroughly convinced that we are now in that portion of the parable of the ten virgins represented by the cry at midnight, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him!" I fully respond to the cry; my expiring lamp has been rekindled, and I am now permitted by God's grace to see additional light blazing from the Scriptures, and all converging to one glorious point—The advent of our blessed Lord this very month!! My dear friends, I have been in an awful slumbering, sleeping state,—I have been on the verge of perdition: though I have never ceased to cherish in my heart the great and leading doctrines of the Lord's coming. I thought a few weeks ago that I was in a pretty good state: awful delusion. Look out for deception! Awake, and trim your lamps or you will be lost after all!!!

OCT. 2d, 1844. F. G. BROWN.

Letter from Bro. H. Ford.

GRANTHAM, N. H., July 29, '54.

Brother Merriam—Dear Sir: I am a reader of your valuable paper, and a believer in the immediate coming of Christ. And for the information of others, as well as myself, I should like to see a word in your paper concerning the darkening of the sun. It is believed by the majority of people, that the sun was only darkened in our New England States, therefore cannot be for a sign to all the world. Some say the sun was darkened in England and Scotland; do you know whether there is any foundation for such testimony?

It seems as though it can be, if it is not easily shown, where the sun was darkened and where it was not. And I think the darkening of the sun has, and should have, a prominent place in the history of the Church, and sometimes think it should be held out more fully to the world.

A line on the above thoughts would be most gratefully perused by me, and no doubt thousands of others.

Yours truly. H. FORD.

We have received a letter from Bro. L. Allen, and from others, of the same import.

REPLY.

We learn that the dark day of 1780 extended from Canada on the North, to New Jersey on the South, and from the British possessions on the East, to New York on the West. Some have thought, also, that inasmuch as the moon gave no light on the succeeding night, the sun must have been darkened on the opposite side of the globe; for the moon borrows her light from the sun, and consequently should the rays of the sun be intercepted, the moon must be in total darkness, and could not "give her light." Again we have been told that on the next day the sun was darkened in England and Scotland, and that the 20th of May was designated in Great Britain as "THE BLACK SATURDAY," in the same manner as the 19th was designated in America as THE DARK DAY. This we have not seen in print, but learned the fact from report. Thus it seems probable the sun was actually darkened over no inconsiderable portion of the earth's surface.

But however this may be, the extension of the sign does not materially affect the question. The question hinges on the point of a fulfilment or non-fulfilment of the prophecy; and to make the fulfilment perfect and unobjectionable, it must be an exact accomplishment of the prediction, both as to the event and its chronology, i. e., there must be not only an exact correspondence of the event to the prophecy, but also in the consecutive order of events, and after the terminus of that prophetic period which measured the tribulation of the elect.

In regard to the exact correspondence of the event it is so plain there can be no dispute. The word in the Greek rendered darkened, implies not that all the light of the sun should be extinguished, but that it should be shaded, obscured, or darkened. The phraseology in respect to the moon is entirely different, and implies as it is translated, that it shall not give her light, and in the fulfilment we find she did not give her light in any degree. The Greek expression in regard to the two signs, corresponds most perfectly to the actual occurrences of the dark day, and the ensuing night. Some have objected to this sign that it was neither novel nor supernatural, but in a previous number of the Crisis, I have endeavored to show that these objections are not valid. If they were, upon the same principle be a novel and supernatural kind of earthquakes, pestilences and famines must take place before the Saviour's prediction in reference to them could be fulfilled.

In regard to its universality, we have only to bring this objection to the standard and ascertain what is the analogy of Scripture on this point. At the first advent of Christ a star appeared, as an indication of the Saviour's birth. Did that star shine universally throughout the earth? And did the wise men, who were watching the heavens, say, "well, now if we can hear from all the nations of the earth, and ascertain that this star has been seen by all the inhabitants of the globe, we will believe it is a sign of the monarch who is born king of the Jews;" or did they, when the star appeared to them, believe it was a sign? That that star could not have been universally seen, is evident from the fact that it was in the lower regions of the atmosphere, so that it could point out the locality of the place in which the Saviour lay. God in His infinite wisdom, caused the star to appear to those who would understand the signal, and be moved to go forth, as it were, to meet the Bridegroom at His first coming. Just so in the wisdom of the omniscient, the sun was darkened not for the benefit of a heathen world, who could not at all have comprehended the sign, but for the special benefit of the wise men, the spiritual magi, who were watching the signs in the moral heavens, and who resided in greater numbers, probably, in the New England States, than in any other section of the globe. There was, on that day, great solemnity resting down upon the community in reference to the question, whether it might not be the judgment, or a sign of that momentous event. I well recollect hearing my beloved mother remark, that on the occasion of the darkness, the people in Topsfield, Mass., assembled at the house of their minister to inquire whether he thought the judgment day had come, to which he replied that he "should think so, if the prophecies were fulfilled." As the Jewish chief priests and scribes were inquired of in relation to the prophecies when the star appeared, so were the preachers and students of prophecy diligently inquired of in relation to this event; and as early as the succeeding Sabbath, the darkening of the sun began to be preached upon as the sign of the coming of the Lord mentioned in Matt. xxiv: 29.

The great movement of the virgins in going forth to meet the Lord was principally within the circle over which the darkening of the Sun extended, and this is certainly a strong corroborative proof that the darkening took place just where, in the order of God's economy, it was needed to rally the Virgins to action, and confirm their faith in the doctrine, as they took their lamps in 1843 and '4 and went forth to meet the Bridegroom.

As the event claimed by Adventists to be the fulfilment of this sign was in perfect accordance with the prediction, we next inquire whether it was agreeable to scripture in relation to the consecutive order of events predicted. It was to occur after the persecution under the little born power, and before the occurrence of the other signs given in Matthew as immediate precursors of His coming. We find, therefore, that it harmonized with the prediction in respect to the order of events.

Next we inquire, was it in chronological order as presented by our Savior? Jesus says, "immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." The adverb rendered "immediately" is derived from an adjective meaning straight, and the idea presented by it seems to be this: a man, e. g., is reconnoitering different objects, and after viewing one, he passes straight, i. e., directly to another; or a man finishes his labors in one field and straightway, immediately begins on another, that is without delay. We would understand in such a case, that it would be as early as the next day. So in this case, when the chronology of the tribulation is ended, we may expect the next day or year, (for Daniel's time is given in days symbolical of years), the darkening of the sun would take place. Thus in every particular there is an exact correspondence in relation to the accomplishment, the order and the chronology of the sign; and I was about to say, we see not how it could have been more satisfactorily fulfilled. At least the fulfilment can be recognized by the simple-hearted and child-like, and for such the sign was given.

For the World's Crisis.

The Watch Tower.

I'm standing now on my watch tower,
To see the King descend with power;
Before Him earth and heaven shall flee,
And fire devour the raging sea!

I'll answer now,—if I'm reproved,—
"The veil of slumber is removed,
The vision plainly, truly speaks,
To every child of wisdom wakes!"

Hail eighteen hundred fifty-four!
Proclaiming Jesus at the door;
O last of all probation's years,
With thee will end the pilgrim's tears.

Oh ye who moved ten years ago,
Go forth once more: the cry is "go;"
O draw not back, ye well tried band;
We're on the borders of the land.

Saviour, still for thy people care,
Who wait for Thee, in humble prayer;
And when we're o'er probation's road,
We'll shout with joy,—"This is our God."

Newark, N. J. JOHN LYLE.

Bro. Bishop's Notice.

In respect to the notice relative to Bro. Hiram Bishop, I have received the following from Bro. Adrian:—

Dear Brethren,—That notice in the Crisis in relation to Bro. Bishop, of East Meriden, being calculated to convey the impression that the church in Meriden had left him to suffer, I therefore feel called upon to say that the little church in Meriden have done much for Bro. Bishop, and that the reason why they have withheld of late, has been because they are grieved that he makes no effort to help himself.—I dare not recommend him as worthy of alms until he gives evidence of a willingness to try to help himself.

I. ADRIAN.

ROCHESTER, N. H., June 2d., 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—I for the first time take up my pen to say a few words to you. I call you "dear brother," and I really trust that you are one; one who has believed the one gospel, and has been baptized into the one faith, and are purifying yourself by obeying all truth. I have read several no.'s of the "Crisis" And I have seen Brn. Berick and Cummings' publications on the time of the return of our Messiah this year. I have examined these works some, but as yet I am not convinced that it is true. I look for a great time of trouble, such as never has been, and an overturning among the nations of earth, to prepare the way for God's ancient covenant people to return to their OWN LAND, some of them at least, before the Advent.

In hope of life,

G. DILLABAUGH.

☞ I have received a note some time since, from Harvey G. Whitaker, of Newfane, Vt., requesting me to give an invitation thorough the Crisis, to two or more Elders of the Church, who believe in the efficacy of prayer in healing the sick, to visit him, as he says he is very unwell.—Having no personal acquaintance, I have waited hoping to receive further information, but as I have not, I now insert the invitation, and brethren can follow the direction of the word and spirit in this matter.

PARTICULAR NOTICE. In respect to the Hymn Books, we would say there remains over $200 due from those to whom we have sent them, and as we make cash bargains with the Printer and borrow the money when necessary, as it has been in this case, to settle with him, we hope all those indebted for the Advent Hymn Book will remit funds as soon as convenient, for by so doing they will greatly oblige.

THE LOWELL CONFERENCE. This Conference was well attended, and preaching by Bro. Couch, Berick, Adrian and Waugh, was adapted to enlighten the community and create a renewed interest on the subject of the immediate coming of Christ. Good, we trust, will result from this series of meetings. I intended to have given a more extended account of the Conference, but a multiplicity of other engagements has prevented.

Later from Europe.

Spanish Revolution—Great Military Preparations on the Danube.

By the Union at New York yesterday, and by the America at Halifax last evening, we have seven days later advices from Europe.

Spain.—A decree of the Junta suppresses the Royal Council, and another calls into force the Press law of 1837. The Junta has also abrogated the prohibition laid on the circulation of foreign journals. Another decree orders the arrest and trial of some of the ex-Ministers, and also of Gen. Quinto, ex-Minister of Madrid.—The Ministers are said to be concealed in the hotels of the diplomatic body. Espartero took oath as President of the new Council.

The Generals who commanded the troops in the late struggle have their choice either to retire to a fixed place of residence or leave the country. The National Guard is already composed of nine battalions and two batteries of artillery.

Queen Christina is to be allowed to leave Spain without violence, but if she hesitates she is to be removed by force.

Danube.—A despatch from Vienna states that the Russians were totally defeated at Slobodzie on the 23 of July by the Turks, and lost 2000 men with 500 prisoners. The Austrian Correspondent, however, contradicts this.

Thirty thousand Ottomans had crossed the Danube at Oltenitza. British and French officers were continually arriving at Rustchuk from Shumla. The division of Prince Napoleon will probably be the first to enter Wallachia.—Everything showed the intention of a serious attack being made at Bucharest.

A grand council of war was held between the allied generals at Varna on the 19th.

The allied fleet remained at Baltschuk, but great operations were evidently on the eve of taking place. Numerous transports at Constantinople were at work day and night taking in water, provisions, stores, &c. Silistria had been victualled for three months.

The Russians have evacuated their position at Kalugereni. Their vanguard is at Schleava, two hours distance from Bucharest. The artillery, baggage and hospitals were marching towards the Sereth.

On the morning of the 30th the Russians attacked the Turkish and French camps at Guirgevo, but were totally defeated, with a loss of 2000 men killed and 500 prisoners. Two hundred wagons arrived at Bucharest loaded with wounded. On the 27th the Russians retreated in forced marches, and quitted, and the Turks occupied Frateschi. Oltenitza was evacuated on the night of the 27th.

The evacuation of Wallachia was completed. A proclamation had been issued, declaring that the allied soldiers who remained behind, would be considered deserters. The Russian troops were being concentrated on the Sereth. Omar Pasha was expected at Bucharest on the 31st. His reception would be most brilliant.

It is believed that the retreat is due to strategetic causes, as no communication of the circumstances was made by the Czar to the Court of Vienna. It is also believed that force must be employed to dislodge the Russians from Moldavia.

The Austrian army corps under Prince Lichetenstein is ordered to advance from Pesth to Gallicia. The army in Gallicia are moving towards the frontiers. The Archduke Albrechet has removed his head quarters to the southeast corner of Transylvania. The total Austrian force on the frontiers are 33,000 men, under the command of Baron Dekers.

The frontiers have not been crossed, but the preparations for hostilities are colossal. Russia makes no warlike demonstrations towards the Prussian frontier. The cholera was increasing in virulence at Constantinople. The third French Division left Varna on the 27th for Kustendj and Silistria. Accounts from Montenegro are unfavorable. Prince Daniel assumes a threatening attitude towards Turkey.

On the 29th the Danish government proclaimed the constitution for the entire monarchy. The Imperial Council is to consist of 50 members. Parma was tranquil on the 25th.—Several insurgents had been killed. Seventeen were wounded in the skirmish on the 22d. El Hamee Pacha, eldest son of Abbas Pacha, had arrived in England, on a visit to the Queen, but returned immediately on receiving the news of his father's death.

A great anti-slavery conference was held at Manchester on the 1st. Strong resolutions were adopted for the immediate total emancipation of slaves and the slave trade, deprecating the acquisition of Cuba by the United States, urging emancipation there as the best means of frustrating the same. George Thompson was the prominent speaker.

Baltic.—A telegraphic despatch from Stockholm states that heavy cannonading was heard in the direction of Bomarsund. Rear Admiral Martin with nine ships was watching Helsingfors. Rear Admiral Chads was to effect the bombardment of Bomarsund as soon as the troops intended for the occupation of the Aland Islands arrived. By the latest accounts, the fleets were at Letsund General Baraguay D'Hillers had an interview with the King of Sweden. The King declared his willingness to assist with the Western Powers on certain conditions. Gen. D'Hillers with French troops had joined the fleet off the Aland Islands.

Kamla Karledy was reinforced by the Russians. Four hundred English troops on the 18th made a descent on Kolaja, on the Island of Oesel, and after destroying four boats retired.

Since the 23d the blockade of ports in the Gulf have been more rigorous, it is impossible for any vessel to enter or leave. The Russian Emperor, Archduke Constantine and Archduchess narrowly escaped being captured by an English steamer near Cronstadt. The cholera has broken out among the English army in Greece.

Black Sea.—The allied fleets, with Generals Conrobert and Brown, have left Varna to reconnoitre the Crimean coast.

The Times declares positively that a force of from 80,000 to 100,000 men, composed of British, French and Turks, will immediately invade the Crimea, and will attempt to effect a lodgment on the heights, so as to command Sebastopol.

In Asia the reported defeat of the Turks by the Russians at Kars is confirmed. The Russians are besieging Kars.

It is rumored that the Aland Isles have been taken by the allied fleet in the Baltic, with great loss of life These isles lie about 25 leagues from Stockholm, and consist of three groups, embracing about 80 inhabited and as many as 200 uninhabited islets and rocks, occuping an area of about 470 square miles, anv divided into three oblong clusters by the straits of Delet and Lappvasi. The inhabitants are said to number 15,000, agriculturists and fishermen. They claim a sort of independence, acknowledging themselves neither Swedes nor Finns; though they are of Swedish extraction. The islands were wrested from Sweden by Russia, about half a century ago, and they give Russia a position from which a descent may easily be made upon the Swedish coast There are several good ports. In Aeland, the larger island, which contains more than half the population of the whole group, there is at Yttornaes, on the Western side, an excellent harbor, which is capacious enough to admit a large fleet. The strong fortress of Bomersund is on this island, and is capable, it is said, of containing 60,000 men within its walls.

Still Later from Europe.

Reported Capture of the Aland Islands by the French—Embarkation of the Allied forces for the Crimea.

By the Baltic at New York on Saturday, we have four days later advices from Europe, dates to the 9th inst.

The latest despatch from Vienna says, the Russian rear was about half way between Bucharest and Busco. On the 3d, the Turkish army had not entered Bucharest, and a retrograde movement is noted in Moldavia. A Vienna paper says the Turks have agreed with Austria not to enter Bucharest, and the Turkish troops shall be withdrawn from the Danube, on the arrival of the Austrians.

Omar Pacha has issued a proclamation that Wallachia shall not be the theatre of military events.

Bombay accounts to the 1st of July have been received, which indicate peace with Ava. The Dutch expedition against Borneo succeeded.—[illegible]

An occurrence is reported which has caused much astonishment in England. The British war steamer Cyclops was chased when near the Bosphorus, by the Russian steam frigate Valdimer, which every one supposed was safely shut up in the harbor of Sebastopol, and equally astonishing is the fact that the other day, a Russian steamer ran into the harbor of Heraclea and burned three Turkish merchantmen at anchor there.

On the 16th of July the allied fleet left Baro sound. A Stockholm paper publishes a statement that, on the 3d inst., a French force occupied Aland after a bombardment of seven hours. The statement is vague and unconfirmed. A despatch from Stockholm of the 3d, states, however, that a cannonading was heard during six hours in the direction of Aland.

It is not decided whether the Houses of Parliament will be prorogued on the 12th or 15th or 15th inst. The Queen will perform the ceremony.

At Lisbon, Portugal, an attempt has been made to get up an excitement like that in Madrid. The cholera was raging to some extent in Italy.

Foreign Intelligence.

But while official imcompetency is thus displaying itself all over Europe, in the southwestern corner of that continent a movement breaks out which at once shows that there are still other forces more active than the official ones. Whatever may be the real character and the end of the Spanish rising, so much at least may be affirmed, that it bears to a future revolution the same relation as the Swiss and Italian movements of 1847, to the revolution of 1848. There are two grand facts in it: first, the military, the actual rulers of the continent since 1849, have got divided among themselves, and have given up their calling of preserving order, for the purpose of asserting their own opposition to the Government. Their discipline taught them their power, and this power has loosened their discipline Secondly, we have had the spectacle of a successful barricade fight. Wherever barricades had been raised since June, 1848, they had hitherto proved of no avail. Barricades, the resistance of the population of a large town against the military, seemed of no effect whatever. That prejudice has fallen. We have again seen victorious, unassailable barricades. The spell is broken. A new revolutionary era is rendered possible, and it is significant that while the troops of official Europe are showing themselves useless in actual war, they are at the same time defeated by the insurgent inhabitants of a town.—[Cor. Bost. Trav.

London, July 31, 1854.

It is my sad duty to inform you that the Italian movement has failed. It was easily suppressed, though not so easily as reported by the Vienna papers. I had no hope for it from the beginning; still, the Italians were last week flushed with success, and induced me to place more reliance and hope on the silence of the official telegraph They even now do not believe that the struggle is over; and so much is sure, that both the Austrians and French declare the spirit of the people to be very bad, and accordingly the garrisons of the Romagna and of Rome are to be enforced.

The English are sending nine more regiments to Turkey.—[Ib.

THE REBELLION IN VENEZUELA. Our readers have already been informed that this unfortunate country, with advantages of climate and soil sufficient to make it one of the most prosperous governments of South America, is again plunged into the horrors of a civil war, and this time, if accounts are to be believed, accompanied by an unusual amount of bloodshed.

Letters received in this city from Porto Cabello represent the condition of the country as deplorable in the extreme. The Government has imposed a forced loan upon the merchants of half a million to carry on the war. One Merchant of Porto Cabello, who probably is not able to furnish as many cents, is taxed four thousand dollars. It is probable, therefore, that if he pays at all, it will be at the expense of his foreign creditors.

The prospects of the success of the rebels is not very good Two Provinces are in open rebellion, but it is said that the rebels have been defeated, and as the President orders no prisoners to be taken, that three hundred captured soldiers were immediately slaughtered The story that Gen. Paez was to head the rebels is probably incorrect. He was in New York a few days ago.

FAILURE OF THE WINE CROP AT MADEIRA.—A letter from Madeira, dated July 12, has the following in relation to the blight which has again attacked the vines in that island:

I am sorry to inform you that the grape crop has again failed I was informed by many intelligent vine-growers, that they do not think the present vine will ever produce; but where are they to get others? All countries are alike afflicted Many growers are digging up the vine and planting grain and vegetables.

Domestic Intelligence.

Cincinnati, Aug. 14. The powder magazine at Maysville was fired by some miscreant at 2 o'clock yesterday morning. The explosion was terrific, the magazine containing 800 kegs of gun-powder. Thirteen houses were buried, but singular to say, not a life was lost by the actual explosion, and but few persons were injured. One lady has since died from the effects of the fright. The citizens were so much alarmed that some minutes elapsed before any would venture into the streets, the general impression being that the day of Judgment had arrived. When they did go out they found the streets covered with the fragments of demolished houses, &c. The damage done to property is between $50,000 and $100,000. The Mayor has offered a reward of $1000 for information that will lead to the conviction of the rascal who set fire to the magazine —[Bos. Bee.

THE DROUGHT IN NEW HAMPSHIRE AND VERMONT. We learn from private letters recently received from nothern New Hampshire and from Vermont, that the drought continued with unabated violence, threatening utter destruction to all standing crops.

A letter from the Ammonoosuck valley, dated the 10th, says that there has been no rain in that vicinity for some five or six weeks. Potatoes were fast drying up. In some fields one-third of the tops were already black and dry, so that they would crumble in the hand. Oats, too, were suffering to such an extent that some farmers were mowing them for fodder.

A letter from the vicinity of Montpelier, Vt., says there has been no rain in that region for a number of weeks. Grain, grass and early potatoes were suffering severely. There were scarcely any potatoes in the hills, and there were, also, indications of the rot. Oats were being mowed for fodder.

A correspondent from the neighborhood of [illegible]

[illegible] Vt., says that potatoes in that region are now held a dollar a bushel.

In some parts of Berkshire county, Mass. there is a report that the rust has struck the potato crop, and that there will not be more than half or two thirds of a crop.

EFFECTS OF THE CHOLERA IN ST. JOHN. The St. John News of the 11th inst. says;

"Our city presents a solemn Sunday-like appearance. Business of all sorts is all but suspended. Even the bakers have been struck with the panic and fled the city. That is to say, the employers cannot obtain hands enough to supply half their customers. Indeed, some establishments have given over baking altogether."

TORNADO ON THE RAILROAD. The storm of last evening was a tornado upon the track of the Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad, between Bedford and Macedonia. Trees were blown down and fences scattered as though they had straws. The evening train out of the city, while running round a curve at a speed of 20 to 25 miles an hour, struck a tree a foot in diameter, which lay across the track. Fortunately the tree was of brittle wood, and the locomotive cut it in two and the train passed on with no other damage than the carrying away of the cow catcher. In the space of three miles seventeen trees had been blown across the track, one of them being three feet in diameter.—[Cleveland Herald.

A Tornado passed over Lancaster centre, and thence onward through Bolton, between 8 and 9 o'clock on Saturday night, the 12th inst. For a few minutes the rain came in torrents, and huge trees were twisted about by the wind as if they had been sapling withes. In Bolton we learn that it was accompanied by a heavy fall of hail, but we have no other particulars.—[Worcester Spy.

A TERRIBLE HAIL STORM.—Red Wood Agency, Aug. 1. Some Indians who have just arrived, give an account of an extraordinary and very severe hail storm, near the red pipe stone quarry, an account of which, as stated by the Indians, I forward to you for publication, if you deem it interesting.

On the 25th ult. a party of Sioux encamped near the red pipe stone quarry, observed a black cloud rising in the northwest, which slowly shifted somewhat to the south, placing it in a western direction from the encampment of the Indians, who were watching its movements with great interest, it being, as they aver, the "most awful looking cloud ever seen." But little thunder was heard as the cloud advanced, and but little rain fell; but a most terrific storm of hail fell about the Indian camp, some 15 or 20 minutes, which caused the occupants to have serious apprehension for their lives.

The hail stones are represented to have been at least one half larger than a goose egg. The new elf skin lodges occupied by the Indians were literally riddled to pieces; and one of the Indians who was so unfortunate as to have one of the pieces of hail fall upon his shoulder, is still suffering severely from the injury. Another Indian received a blow on the foot from one of the hail stones, and his foot and ankle are much swollen from the effects of the blow.

The Indians represent the vegetation to have been completely mashed to pieces, from the fall of the hail upon it. They report the size of the hail to have been far beyond anything previously heard of, and go so far as to say that, in many places, the hail had very clearly marked the pipe stone upon which it fell —[St. Paul Pioneer of Aug. 8.

THE INCREASE OF CRIME. The enormous increase of crime which marks in so palpable a manner the age in which we live, is arresting the attention of the press in some portions of the country. The truth of the charge is but too plainly verified, as a cotemporary remarks, that "individual and national villainy never flaunted in such gay colors, or stalked forth with such an air of assured challenge." Murders, rapes and robberies are things which are at present rife to an appalling extent, so much so, indeed, that it might seem as if the demon of recklessness and sin had been turned loose upon our fair land to run riot and spread desolation and misery in its wake.

These things, we say, must be apparent to the most unobservant eye. To trace their causes and give a satisfactory explanation of the direful condition of affairs in a manner at once well defined and conclusive in every instance, would require little short of the ken of omniscience.—[Richmond (Va.) Penny Post, August 11.

SINGULAR PHENOMENON. The weather yesterday warmed up a little, especially during the evening. An unusual and beautiful solar phenomenon was visible for about two hours in the morning The sun appeared to be surrounded by several rings of different shades, shapes and centers. Two rings, with the sun nearly in their center, appeared, and intersected each other at the two opposite points. The inner circumference of the rings within the points of intersection were dark, but beyond the points they were luminous. Several other circles and arcs appeared with the sun either in their circumference or near one side Under the sun was the appearance of an inverted rainbow. The appearance is very unusual in this latitude One similar was observed in Connecticut Sept. 9, 1844, and another of the same general character at Jackson, Tenn, Jan. 1, 1824

That of yesterday set more people's thoughts upward than all other causes since the annualar eclipse in May last.

Obituary.

Died in Harvard, June 28, Lewis Porter Lawrence, son of Andrew and Laura Ann Lawrence, aged 19 months, after a distressing illness.

Sweet Lewis—he has gone to rest,
He sweetly sleeps in Jesus blest,
There will be rest till Christ shall come
To call His ransomed children home.

His days were few, his mission's o'er,
But soon on the celestial shore
We trust to greet him, there to dwell
With Him, who doeth all things well.

From pain and sorrow now he's free,
And soon the trump of jubilee
Will sound and wake him from that sleep,
From which "none ever wake to weep."

Hushed is the music of his voice,
His smile no more our hearts rejoice;
We miss him here, our hearts are pained,
But soon we hope to meet again.

Soon will our great Deliverer come,
To loose the captives from the tomb;
A nation in a day 'll be born
To hail the blest MILLENNIAL MORN.

Died, in Warner, N. H., Aug. 13, of dysentery, Add Isadore, daughter of James M. and Fanny Harriman, aged about 3 years. She sweetly sleeps in Jesus—but she will soon be brought again from the land of the enemy; therefore we say with the poet,

Appointments.

TENT MEETING.

A Tent Meeting will be holden in Derry, N. H., near the Depot, 10 miles from Manchester, 26 from Concord and 16 from Lawrence, commencing Tuesday, Sept. 5. Bro. J. Hemenway will be there with his big tent—other ministering brethren are invited to attend. Brethren, one and all, come to this meeting, prepared to do good and get good. Bring your tents and provisions with you, and camp on the ground. For those that cannot do so, provisions will in some way be made. Dear Brethren and Sisters, the Lord is coming this year! Come and hear the evidences from the word of God, and be prepared for that great event looked for by the saints of every age. S. O. WELCH.

CAMP MEETING IN WINSTED. Providence permitting, it is thought best to have one more great gathering of the Savior's friends at Winsted, Ct., on the old ground, commencing Monday, Aug. 28, and continuing one week. Brethren and Sisters, if time continue, come from far and near to this feast of tabernacles, and let us make the tented grove vocal with praise once more to the King of kings before we meet to sing the grand hallelujah chorus in the everlasting kingdom.

Brethren Burnham, Couch and Berick are expected to be present to preach the word.

Let all who can, bring their tents and bedding. Board for all who wish may be had on the Camp ground, and all the profits, if any, will be appropriated to bear the expenses of the meeting, and feed the poor. Good accommodations for horses on reasonable terms, with a cheap conveyance to the Encampment from the cars, stages and hotels of Winsted.

Those coming from Boston, Worcester, Springfield and other places on the East side of the Conn. river, will stop at Hartford and take the cars for Winsted at 10 o'clock, A. M., or at 4 o'clock, P. M. Fare, $1,25.

Those from New York, Bridgeport, New Haven and vicinity, will take the cars on the Naugatuck Railroad for Winsted at Bridgeport, or the Stratford Junction. The Fare to and from the meeting is reduced to one dollar each way.

Those coming from the West in the Housatonic valley will stop at North Canaan, and take the stage for Winsted. Fare on the stage reduced to 75 cents.

TENT MEETING.

The Lord willing, there will be a Tent Meeting in Haverill, Mass, on the lot known as the Circus lot, corner of Winter and Locust sts., one-fourth of a mile from the Depot on the Boston and Maine Railroad, commencing Wednesday morning, Aug. 30, and continuing over the Sabbath. We hope the brethren will come from the adjoining towns, and come as early as possible. Those who can would do well to bring bedding with them, for it is expected that all will have to lodge on the ground. Provision for board on the ground. Bro Hemmenway and other preaching brethren are expected to attend. In behalf of the Brn.,

JOHN W. SANDERSON.

If time continues, I will commence a Grove Meeting at Waterford, Me., Wednesday, Aug. 30th, and continue over the Sabbath.

L. I. HOWARD.

Brn. C Burnside and E. B. Lane will meet with the Brn. at the Narrows' School House in Northwood, N. H., the last Sabbath in Aug.

C. S. E.

By help from the Lord, we will go to Buffalo, N. Y., with the Tents, and commence a Meeting, Wednesday, Aug. 30th, and remain over the Sabbath. Several preaching brs. from the East will attend. J. CUMMINGS.

The Lord willing, I, will preach at Salem, Mass., the first Sunday in September.

J. WESTON.

NOTICE.

There will be a meeting at the Clark Meeting-house in Barnsted, N. H., to commence Thursday, August 31, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn. J Hemenway and J G Smith re expected. E. S. EMERSON.

The Lord willing, I will be at Bethel, Ct., Aug. 24; Lanesville, 26 and 27; Roxbury, 29.

I would say to the brethren at Chester factories, if the Lord will, I will meet with them soon after the Camp Meeting at Winsted.

G. L. T[illegible]

TENT MEETING.

The Lord willing there will be a Tent Meeting near the depot in Epping, N. H., commencing Wednesday Morning, Aug. 23d, and continuing over the Sabbath. We hope the bretheren will come from the adjoining towns, so as to be on the ground Wednesday morning. We also hope the brethren will make arrangements to lodge on the ground, as it will be rather difficult to find lodging for all. Provision for board on the ground. J. HEMENWAY.

CAMP MEETING IN WEST HAWLEY.

If the Lord will, there will be a Camp Meeting in West Hawley on the farm of Bro. Horace Thayer, commencing the 2d Monday in September, and continuing one week. We expect some of the Lord's Watchmen will be present to give the time of night, and give the trumpet a certain sound. Come brethren, far and near, all who can, to this pilgrims' meeting. Bring your tents and provisions as far as possible We want to have such a meeting as will glorify God The Lord has some sheep scattered over these mountains that need feeding and cannot attend the meetings at a distance. Come all who want to hear, it may be the last opportunity. In behalf of the Brethren,

J. E. HEALY.

The Lord willing, there will be a meeting at Salisbury, Millville, the last Sabbath in Aug. Brethren Austin and Paine are invited to attend.

Third Sabbath, at Hill Centre; also Saturday previous. B. H. COUCH.

Song of the Saints.

Tune.—The [illegible] earth is too dark and drear.

[illegible]
We look [illegible]
Our [illegible] will soon appear
[illegible] and dry the tear,
And [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] we know
[illegible] and there we'll be parted no more;
[illegible] the dear [illegible] Son,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] of the Saviour's feet,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Our work of probation will soon be done,
Our Beloved will soon appear;
With the Holy angels soon He will come
And gather His chosen every one,
Who has suffered for Jesus here.

The martyred saints will soon arise,
Triumphant [illegible]
[illegible] radiant light [illegible] eyes
As upward they gaze to the parted skies,
Behold the Lamb once slain!
For Him they suffered and nobly fought,
Stronger than death their love,
The fire and the rack they heeded not;
Their sufferings are not forgot,
Their names are written above.

Such triumphant songs were never heard,
The tyrant death must die;
The trumpet sounds and the earth is stirred,
The sleepers awake, they hear the word,
"Come up to my chambers on high."
In this state of trial their names were cast,
As evil out—but now
They'll sing and they'll shout, "We're safe at last,
Our days of peril and grief are past,
Our sufferings all are o'er."

And brightly they'll shine encircled there
In the glory of Christ the Lamb;
From that beautiful world so bright and fair
The wicked are driven; they never can share
A home in that peaceful land.
While waiting here, we'll watch and pray
For the day of the Lord is near;
O we long to be gone, we would not stay
Where the wicked are wailing in that dread day,
When the Holy One appears.

We'll reign with Him, the rightful heir,
Of David's royal throne;
The land of Beulah so bright and fair
When we have attained, then free from care,
We'll praise our Lord at home.
O joyful news—we are almost there;
We believe and our hearts are glad.
O glorious day—soon we hope to be where
The wheat is all gathered free from the tare
And in robes of beauty be clad.

We long to go home—we're weary here;
We look for a city above;
And we know by the signs it soon will appear,
We know our Beloved Redeemer is near,
With his shining banner of love.
His word is our lamp, and it still lights us on,
Brighter and brighter it shines;
Soon, soon will the morn of eternity dawn,
Soon will the holy ones upward be borne
To dwell with the Savior divine.

The Return of the Jews.

The question, Are the Jews, as such, to be restored to the land of Palestine? is of so great moment in the estimation of many people, that until it is met and fully disproved, no argument can avail with them in proving the speedy coming of Christ. And as I find a very excellent article from the pen of Bro. Storrs, written in 1843, and as truth is always good, I hereby transmit the same to you, to which I trust you will give publicity. [illegible]

It is said, "The world cannot come to an end yet, for the Jews are to be brought in first." It is added, "God must have some great design in having kept the Jews a distinct people for the last 1800 years," and it is asked, "What can that design be, but their conversion to Christianity?"

In reply, I remark, God has not "kept the Jews a distinct people." Here is the root of the error of our opponents in regard to the Jews. I will not deny but that they are a distinct people; but the question is, who has kept them so? Our opponents say, God has. [illegible] "God has no more kept [illegible] a distinct people than He has kept drunkards "a distinct people," or that He has "kept" Mormons or Mahommedans, or Papists, or liars, or any other class of wicked or deluded men, "a distinct people." The fact is, God broke down the "partition wall between Jews and Gentiles, by the death of His Son"; and never intended that any distinction should exist after "the seed should come to whom the promise was made." That "seed is Christ."—See Gal. chap. iii. [illegible] to the Ephesians (2: [illegible]) [illegible] the middle wall of partition [illegible]

To talk about God's keeping "the Jews" a distinct people in the face of such positive declarations [illegible] to the contrary, [illegible] [illegible] distinction, which in the purpose of God, was to exist no more after His Son broke it down [illegible]

The [illegible] have kept themselves "a distinct people," and have done it in opposition to the will of God, unto this day, as really and as criminally as drunkards have kept themselves "a distinct people"; and it may just as well be claimed that God has kept the drunkards a distinct people, with the design to convert them, as to set up such a claim for the Jews. I repeat it, the Jews are a distinct people by their own fault, and as criminally as drunkards, or any other class of sinners.

I shall now call attention to a few texts of scripture which show that the natural descendants of Abraham, under the gospel, have no peculiar privileges or promises. See Matt. 3: 9, 10. "And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father; for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire." Thus John the Baptist lays the "axe unto the root of the trees" of Jewish prejudice and pride, and gives them to understand that a dispensation is now opening in which the being a literal descendant of Abraham would avail nothing. This was a dreadful blow to Judaism, and it made the "dry tree" shake to its very roots. Now let us see if our Saviour did not cut it entirely down. See John 8: 39.—"They answered and said unto him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham." Here is a plain, positive denial that the Jews, as such, were the children of Abraham, and a clear statement of what constitutes a real child of Abraham, viz., doing "the works of Abraham." Our Lord tells the Jews in the 44th verse, "Ye are of your father the devil." This gives us a clue to the inquiry, who has kept them a distinct people? It is their father, the devil. Let none attribute such a devilish work to God any more. They are a "distinct people" because they chose to obey the devil rather than God, and to suppose that their conversion is to be the result of their serving devils, is to suppose that God gives a reward for rebellion. Besides, whenever a Jew is converted, his distinctive character as a Jew, ceases at once. This shows that their being a distinct people, is a work of the devil, and not of God, as God abolishes that distinction when they obey him. Now let us look at Rev. 2: 9. "I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are of the synagogue of Satan." Again, Rev. 3: 9,—"Them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie." Can any doubt who are meant by REAL JEWS in these verses?—Are they not real christians? while the natural descendants of Abraham, as such, or christians, who are so only in pretence, "are of the synagogue of Satan." In connection with these texts, see Rom. 2: 28–29, "For he is NOT a Jew which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh. But he is a Jew which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men, but of God."

Here inspiration settles the question, that those whom we call Jews are not Jews; and God no more regards them as Jews than He regards drunkards as sober men; or, than He regards wicked apostates as real christians. We are here also given to understand distinctly, who are Jews under the gospel dispensation—they are real christians.

That the literal descendants of Abraham, as such, are utterly rejected, except on the same conditions of other sinners, see Isa. lxv. 11–15: "But ye are they that forsake the Lord, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that troop, and that furnish the drink offering unto that number. Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear: but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry; behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty; behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed: behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sadness of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen; for the Lord God shall SLAY THEE, and call his servants by another name."

What language could more forcibly express an utter rejection from the very name of being God's people than that here employed? Read over these verses again, and see how carefully and clearly God distinguishes between the Jews, as such, and His people. That this rejection of them from being his people was to last till the end of this world, see the following verses. Where we are carried down to the new heavens and the new earth; and then God tells His people, whom He shall call by another name, "Be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create; for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy." What Jerusalem [illegible] Rev. 21: 1, 2. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.— And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." [illegible] Here is a perfect parallel, and when compared [illegible] the language of God by Isaiah, in the verses under consideration. The Lord adds, [illegible] "And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." This exactly corresponds with Rev. 21: 4.— "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

Now see Rom. 9: 6, 7, 8: "Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect; for they are not all Israel, which are of Israel; neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children; but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." Compare this with Gal. 4: 28—"Now we, brethren, (We who? Believers—whether from among the Jews or Gentiles,) as Isaac was, are the children of promise."

Here the apostle settles the question who are children of promise, and settles it to be those who have faith in Christ, without regard to their previous nationality.— These are the persons to whom the promises are made, and not the natural descendants of Abraham.

What has become of Old Jerusalem and her children? The apostle tells you in the 25th verse of this chapter, "For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children." Is this old bond-woman with children to inherit the promises of God with real christians? See 30th and 31st verses of this chapter, (Gal. 4:) "Nevertheless, what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bond-woman and her son; for the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. So, then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free."

But where is the Jerusalem to which the promises are made? See 26th verse: "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all."

Thus we learn, that old Jerusalem, or the Jews, as such, are rejected from the promises of God; and that all the promises pass over to the "servants" of God, who are called "by another name," viz., to true christians, who are the only true Jews and children of Jerusalem; so that there are no promises of restoration, or conversion, to the literal descendants of Abraham, more than to any other class of sinners.

"But," says the objector, "the Jews must be brought in with the fulness of the Gentiles;" and he adds, "that's Bible language." Thus spake a Doctor of Divinity of this city. Well, Doctor, where in the Bible do you find such language? Please tell us. Ans. No where! It's not there! It's only in the Dr.'s creed! That's all! But is there nothing that sounds like it in the Bible? Perhaps there is; but when D. D.'s tell us such words are "Bible language," they should be careful that they quote correctly. The portion of Scripture, doubtless, referred to, is Rom. xi. 25: "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, (how long the Jewish brethren are to be in their present state of blindness and consequent rejection,) lest ye should be wise in your own conceits,) and think they will some time or other be brought in, as a people;) that blindness in part is happened to Israel, (the Jewish nation,) until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in."

Now if this verse proves the return or conversion of the Jews, it proves also that it will not take place "UNTIL the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." Of course, there are to be no more of the Gentiles converted after the bringing in of the Jews commences; and as I understand the aforesaid Dr. thinks the return of the Jews is to commence this year, (1843) his doctrine is as fatal to the Gentiles as ours.— Let all then, who are not Jews, be aroused to seek salvation immediately. This year, ('43) remember, "our enemies themselves being judges," probation is to cease to the Gentiles.

As the strength of the whole argument, so far as the New Testament is concerned, lies in the 11th of Romans, I will give that chapter a full examination.

1st. Whom was the apostle addressing in that chapter? The 13th verse will tell you: "For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles; I magnify mine office." What was his controversy with the Gentile converts?— It was evidently about the nature of that rejection, of which the Jews were the subjects. It seems the Gentiles had imbibed the notion that God had utterly rejected the Jews, so that they were placed beyond the reach of salvation. Paul undertakes to refute that idea. How does he do it? Let us begin the chapter. "I say then, hath God cast away his people? (That is, has he so rejected them that there is no salvation for them?) God forbid." But, how do you prove that, Paul? "I will tell you," says the apostle. First—"For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin," and I have obtained salvation. This is my first proof that God has not cast away the Jews so but that they may have salvation. But, Paul, you are a favored character— have you any other proof that God has not put the Jews beyond the reach of His mercy? Yes, says the apostle, "God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew. Wot ye not what the Scripture saith of Elias? how he maketh intercession to God against Israel, saying, Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life. But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to Baal." The apostle adds, "Even so then at this present time, also, there is a remnant according to the election of grace." This is my second argument that salvation to the Jews is possible, wicked as they are; I am saved, and a remnant besides are saved." Paul then proceeds to say—"And if by grace, (6th, 7th, and 8th vs.) then is it no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace; otherwise work is no more work. What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded. (According as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear;) unto this day."

Who were the "election?" Ans.— Paul, and that part of the Jews who embraced the gospel, because they "were obedient to the faith," (see Acts vi. 7) the Lord elected, or chose them to the enjoyment of his favor, as his spiritual Israel. Those who did not obey, (see chap. x. 16th and 21st verses) "were blindfolded."— The apostle then goes on to say verses 9th and 10th, that David prophesied of this thing—"And David saith, Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling-block, and a recompense unto them; let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow their back always."

Why were their eyes darkened? Because they rejected "the true light,"—the Lord Jesus Christ. But the apostle adds, 11th verse: "I say, then, Have they stumbled that they should fall," beyond the possibility of salvation? "God forbid;" or, by no means, as the phrase signifies; "but through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy;" that is, the Jews were provoked to jealousy by the salvation of the Gospel being preached to the Gentiles.— See Acts xiii: 45, 46: "But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming. Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles."

The middle wall was now broken down —the Jews fell from the peculiarity they had enjoyed, and through, or by means of that fall, salvation came to the Gentiles on the same terms that it flowed to a Jew, viz. by faith in Jesus Christ. "Now," says the apostle, 12th verse, "if the fall of them be the riches of the world" (or, be the means of enriching the world, by salvation flowing to all men with equal freedom,) and the diminishing of them, (or, as the margin reads, "loss" of them, or, their "loss,") the riches of the Gentiles, (or, has been the means of riches to the Gentiles,) "how much more their fulness." As though the apostle had said, "Salvation has richly flowed to you Gentiles through the loss to the Jews of their peculiarity; but if they could be induced, generally, to embrace the gospel, there would be a still greater blessing flow to the world." And surely the unbelief of the Jews has prevented thousands and millions, probably, from embracing Christianity; and what a work of enriching the world they might have accomplished had they espoused the cause of Christ, instead of employing all their influence against it!

The apostle now proceeds to say, verses 13th and 14th: "I speak to you Gentiles; inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office; IF BY ANY MEANS I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save SOME OF THEM."

Surely this language does not look much as if the apostle thought that the Jews were all to be converted. He even expresses a doubt as to the salvation of any of them; but says, he labors, "if by any means" he "might save some of them." He must have be n peculiarly unfortunate in his expressions, if he intended to teach that the Jews were certainly to be converted. But, says the apostle, verse 15th, "If the casting away of them (viz., the unbelieving Jews) be the reconciling of the world, (i. e., the cause of the gospel of reconciliation being preached to the world; or, perhaps, more strictly, the means of destroying the cause of enmity between Jews and Gentiles, bringing all on to the same ground in relation to God and one another, thus destroying "the enmity" which had existed, "by his cross," —see Eph. ii: 15–18—if this casting away of them resulted so gloriously for the world,) what shall the receiving of them be, ("if by any means I might save some of them") but life from the dead?" That is, if the Jews could "by any means" be brought to give up their unbelief, and embrace Christianity, it would give new life and power to the Gospel itself. But Paul is very far from teaching that they should actually do so. All the apostle's language shows a doubt about the Jews, many of them, ever embracing the religion of Jesus. But he says, verse 16th, "If the first fruit be holy, the lump also" (may be holy.) Is not that the sense? The verb "is," is not in the original. What is the apostle's argument? Is it not this?— "Though I have my doubts whether many of the Jews will be saved, yet their salvation is possible; for if the first fruit (viz., the apostle himself, and the remnant of whom he had spoken in the 5th verse) be holy, (or, have been made holy,) the lump (or, body, of the Jews may be made holy;) and if the root (Christ, see Isaiah xi: 10,) be holy, so are the branches."— That is, if the [illegible] believing Jews would believe on Christ, the root, they would become holy, as well as we who are the "first fruits," and so they might be saved. The whole argument goes to prove the possibility of the salvation of the Jews; but, at the same time, shows that the apostle had doubts whether many of them would be saved, though he hoped to "save some of them."

He now proceeds to caution the Gentile converts against being puffed up because they had been brought into exalted privileges; and he does this with tremendous effect, in verses 17–22. He says: "And if some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert graffed in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree; boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee. Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in. Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear; for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee. Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God; on them which fell, severity; but towards thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness; otherwise thou also shalt be cut off."

The apostle then goes on to say, verse 23d, "They also, IF they abide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in; for God is able to graff them in again," IF they abide not still in unbelief. Here the apostle carefully sets his sentinel. It is a small word, it is true, but it is of tremendous import, showing that the apostle never designed to be understood as teaching the certainty of the Jews' conversion; if he had intended to teach it, he would not have set the unbending word "if" to stand sentinel to keep all carnal Jews and Gentiles out of the church of God.

The apostle now proceeds to argue this case still further, and says, verse 24th, "For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive tree; how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be graffed into their own olive tree?"—if they abide not still in unbelief." He then goes on to say, 25th verse, "For I would not have you to be ignorant of this mystery, lest you should be wise in your own conceit, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, (or, to a part of Israel, viz., those who believed not, and this blindness will continue) until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in;" that is, till the end of the world; for, till then, we have no reason to suppose the fulness of the Gentiles will be come in. The apostle saw that a part of the Jews would continue to reject Christ till the end of the world; but that was no evidence of the impossibility of their salvation, "if" they would give up their "unbelief." Paul then adds, verse 26th, "And so all Israel shall be saved—'if they abide not still in unbelief;'—for, the apostle speaks constantly in reference to the trusty sentinel he has set to guard against intruders) as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins. Where is this written? See Isaiah lix. 20, 21: "And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; my spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever."

Here the prophet helps us to understand the apostle, and he teaches us that the promise is that the Redeemer shall come unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob; and that the covenant relates to an eternal inheritance, and not to a mere conversion of any class of wicked men.

The apostle next proceeds to say, verse 28th, that, "As concerning the gospel, they (the unbelieving Jews) are enemies for your sakes, (or, on your account, i. e., they were enemies because the partition wall was broken down, and the Gentiles were admitted to the same favor of God as themselves, and on the same terms.— (See Acts 13: 42–46,) but as touching the election, (that is, the believing Jews— see verse 7,) they are beloved for the fathers' sakes." God has a special love to a believing Jew for the fathers' sake, on the principle that he "keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him, to a thousand generations." (See Deut. vii: 9.) Thus, the Gentile converts were made to understand, that though God had rejected the unbelieving Jews from his favor, yet, when they believed, as they all might if they would, they were regarded with special favor for the fathers' sake; for God had not forgotten the faith of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; and his "gifts and calling" to the "fathers," he had never repented of, or changed his purpose of making them the chosen vessels through whom he would bless the world.

Now let us examine the ORIGINAL PROMISES made to the fathers. See Gen. xiii: 14, 15: "And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever."

Now see xvii. chap. Gen. 7th and 8th verses: "And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God."

Now compare these promises with Acts vii: 4, 5: "Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran; and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell. And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child."

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 9, '54.

Dear Bro. Merriam,—It may not be amiss, should I give you and the readers of the Crisis a short account of the cause in this section of country, &c. After leaving Concord, N. H., in company with Bro. Ford and others, July 13, we first attended the Grove Meeting at Fortbrewerton, near the outlet of Oneida Lake. There was quite a gathering at this meeting, and many anxious to hear the "present truth." We trust good was the effect of the meeting. After the meeting closed, we repaired to the river where one precious soul was "buried by baptism." God's blessed spirit rested on us, in the attendance of this ordinance, and truly the best was at the last of the feast. We met with the church in Clay, Monday and Tuesday evenings. Wednesday eve. I spoke to a large audience at Syracuse in the open air. I spoke four times at the same square to large and attentive congregations. I must say that I have never spoken in any place where the city government seemed so determined to preserve good order and protect a stranger, as at Syracuse. The church in Syracuse are trimming their lamps. Two were baptized before we left; also three in Clay, one of whom had been a Roman Catholic. To see a young man leave that bottomless pit, and embrace the "present truth," what is it but "life from the dead?" I have lectured two evenings in Oswego, where I was treated kindly by the Mayor and officers of the city, though the beast roared and the horn spake. Yet His dominion having been taken away (at the appointed time), he could not destroy. There are a few in Oswego that love the truth. We attended the Grove Meeting at Vanburen, 22d and 23d. Here God's children had a refreshing season; many, I trust, saw the necessity of going out to meet the Bridegroom; also the time when he will come. Some were deciding to seek and serve the Lord. O that they may find the narrow way and walk in it.

I lectured twice in Auburn last week, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, to large and attentive congregations who stood in the open air for an hour and a half or more. Good order was preserved during each discourse, and the best of all was, that the Lord helped me by the spirit to preach the living word, which I trust will never return void, but will accomplish that whereunto it was sent. The church at Auburn are investigating the subject of time, as well as other portions of the word for themselves, and a goodly number have already embraced the present truth. The labors of Bro. J. Cummings last spring have been greatly blest in Auburn; also Syracuse, Rochester and other places. I hope as he is about to visit this field again to pitch the Big Tent in different places, that all the brethren and sisters will attend who possibly can. Let not the cares of this world, or a few dollars' expense, or the love of ease, "or any other creature," hinder you from meeting when the Tent comes your way. We have but a few months at most, to get ready for the Judgment. O do wake up, and attend to those things that belong to your peace; heed the solemn cry, "go ye out to meet the Bridegroom." We left Auburn Aug. 3d in company with Bro. I. K. Palmer, and went to South Butler. Here we met Bro. Zina Ford, Bro. Sibly, Bro. Charles Sargent, and sister Palmer, who came with me from the east; also met some of God's dear children who reside there that I had not seen since 1843. It was truly refreshing to meet with those fellow-laborers from the east as we had been parted for awhile, laboring in different places. We held meetings in this place till Sunday night. At the close of the meeting, we had a solemn yet precious season, while attending to the ordinance of the Lord's Supper. We left next morning, some for one place and some for another, perhaps not to meet again till the Master comes. O may we labor faithfully till the hour of sweet release shall come.

I came to Rochester on Monday; have spoken two evenings in the open air. I design to stay here till next Monday, and, like Jonah, go through this city, saying, in 1854 the Lord will come. If any of God's children will write to me from any place, I should be very thankful. My Post Office Address for this month will be Rochester, N. Y.

Your Bro. in hope of seeing Jesus soon, certainly before next May goes by, and I hope this fall. [illegible] G. Hook.

Concluded.

Well, says another, you will find nothing in 519, that marks that as the year. Don't be too fast; you say the emperor Anastatius died in July 518, and was succeeded by Justin; that their religious sentiments were opposite; that Justin was a strong advocate for the church of Rome; and that the next spring he sent an embassy to the pope, and desired conditions of union of all the churches. Yes, but that was only because of the divisions that had been of so long standing in the churches, and Justin only wished to heal those dissensions, and unite the churches. Well, do you not see that those discords must be adjusted; for this power could not be set up, till the church was united on some system of corruption; for while there were any pure and holy members in the churches, the hypocrisy of the adherents of the church of Rome, would be exposed and reproved; but by this very union, and the despotic decrees on which it was based, the true worshipers of God were outnumbered by the pope's adherents, and the 'forsakers of the holy covenant'; so that the minority fell under the malediction of their unfeeling oppressors; and all whom they could not persuade, nor 'corrupt by flatteries,' nor force by violence to yield obedience to the pope's decrees, fell 'by the sword, by flame, by captivity, and by spoil many days'; as will be seen by a careful perusal of the histories of those times.

When Justin's embassy arrived at Rome the pope was overjoyed at the prospect before him, of succeeding in all his intrigues to obtain supreme power; which for years, and years, he had been laboring by every art of dissimulation to acquire; for as long as those dissensions continued, he could not get that power; but by this union he obtained it: and here is the first sprout of 'the little horn' from the roots, which had been maturing, (in that 'mystery of iniquity,') from the days of the Apostles. The pope sent his legates to Constantinople, with an uncompromising demand that certain articles of faith, and decrees of councils should be subscribed to by all the clergy, unconditionally, and without explanation, (one of which was, 'that they would conform in all things to the Apostolic See,') or there could be no union. After certain delays, the emperor, (to obtain his will,) procured a decree, or approval of the Senate to the effect that all the churches in the empire should submit to the dictation of the bishop of Rome, or in other words, yield to the decrees of the Pope; and though many remonstrated against such usurpation, the emperor compelled them to submit, by threats of most calamitous pains and penalties; and after subscribing to the articles, they were confirmed at 'the table of the Lord.' Those who dissented were proscribed, and driven from their homes into banishment, their property confiscated, and even life taken. Now all this is something; and according to some of the best historians it was accomplished in A. D. 519. I know by history that Justin filled the throne in 518, and that he granted no toleration to heretics; and even excluded them from offices of trust, both civil and military; but he had not accomplished his purpose of putting them under she pope in that year; ('large bodies move slow';) and though Justin exerted all his power, he could not execute his plans till the next year; and who does not see the lineaments of the prophecy in glowing colours? Here the true worshipers of God were driven into exile, by which 'the daily sacrifice was (suppressed,) or taken away; and an intolerant, hypocritical, blasphemous, abominable system established in its stead; and it appears to me that the reason why our friends have not discovered this 'little horn,' is because it is so little. A proper infant, when it is born, has every feature and every member of its parent, though in an infant state, and so has this little 'man of sin'; here he is born, and he must be the most remarkable child that ever was born; for, the very process of bringing him into the world is effected by that stern decree which bound the churches 'to conform in all things to the apostolic See. But he is little in comparison to what he afterwards attained, as to his temporal power; prophecy describes him as little at first; but even the public proclamation of 'universal bishop,' could not augment his power, (for it was absolute as it respected the church; for if all 'must conform in all things to the Apostolic See,' what could be more than all?) but it would be very likely to augment his pride and vindictiveness, if any one dared in the least to disobey his mandates. When he was set up as a temporal prince, his ecclesiastical power was strengthened, and he then became 'the (full grown) Man of Sin'. The power which he received in A. D. 519, (even if we should call it nominal at first,) was then fully developed, and executed in all the horrors of inquisitorial barbarism and cruelty, that could be conceived by all the inmates of Pandemonium. It grew up among the ten, till it not only overtopped all the others, but actually plucked three of them from the head of the beast. So great was their corruption, that (as one writer intimates) they had forgotten that the scriptures were in existence, they having been superceded by the decretals of synods, popes, and councils. Is not this polluting the Sanctuary? Who cannot see that 'the daily sacrifice' is removed, and a desolating abomination' exalted? Who cannot see the 'Man of Sin' in the temple of God? 'The dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority' and 'all the world wondered after the beast.' The witnesses are shrouded in sackcloth: the saints are delivered into his hand; against whom he wages an exterminating war.—Who does not see the blessed Sun-clad 'Woman,' with starry diadem, 'fleeing into the wilderness, from (before) the face of the Serpent?' With a tearful eye, and a bleeding heart, I have often tracked this Woman through rivers of blood and carnage; through torturing racks and flames, and through the most agonizing fears, temptations, and distresses, the terribleness of which, the day of judgment alone can tell! I have been a sympathizer with her, I have suffered with her, wept with her, prayed with her, sojourned with her, and loved her with an intensity which the world knows not; in short I have lived in such intimacy with her that I almost fancied I was one of her children. Indeed some of my steps have been impressed with a distinguishing token, characteristic only of her family, viz. sometimes 'ready to halt,' sometimes pursuing with all alacrity, sometimes fleeing from the oppressor, and sometimes contending with the enemy, sometimes climbing, sometimes wading, and oftentimes disconcerted, and 'much cast down at the length, (and dreariness) of the way,' sometimes brightening my armor, and at all times 'enduring as seeing him who is invisible.' When I come before the throne I often behold her family under the altar, and always unite with them and 'cry with a loud voice,' 'How long, O Lord, Holy and true, dost thou not judge, and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth.'

But hush this digression. It will be seen that the kingdom of this 'man of sin,' becomes universal, and 'continues forty-two months,' and as the suppression of 'liberty of conscience,' marks its commencement, so religious toleration marks its termination. We find that from 1776 to 1783, religious toleration was established; particularly in Austria, which had so long been the head kingdom to sustain the pretensions of the pope. This government granted toleration in or about 1779, or 1780, which together with the reforms that had preceded it, and the darkening of the sun and moon, mark the termination of that period with sufficient distinctness to satisfy any candid enquirer after truth, that the supreme power ended in 1779; and it will be seen that 'arms did stand on his part'; all the imperial power of Rome, both civil and military, was at the nod of the pope; and I am unable to discover one feature in all the prophecies of his 'little horn,' that has not its corresponding feature in the 'Man of Sin.'

The sixth period of 1290 years. There are evidences which establish the fact, that this period terminated in 1809, when the pope was deprived of his temporalities, and himself captivated; which is too well known, to need anything, in addition that I can advance; and the last period of 1335 years, I do most solemnly believe will terminate the coming autumn, when we shall realize the solemnities of the judgment which Daniel describes thus, "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of Days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hairs of his head like the pure wool; his throne was like a fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire'. 'A fiery stream issued, and came forth from before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the Judgment was set, and the books were opened'.

The foregoing is a feeble description of the light which we believe God has given us; and these are some of the evidences of the facts; and we feel bound by every principle of humanity, to proclaim it far and near; and all who shut their eyes against it, must abide the consequences. We fully believe that it was the original design of God, that we should know the time of the end of the world, as fully as Noah knew the time of the flood; but it is known only by that faith which inspired him, and likewise that we should labor, to obtain this knowledge. The types, shadows, parables, and symbols were given us for this very purpose; for if they had all been given in plain, literal language, our work would have all been done 'at our hand'; but we must labor, in order to be a partaker of those 'glories which will (shortly) be revealed.' The most striking fact which demonstrates that He intended that we should know it, is, that the full length of twenty-three hundred years has rolled away, from and after every decree to build Jerusalem, but the last; and if the decree of Cyrus issued B. C. 536, had commenced the vision, it must have ended in 1765. If that of Darius had begun it, B. C. 520, it would have closed in 1781, and if that of Artaxerxes issued in his seventh year, B. C. 459, had been the starting point, it would have wound up the world as soon as A. D. 1842. And shall we dare to be so faithless as to say, 'God's word has failed three times, and we can have no faith in the fourth'? 'God forbid'! God's word has never failed; but the calculations of poor puny man, have often proved erroneous. God has now in this last year, rectified our chronology of the Persian kingdom, and given us the right date of the 20th year of Artaxerxes; (viz.) when the last decree was issued, 446 years B. C., which just proves where each period ended, till we come to the end of 'the seventy weeks'; and they were doubtless 'cut off' from the vision to seal it: and because there are several hundred years between the end of the seventy weeks, and the setting up of 'the abomination of desolation,' which do not fulfill any part of the interior periods, but only belong to the whole number of years contained in the vision; and we find just the year that a false chronology would have deprived us of, and without which, we could not find the Seal to the vision, in its place; but by just this year being added in its place, all is harmonious, and we are enabled by the grace and goodness of God, to find the beginning and end of each and all the periods, but the termination of the very last; and that this will terminate the vision in the first Jewish month of A. D. 1855, we regard as an article of implicit faith in God's word, which cannot be too firmly fixed. But says one, how can I fully believe, or wish to be apprised of it [illegible] so, but how can I believe it? How can you believe that Jesus is the Christ, but by the light of God's word? and if you reject it, you do it at your peril. Will you say at the judgment seat, 'Lord we have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets; but we could not believe thy teachings, they contained many 'hard sayings;' it did not seem probable that thy words would be fulfilled; and we had thy word 'to eat, and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all our labor;' and that 'parents should lay up for their children.' We did not expect that our morning sun would set at noon, nor that all our plans to build up thy cause in the world, would be so soon frustrated. We did know, (to be sure) that there was a vision of kingdoms and that its length was 2300 years from a certain decree to build Jerusalem; but as there were four decrees to that effect, and threee failed to mark the chronology, we thought very likely the other would. But 'have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works?'—With such a defence as this before the 'great white throne, and Him that sits on it, from whose face the earth and heaven flee away,' what could you expect from the mouth of your Judge but, 'Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked and slothful servant!' 'Depart from me all ye workers of iniquity!' Ye have 'loved darkness rather than light, because your deeds were evil'! and you are richly entitled to 'the blackness of darkness forever!' Away, ye haughty scorners, and filthy hypocrites, into 'utter darkness'! Away, ye dealers with familiar spirits, ye forsakers and despisers of God and his word, of every class, into 'everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels!' Such is the end of the slothful, disobedient servant; such the doom of the grasping worldling; such the award of the bigoted sordid hypocrite; such the sentence of the haughty rejecter of God's word, and such will be the final destiny of all classes of careless unbelievers, and hardened sinners.

Striking is the contrast between the characters of the foregoing classes of the wicked, and the penitent believer in Christ, who takes God at His word, and believes that when He speaks He means what he says; and his first object is to learn what God requires of him, and then promptly to obey Him. He finds by inspiration that 'God has appointed a day in the which He will judge the world,' and his greatest anxiety is to be prepared to meet his Judge in peace on that day.—By repentance and faith, he lays hold of the promises, and feels that 'the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his.' He loves the brethren, 'does good to them that (he knows) hate him': prays for his most inveterate enemies; pities the scoffer; 'esteems the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt;' walks by faith in God and His word; searches the prophecies especially those that are chronological, if possible to ascertain when his Lord will come. He finds predictions of most thrilling events, and the periods of their occurrence. He looks away in the past distance, and sees several prophetic milestones, marked and sealed with the finger of God. He discovers the signs of the end of the world, sees with joy 'the day breaking,' and proclaims the good news to all, both friends and foes, 'whether they will hear or forbear'; he knows, and solemnly feels the responsibility which, under God, he assumes, and the determined opposition which he incurs. He has counted the cost, and feels that he is abundantly able to sustain the high position he has taken; though perils assail him; with a celestial Commander, the greater the perils the greater the glory of the conqueror when he quits the field; and his motto is 'onward, onward, till the day of glory!' The world, and all its allurements, flatteries and fascinations, is under his feet; and through grace he becomes a champion of that faith by which a just man lives. He watches against every snare of the enemy, and whenever he detects one, instantly petitions to the court above for assistance, and finds his petition always granted, [illegible] 'the ladder of heaven,' and finds a path to the dazzling recesses of the Most High; lays all on 'the golden altar;' explores the world above, and finds every thing in the strictest order, and the most perfect accordance with holy Writ; praises God, finds 'the hidden treasure;' brings it out, and shares it with the children; plunges into an 'ocean of divine love,' and is expecting soon to lose himself in immortal glory. Such an one, is 'the waiting one;' and such is the constant (though not perfect) exercise and employment of those who desire, and expect 'to be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless'; and such an one will shortly obtain that crown (for which he has so untiringly labored and suffered;) which is laid up for him 'in the paradise of God.'

Dear Brother Merriam:—I often think of you, and your arduous labors, but be encouraged to toil on a little while longer, then heavenly, sweet rest will be yours eternally to enjoy. "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."—Rest! How sweet the sound! It is as a reviving cordial to my aching heart.—Rest! not as the flesh shall rest in the grave, nor such a rest as the carnal world desire. O blessed rest! when we "rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty." O blessed day of complete deliverance from all sin and its consequences. Yes, we shall then rest from sin, but not from worshipping God; rest from suffering and sorrow, but not from joy. Blessed day! when we, (if faithful), shall rest with God and His Son Jesus Christ! when we shall rest in the kingdom of our Lord! when we shall rest in knowing, loving, rejoicing, and praising God! When our perfect soul and body shall together perfectly enjoy the most perfect God! When God, who is perfect love itself, shall perfectly love His children.—How near is that most blessed, joyful day! It comes apace. "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Though our Lord seems to delay his coming, yet a little while and he will be here. How surely will his sign appear! And every eye shall see him. How suddenly will he seize upon the careless world, "even as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth unto the west." He will come in the clouds, with His attending angels, in majesty and great glory. But all whose names are found written in the Lamb's book of life, the Father will receive as the spouse of His Son, and bid them welcome to the crown of glory that fadeth not away.

The Crisis, as a weekly messenger, I hail with gladness. It is to my mind, as cold water when I am thirsty, or bread when I am hungry. I, and a few others here in Goshen, feel unwilling to give it up as long as the world stands! So we send you what seems to be duty for the present, for its continuance. Please accept our small offering, and hope in faith for more by and by, if time continue.

Yours, in hope of speedy deliverance.

Fulfilment of Prophecy.

Bro. Merriam:—I am not identified with the Adventists, but firmly believe in the speedy second coming of Christ.

I can see no reasons for belief in a temporal millennium. Those good brethren who believe in it, and also in the restoration of the Jews, I think do not correctly understand the prophetic writings.

The prophetic promises, we think, are all fulfilled in the following events:

1. The restoration of the Jews from Babylonish captivity. Many of the prophecies were made before, and at the time of this captivity, and of course their restoration must have been a subject of prophetic promise.

2. The coming of the Messiah. The blessings of the gospel dispensation were the subject of much prophetic remark.

3. The end of time, the Judgment, and blessings of the church triumphant.

Surely, the present condition of the world promises anything but a temporal millennium. If this world is to be Christianized, or saved by the ordinary means of grace, how can it be as it was in the days of Noah and Lot, when Christ shall appear?

To reject the doctrine of Christ's second appearing, is to reject the Bible.

To treat the word of God with respect, is to seek an understanding of it.

Prophecies that cannot be understood, are not revelations to us.

Christ gave his disciples to understand that the dawn of everlasting day would be preceded by a long night of tribulation.—He gave them signs by which they might know the passing hours of night, and when to expect His second Advent. The disciple who does not observe these signs, does not obey his Master; and he who does not lift up his head and rejoice at the prospect of such a glorious redemption, I fear has too much regard for earth, and too little esteem for heaven. The following lines will express a few of my feelings on this subject:

Thrice welcome! glorious day, foretold by those Whom God had set as watchmen on the walls
Of Zion, to guard, to warn, and to direct
His little flock through the long dangerous night
Of Satan's reign.
But why rejoice that this fair earth with all
Its pleasing charms; that cloud-crowned kingly courts,
The palaces of nobles, and those gay
Enchanting scenes of revelry and mirth;
Where sensual pleasure sits enthroned o'er
Reason; and appetite is Deity;
Must be dissolved, and wrapt in quenchless flame?
Can thought conceive the horrors of that day
That will not like the morning dawn,
But like the lightning's stroke break forth, and seal
The fate of millions?
Loud thunders roar, and earthquake's heavy shock
Upheaves the ocean; and watery [illegible]
Are fuel to the flames; high mountains fall
While solid hills dissolved like melting snow;
And verdant woods, with flowering fields give
Place to long defied, insulted vengeance.
Jehovah comes in grandeur down the skies
To verify the word his prophets spake,
And vindicate the cause of His tried [illegible]

Portland, Me. J. H.

P. S. Will some writer for the Crisis give a synopsis of Mr. Miller's views in relation to dates, times, &c.; also of the present views of Adventists touching this same point, the 2300, &c., and oblige a Brother.

BRIMFIELD, Aug. 13th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—Believing as I do, that there is an argument which cannot be refuted, showing that the 10th day of the 7th month (Jewish reckoning) is the time when our Lord will come, I send you the following, taken from a paper published ten years ago.

Your brother, looking for the Lord on the tenth day of the seventh month.

JOHN E. AINSWORTH.

The Types.

The law of Moses contained a shadow of good things to come; a system of figures or types pointing to Christ and his kingdom. See Heb. 10: 1; Col. 2: 16, 17. Everything contained in the law was to be fulfilled by him. In Matt. 5: 17, 18, Jesus says, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled."
Our Lord, at his first coming, when he died on the cross, began the fulfilment of those types contained in the law; as our great High Priest he is still fulfilling them; and when he comes the second time, [illegible] will complete their fulfilment. Not the least point will fail, either in the substance shadowed forth, or in the time so definitely pointed out for the observance of these types; for God is an exact time keeper. See Acts 17: 26, 31; Job 24: 1; [illegible] 23; 4; 37. These passages [illegible] TIME is an important point [illegible] the Lord; therefore types and antitypes correspond exactly [illegible] One type fulfilled [illegible] ing of the Passover [illegible] on the 14th day of the first month [illegible] Lev. 23: 5; Exod. 12: [illegible] that the lamb was killed in the evening [illegible] The margin gives the literal reading from the Hebrew, "between the two evenings." Joseph Frey, a converted [illegible] in his work on the Passover, says [illegible] afternoon, or evening of the day [illegible] them divided into two parts [illegible] former evening, and the greater or latter [illegible] evening. The dividing point between the two, was three in the afternoon, the ninth hour of the day. Jesus died on the cross on the same day, and at the same hour.—See Mark 15: 33, 37. Thus Christ our Passover, was sacrificed for us. Not one point of the law failed here. TIME was [illegible]. In Lev. 23: 6, 7, we are informed that the day after the Passover was to be a special Sabbath; and in verses 10, 11, is a command to offer the first fruits of the harvest on the morrow after the Sabbath. This was a type of the resurrection of Christ. And on the same day, that is, the day after the Sabbath, he burst the bonds of the tomb, and rose triumphant, the sample of the future harvest, the FIRST FRUITS of them that slept. See 1. Cor. 15: 20–23.—Again, in Lev. 23: 15, 16, we have the time of the feast of weeks, or, as it is called, the pentecost, which signifies the fiftieth day. This was the anniversary of the Lord's descent on Mount Sinai at the giving of the law; and was fulfilled, as we learn from Acts 2: 1–4, when the Holy Spirit descended as a rushing mighty wind, and as cloven tongues of fire, by which the apostles were endued with power from on high, qualifying them to go forth and execute the great commission which the Master had given them, to preach the gospel to every creature. Thus we see that those types that pointed to events connected with our Lord's first coming, were fulfilled exactly at the time of their observance. And every one who is not willingly blind must see, and feel too, that those that remain unfulfilled, will be fulfilled with an equally strict regard to time. Not only so, but Christ himself confirms this argument from analogy, by saying that one jot or tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.—Those types which were to be observed in the 7th month, have never had their fulfilment in the ante-type.

On the first day of that month, as we learn from Lev. 23: 23–25, was the memorial of blowing of trumpets. See Ps. 81: 3, "Blow up the trumpet in the new moon, in the time appointed, on our solemn feast day." See also Rev. 10: 7, "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets." On the first of the seventh month, 6000 years being complete, from the first day of the week of creation, the great millennial Sabbath will be introduced by the sounding of the seventh trumpet.

Another type is given in Lev. 23: 26–32, that is, the day of atonement or reconciliation, on the tenth day of the seventh month, in which the high priest went into the most holy place of the tabernacle, presenting the blood of the victim before the mercy-seat, after which on the same day he came out and blessed the waiting congregation of Israel. See Lev. 9: 7, 22–24, and 16th ch. Heb. 5: 1–6, and 9: 1–12, 27, 28. Now the important point in this type is the completion of the reconciliation at the coming of the high priest out of the holy place. The high priest was a type of Jesus, our high Priest; the most holy place a type of heaven itself; and the coming out of the high priest a type of the coming of Jesus the second time to bless his waiting people. As this was on the tenth day of the seventh month, so on that day Jesus will certainly come, because not a single point of the law is to fail.—All must be fulfilled. The feast of tabernacles, which began on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, (see Lev. 23: 33–43,) was a type of the marriage supper of the Lamb; which will be celebrated in the New Jerusalem, the tabernacle of God which is to be with men.

In Lev. 25: 8–12, 23, 24, we find that on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the fiftieth year, the jubilee trumpet was always to be blown, and redemption granted to all the land. Let any man read carefully the connection of this subject, and he must surely see that this is a most striking type of the glorious deliverance of the [illegible] of God, and of the whole creation which is now groaning under the curse, when the Redeemer shall come to Zion and accomplish the redemption of the bodies of all [illegible], and the redemption of the purchased possession. See Rom. 8: 19–23; Eph. 1: [illegible]. Our blessed Lord will therefore come, to the [illegible] of all them that dwell upon the earth, and to the salvation of those who truly look for him on the tenth day of the seventh month of the year of jubilee.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, AUGUST 30, 1854.

The Doctrine of Natural Immortality.

The positive, unequivocal testimony of the word is, the sinner must enter the ark, or perish in the awful deluge of fire that will overwhelm the earth in the final day; that the jewels of the Lord could not be thus consumed, being spared from the effect of the devouring element, hid in the pavillion of His love, having entered into their chambers, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast: and these declarations of scripture are to be considered literally "true, and faithful," unless some other evidence can be presented to show it cannot be so. But the rebutting testimony usually brought is not satisfactory. The idea presented in opposition, which is most prominent, is that the terms "forever," "eternal," "everlasting," &c., are applied to the punishment of the wicked. We have been so trained from infancy to believe in a state of endless misery for the wicked, that every strong expression that might be construed so as to convey that idea, we seize upon tenaciously, and can hardly relinquish the idea, when proved to be false by positive testimony: whereas if we had not been so instructed, we should not have supposed they were so intended to be understood. Look at the strong expression in Lev. 8: 12, 13, in relation to the fire on the jewish altar. It is said "It shall not be put out." "The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar: it shall NEVER go out." Now mark; when the temple is demolished, and the altar falls, the fire can no more burn upon it. Mark distinctly this principle. It is said the fire shall never go out, but the perpetuity of the fire was parallel only with the existence of the temple and altar, and is of necessity bounded by it. No matter how strong and positive the expression is in regard to the continuance of that fire which is an appendage of the Mosaic economy, we all know when that economy ceases, when that temple is demolished, and the service of the tabernacle comes to an end, and the altar falls, the fire ceases to burn upon it. This idea is as clear as the sun in the firmament. A Jew would understand perhaps, that the fire ought now to be burning; and for this reason, viz. that he had the pre-existing idea in his mind, that the Jewish ritual is not to cease: but one who regards the positive testimony of Jesus, that the time is come when ye shall not in Jerusalem worship the Father, &c., and the testimony of the Apostle in Col. 2: 14, that the ordinances of the Mosaic ritual were taken away by the cross, will understand that the fire, although it was to be perpetual while the economy remained, yet under this dispensation it is to be extinguished. Thus it appears that our understanding of such phraseology depends on the preconceved opinions we entertain. This will illustrate the whole subject in question. Just give me the principles of interpretation adopted by most christians in relation to the sentence pronounced on the ungodly, and by parity of reasoning, I can prove the statutes of Moses are in force to day. They prove by such terms as everlasting, eternal, and forever, that it is endless; and do not even once perhaps, think that the laws of Moses were statutes forever, everlasting ordinances, i. e., throughout all their generations. Turn to Ex. 12: 14, 17; 28: 43; 30: 21; Lev. 6: 18, 22; 7: 34, 36; 10: 9; 16: 29, 31, 34, &c., &c., &c.—By an examination of these passages, you will find the Mosaic laws to have been declared everlasting, and to all appearance perpetual. But when the economy to which those statutes are attached, as appendages, falls, the ordinances connected, of necessity fall with it.

If Jesus as our great High Priest has succeeded to the Pontifical Office, and abolished the Aaronic priesthood, the ceremonies of that priesthood of necessity come to an end. The duration of the ordinances is limited by the duration of the economy. The only thing that can be presented against the destruction of the wicked, from scripture is, the use of such terms as everlasting, forever, &c., as applied to their punishment; and yet the same expressions stand in their full force, to show the perpetuity of the Jewish dispensation. Take for instance the ordinance that a bondman whose ears were bored through, should be a servant "forever." In this case, the servitude, although forever, was limited to the life of the servant. Says Jonah, "the bars of the mountains were about my head forever." Here forever is limited to the three days during which Jonah was in the deep.

We say a man intends to occupy his farm forever. Here the term is limited to his natural life. The law gives him a title to his land forever, but should the farm be destroyed by an earthquake, the term would be limited by the existence of the farm. So that to say these terms prove an endless existence, is not warranted by any usus loquendi, human or divine.

To illustrate. There is a tree on Boston common whose limbs were thought to be in danger of falling, I suppose from decay of the tree, and they by means of iron bands, made fast those branches to the body of the tree. Now suppose, in relation to that tree, one should say, "those limbs are bound forever to the tree: it is impossible that they should be broken off," but at the same time inform you that the tree itself must wither and die—that it must fall—will certainly perish—is destined to be burned up root and branch—and will all be turned to ashes beneath our feet. Then suppose he should describe another tree, and say, "it will live forever, it can never wither nor fade—its life is eternal—its beauty immortal—it will flourish while the sun and moon endure—and to its bearing fruit there will be no end." How strange and unaccountable would it be, that a person from that description should understand the two trees to be equally enduring!! What but the most consummate blindness and ignorance of language could induce the belief that the tree that was destined to die, to perish, and to be burnt up, would flourish just as long as the other? and yet thus, as astounding as it may appear, do most men reason in respect to Bible truth. They say the wicked will exist as long as the righteous, when scripture assures us the righteous shall be preserved forever, and the wicked be "cut off," and "be no more." All the individual could hang an argument upon in respect to the immortality of the tree, is the fact that its limbs are bound to the body so that they cannot fall. But when the tree falls and is destroyed, what becomes of the branches? This, I understand to be an illustration of the whole subject.

In respect to the Mosaic ritual, the different ordinances may be regarded as the branches of the tree. They are indissolubly identified with that economy; but when the economy itself passes away, the ordinances are no more. In the case of the man who was made a servant forever, his servitude is an inevitable condition or circumstance of his life, like a branch connected to a tree; but when the life itself failed, the condition of servitude necessarily ceased with it. In respect to the title of land forever, the circumstance in relation to that land is indispensable while the farm exists; but when it was destroyed, the condition of its proprietorship cessed with its existence. So in all cases like it. It is the inevitable and essential condition of the existence of the wicked, that they will be miserable—being cast out into outer darkness, and having no hope of redemption, and of course there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.—But that suffering which is a circumstance or condition of their being, necessarily ceases with the cessation of that existence or extinction of being, just as the branches of a tree though bound ever so firmly with iron bands, necessarily fall and decay with the destruction of the tree itself. Now the advocates of the eternal conscious misery of the wicked, fail signally on this point, that all the arguments they can bring have reference to the perpetuity of their condition, and never to the perpetuity of their life. Whereas the promise of immortality to the saints attaches to the life itself. Now let the scripture be understood, not only to be deficient of any proof that the wicked are immortal; but on the contrary, to assert their end to be death in most positive and unequivocal terms—and those terms oft reiterated, and expressed in every variety of form—then all the arguments that can be brought to prove misery to be their essential condition, fall powerless, and are just as nugatory as to prove the branches of a tree are bound fast to the trunk in order to shew its immortality. No matter how many iron bands enclose the limbs, the tree itself must die, and therefore has no immortality. So in regard to the sinner; the permanence of his existence must be inherent in the life itself, or the proof amounts to nothing; because counter proof annuls it, and shows the sinner must die.

If the Lord has given us a perfect revelation of his plan of redemption, then we may expect that the destiny of the wicked is as clearly revealed as that of the righteous. If the wicked are really to be destroyed, we may expect the agency to be employed in their destruction will be made known. What is the fact? Is any particular instrumentality spoken of, that will accomplish the destruction of an unbelieving world? Deut. 32: 22. "For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." Here the locality of that burning hell, that is to consume the enemies of God, is distinctly marked on the earth, and its depth reaches to "the foundations of the mountains." What authority has man to transfer the location to some other distant but unknown region? What an avalanche of error—a flood of delusion, has been brought into the world by changing the locality of the heaven of the righteous, and the hell of the wicked! The scripture says, "the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the ungodly and the sinner." But following the vagaries of the heathen, men talk of a heaven "beyond the bounds of time and space," and a hell no one knows where, consisting of a guilty conscience. "O," says one, "what infidelity, when the scripture says 'fire and brimstone,' for men to say a guilty conscience." Ps. 37: 20. "But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." From this v. we learn that the enemies will consume, into smoke shall they consume away, or in other words be destroyed by the instrumentality of fire. Isa. 1: 28–31. "And the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed. And the strong shall be as tow, and the maker of it as a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them."—Here we learn that when the transgressors are consumed they shall burn together, and none shall quench them. 26: 11, "The fire of thine enemies shall devour them." 66: 15, 16. "For behold the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Here we find that "fire," and "flames of fire," leave the wicked "slain." Dan. 7: 9–11. Obadiah 16, 18. Here we learn that the wicked "shall be as though they had not been," which could not be true if they still existed; and the result of the fire when the enemies represented by Esau are stubble, is that there shall not be any remaining. Mal. 4: 1, 3. Here the same idea is expressed in the strongest terms conceivable. It may be said this is not final, but we shall find this is the great deluge of wrath that is to "devour the adversaries." Matt. 3: 12; 5: 22; 25: 41. In this last we find the Devil and his angels are to be involved in the same destruction. 2. Thess. 1: 7–9, Heb. 10: 27, 2. Pet. 2: 4. In this last we perceive the wicked angels are to be reserved to the judgment, as is represented in Matt. 25: 41; and in 2. Pet. 2: 6, we find the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah are an ensample of the final destruction. From v. 9 we learn the ungodly are reserved to the judgment scene in the same manner as the angels that sinned, and from ch. 3: 6, 7, we learn the heavens and earth are also reserved to the same judgment scene of fire prepared for the Devil and his angels. We also learn that the perdition of ungodly men takes place, i. e., their death or destruction is effected by the same agency of fire that burns the earth, or rather dissolves all the elements by fervent heat, and further that their perdition, or death, is accomplished in a given time called the day of judgment; consequently it is not a death that never dies. Next comes the renovation of all things, and the saints' inheritance. How perfectly this coincides with Matt. 13: 42, 43, as also with Rev. chs. 20 and 21. Rev. 20: 9. "Fire came down from heaven and devoured them," see 14 and 15 vs. We perceive that before the descent of the New Jerusalem, and the opening splendors of everlasting day in the renewed heavens and earth, before the saints inheritance is presented to the eye clad in immortal beauty, arrayed in Eden loveliness, resplendent with the glory of God and the Lamb, the earth is consumed with her increase, the chaff is burned up with unquenchable fire—(by the way, the Greek word rendered 'unquenchable' is the same as used by the early christian Fathers in speaking of burning the martyrs,) the fire of God's enemies has devoured them—the wicked into smoke have consumed away—the stubble is burned up root and branch and become ashes —the tares have been burned in a furnace of fire, &c., &c. Then the righteous "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." But to make assurance doubly sure, we are told 2. Pet. 2: 6, and Jude 7, that as the cities of the plain were destroyed by fire so shall the wicked, i. e., according to that example, be ultimately destroyed.—Now as the fire of hell mentioned in Lev. [illegible] devours the earth with her increase, so the cities of the plain were devoured, together with the productions of the earth, and all their inhabitants; so also, we are assured, will the wicked be devoured by the final conflagration that will dissolve or melt the earth: and when the description of the judgment scene is given in Rev. we find "Fire came down from heaven, and devoured them," and a lake of fire spreads over the earth which consumes the earth with her increase.

But I cannot longer dwell on the dark picture. My mind instinctively turns to the glory that shall follow, and a bursting splendour radiates from the promised land that fills my soul as I write. It shines with such bright and thrilling radiance, I can but praise the Lord with all my heart, I see so clearly the simplicity, and consistency, and beauty of the divine economy. O how the fog clears away, and those dark, lowering, frowning clouds of gloom, that once encircled the throne of the Eternal to my misguided imagination, vanish and give place to a radiant and ineffable glory. Thank God for His marvellous and astonishing light; and for the glorious doctrines of the word when divested of the mysticism and vagaries of human tradition.

P. S. In respect to the Parable of the rich man and Lazarus we would say, that inasmuch as that is admitted by learned Commentators to be a Parable, it cannot be adduced as evidence to go against positive declarations of the word; for it is a given principle in the interpretation of scripture, that figurative or symbolic language must bend to the literal, and not the literal to the figurative or symbolic.—An exposition of this Parable we published in No. 4 of the Crisis, to which we refer the reader.

Notice.

I am requested by the Treasurer of this Office to state that our funds are so nearly exhausted, that it is advisable to suspend the publication of the paper for one week; and at the same time having been requested by one of the Committee of publication to attend the Winsted camp meeting in order to make a statement in regard to the financial concerns of the Office, it will be convenient for me to suspend my labours for the week. I know there are many that depend much on the weelky receipt of our humble fly-sheet, and I would willingly sacrifice my life, if need be, in their behalf; but if pecuniary means are wanting, we shall be under necessity to wait for the reception of the same. That our readers may have some idea of our expenses I will just name one or two items. We send out weekly 8,000 papers. Now the expense of the material of paper alone, at half a cent per sheet, which is below the actual cost, would amount to $40, and the printer's bill is almost as much more. We have also many other heavy bills to pay, making the whole expenditure up to about $120 per week. Many of our subscribers have given liberally for the support of the Crisis; but a large proportion have not as yet remitted any funds. If Brn. feel the necessity of continuing the paper, let each send in what will please—not us, but the Lord. Father thy will be done. Thank God, He will provide so long as it is for His glory to continue the paper; and when it is not, let it sink.

☞ Brn. at Concord are making preparations to publish a new Hymn Book, and I am requested by Bro. Cummings to give publicity to the following communication and reply:

Bro. Merriam:—Bro. Hart had about made up his mind to publish a new Hymn Book before I got home; he would like still to do it; are there any objections in Lowell?

I have no wish about it one way or the other. As ever your Brother,

J. CUMMINGS.

LOWELL, Aug. 14, 1854.

Dear Bro. Hart:—I received a note last week from Bro. Cummings stating that you had designed to publish another Hymn Book, and enquiring whether the Brn. in Lowell have any objection to it.

Having consulted all those who are connected with the Office of the Crisis to whom I could have any access in Lowell and elsewhere, I find there is but one feeling on the subject, and that is a perfect acquiescence in that course which you may deem most conducive to the glory of God, and the welfare of the Church.

Yours, in the bonds of peace,

J. MERRIAM.

CORRECTION. In the article entitled "Definite Time," No. 31 of the Crisis, it is mentioned, Zechariah and Malachi ceased prophesying about B. C. 397. The prophet Zechariah should not have been named in that connection.

Signs of the Times.

Bro. Merriam:—I have thought the following extract from a letter written by a correspondent of the Christian Era, in reference to the late Tent meeting in Salem, might illustrate, in a striking manner, the signs of the times in regard to smiting fellow-servants, and the fulfilment of the Parable. Yours in the blessed hope,

M. A. P.

Lowell, Aug. 23d, '54.

"A camp meeting has just been held in Salem. The day for these meetings is past, and it is time they were discontinued. In earlier times, when the churches were few, and the country sparsely settled, they could be employed to advantage, and now, in our Western wilds, are profitable. But where we have so many churches, and so many facilities for meeting together, that the promiscuous gathering of young men and young women out in tent meetings, is an evil rather than a blessing. The camp meeting here was held by the believers in the personal appearing of Christ this year. The Adventists are divided into two classes; one class believe Christ is near, but set no time; the other class believe he will come this year without fail. The former class are forming churches and associations, and differ but little from our evangelical churches. The latter class are wild, fanatical, and have adopted the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked, and some of the most blasphemous doctrines which have ever been promulgated among men. The camp meeting was a wild, boisterous affair, causing the Sabbath to be violated, and the laws of God abused.

The camp meeting was followed by a conference by the other side or party—At this conference Elder Himes was present, and we went in to hear him preach.—He gave a long, somewhat dull, but good Gospel discourse upon the nature and consequences of Noah's faith. Near the close he was quite severe upon the "fanatics," as he terms those who set the time, and drew them up before the audience as disturbers of the peace, and as irresponsible and unworthy men. He looked forward to a time when those who were being deceived by these fanatics, would appear at the bar of God to plead against them. As he was so eloquent on this point, we could but go back ten years to the time when Mr Himes himself was fixing God's time, and denouncing all who did not believe with him. We thought his own past history should lead him to have mercy on those who are now doing the very thing which he did in 1843."

Later from Europe.

Evacuation of Moldavia by Russia.—Austrian Advance Countermanded.—Landing of French and English Troops on the Aland Islands.

By the Asia at New York yesterday, we have three days later advices from Europe, one of the most important budgets of news received for many months. The market news is uninteresting. The cholera was increasing at Liverpool. Russia is apparently retracing her aggressive steps. The anticipation of the union of Austria and Prussia with the allies of Turkey is strengthened. A foothold has been obtained in the Baltic; and thus far all looks well for Turkey.

Government had chartered ships to convey arms and stores for defence, to Halifax, St. John, N. B., Quebec, Montreal, West India Islands, &c.

Gortschakoff, the Russian Envoy at Vienna, announces formally that Moldavia as well as Wallachia will be immediately evacuated, consequently the advance of the Austrians is countermanded, but Austria has subsequently signed an engagement with France and England to insist on guarantees of future peace from Russia and not be satisfied with the status quo.

The Russians continue to retreat, and the Turks to advance, without fighting. Active preparations continue to be made for the invasion of the Crimea, but the expedition had not then sailed.

Nothing further from the Baltic beyond the report of the bombardment and capture of Bomarsund. Two convents and some buildings were bombarded in the White Sea.

Madrid was pretty quiet. The people forcibly prevented Queen Christina from leaving Spain, and demanded her trial by the Cortes, which the Ministry have agreed to.

Latest.—3000 French landed on the Isthmus of Perekof, Crimea, and 3000 on the island of Aland.

Dresden, Aug. 10.—Prince John, brother of the late king, issued a proclamation countersigned by Ministers, announcing his accession.

The Paris Moniteur of the 11th, publishes the refusal of the French government to grant an armistice, but that peace may be had on the following terms:—The abolition of the Russian protectorate over Wallachia, Servia and Moldavia. 2d, The freedom of the mouth of the Danube. 3d, A revision of the treaty with reference to the limits of Russia in the Black Sea. 4th, No Power to have protectorates over Turkish subjects.

From Dantzig, 11th, it is telegraphed that 3000 French soldiers and 600 English landed at three points on the island of Aland, with little interruption and no loss, on the preceding Tuesday. The forts were to be attacked next day.

80,000 Turks are now stated to be in Wallachia. The course of the Danube from Orsova to Galatz is now in possession of the Turks.

Austria and Prussia expected soon to propose to the German Diet that the Federal contingency be placed on a war footing. The Prussian army had not yet been mobilised.

Cholera had broken out virulently at Varna. Typhus also had appeared.

A small English expedition, at the Sulina mouth of the Danube, had destroyed the Russian stockades and had burned Sulina to the ground.

The result of Gen. Baraguay d'Hillier's interview with the King of Sweden was an order that the Swedish fleet at Carlscrova shall remain on a war footing.

CHOLERA AT MAURITIUS. The Island of Mauritius, at last account, was suffering severely from cholera. Port Louis had been almost desolated by the scourge. [Boston Traveller.

FROM BARBADOES. We learn that the Cholera was continuing its ravages in the interior, but it has somewhat abated at Bridgetown.

Advices from Grenada state that cholera has made its appearance and was creating great alarm. [Boston Bee.

Foreign Intelligence.

A correspondent of the New York Herald states that in addition to the intestine troubles from which Central America is now suffering, there is a famine in the land, the locusts having devastated the entire country. We hardly know which calamity is the worst.

There was an Orange and Catholic riot at Airdie race course, in Scotland, on the 4th of July, in which two men were killed and a dozen seriously wounded. The police sent to Glasgow for a detachment of military. [Bos. Mail.

THE POPE—HIS TEMPORAL SOVEREIGNTY.—Letters from Rome show that Italy is in a troubled state, and that Revolution, like the interior fires of Vesuvius, is ready to burst forth, spreading destruction on every hand. In England, and in America, we find the same bitter feeling against the temporal sovereignty of the Pope. [Boston Bee.

Is there any hating of the harlot expressed in this?

Domestic Intelligence.

We cut the following from the Boston Traveller:

THE DROUGHT. Our correspondents at Hanover, N. H., and at Newburyport, in their letters, which we puplish to-day, speak of the disastrous effects of the excessive drought in those sections of the country. The thirst has now become so general that we have similar reports from almost every portion of our wide-spread land. The continued dryness has produced a great and melancholy change in the aspect of vegetation in our immediate vicinity within the last week. Wells are failing; trees, and plants, and vegetation of every description are withering under the influence of the parching thirst; and fruit is checked in its growth and ripening immaturely or decaying upon the trees. This is especially the case with peaches, which from present appearances will not reach half the usual size.

The mails bring us dismal accounts from other parts of the country. In the vicinity of Rochester, it is said, no rain has fallen for 60 days, and the drought is unprecedented in severity. The Rochester American says:

"Peaches, apples and pears are unusually small, and the yield of fruit in Western New York will be considerably less than was expected a few weeks ago. Should the drought continue through August and September, (the latter is usually a dry month,) the injury will be incalculable."

From New York State generally the accounts are the same. The Poughkeepsie Eagle says:

"This place, and this section of country, is suffering dreadfully at present from the effect of one of the most protracted and serious droughts ever known in this latitude. We may say that literally the heavens over our heads are as brass, and the vegetation beneath our feet burned up. What makes things worse, the heat is intense and almost consuming, drying up the pastures. Unless a rain comes within a very few days the effect must be fatal to the corn and potato crop."

The Detroit Democrat remarks as follows:

"The weather which through the month of July was intensely hot and dry, relieved only by some few showers in the latter part of the month, has been through this month thus far, still dryer than last. The earth is now so dry, that were it not for the heavy dews which fall nightly, vegetation would die. The drought will seriously affect the corn, oats, potatoes and buckwheat crops."

The St. Lawrence Republican, of last week, says:

"From the long absence of rain, the fields and woods have become exceedingly dry and parched, causing great damage and constant danger from fires, and causing those crops which have not come to maturity to droop and shrivel. Unless we have rain soon the Fall feed will be ruined, and the prices of butter and cheese, now well up, will move several notches in the ascending scale."

The Kinderhook Rough Notes says:

"On all sides we have melancholy evidence of the blighting effects of the unprecedented drought devastation. Vegetation is brought to a stand still, the earth is baked, trees are withering and dying, cattle can hardly satisfy their cravings, corn, buckwheat and potato crops are nearly annihilated."

The damage from fires in the woods is, of course, greatly increased by the extreme dryness of the weather, and already we hear of extensive devastation from this source. In some places, fields as well as forests have been swept by devouring fire. As was remarked yesterday, fires in the forests are raging in almost every direction in New Hampshire; and we hear the same story from Maine. A telegraphic despatch from Bangor says: "Fires are raging to a terrible extent in every section of this County.—The damage to the woodland and crops will be enormous. Buildings have been burned in Kenduskeag, Corinth, and other towns. In many places the entire population are engaged in fighting the fire. In Garland it is said that a whole family who live some distance from any other house, are entirely surrounded by the flames, having no means of escape. Whether they are dead or alive is not known."

The Albany Journal of Tuesday evening, speaking of the fires in the woods around that city, says:

"The fires nearest the city, and whose smoky influence is most perceptible, is in the Pine Plains, west of us, and between the Schenectady Turnpike and Railroad. We are not advised of its extent nor whether any great damage has been done by it. But it cannot travel far without doing essential mischief.

The most extensive fire within the circumference of a hundred miles, is raging in the woods on the Green Mountains, in the neighborhood of Arlington and Sunderland. The fire commenced five or six days ago, but it did not acquire its present fury until Saturday night. Since that time it has been advancing and spreading with most fearful rapidity—having travelled, in a direct line, over six miles! The spectacle which it presented last night to those who saw it from the valleys, was grand beyond description. Looking from the base of the hills, it seemed as if the very heavens were on fire; and as the flames leaped from tree to tree, flashing upward and upward, as they found new material to feed upon, nothing could appear more terrifyingly magnificent. The eye could at a single glance take in more than two miles of lurid flame."

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES. It seems almost as if the world was to be burned up, with fires in our cities and fires in the woods. The mails this morning bring to our table accounts from divers places of disastrous fires of recent occurrence.

In Brooklyn, N. Y., a fire broke out in a large chemical factory in 19th street, Gowanus, near 3d avenue, on Wednesday A. M. Oils, varnishes, paints, &c., were manufactured in it, and there were 70 or 80 barrels of varnish in the buildings, which, with the oils, &c., burned with great fury, destroying the factory and all its machinery and contents.

From thence it extended to neighboring buildings, several of which were burned, partially or entirely, involving a total loss of some $30,000.

Another fire occurred, on the same day, in Brooklyn, in the lumber yard of Allen & Gifford, Hamilton Avenue, destroying all the wood in the yard, and extending to neighboring store-houses and also to a barque lying at the wharf back of the yard. Loss estimated at $30,000.

In Newark, N. J., a very destructive fire broke out on Wednesday morning, early, at 127 Railroad Avenue, in J. C. Young & Co.'s [illegible] manufactory, and thence extended, until twelve factories and other buildings were destroyed, involving an estimated loss of $50,000.

In New York City there were two pretty serious fires on Wednesday also: one in the brewery and rectifying establishment of David Stevenson, corner of 39th st. and 10th avenue, which destroyed the premises and a large stock of liquors; and another in Clinton street, near Delancey, of an oil factory, owned by C. V. De Forest, which was totally destroyed. The loss by the two fires is estimated at about $16,000.

A severe fire occurred at Albany on Saturday evening, in a trunk and packing-box factory.—The flames were spread by a high wind to neighboring buildings, and before they could be checked, eight buildings were either entirely destroyed or badly damaged, and some twenty families were rendered homeless. Loss from 5 to $10,000.

The following is from the Traveller of the 26th inst.:

THE DROUGHT! THE DROUGHT!! For weeks we have been hearing from particular localities, of drought; but now the cry is becoming well nigh universal. Not a newspaper can be opened from the North, or East, South or West, without encountering details respecting the long-continued and dreadful drought. And some of these are melancholy in the extreme. It seems to have been first experienced in North Western New York and Northern Vermont and New Hampshire. In those sections of country there been no rain of any consequence since the early part of June. South and East and West of the Canada line, the drought did not make its appearance so soon, but it has gradually been creeping over the whole land, until now the earth every where is becoming like ashes; vegetation is drying up; in many places it has already perished; corn and potatoes are failing in the best localities, and in many places they will prove nearly a total failure; fruit even is drying up upon the trees and falling off, or becoming prematurely ripe; pastures are failing, or are already brown and grassless, so that farmers are actually foddering their cattle in August; the streams all over the country are low, in many places the beds of large rivers being nearly bare, so that one can almost go dryshod across them—it is thus with the Connecticut, no higher up than Hanover; wells and brooks, and springs are giving out, so that farmers are obliged to drive their cattle considerable distances for water, and to draw it in casks to their own doors for family use.

Then, to add to this fearful state of things careless persons have set the woods on fire, and in every direction fires are raging with irresistable violence, consuming, not only valuable wood and timber, but other property of value, and endangering even life itself; and on the lines of some of the railroads, interrupting the passage of the trains. Such, for substance, is the story brought from all quarters—from the St Lawrence and the Lakes to Alabama; and from Maine to the Mississipi river. But our readers may like to know some of the details which now lie before us:

VERMONT. The Albany Journal of the 24th reports a very destructive fire, in the vicinity of Swanton, near Lake Champlain and the Canada line. It had run along either side of the Vermont Central track, a distance of more than two miles. Hundreds of trees had burned down, falling across the track, not only obstructing the movement of the cars, but burning the cross ties and entirely destroying the track. Passengers had to be carried eight or ten miles around the fire.

NEW YORK. The Orleans (N. Y.) Republican of Aug. 23d says, that since the first of June there has not been rain enough in that vicinity to wet the earth to the depth of an inch; and that fires were raging in every direction, at Northrup's, Canton Village, Lisbon, and all along the line of the Ogdensburgh Railroad.

A fire was raging at the Catskill mountains, at last accounts, which threatened the Observatory and Boarding House near the Falls.

The woods were on fire in two or three places between Albany and Schnectady, on the 24th.

PENNSYLVANIA. The Pittsburg (Pa.) Chronicle of Aug. 23d, says:

"The drought is working injuriously on all interests—among them the paper makers. Our paper presents an uncouth appearance to-day on account of its size and shape. But in these times we are glad to get anything, as the water mills are all stopped and those by steam cannot fill the orders."

Another paper says:

"In Pennsylvania the farmers cannot procure sufficient water upon their farms for their cattle, and often are obliged to drive them great distances to obtain a supply. The Shenango and Neshanock rivers are so nearly dried up that fish are gathered into close quarters in the puddles."

"Crops in this section, says the Atlanta (Ga. Intelligencer, are literally burned up. Four weeks ago a finer prospect for a corn crop was, perhaps, never seen; now we have no hope of raising even half a crop."

☞ We cut the following from the New York Tribune:

THE DROUTH IN THE SEVERAL STATES. We continue to receive accounts from all parts of the country of the prevalence of the most severe drouth. In sections of Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Vermont, and New Hampshire, it is destructive to all growing crops, and has exhausted feed and water for cattle to such a degree that they have to be driven outside of the drouth parched region for subsistence.

ILLINOIS. We learn from one of the employees of The Tribune Office who has just returned from Iowa by way of St. Louis and Central Illinois, Chicago and Detroit, that the appearance of things on the Illinois prairies is desolate. Cattle can procure feed, but are often troubled to find water. Corn fields are in the sere and yellow leaf of Autumn, with the grains on the cob dry and shriveled, and in many fields the crop is worthless. The greatest alarm is felt among the pork-raisers. Hogs that will easily make 200 or 300 lbs. fatted are freely offered for $1,50. Fruit is withered upon the trees, and garden vegetables are turned to dust. Our informant says that he found on his return through Michigan that no rain had fallen while he was gone, and the drouth there began to be felt severely, where all looked green and flourishing on his outward trip. The corn crop of Indiana and Illinois is certainly very much cut short, and that will seriously affect other places, and not the least, the beef market of this City.

INDIANA. On the whole of the Wabash below Lafayette, on both White Rivers, and generally through all the best corn region of the State the drouth is destructive. Putnam, Parke, Green, Bartholomew and several other central counties are spoken of as not likely to make half crops of corn.

In PENNSYLVANIA, particularly in Mercer and Lawrence counties, the drouth seems to have come upon the farmers with distressing force. In some places, we are told by a friend just from there, water cannot be had upon farms or even in the neighborhood for the cattle, and they often have to be driven inconvenient distances for a supply.

In KENTUCKY, in the vicinity of Lexington, we learn from gentlemen recently from there, that the corn crop is suffering beyond measure, and must fail to a great extent, whether rain comes or not; and it will seriously affect the fatting of beef and pork.

TENNESSEE. At Memphis there is great suffering for want of good water to drink. Cisterns are dry and wells nearly so. Many families have no water, except as it is hauled in casks. The effects of such a drouth are very annoying as well as destructive to crops.

In MARYLAND the drouth is equally distressing in several of the counties.

VIRGINIA, adjoining Maryland, is of course affected in about the same degree, and will not make a fair crop of corn and potatoes.

Cattle in the interior are suffering, and only here and there will the corn be worth anything. The drouth has been very destructive.

In OHIO, the Lake counties suffer most—the soil being very clayey and more easily affected by drouth than sandy or stoney soil. In Scioto County the grass-hoppers have been very destructive.

In NEW YORK the drouth seems to prevail the most severely in those counties affected last year and year before; that is Chatauque, Allegany, Jefferson, and St. Lawrence. In Tompkins and Yates counties also, it has been very severe. In Yates, it prevailed early in the season, destroying spring crops, and we are sorry to see that buckwheat which was largely sown as a substitute is likely to be measurably cut off. Stock has been or must be mostly sold off before winter. In Tompkins County the drouth is at the worst now; corn is dying, and potatoes without tubers, and pastures all drying up, and a general failure of fall crops anticipated. Wyoming County is also sending off cattle as fast as possible, before they starve. There is great complaint of drouth among the milkmen of Orange County. It seems difficult—owing to the scarcity of water—to keep up their regular supply of milk. The roads are dusty, almost beyond precedent. The same complaint prevails in the Genessee Valley generally, though not as severe as in the counties named.

In NEW HAMPSHIRE, it is said that the drouth affects the springs and streams so that the locomotives on some of the railroads find it difficult to get water, and the mills upon the Merrimac are dependant upon the Lake Winnipisiogee reservoir for the supply of power. The fall feed will be almost entirely cut off and early feeding have to be resorted to. The potatoe crop will be almost an entire failure. At Concord there was a little rain last Sunday.

In the vicinity of Lawrence, Mass., the corn is drying up and small vegetables already dried. No moisture can be found in some fields within a foot of the surface.

MAINE. A letter from Oldtown, Me., of the 11th inst., states that the drouth was felt severely, and that the fire was still running in the woods.

ALABAMA. The Huntsville Advocate of August 9, says: The hot and dry weather still continues. Its effects upon the crops are most disastrous. We have never seen or known a worse prospect for a crop of corn. The drouth has affected all of North Alabama and Middle Tennessee.

Tremendous crash in Broad st. Two Granite Blocks a mass of ruins. Several persons killed. Several Hundred Thousand Dollars Worth of Property Destroyed.

Two large stores, Nos 95 and 97 Broad street fell with a tremendous report, yesterday afternoon shortly after 4 o'clock.

The cause of the disaster was the giving away of the foundation of building No. 97, which was old, unperfect, and dangerous in the extreme.

Thousands immediately assembled in the streets, and the most intense excitement prevailed. The alarm bells were rung, and the fire department at once resorted to the scene of disaster, to render such aid as might be needed.

A young man 18 years of age, named Wm. Dwining, clerk in the store of Messrs Hunneman, Hazen & Co., was in the second story of the store at the time of the crash, and leaping from a window into an alley in the rear, was buried in the ruins, and in all probability was instantly killed, as nothing was seen or heard of him after the crash.

The names of two children who were also buried in the ruins, were David and Margaret Riley, cousins, aged 8 and 10 years. The boy was taken out dead, and conveyed to the residence of his parents, No 32 1-2 Oliver street.—The girl was taken out alive, and was conveyed to the Hospital apparently in a dying state.—[Boston Bee of Aug. 23.

FIRES IN THE WOODS. If there had been any truth in Professor Espy's theory of rain caused by fires, we should have had it a long time since; for you cannot go ten miles into the country any where, without finding a heavy smoke from fires in the woods. At Portland for two or three weeks, a large tract of the highlands in the vicinity has been on fire, and the city filled with smoke. Three engines have been kept out, to prevent it from approaching the dwelling houses adjacent. All the spare sleepers on the line of the Portland, Saco and Portsmouth Railroad have been burnt, and on the Atlantic and St. Lawrence Railroad several thousand cords of wood have been destroyed. [Newburyport Herald.

DESTRUCTIVE CONFLAGRATION. Cincinnati, Aug. 24.—A frightful fire is now raging at Cayuhoga Falls, Franklin, Northfield and parts of Summit and Portage counties, Ohio; the sod is burning even to the depth of 1 1-2 feet. As the flames are driven forward by the wind, trees, both dry and green, are ignited in an instant, and almost as quickly destroyed. Several barns in the vicinity, stored with hay and grain, have also been destroyed. Apprehensions are entertained for the safety of the town of Hudson. There has been no rain in this section since the 20th of June, and all vegetation has suffered greatly from the drought. Every attempt has been made to arrest the progress of the flames, but without success. The woods near Barnsville, for a mile in length, are on fire. [Boston Bee.

GREAT FIRE AT WALDOBORO'. A despatch dated Damariscotta, Me., Aug. 25th, says:—About one o'clock a fire broke out in the rear of the hotel at Waldoboro', and swept away the whole of the village from Tibbetts' large furniture store at the northward, and so far eastward as the Baptist Church (which was saved), including every store in the village, and every building south and west to the river, extending to Capt. H. Rubin's on the south side. George H. Kennedy's new ship, and Capt. James Cook's barge, both on the stocks, were destroyed, as also the timber for a new ship in Mr. J. Clark's yard. The Custom House, both banks, and the Post Office were destroyed. The loss cannot now be approximately ascertained, but it is thought it must exceed $250,000.

TROY, Aug. 25. DESTRUCTIVE FIRE—Loss $1,000,000! A fire broke out at 2 o'clock to-day, and spread with irresistible fury over a space equal to about eight blocks, consuming probably not less than two or three hundred houses, and consuming property which will amount to a million dollars. Owing to the dry state of everything, it was found almost impossible to check the fury of the flames.

In this district is embraced an exclusive lumber business, and lumber amounting to not less than $250,000 was destroyed. The freight depot, machine shop, and several car houses and cars, belonging to the Hudson River Railroad, and the very extensive establishment known as Bridge's Chair Factory, were also destroyed.

The Bell Foundry of Jones and Hitchcock, and several other manufacturing establishments were destroyed.

Our city has never before been visited by such a conflagration.—Bos. Trav.

MAN SHOT BY AN IRISHMAN. A man, whose name was not known to our informant, was shot at in Bellville, Newburyport, on Monday evening last, by an Irishman. The ball grazed one of the ears of the man. It was almost a providential escape.—Boston Bee.

IRISH ROW IN SALEM. The Salem Journal states that on Friday evening, a large number of Irish assembled near the depot. After having attended some three funerals, they were a little worse for liquor. One of their number struck an American, which, being returned, brought about a general melee between the Yankees and Irish. At one time, five Irishmen lay on the ground. Millets, stones, and missiles of all descriptions were used. The police arriving on the ground, seized a number of the ringleaders—all Irish—and conveyed them to the lock up. They are to have their trial this afternoon. Quite a number of gentlemen showed the Yankee grit, and entered into the ring in the Yankee Gardner style, which made the heads of the rioters ache again.—Boston Bee.

The St. Louis Republican of the 18th inst. says, there has not been a night within the last week when the dagger has not drank the blood of its victim. The police office for several nights past has been the receptacle of bleeding men who have had the knife put to them. The dens of iniquity in the city—bad enough under ordinary circumstances—have recently been stirred up by the worst passions, and the streets every night are infested with bands of reckless men in pursuit of difficulties, armed to the teeth and eager for an affray.

☞ By request of the friends, in company with Bro. Adrian, I will endeavor to attend a meeting at Meredith Neck, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, Sept. 21, and continuing as the Lord may direct. If the Lord will, I will preach
At West Hill 1st Sabbath in Sept.
At the Osgood S. House, in Gilmanton, Wednesday eve., Sept. 6th.
At Gilford Village, Sabbath, Sept. 10, where Eld. Buzzell may appoint.
At West Deerfield, Sabbath, Sept. 17, where Bro. A. P. Moulton may appoint.

O. G. SMITH.

If the Lord will, I will preach at the following places:
At Birch Schoolhouse, Tuesday, Sept. 5.
Swiftwater, N. H., Thursday, Sept. 7.
Sugar Hill, Friday, Sept. 8.
Bethlehem, Saturday and Sunday, 9 and 10.
Whitefield, Monday, 11th.
Lancaster, Tuesday, 12th—longer if proper.

Brethren will see to giving out these appointments. Brethren living north who wish for my labors, will please write me at Lancaster, N. H., in season.

The above weekly meetings will be at 7 P. M.

We give the above without signature, as we received it. Suppose the name omitted through mistake.

WATERBOROUGH CENTRE, Me., August 24th, 1854.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

It is requested that some ministering Bro. capable of giving the truths relative to the speedy coming of the Lord, would visit the Brn. at Waterborough, Ossipee Hill, and hold a Conference or Grove Meeting with us; for we are desirous that all in these regions may have an opportunity to hear the midnight cry and be prepared for the coming of the bridegroom.

Will the watchmen enquire of the master, and give us seasonable notice in the Crisis? The Advent brethren here are but few, but they are willing to help the servant, if the Lord has one to help us.

In behalf of the brethren,
E. H. HOBBS.

ELDER CHARLES P. DOW will preach
In Clarenceville, C. E., Sunday, Sept. 3d.

B. P. MANNING.

Bro. J. Weston will preach in Boston, Sunday, September 10.

G. T. ADAMS.

NOTICE.

If the Lord permit, we will preach at Casco, Sunday, Sept. 10.

Also commence a meeting at Madison Centre, Friday, Sept. 15, and continue over the following Sabbath.

J. PARTRIDGE,
R. R. YORK.

NOTICE.

If time continues, there will be a meeting at Bristol, Me., commencing Thursday, Sept. 21, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continuing over the following Sabbath. Brethren J. Partridge and R. R. York will attend with me.

[illegible]

The Lord willing, I will meet with the Brethren at [illegible] Champlain, N. Y., Sept. 8th, and over the Sabbath.

Mooers, Sept. 13th, and over the Sabbath. Will the brethren provide a grove if convenient?

Will the Advent brethren give me a hearing? I pledge myself to answer all objections against the truths I advocate.

ISAAC ADRIAN.

TENT MEETING.

A Tent Meeting will be holden at Alton Corner, N. H., commencing Wednesday, Sept. 6, and continuing over the Sabbath. Brethren Couch and Berick will be present, if the Lord will, to preach the word. The large new Tent will be there, and our Brethren and Sisters, in this vicinity, will remember this is the last meeting of the kind to be holden in our midst. Come, one and all, to the rescue. A moment and all is done. All that can will bring tents and provision with them; those who cannot, will be provided for on the ground.

E. G. COLBY.

CAMP MEETING IN SOUTH HAWLEY, MASS. The Camp Meeting appointed to be held in West Hawley will be held in South Hawley, near the tavern formerly kept by Noah Jay, commencing Sept. 11, and continuing one week.—The location will be in a beautiful Grove, with every convenience for such a meeting. The ground and many other necessary accommodations are freely offered by the owner of the land. Board and horse keeping on reasonable terms. Brethren can find conveyance by stage running from Greenfield to Adams on Monday, back Tuesday, and so continuing through the week. Come, Brn., one and all, rich and poor, far and near, bring your tents and provisions as far as consistent. Through the blessing of God we expect one of the best meetings ever held.—The Lord's watchmen are requested to remember the meeting and come as the Lord may direct.

J. J. COOK,
D. THAYER,
J. E. HEALE, } Committee.

The Lord willing, I will meet with the Brn. at Jones' Mills, Gilmanton, N. H., on Sunday, Sept. 3.
Danbury, N. H., on Thursday, Sept. 7, and remain over the Sabbath, in company with Br. Stephen Mooney, where Br. Knowlton may appoint.

D. M. LEAVITT.

TENT MEETING

A Tent Meeting will be holden in Derry, N. H., near the Depot, 10 miles from Manchester, 26 from Concord, & 15 from Lawrence, commencing Wednesday, Sept 6th. Bro. J. Hemenway will be there with his big tent—other ministering brethren are invited to attend. Brethren, one and all, come to this meeting, prepared to do good and get good. Bring your tents and provisions with you, and camp on the ground.—For those that cannot do so, provisions will in some way be made. Dear Brethren and Sisters, the Lord is coming this year. Come and hear the evidences from the word of God, and be prepared for that great event looked for by the saints of every age.

S. O. WELCH.

CAMP MEETING IN WINSTED. Providence permitting, it is thought best to have one more great gathering of the Savior's friends at Winsted, Ct., on the old ground commencing Monday, Aug. 28, and continuing one week. Brethren and Sisters, if time continue, come from far and near to this feast of tabernacles, and let us make the tented grove vocal with praise once more to the King of kings before we meet to sing the grand hallelujah chorus in the everlasting kingdom.

Brethren Burnham, Couch and Berick are expected to be present to preach the word.

Let all who can, bring their tents and bedding. Board for all who wish may be had on the Camp ground, and all the profits, if any, will be appropriated to bear the expenses of the meeting, and feed the poor. Good accommodations for horses on reasonable terms, with a cheap conveyance to the Encampment from the cars, stages and hotels of Winsted.

Those coming from Boston, Worcester, Springfield and other places on the East side of the Conn. river, will stop at Hartford and take the cars for Winsted at 10 o'clock, A. M., or at 4 o'clock, P. M. Fare, $1,25.

Those from New York, Bridgeport, New Haven and vicinity, will take the cars on the Naugatuck Railroad for Winsted at Bridgeport, or the Stratford Junction. The Fare to and from the meeting is reduced to one dollar each way.

Those coming from the West in the Housatonic valley will stop at North Canaan, and take the stage for Winsted. Fare on the stage reduced to 75 cents.

SAMUEL G. MATHEWSON,
MILES GRANT, } Committee.

TENT MEETING.

The Lord willing, there will be a Tent Meeting in Haverill, Mass., on the lot known as the Circus lot, corner of Winter and Locust sts., one-fourth of a mile from the Depot on the Boston and Maine Railroad, commencing Wednesday morning, Aug. 30, and continuing over the Sabbath. We hope the brethren will come from the adjoining towns, and come as early as possible. Those who can would do well to bring bedding with them, for it is expected that all will have to lodge on the ground. Provision for board on the ground. Bro. Hemmenway and other preaching brethren are expected to attend. In behalf of the Brn.,

JOHN W. SANDERSON.

If time continues, I will commence a Grove Meeting at Waterford, Me., Wednesday, Aug. 30th, and continue over the Sabbath.

L. L. HOWARD.

By help from the Lord, we will go to Buffalo, N. Y., with the Tents, and commence a Meeting, Wednesday, Aug. 30th, and remain over the Sabbath. Several preaching brn. from the East will attend.

J. CUMMINGS.

The Lord willing, I will preach at Salem, Mass., the first Sunday in September.

J. WESTON.

NOTICE.

There will be a meeting at the Clark Meeting-house in Barnsted, N. H., to commence Thursday, August 31, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn. J. Hemenway and J. G. Smith are expected.

B. S. [illegible]

I would say to the brethren at Chester Factories, if the Lord will, I will meet with them soon after the Camp Meeting at Winsted.

G. L. TEPLE.

CAMP MEETING IN BRISTOL, R. I.

There will be a Camp Meeting in Bristol, R. I., on Bristol Common, commencing September 13th, and continuing over the Sabbath. Bro. J. Cummings will be in attendance with his tents. Brethren I. Adrian and S. S. Brewer are expected to be with him. Come, Brethren and Sisters, come up to this feast of tabernacles. Come in the name of the lord of hosts. Let all that can bring tents and bedding. There will be provisions made for board and lodging on the ground.

JAMES H. [illegible]

Conference.

The Lord willing, there will be a Conference of the Lord's people at East Andover, Christian meeting-house, to commence on Friday, Sept. 15, at one o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. An earnest invitation is given to Zion's Watchmen to be at the meeting. Preaching Brethren will call on Brn. W. [illegible], A. Weare, or W. Emery.

In behalf of the Brn.,

THOMAS D. [illegible]

A CALL.

Brethren Couch and Berick are [illegible] requested to inform the Brethren of [illegible] N. H., when they will be at that place to give a course of lectures. There is a desire to hear the evidence concerning the glorious Advent of our soon coming King. We ardently desire them to be here as early in September as possible, before the busy season of harvest, that there may be a favorable opportunity for a general hearing on this all important subject. Please answer the call immediately through the Crisis.

In behalf of the Brethren,
J. M. [illegible]
Rochester, Aug. 15, 1854.

☞ It is requested that Bro. Edwin Burnham or some other ministering brother capable of presenting the argument on definite time in a clear manner, would visit Lee, N. H. Should any one comply with the request he will please give notice through the Crisis.

BENJ. DURGIN.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

Will Brn Berrick and Couch come into this region and hold one Conference soon? We are exceedingly anxious to have them come. I believe they will have a good hearing. "Come over and help us." If they cannot come, will not Bro. I. Adrian, or some other able Watchman come and sound the alarm in this section once more? There is not a Watchman in all this region to tell the people when the Lord is coming.

In behalf of the Brn.,
C. L. PERCIVAL.

The place for a meeting will be the old Meeting house in Hatley, C. E.

☞ Brn. in Lowell who believe in the coming of the Lord in '54, hold meetings every Sabbath, also on Wednesday and Saturday Evenings, at Merrimack Hall. Preachers from abroad will be obtained when convenient.

Business Items.

☞ We have received an order from some one in Union Co., Ohio—town indistinct, and name we can't find out. Will the Bro. write again? He ordered one of Bro. Berick's books and a Hymn Book—sent $1.00.

☞ Bro. B. H. Couch says in a letter which we received Aug. 14th, that he had previously sent us $1. Will you give us your dates? We think it was not received.

☞ Z. N. Palmer, please say where we shall direct your paper.

☞ Notices and appointments must be written as they are expected to appear in the paper.

☞ When Hymn Books are ordered to be sent by mail we send 6 for one dollar and prepay the postage.

☞ We hope persons returning papers to have them discontinued, will be careful to give the P. O. address to which they are sent.

☞ The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3.00. "Bible vs. Tradition," can also be obtained of Bro. French.

☞ We have just published in tract form the exposition of Ex. 38 and 39, which was published in the Crisis. We will supply those who may order them. Price $2 per hundred.

☞ The Lithographic Charts and Pilgrim's Songster, published by Eld. J. Cummings, can be had of him at Concord, N. H., or by applying to J. French, of Lowell.

What think you my friends of the preaching of John?
Was it of from heaven, or was it of men?
We hear him declaring glad tidings of peace,
Proclaiming a Jubilee, a year of release.
The law and the prophets continued till John;
Our Saviour hath told us where gospel begun;
And since then God's kingdom is preach'd, saith the word,
And all men press in who hath faith in the Lord.

A new dispensation to them he declares,
And preaches repentance to Abraham's heirs;
The children of Abraham's natural seed
Found they had no right his baptism to plead.

But when he perceived repentance was theirs,
He then gave baptism to Abraham's heirs;
Those who had been sealed to covenant things,
We find him baptising, confessing their sins.

He tells them their Saviour is already here,
And while he's baptising, our Lord doth appear,
For to be baptized: John shrieks at the thing,
And owns he has need to receive it from him.

But when he informed it was his request,
He freely baptiz'd him as he did the rest;
And this institution was owned from above,
The Spirit of God was sent down like a dove.

And his sweet example is left on record,
Whoever steps in they will find a reward,
They'll find peace of conscience and joy in the same,
When they are baptized in Jesus' own name.

The Eunuch we find was in haste to receive,
His water baptism when he did believe;
He went on his way rejoicing in God,
While those that rebel must be tasting his rod.

The friends of Cornelius who heard Peter's word,
Believed and received the seal of the Lord;
The Holy Ghost fell, then their joys did arise,
And Peter commands that they should be baptiz'd.

St. Paul's great conversion he found in the way,
The light which shone round him exceeded the day;
Then he was three days, neither drank nor did eat,
Yet he was baptized before he took meat.

We read where three thousand believ'd in a day,
That they were baptized without a delay;
The house of the jailor believed in the night,
And they were baptised before it was light.

Forbear then to censure my being in haste,
Or show me an instance where it was the case,
That primitive Christians deferred the thing,
I answer my conscience to Jesus my King.

The Return of the Jews.

Concluded.

Now, if the promise to Abraham related to literal Canaan, then the promise of God utterly failed. But it did not relate to that; and Abraham never so understood it. In proof of this, see Heb. 11: 8–10: "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise; for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

The apostle goes on to say, verses 13 to 16: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth; for they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country. And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned. But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city."

The apostle continues to discourse, and enumerates "David, Samuel and all the prophets," who dwelt in the literal Canaan, and yet he tells us, verses 39–40, "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

If the promise related to the possession of literal Canaan, they did receive it; but Paul declares they did not receive the promise; which shows that the promise related to a different inheritance; even an heavenly, or, the new earth; for the meek shall inherit the earth."

Let us now examine the original promises as made to Isaac and Jacob. See Gen. xxvi: 3, 4: "Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and will bless thee; for unto thee, and unto thy seed, I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father; and I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." See, also, Gen. xxviii: 13, 14: "And, behold, the Lord stood above it, and said, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it and to thy seed; and thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

Now, let us inquire, who "thy seed" is, to whom these promises are made. See Gal. iii: 16: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ."—"Thy seed," then, is Christ. Did Christ ever possess a foot of old Canaan? No. He had "not where to lay his head;" so he testifies himself. The promise, then, was not fulfilled to Abraham, Isaac, nor our blessed Lord, and hence remains to be fulfilled.

Let us now see if we can determine to what the promises related, and who are the heirs of it. See Rom. iv: 13–16:— "For the promise that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith; for if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect; because the law worketh wrath; for where no law is, there is no transgression. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all."

Now we have found what the inheritance is—who the heirs are—and who the children are to whom the promises are made, not the literal descendants of Abraham, but all who are "of faith." The world belongs to Christ and his people; they have been persecuted and destroyed out of the earth; but our Lord is coming to glorify his saints, and to destroy his and their enemies, and take possession of the inheritance, after purifying it by fire, and renewing it in glory. But let us examine the subject still further, as to who are the heirs, and to whom the promises belong. See Gal. iii: 6–9: "Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness. Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham."

Now see the 15th to 19th verses same chapter: "Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator."

See also 26th to 29th verse, same chapter: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

If this does not settle the question, as to whom the promises belong, it seems to me impossible to settle any question.

Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, neither received nor looked for a temporal inheritance. They understood the promises in a higher sense. They will be "brought in," and all the true "seed" with them; but, it is into an eternal inheritance, in the new heavens and new earth.

When God brought Israel into literal Canaan, he directed all the wicked inhabitants to be destroyed out of it. So when he is about to bring his true Israel into the promised inheritance, and give them "the world" for their "everlasting possession," he will destroy all the wicked out of the earth. See Prov. ii: 22: "But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it."—See, also, Mal. iv: 1–3: "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." Look at Rev. xi: 15–18: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."

In view of the fact that the heirs of the promises are Abraham's children by faith, and not by natural descent, read the following Scriptures: Isaiah xxxiii: 15–17, 20–22. "He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil; he shall dwell on high; his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks; bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure. Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty; they shall behold the land that is very far off. Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities; thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby; for the Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king; he will save us." Isaiah 35; 3–6, 9, 10.—"Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not; behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing; for in the wilderness shall waters break out and streams in the desert. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there; and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Isaiah 55: 12, 13. "For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace; the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." Is. 60: 18–22. "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise. The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. His people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation; I the Lord will hasten it in his time."

See also, Ezekiel 34: 23–28. "And I will set up one Shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd. And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them; I the Lord have spoken it. And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods. And I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing. And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hands of those that served themselves of them. And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beast of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid."

Thus we have "given unto us, exceeding great and precious promises." But take those promises and give them to carnal Jews, and you "take the children's bread and cast it unto dogs." Such is the work, I think, those are doing who apply such promises to any but Abraham's children by faith; to them "the promises are made," and to them alone. The true Israel shall all be gathered when Christ appears in the clouds of heaven—then "He shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Wherever they have been scattered, they shall now all be gathered; yea, into "their own land," and shall be "HEIRS OF THE WORLD;" then will "the saints" have taken "the kingdom," and they shall "possess the kingdom forever, even FOREVER and EVER."

That glorious day is now "nigh, even at the doors." Let the children of God "lift up their heads, for their redemption is at hand;" now ready to be revealed.—Let us wait, watch, and keep ready for that day.

In conclusion, I wish my readers to look at the following texts: 2d Cor. 1: 19, 20. "For the son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me and Sylvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea; for all the promises of God in him are yea, and Amen, unto the glory of God by us." Compare this with 1st John, 5th ch., 12th v. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

Can it be plainer, that ALL the promises of God are IN CHRIST? and therefore they are not to any soul OUT of him; whether carnal Jews, or any other class of wicked men. May the Lord give us understanding in all things, and guide us unto his eternal kingdom!

Has the Lord been in the preaching of Definite Time?

Some days ago on reading a sentence like the following, "I have no doubt that the Lord has attended the entire Advent movement, but that He has had anything to do with the preaching of definite time I sincerely doubt," from the pen of one in whom I formerly had much confidence, and who, I believed, was a man of faith and might in Israel against the Canaanites and giants of the land, and would with steadfast heart, and unwavering faith, go through and take possession of the promised land; it brought sadness to my heart, and led to a long train of reflections, some of which, I could hardly refrain from committing to paper, hoping they might not be wholly unprofitable to the scattered flock.

And in the first place I was led to ask, what would the Advent movement have been without the preaching of definite time? Where would have been the zeal for God that has characterized those that were heralding the coming of the King of Kings? And what would have given edge to the sword which they wielded, and caused it to do such execution in the ranks of the enemy? What, I ask, could have done it, but this one absorbing thought, this strong confidence, that the mystery of God was then to be finished?

Where in the history of God's dealings or movements in the past, can we find an instance in which the people of God have not understood the time for the transpiration of any event, or the fulfilment of any prophecy in which they were immediately concerned? And even we find instances where the Lord would not conceal his doings from his faithful servants although they were not concerned in the matter.—We learn from Eccl. 8: 6, that "to every purpose there is time," and from Paul we learn that for the Judgment there is an appointed time. And as the Lord will do nothing without revealing it to his servants the prophets; we must conclude that we shall find that time somewhere in the prophets, and where shall we find it but in the prophecy of Daniel? There we learn the great God made known things that should be in the latter days, and Daniel was told that at the time appointed the end should be, and that time was 2300 days. And then knowing that the light was not sufficiently clear, Gabriel was commissioned to make Daniel understand it. Then follows a series of explanations until the light was brought out so clear the wise could understand, and God said they should, and there it is left. May the Lord help us to be wise.

That great persecuting power is marked so clearly, and its length given so definitely, and then the great way mark, the darkening of the sun, was set up, so that there could be no mistake, when the days of tribulation were ended. And we are told that the blessing or promise of inheritance will come at the end of the days, (1335,) and as we know that those days are almost run out since the setting up of that abomination, may we not know that we have entered upon the last prophetic day, and that ere it shall close we shall behold the bright company of shining ones surrounding the Son of man, and attending him down to earth to receive his waiting Bride, and welcome her to her long sought home?

We need not be surprised that God should have permitted us to fix upon a definite point of time, and that point pass! God has seen fit to try His people so in many instances in ancient time. Did not the children of Israel expect deliverance sometime before it came? They had two starting points, and they evidently looked with some confidence at the first, for they were wearied with hard bondage and oppression, and ready to grasp at the first ray of hope. They too must be tried, but when the fullness of the time was come, Moses having been tried, and humbled, and instructed, was prepared to trust in God, and lead the host of Israel through dangers and trials until they gained deliverance, and triumphed over all the armies of the Egyptians! But at the time of their departure they were all ready, with their loins girded, their shoes on their feet, and their staff in their hands. And can it be possible that God should in the type let His people know the time so exactly, but when we come to the Ante-type, the great crowning scene of all, let it come upon His people by surprise? for notwithstanding we have had the signs (which some however, of the professed Adventists will not allow!) the time could not be known by them, aside from the prophetic numbers, accurately enough for us to be as well prepared as were the Israelites on the night of their departure from the land of Egypt.

But I bless the Lord for the preaching of definite time. Had it not been for that, I know not, but I should have been hurried on in the busy tide, with the great mass, until now, and my eyes still have been closed to the great and glorious truths, that have been shining so brilliantly from the sacred Oracles in these last moments of time while the Bridegroom has tarried.

And where would have been the tarrying time, the writing of the vision, and the Angel with hand raised to heaven, swearing time shall be no longer, and the prophesying again, were it not for the preaching of definite time? And I might ask, too, how could they have said, "The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth?" And again, there must of necessity be a "Cry" at midnight; and nothing could make it but the preaching of time. And thankful I am to God that such a cry ever saluted my ears; for truly I felt that it was a time of darkness like midnight, ere the cry was heard, and it certainly seemed due at that time.

But the virgins have heard it, and those that had oil have been trimming their lamps, and they now shine with increased brilliancy, and will continue to shine until lost in the blaze of that clear sunlight that will soon illumine every child of faith. O may God grant that the author of that sentiment that gave rise to these few thoughts which I have penned, may be found with his lamp trimmed and burning; and when the Master comes be able to say, "Lo this is our God; we have waited for Him." My prayer to God is, that I may meet Him with all the faithful blood-washed throng in that land of perfection and glory, which will soon be prepared for their abode.

Paradise Lost.

This world was once a paradise—
When will it be again?

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." This is the simple announcement of the mighty work of God. When all was done—the earth created, the garden planted, and all prepared, God said, "let us make man in our own image, after our likeness; and let him have dominion over all the earth." "So God created man in his own image, male and female created he them, and gave them dominion over the fish of the sea, the fowl of the air, and every moving thing."

Then in that peaceful garden, in the spring time of his existence, man was placed. All was harmonious and pleasant. The green forests waved and bowed their pliant branches as if in loveliness, and reflected their Creator's glory. Each tree, and shrub, and plant, was perfect; for a perfect Architect had created all, and called it good—man looks upon the surrounding beauty, and walks forth in all his native dignity—king of the earth. He exclaims with delight at the scenery, as he walks from place to place, from flower to flower. All about him is harmony and song.

The beasts of the field, the birds of heaven, the rippling streams, the balmy breezes, the waving forests, the verdant fields—he is lord of all, ruler of all.—Accompanied by his fair companion, they roam in innocence and perfection amid their peaceful bowers. They meditate on God, and the smiles of the Most High rest down like sunshine on their heads—perfect peace and love without alloy possess their tranquil hearts, and the Paradise about them left destitute of no desirable object.

But the bright prospect is dimmed—the beautiful picture is marred. Notwithstanding their advantage to resist temptation, they fell, and their posterity, though in less favorable circumstances, have followed their example. The fatal deed was done—death was written on all their prospects, and despair and sorrow met them at every turn, when driven from their Eden home of love, purity and bliss. What a contrast between their first and present condition! Now, they endure toil and care, sickness and pain, suffering and death. Still amid the general wreck, one consolation yet remained; through the dense cloud of overwhelming gloom one solitary star shone forth, beaming with ever increasing beauty and brightness, to lighten their dark pathway, and cheer their disappointed hearts,—the woman's conquering seed, which shall bruise the serpent's head.—For this fallen world there is hope only in the promised Seed—Jesus Christ—the root and offspring of David—the bright and morning star. And we who have passed from death unto life, have hope of reigning with him in Paradise restored. To him shall be granted the first dominion.—Mic. 4: 8. "Thou madest him," says David, "to have dominion over the works of thy hands;" and when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all his holy angels with him, when the gathered nations of the earth shall encircle his glorious throne—when the awful and eternal separation shall take place, then shall the blessed ones be called to inherit the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world. Here is the long lost kingdom again, and the saints of God will possess it at the time of the restitution spoken of by holy prophets. Yes, the time is at hand when the Lion of the tribe of Judah will make his power known among the nations, and "destroy them who destroy the earth," and extend his peaceful reign to earth's remotest bounds. Soon, very soon, will the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. I long to be there to behold Eden regained, and inherit the long lost Paradise of God.—Earth renewed shall be the home of the Saints. Paradise lost shall be Paradise regained when Jesus comes. Hence the declaration,—As surely as I live (saith the Lord) the whole earth shall be filled with my glory; and hence the prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." The buried millions of prophets, patriarchs, martyrs and saints of every clime shall share this blessedness. Reader, will you? the moments for preparation are few, and are fraught with momentous and eternal consequences; a few days or hours and the die will be cast. O be wise, for your own sake, and for the sake of him who died to save you from the second death.

O be wise, that you may shine in the Father's kingdom, as the stars forever and ever—that you may join the unnumbered throng in Eden, the paradise of God, and the Lamb, and sing worthy the Lamb that was slain.

This is the year my Savior comes,
O haste the glorious hour. Hallelujah.

Christ our Savior, the infallible Chronologer of the Bible.

"Hear ye him." Matt. xvii: v.

"Take heed that no man deceive you." Matt. xxiv: iv.

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days, the sun shall be darkened." Matt. 24: 29.

True to his word, the Savior darkened the sun May 19, 1780; and the poor, humble, despised, illiterate follower of Jesus Christ, foolish enough to believe his word, and so to become wise unto salvation, knoweth that the immediately preceding year, 1779, (not the immediately preceding month, day or hour; for the prophetic time is given in so many years,) is the terminus of Daniel's period of 1260 years, and becomes the head number of our chronology of the Bible.

Surely the evidences of his coming in the course of this present year are so sure, founded entirely upon his word, that we well may lift our heads rejoicing, knowing that our redemption draweth near.

Take heed, therefore, dear reader, that no man deceive you; believe his word, for why should you or I, a passenger on board the Gospel ship, inquire of a fellow-passenger, What of the night? How near to the shore? while the Captain is on board.

No, never, let us ask the Captain; take the counsel of the Lord; hear him, and believe his word. That's wisdom.

Westfield, Aug. 7, 1854.

Bro. Merriam,—I love to think of the gracious gifts conferred on us by our blessed Lord, and best of all, to think that he is coming so soon. There is no other subject which I can think of that gives me so much pleasure as the coming of the Lord in 1854. Truly we are living in a grand, yet awful time. Whilst nations are rushing to battle, and "men's hearts failing them for fear of those things coming upon the earth," God's children rest in peace, knowing that these things are only the tokens of the immediate coming of our Lord. What a blessing this is; and how soon we are to be translated into that glorious kingdom where we shall meet all the servants of God never to part again.

It is strange how men hate to have the Lord come, and to what sophistry they will resort to avoid the conviction of Christ's coming so soon. Not long ago I was showing a member of the church of United Brethren the reasons for my faith, and argued mostly from Daniel, 12th chapter, when he strove to avoid the force of my argument by saying that Daniel was asleep, and in great trouble about Jerusalem, hence this was nothing but a dream. I remarked that Daniel dreampt out future events very well, inasmuch as they had all been fulfilled except the last. Thus we see that men actually get convicted sometimes of the truth of our position, and to avoid the force of it, resort to almost unprecedented sophistry for defence.

Yours in hope of seeing Jesus this year,

On Knowing the Time.

Much has been said, both for, and against knowing the time of Christ's second coming. I think the Bible teaches distinctly, that the Church is to know the definite time of the Lord's return to this earth.

Paul, as I understand, speaking prophetically and by the inspiration of God, says to the church, "Ye brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief; ye are the children of light, and the children of the day; ye are not of the night, nor of darkness."

If the church are not to know the time, why does the Saviour say, "when ye shall see all these things, know that it (or he) is near, even at the doors?" What things? Why the things he had just been telling his disciples would take place previous to his coming, even all the events which were to transpire and be recorded upon the page of history up to the days of the Son of man, together with those signs which were to be the special precursors of his near approach. Those events, however, which were to take place at, or after his coming, were not included. Hence, when the church who are watching, as the Master directed, see those signs last spoken of, they will know he is coming immediately, or is at the door. Now the question arises, how near is being at the door? We should suppose, if a person were coming to visit us, and had arrived at the door of our house, that he would not stand there a long time. Well, we think Jesus will not remain long away from his Church, the Bride, when she has seen all these signs, which he has given her to observe, the seeing of which was to impart to her the knowledge that he was even at the door. "But this is not definite," says one. "He may be at the doors for a number of years." I think not. "Ye are not in darkness, Brethren, that that day should overtake you as a thief." There are some days connected with all these things, some arithmetical calculations to be brought into the account. Remember the Saviour is giving an answer to the question put to him by his disciples respecting the time of his coming and the end of the world; and in doing it, he speaks of a certain tribulation that is to come upon his Church, one which has a definite number of days attached to it, and refers us to the prophet who speaks more particularly of these days, and the number of them, their beginning, and terminus. He exhorts every one who readeth them to understand, speaks of their being shortened, and says, "immediately" after their termination the sun shall be darkened. And "verily," says he, "this generation shall not pass away, till all these things be fulfilled."—What generation? The generation that shall see these signs of which He had been speaking, the darkening of the sun being the first one. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away. But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels in heaven, but the Father only." Well, do you believe the Father will reveal it? I do. The path of the just "shineth more and more unto the perfect day." The church of Christ is represented as having "eyes before and behind," as well as "within." The great Head of the Church—our blessed Lord and Master—well knew, that when she ascertained her Lord was soon coming, she would be so interested respecting it, that she would desire to know the year; and when she had found out the year, she would desire to know the month; and when she had found out the month, she would desire to know the day. And when she knows the day is come, I think she will be willing to watch for the hour and the moment. But let us consider further the conversation which he holds with his disciples, as they sit upon the mount of Olives. I cannot tell you, says he, the day and hour, (now) but I will tell you how it will be, when you come to the days of the Son of man. It will be then, just as it was in the days of Noah. How was it in the days of Noah? "They were eating and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage, &c., until the day Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away."—Who did not know? All those whom the flood swept away. Well, did any one know? O yes, Noah with his family, or the Church knew and had prepared an ark of safety for himself and his family. Did he know the day before it came? Yes, seven days before, at least. Now, I ask, will the Church at the end of time know less about God's economy than she did back there? That would not agree with the declaration quoted above, that her path would shine more and more unto the perfect day. One may say this is nothing but inference: well, if it be inference, it is the one that Jesus knew we should make; for he goes on to say, after speaking of those who would be taken in the snare in those days, and of those who would escape, "Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." Watch for what? That you may know. How does this appear? From the next verse. "But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up." Be ye also ready. How? Just as the good man of the house would have been ready, if he had known the time, or watch, wherein the thief was coming. Sometime, or even soon, would not answer. He must know what night, and what hour in the night, in order to be ready, and to prevent his house from being broken up. "Therefore, be ye also ready." The Saviour does not leave the subject here, but goes on to confirm what he has said about knowing the time, by bringing to view the servants who shall be proclaiming his near coming, and the one among them who shall become evil while the Bridegroom tarries, and begin to smite his fellow servants, "saying in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming." He says the Lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him. While on the other hand the good servant will be saying, and believing too with all his heart, that his Lord is coming. And he will not of course be disappointed. For his Lord will not come upon him as upon the evil servant, in an hour when he thinketh not, but having taken heed to the words of the Master, he will have found out the time of his return, and will be "giving meat in due season" to the household. "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when He cometh, shall find so doing."

But this is not all. The Saviour now compares the church to a certain number of Virgins, who went forth to meet the Bridegroom, half of them wise, and half of them foolish. He represents them as meeting with a disappointment—they did not meet the Bridegroom as soon as they expected. And while he tarried, they all slumbered and slept. "And at midnight there was a cry made, behold the Bridegroom cometh. Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps." And those that were ready went in, and the door was shut. Here he gives the church to understand, that in her history just prior to his coming, she will accomplish a movement like this. Hence after she has experienced the going forth, and the tarry, and hears the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," she knows it is the last movement, and that now her Lord will surely come. Does the state of the world at the present time, compare with that before the flood, or with the state of society in the cities of the plain before their destruction? It does. Have the signs of Jesus' coming been seen by the Church? Yes. Have the days of tribulation past? They have. Has the Church experienced in her history of late, a movement like a going forth of the Virgins to meet the Bridegroom? She has. Was she disappointed in not meeting her Lord? She was. Has she been asleep since? She has. Has she been aroused from her slumbers by a cry, "behold the Bridegroom cometh," or the Lord is coming in '54? She has. Does she expect her Lord will come this year? She does.—Is she to be disappointed again, as once before? no, never. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away," says the Saviour. Every jot and tittle must be fulfilled once, and but once. Amen, even so, my heart responds it is so. And again my whole being exclaims, "Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Yours, expecting deliverance and eternal redemption in the 7th month of this present year.

Definite Time.

Bro. Marsh:—I would like to say a word to the brn. on time. I have been much surprised to see a spirit of opposition manifested by some on this subject, that was not according to the charity of the gospel. I do not understand it, nor can I see a necessity for it. Some appear all stirred up at the very mention of definite time; and ready to denounce it as all of the devil. It is true, it is almost invariably from those in a backslidden state, so far as my observation extends. But this makes the case no better, so far as its influence on the ungodly is concerned, so long as they are by them recognized as Adventists.

One thing is certain, time—definite time—is revealed in the Bible, whether we ever understand it or not. Whatever is revealed, is for "us and for our children forever." We cannot understand the time as revealed, without studying the word, and seeking by prayer as Daniel did, for that wisdom which is from above, and for that same spirit to understand by which the revelation was made unto us. Like Habakkuk, "watch to see what He (the Lord) will say unto us;" and be assured in due time we shall understand if we faint not. What says the objector, do you think we may know the time of Christ's coming?—Most assuredly I do. But do not the scriptures say, "Ye know not when the time is?" Yes, and it is given as a reason why you are to watch (or study), and not to teach that you never can know the time, as many have falsely inferred. But it says, "of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." True, but dare you infer from that that Christ will never know the day and hour of his coming? If not it is a mere hypocritical quibble, and I entreat you never to use it again. Now all this class of passages do not prove, in any degree, that we may not know the time.

Please remember that the scriptures also say, that "the wise shall undertand," where the subject is exclusively on time; also, that "ye brethren are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." But "if therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee," evidently implying if we do watch we shall know; and the fact that we do not know, is the reason why we are to watch that we may know. But I leave this, (as it was not my intention to argue the point), by simply saying, this class of passages are as true as the others. By watching we mean searching the scriptures for the signs of Christ's coming, that when given they may be recognized. So with reference to the prophecies and prophetic periods; search to understand them that when fulfilled we may see and know our position; by so doing we shall be of "the wise" who God has promised "shall understand," and come perhaps to a full knowledge of the time.

As to the termination of the prophetic periods this year, I confess as far as I can see, it is the clearest argument we have ever had. The evidence for the termination of the 1290 days period in 1809, is perfectly overwhelming to my own mind. The wonder is that we have not seen it before; and doubtless we should but that we have always endeavored to connect the 1260 day period with the 1290. Though it is now about three years since I became satisfied they had not, nor ever had any connexion. No point can be more clearly established than that the 1260 years ended in 1798, and I was perfectly astonished to see our brethren East laboring so hard to remove that old landmark, and connect what God had never connected. This is the first light I have ever seen on the 1290 days period; and if it is not light, I hope some bro. will show it up; if it is, then the 1335 days will end this year, and Daniel stand in his lot.

The argument for the termination of the 2300 years period is to my own mind equally conclusive. That the seventy weeks of Dan. 8th ch., is a part of the 2300 days of Dan. 9th, is as clear to me as that the two chapters are inspired. The key, or the adjusting link by which to understand the periods, is the cross. We looked for its termination in '43, because Christ was crucified when a full moon passover occurred on Friday, which was the case in A. D. 33, and following in the wake of modern commentators we placed the cross at the end of the seventieth week, leaving 1810 years of the vision after the crucifixion, which added to A. D. 33, ended the vision in 1843. Time proving that incorrect, we moved the cross to the middle of the 70th week. Our argument was based on a criticism on the word rendered midsth, which terminated the period in A. D. 1846. I was quite sanguine on this time, but it passed, and we were again disappointed.

After this we had no time until in '49, when two errors were discovered in our previous views. One was that the commandment marking the commencement of the period was the one in Neh. instead of Ezra. The other, that the cross must be placed at the beginning of the 70th week, leaving a week for the confirmation of the covenant, which could not be until the death of the testator—Christ. Then holding on to 33 A. D. still for the crucifixion, and applying the same principle, it terminated the period in A. D. 1850.—But time the great tester proved that incorrect, and our passover full moon on Friday gone. Some gave up the connection between the 70 weeks and the 2300 days without giving a single reason so far as I know. Others yielded the point of knowing anything about the time, though I never could adopt either; and thus we have passed along until the present time.

This year we have a new argument on time based on the same principle as that of '43, with our errors corrected. The same authority (Ferguson) that gave us a full moon passover on Friday in A. D. '33, gives us one also in A. D. '37, which, placed at the end of the 69 weeks, makes the termination of the 70 weeks in A. D. '44, to which add 1810 years, the remainder of the vision, and we are brought to 1854 as the time for the cleansing of the Sanctuary. This looks to me like light, as also the facts so clearly marking the termination of the 1290 years in 1809, to which add 45, the excess of the 1335 over the 1290—and we are brought to A. D. 1854, as the time for Daniel, with all the hosts of God's elect, to be raised from the dead unto eternal life and glory. Amen.

I can discover no error in either argument; if there is, I will thank any brother to show it. If there is not, what manner of persons ought we to be in all godliness and holy conversation, who look for such things so soon to transpire? Brethren, look at this argument—do not be afraid of it, it will do you good; it has me, and I hope it may benefit us all.—And may the Lord help us all to awake, and take that stand that will insure us a part in the first resurrection, should it transpire this year, is the prayer of your brother in affliction.

C. R. PINNEY.

FITCHBURG, WIS., Aug. 1st., 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—Shall I be permitted to communicate a few thoughts through the Crisis, upon the 9th chapter of Daniel, for the consideration of the brethren? This chapter, or a part of it, has been considered a key to the 2300 days of the 8th chapter, the seventy weeks being understood to be a part of the 2300 days, and both of these periods starting at the same point. Consequently, the 2300 days must expire 1810 years this side of the seventy weeks, as the argument stands.

Now, notwithstanding the seventy weeks, and the 2300 days may both have their commencement in the same year, I do not understand from the reading of those two portions of prophecy, that anything of the kind was intended, so that we might more readily understand the commencement, or the ending of the 2300 days. There is a point by which we may ascertain the beginning of the two thousand three hundred days, and likewise the beginning of the seventy weeks, but I do not understand the last mentioned number to be a key to the former. To be sure as we have it recorded in the ninth chapter, the angel comes to give Daniel "skill and understanding;" but in regard to what did the angel come to give him skill and understanding? Was the object of his mission an explanation of the vision of the 8th chapter, or was it to give Daniel understanding relative to some other subject which bore with weight upon his mind? Let us examine the 9th chapter and see. Commencing with the chapter we read,—"In the first year of Darius, the son of Ahasuerus, of the seed of the Medes, which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans; in the first year of his reign I Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem."—Now let me suggest a thought here, and none need endorse it unless it be true.—At this time Daniel having obtained by books the knowledge he did relative to the length of the Babylonish captivity, and knowing likewise that the seventy years were nearly expired, came to the conclusion that Christ would come at the consummation of that captivity; and looking upon the church, he saw them in an unprepared condition. They, as a people, were in captivity—their city and sanctuary were broken down, and in a state of desecration; consequently the sacrifices and offerings were unattended to. The expectations of the prophet being what they were, and this state of things existing in the church, led him to seek by prayer and supplication with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes. He says, "I prayed unto the Lord my God, and made my confession, and said, O Lord, the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments, We have sinned and have committed iniquity, and have rebelled even by departing from thy precepts, and from thy judgments!" In this strain the prophet continues to pray, confessing his sins and the sins of his people. Mark the conclusion of this prayer, (vs. 19th, and onward.) "O Lord, hear, O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do, and defer not for thine own sake, O my God: for thy city and thy people are called by thy name. Yea, whiles I was speaking in prayer, the man Gabriel whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation.—And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come to give thee skill and understanding." Understanding of what? evidently that which he was so solicitous to know; and what was that? I answer, the time of the first Advent. If in this extremity the Angel comes to give Daniel skill and understanding, the information obtained from the Angel shows just what the prophet was anxious to know; for it would be unnatural, if he were thus laboring in his mind to ascertain the time when the rightful heir to David's throne should be manifested to the world, for God to dispatch a special messenger for the purpose of giving him the necessary instruction, and for the Angel to introduce a subject altogether foreign from the one under consideration. Hence I do not see any propriety in supposing that an explanation of the vision of 2300 days is here introduced. The Angel says, "At the beginning of thy supplication the commandment came forth, and now I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved: therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people," (not seventy years) "and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most holy." How clearly and beautifully is here delineated the object of Christ's first Advent; and how minutely was every feature of this prophecy fulfilled when the Prince of life expired on the cross. But the Angel does not dispense with the subject here;—A measurement of time had been introduced, the terminus of which was associated with that all sufficient sacrifice made for sin in the person of Jesus Christ on the mount of Calvary. But where shall that measurement be started? Daniel might inquire—If no event had been given associated with the commencement of the 70 weeks, he might have come to the conclusion that they commenced somewhere in the past, and ended with the 70 years captivity. But the celestial messenger, whose duty it was to minister to him who should be an heir of salvation, did not leave the subject in obscurity. Hear him. "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, threescore and two weeks." Here then is the thing made plain to Daniel in regard to the time of Messiah's coming.—Until then, though the good and wise of every age, had believed in the Advent of Christ, no period had been given specifying the time when that event should transpire. But now a revelation of the thing is made. It is sixty nine weeks from the going forth of the commandment, or 483 years, the ending of which, I think, must correspond with the commencement of our Lord's public ministry, when He made the declaration recorded in Matt. 1: 15, "the time is fulfilled, the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel." "And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself." If Christ was crucified in any part of the seventieth week, it must have been after the 69 ended; but if he was cut off at the expiration of the 69 weeks, it ought to have read at the end of threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, and not "after". Again, "he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease," (i. e.) he shall cause the typical dispensation to cease by the offering up of himself once for all.

This prophecy corresponds with Heb. 9: 26. "But now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself."

And now a word to the brethren.—Should this article come under the observation of any who are not prepared to adopt the argument in full, I hope such will be as willing to let think as they are to think. It is the truth we are all after, and the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and thank God, I believe we are on the track. The last jots and tittles of God's word are all lying right round here somewhere—and all of them must and will be brought to light. God speed the Church in her researches for wisdom as for hid treasures. Amen.

The following candid remarks we cut from a paper published in Winsted.

The great Annual Camp meeting of the believers in the speedy coming of Christ is now being held at East Winsted, in a beautiful grove on "[illegible]" about two miles north-east of the village.—Nearly fifty tents are erected in a circle under the trees. Delegations from all the neighboring towns, and in fact from almost every part of the state, and from other states [illegible] are on the ground, and celebrated advent preachers are on hand, with fervor in their [illegible] and [illegible] extraordinary [illegible] addresses and exhortations. [illegible]

Several thousands [illegible] Camp Ground during the [illegible] [illegible] stay there day and night [illegible] the arrangements for the [illegible] of all have been made by [illegible] Grant of Winsted, one of our [illegible]

idents and most respected citizens, and one who stands high in the ranks of the Adventists, as being mighty in prayer, and council and good works. The exercises commenced on Monday, and through the week public preaching has been given from the stand three times a day. Meanwhile, services of various kinds have been going on in the different tents, and everything has been conducted with an order and decency, which do not usually characterize all the proceedings of a Camp meeting of any denomination.

It is well known this sect, which takes its origin from the teachings of Miller, who flourished years ago, is very numerous and daily spreading in this vicinity. It is our duty, as journalists, to give not only our readers at home, but our exchanges abroad, all the information we can procure, in relation to the number and tenets of the Adventists, their different creeds and parties, their great preachers, their songs and their books. This we do because their existence is becoming all the time a more and more important fact.—Mountain County Herald.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, SEPTEMBER 13, 1854.

Winsted Camp Meeting.

"How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!" In all ages the church have delighted in the worship of God.—There is an attraction to the place where God's honor dwells, so that the spiritual worshiper may say with the Psalmist, "my soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord." The child of God loves this place, because there he meets his blessed Savior, there he enjoys the special presence of him whose smile is his joy, whose favor his life. There too he meets in heavenly fellowship the saints of the Most High, and in the enjoyment of endeared communion, he sits in an heavenly place, under the banner of a Savior's love.

The location selected for this encampment was one of the most eligible spots to be found, in a romantic section of the country, in a delightful grove, and central in relation to the Advent Churches. The gathering was large—45 tents in all, and on the Sabbath the audience were estimated to be not less than 5 or 6 thousand.—An unusual number of ministering brethren were present—Brn. Grant, Matthewson, Flavell, Edwin and Elam Burnham, Couch, Berrick, Howell, Brittan, Kimball, and many others. I did not hear all the discourses delivered on the ground, but will refer to some to which I had the privilege of listening.

The argument of Bro. Berick on the establishment of the little horn power, appeared to be a triumphant vindication of the 519 position, and a satisfactory answer to the various objections brought against that position. In relation to the preamble written by the Bishop of Constantinople, when he signed the articles required by the Pope, it was shown that the preamble did not militate in any degree against the articles signed.

In relation to the fact that the Catholics did not persecute christians during every portion of the 1260 years, it was shewn, that the great antichristian power did exist through that period, and that whenever circumstances were such that they deemed it expedient to persecute, they wielded the power and put the saints to death.—Admitting therefore it could be proved, that persecution did not commence in 519, (which however was denied,) yet it was sufficient that the persecuting organization was established and continued in existence for 1260 years, actually weilding its power over the saints at intervals, to a fearful extent. It was shewn also conclusively that the little horn of Dan. 7, was the Leopard Beast of Rev. 13, unless God had marked two great persecuting powers in his word, each to continue 1260 years.

Bro. Couch followed on the subject of the papacy. The little horn of Dan. 7 consisting of two elements, the secular and religious, or civil and eccleiastical, i. e., an embodiment of Church and state, and Bro. Berrick having proved the identity, as we believed, of the civil and military power as being the Greek kingdom, the question in relation to the eccleiastical power was presented by Bro. Couch.—It is evident, that if we can establish the identity of the civil power by one chain of reasoning, and of the eccleiastical by another, we have gained two points which powerfully corroborate each other; for if we can establish the fact, that the little horn was the Greek kingdom, and the fact that the eyes and mouth represented the Catholic Church, and that the two were incorporated together in 519, we have proof that is convincing and satisfactory.

The identity of the little horn of Dan. [illegible], and the power under which the saints "fall by the sword and by flame, by captivity and by spoil many days," (Dan. xi.) was clearly shown; and that the eyes and mouth of the horn symbolized the people that forsake the holy covenant, (Dan. xi: 30) and that this people are a back-slidden church, as represented by Paul in Thessalonians, when he says, "that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first," and "that man of sin be revealed," &c. The same persecuting organization is recognized as standing in the holy place, (Matt. xxiv. 15) and bringing tribulation on the elect; and again in Rev. xii, as a Beast like a leopard, making "war on the saints," and again in Rev. xvii, as a scarlet-colored Beast having a woman seated on it, which "woman was drunken with the blood of the saints." This woman was also said to be seated on seven mountains (v. 9); and as the Woman is explained to be that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth, it is evident that the city seated on seven mountains, is the seven-hilled city of Rome. Thus were the Watchmen enabled to follow out the two elements of power which constituted the little horn with eyes and a mouth; and after tracing the civil development to the Greek kingdom, and the ecclesiastical to the Catholic church, the two lines of light seemed to meet and form a focal point that gave us both light and heat. I could not help thinking of the two rods of a galvanic battery, which brought into contact, produce the electric shock. It seemed to me great weight was to be attached to the fact, that we were brought to the same point by following two separate and independent chains of reasoning, which converge to a point in A. D 519, showing the identity of the abomination that maketh desolate, and giving us the commencement of the prophetic periods reaching to the end of the world.

Bro. Grant gave us a very clear and plain discourse on the 2300 days, showing conclusively that the decree under Ezra's administration, in the 7th of Artaxerxes, could not have been the one by virtue of which the streets and walls of Jerusalem were built; for that decree had reference only to the building of the temple, while the decree, which was promulgated in the 20th of Artaxerxes, related to the building of the city, under which decree the work of building the streets and wall was actually accomplished.

At one particular time during the camp-meeting, I was much affected with the full, solemn and impressive strains of music, that seemed to rise and swell till it filled the entire grove and surrounding atmosphere. Never did I before so fully realize the significance of the expression sometimes used, "the place was vocal with the high praises of God."

On Sunday morning we met in a general Conference, which we denominated a love-feast, during which 155 brn. and srs. spoke in 65 minutes. The exercises were interesting in the extreme. Said a blind bro., "I sometimes talk about seeing the brn., but I am now expecting soon to see them in reality." Said another bro., "I have heard much against the spirit of the time brn., and I thought I would come and see for myself; and I find the truth was not told me. Brn. let us continue in this spirit, and we shall receive the blessings of the kingdom when Jesus comes."

A colored bro.: "I know no parties or names in religion; but I recognize every man who loves the Lord Jesus Christ as my brother. I feel that whether Jesus comes this year or next, I am ready to meet Him."

Another bro.: "Time is the life-boat for the church. God help us to get into it."

Another: "I have been preaching that the Lord would come before next spring; but since I have been on this ground I have been deeply convicted and converted. I thought it would be hard to believe Christ was coming this year, beyond a doubt; but when I believed, it went all through my system."

A blind bro.: "I expect to receive my sight this year, and look upon the smiling countenances of the brn and srs. in the Lord."

Another bro.: "I have been trying to serve the Lord for 17 years, but this is the most glorious morning I have seen in all that time."

Another: "On stepping aboard this car we find we are in the same train and have got the same conductor as in '43 and '44."

A sr.: "I will be in this band, hallelujah."

On Sabbath evening we united in the celebration of our Lord's supper, and the occasion was marked by fervent prayer and a depth and fulness of emotion not usually witnessed. There was room for some 250 or 300 to sit at the tables, which were twice filled, and many others received the sacred symbols in a standing position. It was truly an affecting and ever-memorable scene, and those who were the favored participants, will cherish a fond remembrance of that hallowed festival.

As we arose from that family board, spread for the children, where we had sit together with such feelings of endeared relationship, we went out, having sung a hymn, and still singing, I could but compare the scene with the festivities of the world. What a contrast in every respect! On those worldly occasions the procession moves to the symphonies of martial music; but the pilgrims' kingdom is not of this world; hence their national airs are of another description. We moved to the enchanting melodies of Zion, and forming a double circle around the encampment, we commenced our valedictory salutations, which interesting exercise lasted about one-a-half hours. The feeling of brotherly and sisterly love seemed intense, rendering a separation painful indeed; but many were the words of consolation that fell from their lips. Such as—This is the last parting; I hope to meet you again soon; farewell till we meet in the kingdom, &c., &c.

On singing a hymn written for the occasion by sister Cudworth, the feeling was so intense as to be quite over-powering to the singers. The exercises closed with a short prayer by Bro. Matthewson, at the termination of which one universal shout of Amen made the whole encampment ring. Thus closed one of the largest and most interesting convocations I ever had the privilege of witnessing. The feeling on this last occasion, was one of mingled joy and grief. There was the heaving bosom of the desponding, the streaming eye of the penitent, the joyful songs of the ransomed, and the triumphant shout of the victors.

We doubt not much good was accomplished—that enquiring minds were enlightened—the agonized heart soothed with Gilead's balm—the hope of those who are expecting redemption this year, strengthened—and the necessity of a full preparation to meet the great event before us, felt by many who had been asleep to this all-important subject.

CORRESPONDENCE.

West Greatworks, Me., July, '54.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—Permit me to say through your paper, to the dear saints scattered abroad, that I am through the infinite love and matchless grace of God, looking for that blessed hope and glorious appearing, believing in my heart that Jesus our Lord will come this year and give life and immortality to all the waiting saints. O what a glorious, heart-cheering doctrine the coming of Christ, the resurrection and restitution is! O the blissful thought, that in a few months we shall meet all tre good and the blest from every clime, and of every age, in the Eden home of the saints, to die no more, to part no more forever, is indeed blessed beyond utterance! Dear children, love one another; for love is of God. Remember that charity (love) "never faileth"—remember the petition, forgive us "as we forgive." We now occupy a period of deep and thrilling interest. Eternal life and an incorruptible inheritance are at stake. Be humble then; be faithful; learn your own duty and do it in the fear of God, leaving others to ascertain theirs. Do all the will of God; sell not your birthright for a few moments' self gratification. Live, live for truth, live for God, live for the Judgment and then you will live eternally. And now may the God of all grace and consolation fill our hearts with love and peace, and preserve us unto his heavenly kingdom, is the prayer of thy brother,

Nicholas G. Reed.

"But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days. Daniel, 12: 13."

The sentence of death had been passed. "For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." So Daniel was to go his way, "walk through the valley of the shadow of death;" go down into the grave and rest "till the end be. "There the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest: there the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor; the small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master." Job 3: 17, 18, 19. At the end of the 1335 days, Daniel will stand in his lot, or have a part in the first resurrection, with all the saints. "Hear the word of the Lord ye that tremble at his word: your brethren that hated you; that cast you out for my name's sake, said, let the Lord be glorified; but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." Who hath heard such a thing? Who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children. Isa. 66: [illegible]. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth: they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 28, 29.

According to Acts 17: 31, there is a day appointed in which God will "judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained," and that day must be one of the 2300 in Dan., 8th chap. It cannot be one of the 1335, because they end at the resurrection.

We learn from Nehemiah that the daily sacrifice was restored in the fall of the year, (seventh month) and in 2400 years from that time the indignation will cease, the judgment day come, and the saints "possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever."

Within a little circle of time, the scriptures of truth will have their fulfilment. The nations will rush like the rushing of many waters—the swearer will utter his last oath—the scoffer will be dumb forever. "The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken to pieces; out of heaven shall he thunder upon them."

The Bridegroom is coming in the fall of 1854. Go ye out to meet him! Every saint will receive eternal life this year. "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

C. W. Allen.

Sept. 12th, 1854.

Dear brother Jonas Merriam.—It may be my duty just to say through the columns of your paper, that I have through the abundant mercy of God, been enabled to perform my journey to the far west, and returned to this city last evening enjoying health of mind and body, and in good spirits to go through to the end let what will come to pass, by the grace of God, and not of myself.

Our journey was long and tedious, but yet not without interest. I would say it was not in vain for us to go to Wisconsin. A number were persuaded to give their hearts to God, and were baptized. We had the blessed privilege of leading down into the water 18 happy souls, whom we left praising God and crying for help, that God would send faithful laborers into the west. May God hear and answer their prayers. I left Br. Ross in Buffalo, preaching the word of life to the people, strong in the faith of the Lord's coming this year. Amen.

Israel Damman.

Goffstown, Aug. 20th, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I returned home last evening from a tour north.—I have been absent 15 days from home.—Attended one Camp meeting four days, and the Lord was with us by his Spirit.—I believe good was done in the name of the Lord; but I believe the work is almost done for the world. The Lord is coming in the 7th month, 10th day, I believe without a doubt; and O how I feel at times, for fear I shall not get into the kingdom. How strait the way is! But God's grace will be sufficient, if we put our trust in Him. To say or preach '54 does not take hold of the people now as it has done.—The sword does not cut as it formerly did; but the 7th month is present truth now. O my brn. one and all, wake up; the Lord is coming this fall. The spring types all had their fulfilment at Christ's first Advent, and the fall types must have their antitype, or the Law will not be all fulfilled. Jesus says, "one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Brn., let us all watch and be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that will be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

Your brother, looking for Jesus in the seventh Jewish month.

Benjamin F. Manning.

Merwinsville, Ct., July 28, 1854.

Brother Merriam:—I bless God that I ever embraced the Advent doctrine. Although before Brother Grant came to Merwinsville I had no belief in it, I praise the Lord for sending Brother Grant to this place. The truth of the coming of the Lord was made so plain to me, I embraced it with a glad heart. Brother Grant's labors were not in vain. He has, through the love of God, started one poor soul to seek for mercy at the foot of the cross.—Thank God, we are not in darkness, that that day should overtake us as a thief.—We are not of darkness, but the children of light. The Saviour says, "This generation shall not pass away, till all these things be fulfilled." Over seventy years have passed since the darkening of the sun, and blessed be the name of the Lord, we are almost home. The Apostle tells us, "yea, all them that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution," and further remarks there shall be scoffers in the last days, walking after their own ungodly lusts, saying, "where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." O how perfectly this corresponds to the present state of things. Will not a Christian's soul yearn for that time to come when they shall see Jesus as he is?—What a blessed hope! Then these vile bodies will be fashioned like unto His glorious body. Father, we pray, "Let thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." May we, with hearts full of love, hold fast the promise which is in sight, and is sure. Brethren and sisters, I have a desire to be remembered in your prayers, that I may be found faithful to the end.

Your brother in Jesus,
Charles H. Gordon.

The Fires in the Woods.

FEARFUL SCENES—NARROW ESCAPES!

A letter from Athol, N. Y. dated 25th, published in the Saratoga Whig, says:—"The woods are on fire in every direction, the smoke is so dense as to render it impossible to discover objects at the distance of twenty rods, the air is full of burning cinder and ashes, the sun is darkened and the scene is awfully sublime; the nights are a terror to the people, for they are in fear of being overtaken before the succeeding dawn by the devouring fires. Wild beasts are leaving the forests or being burned up. Bears are seen wandering about the fields in the day time—panthers and wolves are heard screeching in agony during the night; sheep and cattle are burned up. Buildings, fences, crops, and in fact nothing escapes the devouring element. You may judge of the danger, for when the fire gets in the grass it goes faster than a man can run; men often get lost in the smoke, and only find their way out by calling back and forth. The engineers on the Saratoga and Sacketts Harbor Railroad have been driven from their work, and compelled to run for their lives several times within the last ten days.

A PIC-NIC PARTY IN A CIRCLE OF FIRE!

A numerous pic-nic party of men, women and children, on Friday week went from Albany on a pic-nic excursion to the Berkshire Mountains. Arriving there they proceeded to spend the time in the happiest manner possible. The Albany Express says:—

"It was known to them when they first started for the mountain that a portion of it was on fire, but of the conflagration they thought nothing, being entirely absorbed in their amusements. But the smoke grew dense, the air became hot and stifling, the winds were up, and the fall of an immense cinder in their very midst, roused the thoughtless party to a realizing idea of what was in progress above and around them. Looking up, judge of their consternation when they saw themselves almost begirt by a tremendous conflagration, which had spread with nearly the speed of the wind. Their only way of escape was through the narrow gorge down which the little brook plunged, and the flames were rapidly approaching both sides of even that chance for exit!

Not a moment was to be lost; All rushed instinctively for the narrow opening before them, leaving behind them more than half of the berries they had picked. But they found the little brook could run where they could not, and that precipices, underbrush, no path, and the stifling smoke that blew hot in their faces and blinded their eyes, rendered their progress slow. The ladies had to be helped at every step almost. Overhead and nearly all around was a world of fire. Before them was just a narrow way of escape yet, and that might at any moment be crossed, and they completely surrounded by a belt of fire!

The air grew thicker and darker. The heat was dreadful. Sparks and cinders fell like rain around them. Their clothing was repeatedly on fire. The roar and crackle of the flames was almost deafening, and occasionally the fall of a burning tree crashed upon their ears and added to their terrors.

At last, when some were growing too weak to go further, two had fainted and had to be carried, and their condition was momentarily becoming more and more desperate and hopeless, suddenly the wind chopped around and blew a fierce blast up the narrow ravine the party were traveling! All were instantly invigorated, relieved of the smoke in front, and heartily encouraged. With a shout they pressed forward again, and in about fifteen minutes succeeded in gaining a point beyond immediate danger, and in an hour more were on their way home in the railway car.

Their escape was a narrow one indeed. Not half an hour had elapsed after their escape ere the trees and brush of the ravine were in a blaze, and their trysting place was lost in a deluge of fire.

The Fires in Maine. A correspondent writing from Leeds, (Me.) Aug. 25th, says:—"A fire has been raging for the past week on the meadow between this place and Monmouth.—Hundreds of acres of good meadow have burnt over, and also a large quantity of hay. It is thought that fifty tons of hay have been burnt to-day. The fire is raging at a great rate in the direction of a large lot of valuable pine timber belonging to Col. Marston, of Monmouth.—Great efforts are being made to stop the progress of the fire at the road between the meadow and the timber lot."

The Gardiner Transcript learns that fires are raging to a fearful extent in the woods, near the neighboring town of Chelsea. Great havoc is made with wood, bark, and fences.

The Bath Mirror (of 31st) said the wind had changed, and was driving the smoke and fire directly towards that city. Fears were entertained that buildings might be destroyed, and that the fire would be extensive on account of the scarcity of water. Large numbers of men were on the ground endeavoring to stop the progress of the fire.—[Boston Traveller.

Signs of the Times.

The Riots. We can hardly take a paper in hand and open it without finding an account of a riot, of greater or less magnitude, staring us in the face. Some of them are bloody affairs, and the most of them would be so, were it not that the order-loving part of community succeed in overpowering the rioters and "conquering a peace." Another fact is full as startling, viz.: that in almost every case the assailants are Irish and Catholics.—[Morning News.

Street Fighting on the Sabbath. Street fights on the Sabbath, resulting from the harangues of itinerant preachers against the Catholics, have been revived in this city; and yesterday witnessed several in different parts of the Island. The most serious fight took place in the lower part of Broadway, where the Irish made an attack upon a small body of Know Nothings, who were driven up the street, and one of their number stabbed when opposite the Bonded Warehouse. He will probably die of his injuries. Several pistols were discharged without fatal effect. No arrests were made.—Later in the evening, a fight took place in the Park, but there the Police were in force sufficient to quell the disturbance promptly, and arrest the leaders.—[Bost. Bee, by telegraph from New York.

Tremendous Riot at Newark, N. J. It appears that a procession of Protestant Irishmen were attacked by their own countrymen of the Catholic faith, the Protestants having met to commemorate the first session of the American Revolutionary Congress. The Boston Traveller, describing the scene, says:—

As the end of the procession came in view, a stone was hurled from the crowd on the corner of Shipman street, wounding a member of one of the associations. At the same time one or two shots were fired from the Catholic church occupying the space between Shipman and High streets. This was the signal for a general riot, the entire procession breaking its line and rushing upon those who had attacked them, who scattered in every direction.

Pistols were fired from the procession into the crowd, and some three or four were severely wounded. The attack from the church rendered that an especial object of attention, and in less than five minutes from the difficulty, the church was completely riddled, its doors and windows broken, its seats torn up, its altar dismantled, its organ destroyed, and the whole interior a mass of ruin. A building on the east side of Shipman street was also attacked, and the windows broken in.

During this time the excitement was most intense, and the firing of pistols was mingled with the shouts of excited combatants. Hundreds of citizens rushed to the spot from every direction, and great fears were felt that a serious loss of life would ensue. After much difficulty the marshals of the procession succeeded in calling into line the members of the various associations. It is universally allowed that great credit is due to the marshals and assistant marshals for their exertions in endeavoring to prevent an attack upon the church although they were ineffectual.

A number are slightly injured by stones, and an Irishman, named Thomas McCarthy, received two balls in the lower part of his abdomen, from which he will not probably recover.—Another Irishman was severely cut with a knife across the neck, but he is not considered dangerously injured. Some three members of the procession were dangerously injured, and taken home by their comrades.

Excitement among the Street Preachers—Skirmishing in the Park—one man stabbed.—There were several rows and skirmishes in various parts of the city, yesterday, arising from the excitement caused by street preaching.

The first disturbance occurred in Broadway, near the Battery, after the crowd had dispersed and were going up town. As far as we could learn the Americans were attacked by a party of Irishmen near Bowling Green Place, when a regular fight ensued, which, however, lasted but a few minutes. One man, an American, was stabbed with a dirk, and another, it was reported, had been shot; there was no truth in this last report—how the rumor was started nobody knows. The Irish party was soon vanquished. The news came up to the Park that there was a serious fight down at the Battery, and immediately several hundred left in haste to take part in the row. The Protestant party returned in about half an hour to the Park.—The procession came up Broadway three deep, headed, we believe, by Mr Joyce, a converted Irish Catholic. The procession, numbering several hundreds, passed in front of the City Hall, where Mr Mills was speaking, and marched to the Hall of Records, and commenced an attack on the audience that was listening to a Catholic preacher there. The fight was not permitted to become general by the police, who brought their locusts to bear pretty hard on the ringleaders, several of whom were arrested.—]New York Express of Sept. 4.

J. C. Pitrat, of the University of France, Ex-Editor of "La Presse du Peuple" in Paris, and formerly a Roman Catholic Priest to the Right Rev. Bishop Fitzpatrick.

Sir:—According to promise I will point out other facts in confirmation of the charge brought forth by the Native Americans, that Pius IX has proved to be the sworn enemy of every liberal form of government. In 1848 France was perishing under a despotic and corrupt government. Louis Phillippe, untrue to his promise of counteracting the influence of the Roman Catholic clergy, had increased their salary, established new parishes, built more than 5,000 new churches, and about 1200 new priest houses, convents and nunneries, and given the Bishops and their priests the control of common schools. Untrue to his promise of giving the French people a cheap, just and liberal government, he had raised the annual Budget from twelve hundred millions to fifteen hundred millions of francs. He sold the public offices and bribed the majority of the Representatives of the gentry, I say of the gentry, for the people were debarred from the privilege of voting. The agricultural and mechanical interests of the country were overlooked, and the foreign commerce was unprotected. Knowing that he was despised and hated by his subjects he raised the standing army to five hundred thousand men, in order to crush with impunity one by one the limited privileges and liberties of the country. He trampled the Constitution under foot, persecuted the Protestants, abolished the freedom of the Press, fined and imprisoned the writers and the journalists who had the courage to denounce his government. Any association, or political gathering of more than 25 men was not allowed. He went so far in his tyrannical prohibitions as to forbid members of the House of Representatives to meet at a banquet; but this last measure put an end to his tyranny. The Parisian people protested and remonstrated. He did not heed them. Then they resorted to arms, burnt his throne, and expelled him. A Provisional government was organized and a Republican government was proclaimed.

To the Roman Catholic clergy it was a thunderbolt, for having been the faithful supporters of the King's tyranny, they knew what chastisement they deserved. Pius IX, who foresaw that if the church of Rome was separated from the government it would die off in France in less than thirty years, in haste earnestly instructed the leaders of his church to yield to circumstances, to comply, at any cost, with all the wishes of the provisional government, and to crush down the Republic and the new liberal institutions as soon as a fair opportunity may present. Obedient to the Papal instructions, the Bishops ordered their priests to say high masses of rejoicing; to sing the Te Deum (a Catholic hymn) of thanksgiving; to say masses for the repose of the souls of those of the people who had been killed on the barricades fighting for liberty; to bless the new national flag; to go professionally to the trees of liberty and to pour holy water on them; to make liberal speeches and to show and tell the people that they were republicans and friendly to liberty. As a matter of course the priests who are slaves to the Bishops obeyed, and thus the people were deceived and boasted of having in their midst a Romish clergy truly converted to republicanism.

The policy of Pius IX served him beyond his expectations. All the privileges of his church in France were guaranteed by the republican government. What were they? The church of the Pope was the only great association authorized, protected and paid by the government; a nation in the nation, an autocracy in the republic; a society distinct from the civil society, and as numerous as the nation itself. It had an administration half ecclesiastical and half civil, with provincial demarcations, the Bishoprics; and with territorial subdivisions, the parishes. It had six high dignitaries, the Cardinals, paid by the government and its representatives in the Conclave. It had fourteen Archbishops and sixty-six Bishops. It had two Sovereigns, the one a temporal, the government; and the other spiritual, the Pope; but in reality its allegiance to the government was merely nominal. The church had 80,000 priests, residing in cities, towns, burgs and the smallest villages, exerting from the pulpits, in the confessional, among families, in common schools, in female seminaries and colleges an unlimited influence totally beyond the control of the government. The state granted to the church the use of more than 100,000 churches, the use of 75,000 priest-houses, of 80 cathedrals, of 80 Archepiscopal and Episcopal palaces, of 80 Chapters and dependencies, of 80 Theological seminaries and of 203 preparatory ecclesiastical schools.

All these buildings were not only furnished, but are to be kept in repair by the State. The Bishops were allowed to instruct and board in their Theological seminaries as many young men as they pleased. The public treasury paid to the Catholic Clergy thirty millions of francs, besides twenty thousand Bourses. The convents and nunneries owned a real estate worth more than one hundred millions of francs.—The Priests had the casual, which afforded them an average of ten millions of francs per year.—They had the inexhaustible tax of alms with which they bought the support of the poor class of the people. Lamartine, writing on the influence of the French clergy, said, "If I had to choose between the power of Government and that of the Clergy I would not hesitate, I would take that of the Clergy. The power of the Church is greater than that of the State; besides it is lasting and sacred."

Pius IX., far from being thankful to the Republican Government for the preservation of these privileges, renewed his instructions to the leaders of the Church in France, against the Republic. The Bishops, the Jesuits and the Priests, were set to work. They intrigued and exerted their influence so efficaciously in the elections which were to take place two months after, that they sent their candidates to the National Assembly, and among them eighteen priests. The Parisian people, seeing that the majority of the Representatives were Aristocrats, and sold to the clergy, rushed to arms, and in four days 50,000 men were slain in the streets of Paris. Pius IX., and Pius IX alone, has shed that blood.

It was not all; Pius IX knew that, as long as the press would b free, the privileges of his church would not be safe, because the masses, once enlightened, would throw off his yoke.—Therefore he sent instructions ad hoc, to the Catholic clergy, and the Catholic clergy ordered the representatives to put down the freedom of the press, and soon after a law was passed, by which no paper should be published in Paris if the publisher did not pay 25,000 francs to the State as a security, and 10,000 if it was to be published in the Departments. That very day 252 papers failed in Paris. Once more the policy of Pius IX. was successful.

The President of the Republic was to be elected. Then the Pope said to himself, "The Bourbons are now unpopular, therefore the Duc de Bordeaux has no chance to be elected, Louis Napoleon is the only man who can serve my ends—he shall be elected. Then I will let him understand that if he has my interests at heart I will present him with the Temporal throne.—Thus the Republic will be crushed down in France, and my power in the country secured and perpetuated."

These instructions Pius IX. sent to the clergy of France, the clergy faithfully obeyed them and Louis Napoleon was elected. What he had foreseen has taken place. the French Republic is now dead and buried. Who has been its murderer? Pius IX. Sir, I ask you if the Native Americans are not right when they say Pius IX. has proved to be a sworn enemy of the French Republic, therefore he is the sworn enemy of our Republican Government.

Yours, respectfully. J. C. PITRAT.

Later from Europe.

Bombardment of Bomarsund—Capture of Forts on the Island of Aland.

By the Niagara at Halifax yesterday we have seven days later intelligence from Europe.

Reports in the English papers say that the inhabitants of Aland have risen against the Russians, and that it was proclaimed, by order of the French Admiral, from the pulpits of all the churches, that the Russian sway over the Islands had ceased.

The Danube.—The aspect of affairs on the Danube is unchanged. The Russians continue to fortify all strategetic points as the Advance.

The London Daily News contains a remarkable letter, from a special correspondent, stating that British troops in camp at Monastir, near Derna, are decimated by malignant cholera, totally destitute of medicine, famishing for want of food, and discontented and almost disorganized. The Times, correspondent partly confirms the fact.

Prince Paskiewitsch returned to Warsaw on the 13th, and will again take command of the Southern army.

The Black Sea.—As yet nothing has been done. Constantinople letters speak of the expedition against the Crimea as still in progress, but the embarkation was deferred on account of cholera.

A Russian despatch from Odessa, Aug 8th, says that the allied fleets tried to land troops at Balaklawa, Crimea. At Sebastopol, it was reported that Admiral Lyons had bombarded Anapa for twenty-four hours. The result was unknown. The Russian fleet had come out of Sebastopol, was seen off Odessa, and returned in safety.

Asia. On the 4th, an offensive and defensive alliance was concluded between the Porte and Schamyl, the terms of which had not transpired. It is, however, understood that Schayml insisted that the Porte should recognize the independence of Circassia. In return, he offers the assistance of 50,000 mountaineers, to act in concert with the Turkish forces.

It is said that Schamyl has obtained a great victory over the Russians, but Russian reports state that Gen. Wrangel had advanced with the Russian troops from Ewan, and defeated the Turks near Bajazid, with great slaughter, capturing eight guns, and afterwards occupying Bajazid.

The Emperor of Morocco has announced his intention to present to the Sultan thirty million piastres, and twelve thousand horses annually while the war lasts.

The Turkish loan of five million sterling, guaranteed on Turkish revenne and Egyptian tribute, is opened at Paris and London; of six per cent bonds, £3,000,000 were taken at 89; balance in five months hence at 85.

The accounts of the potato disease in the north of Ireland are more discouraging; it seems to be spreading, though not rapidly.

France. The fete of St. Napoleon on the 15th, passed off quietly. The decorations were of great splendor. Marshal Magnan reviewed 26,000 troops, and a grand military spectacle was enacted in the Champ de Mars, representing the siege of Silistria.

The absence of the Emperor was regretted by the Parisians. There are, however, rumors that a conspiracy had been discovered, and that his absence was precautionary. Russian intrigue is reported busy in the secret clubs.

Latest by Telegraph. The Anglo-French force at Bomarsund is 12,000, supported by shipping.

Berlin, 16th. The Vienna Conference is expected to re-assemble next week.

Paris, 18th, Evening. The following despatch has just been received:—"Orders have just been issued for the Austrians to enter Wallachia, and they have commenced crossing the frontier."

Odessa, 7th. Letters of this date say that no real blockade exists, either at Odessa or in the Sea of Azof.

The Basilisk arrived at Dantzic with the news that Bomarsund surrendered on the 16th with 2000 Russian prisoners. The French lost 160 killed.

Progress of the War—Ravages of the Cholera.

By the Pacific, at New York yesterday afternoon, we have four days later advices from Europe, dates to the 23d ult. This budget of news is interesting, and informs us of the capture of Bomarsund—of concentration of Russian forces on the Pruth—of occupation of the principalities by Austrian Troops—of blockade of Archangel—of fearful ravages of the cholera, &c., &c., &c. The market news is void of interest. Trade was unanimated.

The newspapers per Pacific confirm the announcement of the capture of Bomarsund.—There was little loss of life on either side. The French lost 120 men in killed and wounded; the British only three or four. The round forts behind Bomarsund, named respectively Tzee and Nottick, had been previously reduced, no difficult task, as they were garrisoned by only 120 men each. The handful of artillerymen in Tzee made a stout defence, fifty being killed, and thirty-five only being taken unhurt. Both forts, when captured, were blown up.

An attack was then made upon Bomarsund itself, the walls of which were badly damaged before the garrison consented to surrender.—The honor of the victory, such as it is, belongs wholly to the French. Our private accounts from Dantzic state that the number of prisoners does not exceed 1500, and that they have been sent to Ledsund. An overwhelming display of force was made by the allies. No fewer than fifteen sail of the line lay with their broadsides within range of the fortress.

The allies claim to have found one hundred pieces of cannon, mounted and dismounted.—From the circumstance that Admiral Napier had issued a notice for all neutral vessels to leave the port of Riga before the 10th of August, it was surmised that Riga would be the next point of attack. The prisoners taken at Bomarsund will be sent to France on board English ships. Gen. Baraguay d'Hilliers had a narrow escape from a cannon ball, it having passed between him and his aid-de-camp, with whom he was conversing.

60,000 Russians were about to be concentrated on the right bank of the Pruth, under Gen. Luders, in order to cover the Russian flotilla on the Danube, which must be sacrificed by the evacuation of Galatz. The report of the defeat of the Turks near Kars is repeated.

The Paris Moniteur of Tuesday contains despatches from Bomarsund. They add nothing new to previous accounts, but allusion is made to the extraordinary results of the fire from the batteries.

Reports from Vienna state that the occupation of the Principalities by Austria will take place very soon. Edward Bach, elder brother of the Minister, will go there as civil commander.

The Paris Moniteur, under date of Vienna, 18th, one day later than the above, says that the first Austrian corps destined to enter Wallachia, has received by telegraph its orders to march. It was thought the frontiers would be crossed that very day, through the Red Tower Pass, by two Brigades that left Hermanstadt.—This movement has been combined by Gen. Hess and Omar Pacha, in conformity with the Austro-Prussian treaty.

From Berlin, August 18, we have the semi-official article in the Prussian Correspondens, which says that the evacuation of the Principalities by the Russians does not, it is true, fulfil all the objects of the alliance of the two great German powers, but that it grants more than was demanded by the note from Vienna of June 3d.

The supplementary article on the reciprocity obligations of the two great powers is therefore executed. If other steps were considered necessary for the interests of Germany, fresh conventions must take place between the contracting powers on the subject of co-operation, in the sense of the Russian treaty of the 20th April last.

The Russian steamer Vladimir had called boldly at the coalition station at Kosloo, coaled, destroyed two Turkish brigs, and escaped safely to the open sea. There is nothing from the Black Sea fleet. The statement is that the expedition to the Krimea is only temporarily delayed until the cholera abates among the troops.

LATER FROM EUROPE. By the Africa at New York yesterday morning, we have European advices to the 26th ult.

The Turks met with a terrible defeat at Kars, and lost 2000 men as prisoners.

Prince Gortschakoff is said to have received information from St. Petersburg that no direct answer will be given to the last propositions forwarded by Austria; but she will be asked what her intentions are. The armament here goes on upon a grander scale than ever. Two Russian agents, who set Vienna on fire have been arrested.

The French troops at Bomarsund suffer terribly from cholera, and they will probably be re-embarked immediately.

A strong division of the fleets has left Ledsund to operate in the Gulf of Finland. The forts of Aland will be destroyed.

The King of Oride, in India, has offered the British Government 12,000 troops and 100 guns.

Preparations are being renewed for the departure of the expedition to the Crimea.

White Sea.—H. M. ship Brisk, July 29. A private communication says: "We have had a slight skirmish at Archangel, and destroyed three other places. First Swlovetski monastery; second, the tower of Kid, in Orega Bay; thirdly, a large town on Ponchlathla river. We sail to-morrow morning in company with the Eurydice, but whither is not known. All on board well."

☞ By request of the friends, in company with Bro. Adrian, I will endeavor to attend a meeting at Meredith Neck, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, Sept. 21, and continuing as the Lord may direct. Come my Brethren in all that region, come up once more to worship the Lord together. Come and let us strengthen each other, assured that

"Daniel's is the safe position
In the midst of opposition,
To be waiting for the promise
At the ending of the days."

EDWIN BURNHAM.

Obituary.

Bro. Merriam: Please insert the following obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Aug. 8, 1854, sister Lois Ann, eldest daughter of bro Elbridge and sister Amina Chiram, of China, Me., in the sixteenth year of her age.

Sister Lois Ann was supposed to have experienced religion when about ten years old, and some time after, believed it her duty to be baptized; but, like far too many others, neglected that duty until laboring under the consumption, which has proved to be her last illness. But the Lord who is abundant in mercy, I trust, forgave her neglect, and gave her strength to go forward in that blessed ordinance of baptism. She was buried with Christ in baptism by the writer, on the 2d inst., a little less than one week before she died. Her mother remarked that she had a better night's rest, the night after being baptized, than she had had for four weeks previous. She bore her sickness with Christian resignation, and fell asleep in hope of soon being brought from the land of the enemy into a land where there will be no more death. Hence those that sorrow "do not sorrow as those that have no hope." Her funeral was attended at Palermo on the 4th inst., where some remarks were made by the writer, (text, Heb. ix: 27, 28) to a large and attentive audience of relatives and friends.

THOMAS J. DUDLEY.

Augusta, Me., Sept. 5, 1854.

Died, in Hartford, Vt., (formerly of N. H., and late of Brookfield, Vt.) of consumption, Eliza Ann, wife of Jeduthan Rice, aged 24 yrs. The deceased leaves two children and a husband, to mourn her loss. She died in hope of eternal life at the resurrection of the Just. At the funeral, the friends were addressed by the writer, from Ps. xvii: 15. JEHIEL CLAFLIN.

Died, at the residence of Abraham Dennet, in the city of Laporte, Ind., Aug. 8, our granddaughter, Rosa Bell Harding, daughter of F. R. and Martha G. Harding, aged one year ten mos and fifteen days. She died of dysentery, after an illness of a few days. O how it will rejoice my heart to see the day when death and hell will be cast into the lake of fire! Rev. xx: 4.

Oh death, thou cruel monster death, by thy power I am slain!
Jesus my Lord, hath conquered thee, and I shall rise again.

W. T. HARDING.

Bigelow's Mills, Aug. 30, 1854.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Sept. 3, our beloved son Frank Berick, aged 7 months. Though our hearts are stricken with anguish, we do not sorrow as those that have no hope, for we believe that the morn of glory is at hand when the children will come forth from the land of the enemy. Amen. R. R. YORK.

Dear brethren and friends: I write to inform you that my beloved companion fell asleep on the morning of the 7th of June last, aged 29 years and 10 months. Many, no doubt, can sympathize with me in this deep and sore affliction, for the enemy is all through the land. But blessed be God, I trust there are some few, at least, that can rejoice with me in the glorious hope, which God has given us through His blessed word, of soon, very soon, seeing those of our friends who have been taken from our embrace. Yes, blessed be God, I shall see dear Thankful in the morning, clad with immortality. Glory to God for the blessed hope.

She has been a strong believer in the near coming of our blessed Lord, ever since '43 and '44. I lived with her six years, during which time she adorned the doctrine she professed, with a well-ordered life and godly conversation. While laboring under a lingering consumption, she exhibited a pattern of Christian patience and resignation; so much so, that she could not endure to see any one weep in consequence of her condition. Even when she was death-struck, she gave me a signal to retire; but when I became calm, and asked her if all was well, she made signs that it was, and while I said, "praise the Lord," there was such a heavenly smile on her countenance, that it really cheered my soul; and truly I could say, "blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth; for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." She observed to me that she expected to sleep but a short time, and God would bring her up again. O, blessed be God, I long for that day. O, be faithful, my dear brn., and hold fast the profession of your faith unto the end, without wavering; for He is faithful who promised, who also will do it.—Amen.

It may appear strange that this obituary was not written sooner; but I have been too much overpowered by my feelings, to write.

Yours, in hope of eternal life to be given very soon. Amen. BENJAMIN F. STREETER.

Appointments.

CAMP MEETING.

The Camp Meeting to be held in Springfield, will commence Sept. 27, on land owned by Bro. Chauncy Bradley, three miles east of the armory, to continue over the Sabbath. Those coming by carriages will follow the old Boston road from the hill; those coming by cars, will stop at the Indian Orchard Depot, 1 1-2 miles from the ground, which is on the traveled road to Springfield. Conveyance to the ground on the arrival of each accommodation train.

Those coming from the North or South by railroad, will change cars at the Springfield Depot, and take cars for Indian Orchard Depot—the first station East.

Fare to and from the ground, about 12 1-2 cts. each way.

Provision will be made for board and horse-keeping on the ground, at a reasonable price.—The Lord's poor will be welcomed.

Brn are requested to come prepared to tent on the ground. It is expected that the brethren will come from Winstead, Hartford, Westfield, Warehouse Point, &c., &c. Also, from Waterbury and Worcester. So far from this meeting being a small one, we expect a general rally and a great development of truth and power in this probably last meeting of the season.

Bro. Cummings, Bro. Hemenway, and Bro. H. Pratt, have engaged to attend, Bro. Mathewson is expected. Brn. in the ministry are invited to attend.

HIRAM MUNGER,
ALMON SPOOR,

W. S. CAMPBELL,

Springfield, Sept. 10th, 1854.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting at South China, Me., to commence Wednesday, September 20th, and hold through the week.

Provision will be made for boarding and horse-keeping on the ground. The brethren in China are very desirous of having a general gathering of the saints, and hence they extend an invitation to all, both far and near, to come and bring their tents with them. This will probably be the last Tent Meeting in this region of country, before our Lord shall come, and we hope that all who can will improve this opportunity of meeting with the saints. Brn. Couch, Colby and others will attend.

In behalf of the brethren,
F. H. BERICK.

P. S.—Brethren coming from the west by steamboat or cars, will stop at Augusta, and proceed from thence by stage to the ground.

Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, the stage runs directly to the meeting.

Bro. Couch will preach at Andover, N. H., next Sabbath.

Bro. Colby and myself will be at Hermon, Me., next Sabbath. F. H. BERICK.

Providence permitting, I will meet with the Brn. in East Sanbornton, N. H., on Tuesday, 26th inst., at 3 P. M.

At the Osgood School-House in Gilmanton, N. H., Wednesday, 27th, at 3 P. M.

B. P. MANSFIELD.

If the Lord will, I will preach at East Kingston, N. H., on Saturday Evening, the 16th, and Sunday, the 17th of this month.

MOSES CHANDLER.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting at East Thompson, Conn., on the farm of Sirril Jacobs, commencing the 20th of Sept., and continuing over the Sabbath. Brn. coming from the east, will come by the N. E. Central R. R.; Brn. from the west, by the Norwich R. R. to Mechanicsville, thence to East Thompson. This meeting is in a new field, and we hope the Brn. far and near will attend, and come prepared to lodge on the ground. We shall need two or three tents for lodging tents. Will some Bro. or Brn. see that we are provided for? Preaching Brn. are requested to attend, as the Lord may direct. Bro. Cummings is expected to attend. Come, brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord, and help sound the last solemn cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

We appoint this meeting, as servants of the Great Head of the Church.

FIELDER CONVERSE,
J. HEMENWAY.

GROVE MEETING.

A Grove Meeting will be holden in New Milford, Conn., near the village, commencing Sep. 20, and continuing over the Sabbath.

CAMP MEETING.

If the Lord will, there will be a Camp Meeting on the Jerusalem Platform of Truth, Freedom and the Holy Ghost, at Peace Dale, R. I., commencing Tuesday, Sept. 19th, and continuing over Sunday.

Persons will come on the Providence and Stonnington Railroad, stop at Kingston depot, where teams will be in readiness to convey passengers to the encampment.

Kingston is about midway between Providence and Stonington. Come with tents.—Boarding on the ground. Provision for God's poor. May God send the ministers in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

WALTER PRATT,
H. L. HASTINGS.

P. S. Arrangements will be made to reduce the fare on the cars, if possible.

GROVE MEETING.

There will be a Grove Meeting in Hartford, Vt., commencing Sept. 20, and continuing over the Sabbath. It will be held in a grove on the road leading from West Hartford to Woodstock Green, 3 miles from West Hartford. Brother Isaac Adrian promises to attend, and Brn. from abroad are respectfully requested to attend, and bring tents and provisions, all that can; and those that cannot, will be provided for on the ground. Those coming in the cars will stop at West Hartford, and there will be means of conveyance to the ground. R. G. CULVER.

TENT MEETING.

If it please the Good Master, there will be a Tent Meeting within a few rods of the depot in Canaan, N. H., to commence on Wednesday, Sept. the 20th, at one o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Board and lodging for fifty cents a day, for all who wish, by the owner of the ground, (Mr Hutchinson); but all the poor will be provided for.

Brethren who can, had better bring tents and bedding. The Lord's preachers, who can attend this meeting, are urgently invited to come; also the brethren and sisters from the surrounding country, and bring all they can with them, with the hope of doing them good.

Canaan is on the Northern (N. H.) Railroad, about 50 miles from Concord, and about 20 from Lebanon. For Christ's cause.

J. CUMMINGS.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting in Greenwich, Mass., on the farm of Bro. Augustus Blackmer, commencing Sept. 6, and continuing over the Sabbath. Come to this feast, and bring your bedding and board, as far as possible. Come in the name of the Lord, that good may be done in the name of our blessed Jesus that is coming this year. The meeting will be about 2 miles south of Greenwich Town, on the road leading from Greenwich to Ware. Brn. Brittan and Pratt are expected to attend.

☞ I usually take particular pains to arrange matter for the press, but as I do not well understand the following notice, I give it as received, and probably those acquainted with the persons and places named, may understand it;

Bro. Merriam; I observed in the Crisis a number of appointments given out by Eld. Charles P. Dow. We wish to inform him through the Crisis, after leaving Northfield Farms 19th Sept., 20 to Hardwick, preach at Bro. J. Weaver's 5 P. M. west part of Hardwick—his route, leave Northfield, come through Erving, east part of Salem to Greenwich Village, 4 1-2 miles, to Bro. Weaver's, to Bro. Avery's, Ware, instead of Three Rivers, say to Bro. Asa Walker's, Belchertown, 5 P. M.—There are no Brn. at Three Rivers. I will accompany or convey him from Bro. Weaver's to Ware, and to Bro. Walker's, Belchertown.

Your Bro. in Christ, looking for the blessed Jesus on the tenth day of seventh month, Jewish time. H. F. HIGGINS,

By request of Bro. J. WEAVER.

NOTICE TO THE BRETHREN IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

Dear Brethren: Your letter requesting me to visit your place and have a Tent Meeting, was duly received; but my arrangements are such, that I shall not be able to comply with your request. Our work is almost done. Do all you can to warn your fellow-men of the coming judgment, and may the God of peace be with you, and preserve you blameless unto his coming kingdom, when I expect to meet the dear saints that are now "scattered abroad."

Yours, in much love.
J. HEMENWAY.

NOTICE.

Providence permitting, there will be a Tent Meeting on the Old Jerusalem Platform, in West Stafford Hollow, Conn., commencing Sept. 13th, at 7 o'clock P. M., continuing over the following Sunday.

The design of this meeting is to get men ready for the approaching storm. We cordially invite all that feel an interest in this all-important work, to come, praying that a cloud of mercy may hang over us.

Those coming on cars, will stop at Stafford Springs.

W. PRATT,
H. L. HASTINGS.

The Lord willing, I will be at Waterboro', Me., Saturday evening, Sept. 16, and continue over the following Sabbath, as Bro. E. H. Hobbs may appoint.

Also preach at Kennebunk Thursday evening, Sept. 14, as Bro. Thomas Emery may appoint. J. WESTON.

Lowell, Mass., Sept., 1854.

GROVE MEETING.

If the Lord will, I will attend a Grove Meeting at Lee, N. H., Sunday, Sept. 17, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M. C. W. ALLEN.

NOTICE.

Owing to circumstances beyond our control, we shall not be able to attend the meetings at Madison Centre and Industry as we intended.

I. PARTRIDGE,
R. R. YORK.

Bro. L. Kimball is expected to preach at the Merrimack Hall in Lowell, on Sunday, Sept. 17.

GROVE MEETING.

I will, by Divine permission, attend a Grove Meeting at Daysville, Ogle Co., Ills., as Bro. E. Chown, and the Brn. there may appoint, commencing Wednesday, Sept. 20th, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and continuing over Lord's day. It is expected there will be a general attendance of the Brn. in that region. Come in the name of the Lord, and expect God's blessing will attend the word. Looking for Jesus soon.

J. C. BYWATER.

If the Lord will, I will preach
At West Deerfield, Sabbath, Sept. 17, where Bro. A. P. Moulton may appoint.

O. G. SMITH.

WATERBOROUGH CENTRE, Me.,
August 24th, 1854.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

It is requested that some minister, being capable of giving the truths relative to the speedy coming of the Lord, would visit the Brn. at Waterborough, Ossipee Hill, and hold a Conference or Grove Meeting with us; for we are desirous that all in these regions may have an opportunity to hear the midnight cry, and be prepared for the coming of the bridegroom.

Will the watchmen enquire of the master, and give us seasonable notice in the Crisis? The Advent brethren here are but few, but they are willing to help the servant, if the Lord has one to help us.

In behalf of the brethren,
E. H. HOBBS.

ELDER CHARLES P. DOW will preach
In Pownal, Vt., Sept. 15th.
North Adams, 16th and 17th, (Sunday.)
Charlemont, the 18th.
Northfield Farms, the 19th.
Hardwick, the 20th.
Ware, the 22d.
Three Rivers, 23d and 24th, (Sunday.)
Chicopee Falls, the 25th.
Springfield, the 26th.
Jawbuck, the 27th.
Warehouse Point, the 28th.
Hartford, the 29th.

Week evening appointments at 7 1-2 P. M., unless 5 P. M. be preferred. As Bro. Dow is a stranger in many of the foregoing places, I would hereby commend him to the brethren as a minister worthy of their confidence and christian fellowship. D. T. TAYLOR.

The Lord willing, I will meet with the Brn.
In Holderness, Wednesday, 13th, in Bro. Willoughby's neighborhood, at 4 P. M.
In Thornton, Thursday, 14th, where Bro. Durgin may appoint, at 4 P. M.
In Woodstock, Saturday, 16th, where Bro. Jackman may appoint, at 4 P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. B. P. MANSFIELD.

NOTICE.

If time continues, there will be a meeting at Bristol, Me., commencing Thursday, Sept. 21, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continuing over the following Sabbath. Brethren I. Partridge and R. R. York will attend with me.

S. K. PARTRIDGE.

The Lord willing, I will meet with the Brethren at

Montgomery, Sept. 13th, and over the Sabbath. Will the brethren provide a grove if convenient?

Will the Advent brethren give me a hearing? I pledge myself to answer all objections against the truths I advocate. ISAAC ADRIAN.

CAMP MEETING IN BRISTOL, R. I.

There will be a Camp Meeting in Bristol, R. I., on Bristol Common, commencing September 13th, and continuing over the Sabbath. Bro. J. Cummings will be in attendance with his tents. Brothers I. Adrian and S. S. Brewer are expected to be with him. Come, Brethren and Sisters, come up to this feast of tabernacles. Come in the name of the lord of hosts. Let all that can bring tents and bedding. There will be provisions made for board and lodging on the ground.

JAMES H. GLADDING.

Conferences.

The saints of God scattered abroad, and all others who desire to be benefitted by the truth, are invited to a Conference at North Haverhill, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, Sept. 13, and continuing over the Sabbath. Evidence will be brought from the Bible and from history, at this meeting, to prove that the Lord will come in the clouds of heaven to judgment this year. Dear brethren in the Lord, come to this meeting from far and near, and have a feast of fat things. Let it be a general gathering of the dear children of God, before entering the kingdom. Bro. Ira Bowles will be at the meetings to labor with us. Will Bro. Edwin Burnham come if possible, and Bro. J. G. Smith?—Other ministers of the Gospel are invited. The place of meeting is easy of access, the Meeting-House being but a few rods from the depot on the Boston, Concord and Montreal R. R. Efforts will be made to have the fare reduced on the railroad. E. WHITNEY.

There will be a Conference at Newark, N. J., to commence Wednesday, Sept. 27, and hold over the Sabbath. Brn. Couch and Grant will attend and preach the word.

In behalf of the brn.,
F. H. BERICK.

P. S. At first it was thought best to pitch our tent at Newark, but upon mature consideration we have concluded to have a Conference. Let there be a general rally of the brethren.

F. H. B.

The Lord willing, there will be a Conference of the Lord's people at East Andover, Christian meeting-house, to commence on Friday, Sept. 15, at one o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. An earnest invitation is given to Zion's Watchmen to be at the meeting. Preaching Brethren will call on Brn. W. Sargent, A. Weare, or W. Emery.

In behalf of the Brn.
B. H. COUCH.

Special Notices.

At Parisville, Ohio, they are anxious to have preachers come and give them the word of Life.

NOTICE.—The believers in the coming of the Lord in 1854 hold meetings in Pleasant st. Hall, Museum Building, on Sunday, day and evening; also, on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings of each week.

In behalf of the Brn.
Manchester, N. H. W. C. ABBOTT.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

Meredith Centre, N. H.,
August 17, 1854.

Will Brn Berrick and Couch come to this place and hold a Tent Meeting soon? If you can come, please inform us through the Crisis when—and if you cannot come inform us in the same way. In behalf of the Brn.,

THOMAS D. VEASEY,
LORENZO D. DOLLOFF.

A CALL.

Brethren Couch and Berick are respectfully requested to inform the Brethren of Rochester, N. H., when they will be at that place to give a course of lectures. There is a desire to hear the evidence concerning the glorious Advent of our soon coming King. We ardently desire you to be here as early in September as possible, before the busy season of harvest, that there may be a favorable opportunity for a general hearing on this all important subject. Please answer the call immediately through the Crisis.

In behalf of the Brethren,
[illegible]

Rochester, Aug. 16, 1854.

☞ It is requested that Bro. Edwin Burnham [illegible] would visit Lee, N. H. [illegible] with the request he will please give notice through the Crisis. [illegible]

Will [illegible] this region [illegible] exceedingly [illegible] believe they will [illegible] over [illegible] not Bro. I. Adrian [illegible] man come and sound the alarm in this region once more? There is not a [illegible] in all this region to tell the people when the [illegible] is coming.

In behalf of the Brn.,
[illegible]

The place for a meeting will be the old Meeting-house in Halley, C. E.

Advent Brethren hold regular meetings at Lyceum Hall, [illegible] on Sundays, also on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings.

☞ Brn. in Lowell who believe in the coming of the Lord in '54, hold meetings every Sabbath; also on Wednesday and Saturday evenings, at Merrimack Hall. Preachers from abroad will be obtained when convenient.

Business Items.

We have on hand a few copies of "The Church not in Darkness," by H. L. Hastings.

Br. E. Smith: That matter is all right of which you speak. We shall continue to send them.

Br. H. Pratt: The eighteen Hymn Books would amount to about two dollars—what you sent.

Br. A. W. Sibly: The letter you speak of has not been received. Your indebtedness is three dollars. I. F.

My post-office address hereafter will be West Poland, Me. R. R. YORK.

☞ We have received an order from some one in Union Co., Ohio—town indistinct, and name we can't find out. Will the Bro. write again? He ordered one of Bro. Berick's books and a Hymn Book—sent $1.00.

☞ Bro. B. H. Couch says in a letter which we received Aug. 14th, that he had previously sent us $1. Will you give us your dates? We think it was not received.

☞ Z. N. Palmer, please say where we shall direct your paper.

☞ Notices and appointments must be written as they are expected to appear in the paper.

☞ When Hymn Books are ordered to be sent by mail we send 6 for one dollar and prepay the postage.

☞ We hope persons, returning papers to have them discontinued, will be careful, to give the P. O. address to which they are sent.

☞ The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3.00. "Bible vs. Tradition," can also be obtained of Bro. French.

☞ We have just published in tract form the exposition of Ez. 38 and 39, which was published in the Crisis. We will supply those who may order them. Price $2 per hundred.

☞ The Lithographic Charts and Pilgrim's Songster, published by Eld. J. Cummings, can be had of him at Concord, N. H., or by applying to J. French, of Lowell.

For the World's Crisis.

The Coming of the Just One.

[illegible]
The saints will rise in that day.

CHORUS.

Turn, turn, sinner,
Turn, turn, sinner,
Turn, turn, sinner,
And flee from the wrath of the Lamb."

The Holy One will soon appear
And wipe away the falling tear;
The saints will sing in that day.
Turn, turn, sinner, &c.

The Hope of Israel we shall see,
And where He is there we shall be;
His face behold in that day.
Turn, turn, sinner, &c.

We long to meet Him in the air,
The chiefest of ten thousands fair,
And sing His praise in that day.
Turn, turn, sinner, &c.

The sealing Angel is abroad;
Poor sinner, come, submit to God,
And you will be safe in that day.
Turn, turn, sinner, &c.

Come, Jesus, come and end the strife,
Come, clothe us with immortal life,
And gather us all in that day.
Turn, turn, sinner, &c.

For the World's Crisis.

The Glorious Appearing.

Tune—Emmons.

O come, Lord Jesus, quickly come,
The living church exclaim;
Thy waiting Bride would fain go home,
And with her Lord remain.

O come, the RESURRECTION, come,
The WAY, the TRUTH, the LIFE,
And bring thy people from the tomb,
And verify thy truth.

O come, LIFE-GIVER, quickly come,
Bring immortality,
And give to each believing one,
The life that's hid with thee.

O come, the groaning earth echoes,
Regenerate this sphere,
And bring back Eden as it was,
With holy atmosphere.

Amen! the echoing heavens respond,
Thy promises are sure;
The righteous shall possess the land
And dwell therein secure.

Then will thy promise be fulfilled
To Abraham and his seed;
For thou didst promise him "the WORLD,"
And sign and seal the deed.

And so all Israel shall return
Into the promised land,
And every heart with love shall burn,
To earth's remotest bound.

Then shall thy will on earth be done,
As it is done in heaven;
And sons of God will shout and sing
O'er the NEW EARTH AND HEAVEN.

Hitchcocksville, Sept. 2, 1854.

The Year 1854.

Since the creation of the world to the present time, there has not been a year so full of interest to the world and to the Church of Christ, as the present year, 1854. Does the reader enquire why it is more interesting than past years? I answer, it is so because there is a mighty, stupendous change to take place in the world and Church the present year.—Have you reflected upon the scenes that are to be unfolded to the gaze of an astonished world this year? Have you considered, dear reader, that 1854 is the year when the nations of earth are to be engaged in the last final conflict—the great battle of God Almighty—and that, at the close of the battle, the great supper will be given to the fowls of heaven, when they will eat the flesh of mighty men, and of captains, &c.? Have you considered that there is to be a great revolution in the governments of earth in 1854? We now see in England a Queen—in Turkey a Sultan—in Russia a Czar—in France an Emperor—and in these United States a President—but this is the last year of their reign. One universal, kingly government is to succeed, and the King of kings and Lord of lords is to take to himself his great power and reign triumphant, and sway his sceptre over all the earth, and his enemies will he dash in pieces like a potter's vessel.

In 1854 there is to be a great change in the condition of men. We look around us now and we see many of the wicked enjoying the comforts and also the luxuries of life. They seem to be prosperous, or as the Psalmist says, "spreading themselves like a green bay tree;" adding farm to farm—house to house—pulling down and building greater—saying to themselves, "I will eat, drink and be merry;" but God will remove all their treasures, and [illegible] all their joys this year.

[illegible] we see many waiting through scenes of sorrow and affliction, [illegible] they are [illegible] of the kingdom." [illegible] great change in their condition—they are to inherit the earth. They now dwell in huts compared to the mansions of the rich; but they are to dwell in mansions that Christ hath prepared for them in his Father's house.—They now weep over their poverty, soon will they rejoice over their possessions, and Christ will say unto them, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." This year is the time when the languishing, dying servant of God will, as well as all other saints, be changed from mortal to immortality, and suffer no more.

Those that are in their graves will hear the voice of him that spake as never man spake, and whose voice shook the earth, and they will be delivered from the power of the grave. All this will be accomplished this year!! O, dear reader, is not this an important year in the world's history? Look at the works of art—see the tall spires of our cites as they glitter in the sunbeams—see the broad and well paved streets—and in fact everything that man can invent to beautify the earth, are all this year to pass away, and to be succeeded by a City not made with human hands. It is declared to be [fifteen hundred miles square—its walls of precious stones—its gates of pearl—its streets of gold—clear as transparent glass—and it will sparkle in the sunshine of God's glory! O what a scene is just before us! Neither tougue nor pen can describe it. The wicked wailing, the righteous praising—the wicked dying, the righteous living—the wicked falling, the righteous arising to be forever with the Lord. O, dear reader, are you a Christian? "Lift up your head, for your redemption draweth nigh." This year thou shalt be redeemed—have all thy tears wiped away—see thy long-sought home—gaze on the King in his beauty—see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets, apostles and saints from every clime.

This year you will tread Satan under your feet. This year you will hear the song of the redeemed and the harpings of the angelic host. This year you will meet your little ones who lie in the grave, and they will live to die no more.

But are you of the other class living unprepared to meet God? This is the last year that you will have to make your peace with God. This year you may have to part with parents, or children, or companions, to meet no more. This year you will have to look upon that Being whom you have despised and rejected, and stand before him to hear the sentence, "Depart, ye cursed," unless you make a speedy preparation to meet him in peace. O take warning and flee to Christ before the door of mercy is closed against you. Do you see no evidence of the coming of Christ? Look at the nations of earth—see them gathering to the last final conflict. Look at the prophetic periods—God hath declared that at the end of the 1335 years shall be the resurrection, and 1260 of them were to close before the darkening of the sun, which happened May 19, 1780; then the 1260 end in 1779. 75 years—the difference between 1260 and 1335 end in 1854. O reader, "prepare to meet thy God" in 1854. Amen.

GEO. L. TEEPLE.

Bethel, July 12, 1854.

Present Truth.

"But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Gal. vi: 14.

Our object will be to present the simple truth as contained in these words. We shall notice, first, what we are to understand by the Cross of Christ.

The importance of this question is manifest from the words of our Saviour, (Luke xiv: 27) "and whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple." We remark that it is not the cross of wood on which the Saviour was crucified; for that would be idolatry. Neither was it the sufferings of Christ in which the Apostle gloried; for that would be inhumanity to glory in the sufferings of another. There are many who think that the Cross consists in professing and advocating the doctrine of holiness. This is taking the effect for the cause; for it is the very design of the Cross to crucify to the world. It lays all our hopes in this life prostrate in the dust, and the man or woman who has the courage to take it up sells it all for the pearl of great price.

It has been the resort of the opposers of the Cross and [of present truth, in every age of the church, to screen themselves under the garb of holiness. In the days of our Saviour the Pharisees made the highest professions of holiness, and in many instances condemned our Lord and his followers for breaking the law. The priests also, who clamored for the Savior's blood, pretended to be so holy that they could not go into the judgment hall for fear of being defiled. The little "horn" who cast down the truth to the ground, made the highest pretensions to holiness, taking to himself the title of most holy Lord God the Pope, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God shewing himself that he is God. The church [illegible] compromises present truth and the Cross under the garb of [illegible] holiness, saying, If we are only ready, it matters not when the judgment comes. The Holy Ghost always accompanies present truth, but these cross-rejectors do always resist the Holy Ghost, as did their fathers.

We have been showing in what the Cross does not consist, and we shall now endeavor to show in what it does. The context throws some light on this point, (v. 12) "as many as desire to make a fair show in the flesh, they constrain you to be circumcised only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ." It is very clear from these words that it was the doctrines these men were preaching that constituted the cross or no cross. The one made a fair show in the flesh, that is they were popular and escaped persecution, and also escaped the cross. The other was unpopular and was persecuted and had to bear the cross. The great difference between those two classes of servants was, the one had present truth, the other had not.

But, says one, what do you mean by present truth? We mean that portion of prophecy which belongs to the present time. The bible is like a chart of the mighty ocean, on which all the dangerous places are clearly described, the latitudes and longitudes are all marked out, so that the skilful navigator who keeps a correct reckoning understands when he approaches those perilous places laid down on his chart, and by observing all the necessary precautions, having his ship in proper trim and keeping a sharp look-out, he passes through the dangers and reaches the harbor in safety. Now whatever part of the ocean the ship is sailing in, that part of the chart to her commander is present truth.—

In order to make this point still more clear, let us cast our eyes back on the history of the church.—The true prophets of God had generally to deliver very unpleasant messages to the people, of judgments on nations, cities, armies or individuals, as the case might be; and what made those messages still more unpleasant, was the vast numbers of false prophets that would contradict their testimony, and prophecy smooth things to the people. The general result was, the true prophets were either imprisoned or put to death; but as soon as the church had passed by this portion of her history, the prophets and their predictions were both honored by the nominal church. In the days of our Saviour they garnished the sepulchres of the prophets and acknowledged all the good in the past, but they rejected present truth. The more important the truth is, when the church arrives at it on the chart, the greater effort the devil makes to put it down.

In proof of this we refer to Revelation xii: 4. "And the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born." Some say this was pagan Rome that stood before the woman; we have no objections to say that pagan Rome was the agent employed by the devil to do his work; and he very frequently employs ministers of the gospel to crush present truth, and the better they understand the mode of attack, the more desirous he feels to have them employed in his service.

We see from the last of this chapter that "the dragon was wroth with the woman and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."

Revelation xix. 10, reads "for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." From these two portions of scripture we are enabled to mark out the attack of the old serpent. It is to destroy the remnant that have the testimony of Jesus, and that testimony is the spirit of prophecy; not past prophecy, which is a matter of history, and has become popular with the nominal church, but present truth. This constitutes the great battle field of the enemy of all righteousness.

But the church passes over the Apostolic age and that portion of the chart that had its fulfilment there.

The next place in the history of the church which stands out most conspicuous on our chart, is where she suffers under her professed friends; her instruction is to fly into the wilderness. She flies from a persecuting church, that professes to believe the Bible, and indorses all fulfilled prophecy, but casts down present truth to the ground. But the church passes on through this dark night of blood and slaughter and obtains toleration again. The next point of great importance on our chart is the time of the judgment and the unsealing of Daniel's book. The virgins go forth and deliver this message; but it is rejected by all the popular churches. They admit all the past fulfilment of prophecy from the beginning, but they reject present truth.

We now consider these points fully established; first, that the Cross of Christ, in which the Apostle gloried, consisted in present truth. Secondly, that present truth is that portion of the prophetic chart which describes the present action of the church where she is living. But do we now undestand our latitude and longitude sufficiently to give an answer to all that ask us, what of the night? I think we do. It is not our design here to give the evidence on time, but simply to state that we have no doubts from the very best of evidence that this is the year of jubilee, and that the proclamation of this is present truth and also constitutes the Cross.

We shall notice now a little of the effects of the Cross. The effect it produced in the Apostle was a mutual crucifixion—he unto the world, and the world unto him. One reason why the Apostle gloried in it was, because it produced in him the very thing the gospel requires; namely, to be dead to the honors and dishonors, the pleasures and the riches of the world.—Luke xiv. 26. "If any man come to me and hate not his father and mother and wife and children and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple, and whosoever doth not bear his Cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple."

The truth brings the church into circumstances that nothing else will. It severs the nearest ties of family relationship.—But the disciple of Christ is called farther than this; even to lay down his life rather than deny the truth. Suppose he is not brought to the test; he, like the Apostle, stands ready to be offered, and God takes the will for the deed, and enters his name as a living martyr. Jesus Christ has bound the Cross on every one of his followers, and he that refuses to carry it cannot be his disciple.

It has been the same in every age as in our day, that the great body of professers have compromised truth and escaped the Cross. In the great movement of '43 and 44' the life-saving position that many took at that time was manifest. They tried to do all the good they could in their churches, but kept it a profound secret that Millerism had anything to do in the matter.—If it comes, said they to themselves, we will be all right; but if it does not come, we will be saved from making any sacrifice either of our standing in the church, or our property.

If all the church in every age had pursued this course, there never would have been a martyr, in the world for the truth, and if we judge from the testimony of our Saviour, there never would have been a christian in the world. God wants honest men or none—that will act out their faith if it cost them their lives. Our experience in this great movement is worth a great deal to us. We look back 1800 years and see the Saviour retiring in the evening with a few of his disciples to the mount of Olives. He told them many things about his coming, and among the rest he told them our experience. He anticipated our disappointment in the going forth of the virgins, and delivered it to us to fulfil before it became a matter of history. Had we known it, we never would have fulfilled it; but our infallible chart must be followed. We now look back on the whole movement and it affords a glorious light.—After our disappointment we passed through a long night of darkness, and as it is natural for men to sleep in the night, we slumbered and slept. But in one of our half-sleeping moments we saw a light in the distance, like to a small star light. It continued to increase and increase as we examined our chart, until our whole souls were lighted up again; but the best of all was, this light brought with it the same hallowed fire, into our very bones, that we felt in '43 and '44.—The night of sleep is now in the past, the day-star has arisen in our hearts, and we believe our darkness has gone forever.—We have obeyed the last heavenly call in this experience, and are on our way to meet the Bridegroom, with our lamps burning bright, reflecting their last glorious light on our landing place in 1854.

But John gives us another feature of our experience in Revelation x. While the Saviour in the parable of the ten virgins gives the outward movement of the church, John enters into our hearts and throws them open to the world. In the introduction of our experience in this chapter, "the angel lifts up his hand to heaven and swears by him that liveth forever that there should be time no longer." So that we see from what goes before that the experience is on time. The first thing brought to view is a little book open in the Angel's hand. The book of Daniel was to be sealed to the time of the end. This book is delivered open to the church, and she is commanded to eat it up. This was fulfilled to the very letter in '43 and '44. The book of Daniel (as it reads in the Catholic Bible) was completely devoured. It produced at first great joy and sweetness, but it afterwards became very bitter. Those only who passed through that experience can tell the unspeakable joy it afforded.—But our reckoning failed, and the Bridegroom tarried. The wise man says "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick. Our disappointment was exceedingly bitter. We sacrificed our good names, our fortunes, our situations, but the worst of all was, we were left in darkness. But this darkness, however, is succeeded by the last message and last cross on the chart, and that is "to prophecy again before many people and nations and tongues and kings." The Angel says, "thou must prophesy again."—We ask who will refuse and be innocent, heavy as the Cross may be. This is the Midnight cry and the last call of mercy to the world. Then ye Soldiers of the Cross, take it up; let your light shine and your colors fly from the very mast head; thou hast but an hour to fight and victory is infallibly certain.

In conclusion I would say, let the proud glory in their popularity; let the miser glory in his wealth; let the man of pleasure glory in the lusts of the flesh; let the warrior glory in his conquests and let the slaveholder glory in grinding the face of the poor: but God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world.

ABRAHAM FLAVELL.

SUGAR HILL, August 17th, 1854.

Br. Merriam:—My heart is full, and while I sit down to pen a few of my thoughts and feelings for the Crisis, I pray God that what I write may be for his glory, and for the edification of the Church of God.—We are now passing through the straights, and some are falling on the right hand, some on the left, which increases our trials, and makes our hearts sad; and we are ready to exclaim from the bitterness of our souls, who will be able to stand?—While the unholy elements are raging against the truth, my faith stands unshaken, that Jesus will come this year to redeem his people. God's word declares, "the wise shall understand," and I sincerely believe it was the definite time they were to understand; the true time I believe is now understood. God's dear children will love the time, and prepare for the glorious change that awaits them. God has commanded his servants to "write the vision and make it plain; that he may run that readeth it." Now if the time could not be understood by man, why did God say make it plain? He did design his Church should know the time of her deliverance, as plainly as Noah knew when the flood was coming. Thus it was spoken by the prophet, and thus it is being fulfilled, thank God. And who are the wise? They are those that believe God: and he has "chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom." It is not the great, the high and the noble; for that "that is highly esteemed among men, is an abomination in the sight of God." Who were the wise in the east in the days of our Saviour's first Advent to the world? To whom was his birth revealed? To the humble shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem watching their flocks by night. And lo an Angel was sent from God to announce the birth of the Saviour, saying, "unto us is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour which is Christ the Lord. Who believed that Bethlehem babe born in a manger, was the Saviour of the world? Those humble shepherds believed it. Who were his followers? Oh it was the poor class of people, a few fishermen and the like. But did not the rulers believe on him? But very few who were thought much of believed him to be the Mesiah. There was Simeon and Anna, they were "waiting for the consolation of Israel;" they knew him; and why did they know it was Jesus? Because they understood their Bibles which told them the time when he should be born; and when the time had come, the good old grey-headed sire took the babe in his arms and blessed him, and said, "now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation which thou hast prepared before the face of all people. A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. And now this moment while I write, my heart is melted into devout thanksgiving and praise to God that unto us a Saviour was born—that he lived our example—died our sacrifice—and rose again for our justification. Oh blessed, blessed THRICE BLESSED be the Lord, we shall see that Bethlehem Babe soon, not as a babe in a manger; but crowned a King upon his throne. "And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Who are looking for and expecting him soon to come? It is that class of Brn. mostly in our Advent ranks, that have been the least esteemed among men; but God has loved them; and when they heard the voice of the good shepherd, they knew his voice from that of a stranger, and they were ready to follow him, glory to his blessed name. Oh yes, "as the cross bearing throng were advancing along" they were glad to step in the train and move along with them. The Midnight Cry aroused them from their slumbers, and they listen—they know the voice of God is in it—they shake themselves from their lethargy—they trim their lamps—they search God's word, and are ready to exclaim, this is that spoken by the Saviour in the 25th of Matt.—They search into those things. Angels desired to look into them (and whoso readeth let him understand,) and they find the days of the tribulation of the Church commenced in 519, and the days of that tribulation were to last 1260 years, and immediately after those days expired the sun should be darkened. Those days did end in 1779, and 75 years from that our long looked-for Saviour will come. The sun was darkened May 29th, 1780, which marks the days of tribulation ended. Daniel is to stand in his lot at the end of the 1335 days; those days commenced in 519 and consequently will end this year. Oh then, if this be true, the great Life-giver will come and give life to his saints—the resurrection will take place—and Daniel will stand in his lot. Glory, Hallelujah for such a bright prospect as this.

But do the rulers believe? Many of the so called pioneers in the cause reject it; but it is no less true; and although many of our dear Brn. that went forth with us in '44, refuse to go with us now, yet we must move onward. We must go out once more whole-hearted and untrammeled—go on to the "flat rock"—cut our ropes—let go our boats—make no provision for the flesh to fulfill the lust thereof and this time

Our Deliverer He will come,

Oh yes, we shall not be disappointed again—the Bridegroom will come, and they that are ready will go in with Him to the marriage, and the door will be shut.—Oh what shouts and happy greetings in that day. There friends will meet again who have loved; but oh the awful time of separation here on the earth! Parents and children will then have to part to meet no more. Truly, thought I, when I read in the last Crisis the letter from Br. Brewer, that dear Brother knows the feelings of my heart for my poor lost children; and none but a parent can know the anguish of a parent's heart, while [illegible] that Jesus is coming this year, and their [illegible] unprepared, I often cry, "behold a mother's tears, and hear a mother's prayers for her loved ones, oh Lord;" and mercy, mercy shall be my plea, as long as Christ is on the mercy seat. Our cup will be a mixture until we arrive safely at home; then sorrow and mourning will flee away.

Our meeting here was well attended by Brn. from abroad. There are a goodly number in this region that believe in time, thank the Lord, and they expect Jesus will come this year. They came together like wells full of water, and like clouds filled with rain; and we had a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord. It will be remembered by us till Jesus comes. God was with us of a truth; and never did I wait upon a company of Brn. and Sisters with such delight as in this meeting. The preaching by Br. Whitney was plain, and to the point, under the demonstration of the spirit and power from on high; and we do hope good will be the result. The spirit of '44 was with us, not a hard censorious spirit, but a spirit of love and of power, and of a sound mind, blessed be the Lord. Those dear Brn. and Sisters who stand aloof for fear of another disappointment, and refuse to go out with us to meet the Bridegroom, do not realize how much they are losing. I never was so thankful as I am now that my eyes have been open to see this glorious light; and never so thankful as now that I am numbered with this people that is every where spoken against. All glory to the name of our God; he will lead his little army safely through, and give them everlasting consolation in his kingdom this year. I thank God's holy name that he has raised up men in these last days, and endowed them with power from on high, (whose terors make us not afraid,) to give this last note of warning to this fire-doomed worl. Their voice is heard through the length and breadth of the land, "behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."—The watchmen are giving the true time of night—their echo is "the morning cometh and also the night;" and happy will be, in a little from this, that company that shall heed the cry, and get ready to hail the coming King. Cheer up, then, my dear Brn. and sisters, we shall soon gain that healthful shore where parting will never come. We formed a happy acquaintance with Brn. from a distance in our meeting, that we no more expect to meet till we meet in the Kingdom of God. We hope there to meet all the dear saints to part no more forever. [Amen. From your sister in tribulation.

For the World's Crisis.

The Christian Pilgrim. Heb. XI., 13.

BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

Air—Lily Dale.

As a pilgrim and stranger I wander alone
Through this world of sin and wo;
But my Saviour is near, and I've nothing to fear
As I homeward and heavenward go.

CHORUS.

O Saviour, dear Saviour, quickly appear,
Then thy saints shall rejoice in their bright, happy home,
And thy kingdom in glory share.

The afflictions and trials I meet on the way
Shall but work out a rich bequest;
And they may not compare with the joy I shall share
In the home of the promised rest.

How I long for that day when the trumpet shall sound,
And the pilgrim cease to roam;
When the morning shall break, and the Saviour shall take
All his wandering children home.

When Jesus will triumph o'er all His foes,
The usurper shall destroy;
And the sighs of distress, and the groans of the oppressed
Will be turned into songs of joy.

And the earth to an Eden shall all be restored,
And sweet flowers perennial bloom;
Then God shall recall every trace of the fall,
And destroy even death and the tomb.

An Exposition of the Seven Seals.

BY S. S. BREWER.

By way of introduction to this little Tract, I wish to say to the reader, it is published at the request of quite a number of the friends and lovers of truth, and as to what amount of truth it may contain, I will leave you to judge: but let me say it is offered with a sense of my own inability to produce anything without God's blessing, beneficial to the cause of the same.

The Book to which we are about to invite your special attention, has been considered by many, a series of inexplicable mysteries—A SEALED BOOK; and, I need not tell you that it is held to a greater or less extent, in the same estimation, by many to this very hour: but I now propose to you, dear reader, the necessity of letting its AUTHOR stamp ITS CHARACTER and ITS OBJECT.

First, its character. It is stated to be, "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, TO SHEW unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: Who bare record of the WORD OF GOD, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. BLESSED IS HE THAT READETH, AND THEY THAT HEAR THE WORDS OF THIS PROPHECY, and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand." What sense or reason is there in such a sentiment, "A SEALED BOOK OF REVELATION?" To reveal, is to show that which is or was secret. We will examine in the second place, its object. It is "TO SHEW UNTO HIS SERVANTS THINGS WHICH MUST SHORTLY COME TO PASS." Now, then, if it is to shew things which must come to pass, it certainly is not to seal them in such a sense as many contend they are. In Rev. xxii: 10, John is commanded to "SEAL NOT the sayings of the prophecy of this BOOK." The Apostle declares, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." The Most High spake to Amos in the third chap. seventh verse, and declared "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his SECRETS unto his servants the prophets." Can you believe that? Again, what saith the Scriptures, Deut. xxix: 29, "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are REVEALED belong to us and our children forever." Now, then, the revelations of God belong to us, so saith the Lord. Did God reveal his secrets to his servants? He most assuredly did. Proof. When he determined to destroy the world, he revealed it to Noah in his day. When he was about to destroy Sodom, he revealed it to Lot. When he purposed to destroy Babylon, he made it known to his servants, Isaiah and Jeremiah. When he purposed in his heart to destroy Nineveh, he revealed it to Jonah. He has purposed in his heart to destroy this wicked world, and as he "will do nothing without REVEALING his SECRETS to his servants the prophets," he has done it, and fixed the times and bounds. Hear the apostle: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." He has done it in the prophecies of his servant Daniel. Read and believe them. "He hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Heb. i: 1, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." John xv: 15, "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." The apostle Paul declares, "He hath appointed a DAY in the which he will judge the world." Men are not judged at death—there is a DAY appointed. Acts xvii: 31, "Because he hath appointed a DAY in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained: whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked." So it seems it is to be at the resurrection of the dead. And we are exhorted to look and see the day approaching. Heb. x, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering: for he is faithful that promised: And let us consider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good works; Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the DAY approaching." How vastly different are the teachings of the apostle concerning the day and the knowledge of it, when contrasted with the preaching of the present age! He would have us see there is a day coming and mark its approach. But how shall we see it approaching? This question will be answered hereafter, in the explanation of the sixth seal. It may be necessary here to offer a remark on the expressions, "things which must shortly come to pass," also "the time is at hand," as found in Rev. i: 1, 3. Observe, dear reader, he is commanded thus, "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter."—There it was to be a history of the past, present, and, in advance, or the future.—Some things did shortly come to pass.—But in the investigation of this subject, the reader must perceive that there were events to transpire covering centuries; for instance, take Rev. xii: 6, which all, except those who basely pervert the word of God, allow to be years, "And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days." Will those who take the ground, that it was all fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem, be candid enough to stop and consider these two passages, one in the first chapter of Revelation, "Behold he cometh with clouds; and EVERY EYE SHALL SEE HIM."—The other, in the twentieth chapter and twelfth verse: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of those things written in the books." Turn and read the three succeeding verses—the sea was to give up her dead—these are all in the future. Lastly, in these preliminary remarks, let me observe, this Book was written after the destruction of Jerusalem, and as there were things written which should be after that time, we must look for the fulfilment of them as predicted, in the consecutive and chronological order of the Book, and as referred to in the first verse of the fifth chapter: "And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a BOOK written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me, "Weep not: Behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof. And they sung a new song saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof." We read of seven churches, which are prophetic, covering seven periods of the Gospel dispensation, commencing with the church of Ephesus, which means chief, desirable; and ending with the Laodicean, which means judgment of the people—age of judgment—the present age. If you will take your Bible, and read the history of this church, as recorded in the third chapter, beginning at the fourteenth verse, you will perceive by the account there written, that there was no such church in existence at the time this book was written. It was to be a lukewarm church, neither cold nor hot—rich, increased in goods, wretched, miserable, blind and naked, to be spued out of God's mouth. A perfect picture of the present church.

There is an account of Seven Trumpets, covering as many periods in the present dispensation. Seven Vials also. Now, in our humble opinion the Seven Seals cover seven periods of the church's history. Six of them reached to the Judgment of the Great Day. The first, commencing with the preaching of John the Baptist, and ending with the sixth, under which we are now living. John's message was the commencement of dispensational truth. The present message, now ringing in the ears of a sleepy church and a guilty world, is the closing dispensational truth to the last generation. This is the dispensation, Christ refered to in Matt. xxiv, that should not pass away till all be fulfilled. Now for the reasons. You shall have them. The generation then living did not see all the events consummated as recorded in his discourse on that occasion—they did not see the events, recorded in the 29th, 30th, and 31st verses, transpire. They certainly did not see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. The army of the Roman hero, Titus, was not the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory—They did not hear the great sound of the trumpet that the Saviour spake of in the 31st verse. Neither were the cruel Roman murderers, or the unbelieving Jews, His, (the Son of God's) elect. The elect referred to in the 31st verse, are those spoken of by the apostle Peter in his first epistle, 1st chapter, 2d verse. "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied." 1st Cor. xv: 51, 52, Those in their graves and those now alive. "Behold I shew you a mystery: We shall not all SLEEP, but we shall all be changed, In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."—That trump you soon will hear. Let me add, the present generation is the only one that has ever lived to see all the signs fulfilled, and you are one of them.

By the above remarks we see first, it was to be a Revelation—to show what was to come to pass. In the second place, John was commanded not to seal the sayings of his prophecy. Rev. xxii: 10.—In the third place, we see it reaches to the resurrection of the dead.

We are now prepared to examine the Book referred to. John was solicitous to know concerning the things written in the Book. "And I wept much because no man was found worthy to open and read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me, "Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof." Let us proceed to notice the sixth chapter, in which the SEVEN SEALS are recorded, and the events as they were to transpire.

FIRST SEAL.

"And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals and I heard as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts, saying, Come and see.

"And I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering and to conquer."

The reader will observe the expression, "ONE OF THE FOUR BEASTS, saying, Come and see." The four beasts referred to are recorded in the fourth chapter, seventh verse, "And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle."—The first beast, or living creature, is, in our opinion, the SYMBOL OF THE CHURCH. The WHITE HORSE, the government. A white horse. Why a white horse? White denotes purity, and in the exposition of this subject you will observe a transition from white to red, then to black, then to a pale horse. As soon as the first seal is opened, he hears as it were the noise of thunder. Thunder, in the natural world, causes a division. It results in a separation of pure from impure elements. In making an application of the metaphor to the church, we see its fitness. John xv: 19. "I have chosen you out of the world." Again, "Come out from among them, be ye separate." Truly John's preaching broke like thunder on the impure carnal ears and hearts of the Jews. And the preaching of Jesus brought out and separated his children from sin and sinners.—The first beast, or living creature, was like a lion. Why was the church like a lion? In Prov. xxviii: 1, we are told that "the righteous are bold as a lion." And truly the church were righteous and free from fear of men or death. They counted not their lives dear, so that they might win Christ."

We will now make an application of the white horse under this first seal. He sees him with one seated thereon, having a bow and crown, going forth conquering and to conquer. This, doubtless signifies the emperor Cæsar Augustus. He wore a crown of universal empire, as it is stated in Luke ii: 1. He decreed that the world should be taxed. "And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed." Having a bow—the principal weapon of warfare at that epoch. Why a white horse? I suppose this color was chosen from the fact that the Roman government was free from shedding the blood of the disciples or apostles, for the faith of the gospel, at the precise time when this thunder was heard, and this seal opened. The slaying of the children by Herod was previous to the loosening or opening of the first seal.—That took place under the law. We will now proceed to examine the

SECOND SEAL.

"And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see.

"And there went out another horse that was red; and power was given to him that sat thereon TO TAKE PEACE FROM THE EARTH, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a GREAT SWORD."

The reader will be careful to observe a change in the symbols of the church from a lion to a calf. The horse from white to red. The third beast said, COME AND SEE. The church is called to see and pass through a series of cruel and bloody persecutions. This seal was opened in the days of NERO, who commenced a bloody persecution on the church, which was carried through the reigns of his successors, Domitian, Trajan, Antonius, Severus, Maximian, Decius, Valerian, Aurelian, Diocletian. What a change—from white to red! The power that had not shed the blood of saints at the commencement of the gospel dispensation, under the symbol of a white horse, is now seen in vision with a sword in hand taking peace from the earth, and red with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. The second beast, or living creature, or state of the church, is compared to a calf, harmless, non-resistant. In that state they were slaughtered like calves. The sword of political vengeance was unsheathed by these monsters, and made gory with the blood of millions of the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. For facts on the above, you can consult Ecclesiastical History. We will now proceed to examine the

THIRD SEAL.

"And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo, a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

"And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny; and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine."

The third beast was heard to say, COME AND SEE. And the THIRD BEAST HAD A FACE AS A MAN. O what a change in the condition of the church! O how is the gold become dim! The most fine gold changed from the courage of the lion and the innocence of the calf, to the fearful and depraved condition of poor, corrupt human nature, the face of the man. Under the third seal, the church begins to lose its identity with the gospel simplicity, taking only the rule laid down by the apostle Paul, to Bishop Timothy, in his 2d epistle, 3d chapter, 15th verse, "That from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Under this seal the church begins to grow wiser and better, in their own opinions, than the apostles; and so they originated creeds with the face of the man on their broad phylacteries, and become "penny wise, and pound foolish." The holy scriptures were no longer sufficient or profitable for doctrine. They then begot illegitimate churches, with their OWN LIKENESS upon them. And the THIRD BEAST was like the face of the man—proud, selfish, sectarian, worldly-minded, lovers of pleasure more than God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. Dear reader, it saddens our heart to think of it. O how true the language of the poet!

"Thy very bride her portion
And calling hath forgot,
And seeks for ease and glory,
Where thou, her Lord, art not."

There is a change also in the political symbol from a red to a BLACK HORSE, denoting calamity, famine and discord—Come and see—is heard by the third living creature. This seal was opened in the days of Constantine, and shortly a series of sad calamities befell the government, which did not close with the reign of the above monarch. War, pestilence and famine trod on the steps of each other. For proof see Gibbon, on the decline and fall of the Roman Empire. On page 328, of vol. 1, we find the following account of calamities which befell mankind:—

—"But a long and general famine was a calamity of a more serious kind; it was the inevitable consequence of rapine and oppression, which extirpated the produce of the present, and the prospect of the future harvest. Famine is almost always followed by epidemical diseases, the effect of scarcity and unwholesome food. Other causes must, however, have contributed to the furious plague which, from the year 250 to the year 265, raged without interruption in every province, every city, and almost every family in the ROMAN EMPIRE. During some time, five thousand persons died daily in Rome. And many towns, they that had escaped the hands of the barbarians, were entirely depopulated."

Such is the language of the historian, Gibbon. Truly it was a black period.

We will now introduce on this point, the testimony of Chas. Beecher, son of the venerable Lyman Beecher. It is taken from his sermon on "The Bible a sufficient creed."

"Our best, most humble, devoted servants of Christ, are fostering in their midst what will one day, not long hence, show itself to be of the spawn of the dragon.—They shrink from any rude word against creeds with the same sensitiveness with which those holy fathers would have shrunk from a rude word against the rising generation of saints and martyrs which they were fostering. * * * This is a radical feature of Romanism, revived under a Protestant form, just as really as saint-worship was a radical feature of Paganism, revived under a Christian form. What has been a radical feature of the Roman apostacy from the first, more marked than this one thing, as admitted by all Protestants, that she claimed the sole right of interpreting the Bible? Has not Rome always either deprived the people of the Bible altogether, or else set up that ineffable church fog of tradition for an infallible interpretation? And how was it that this celebrated feature of the Roman system took its rise? I answer, in the voice of history, by creed-making. It was the creed-making power, which began in the second century, that crept slowly and stealthily forward, and was first exercised in general council in the fourth century, which afterwards centered in the Vatican, and sets its veto on the Bible. This making an authoritative creed, to which the clergy were compelled to subscribe, was the first step; the absolute prohibition of the Bible to the people was the last step. The difference between was only the growth of the principle. For the right to dictate what a man shall find in the scriptures, and the right to dictate that he shall find nothing, are one. * * * Look at the facts. The apostolic churches, during the whole of the first century, had no creed but the Bible. The apostles' creed even, the simplest, oldest, most harmless of the species, was not made by the apostles. "There is," says Mosheim, "indeed extant, a brief summary of Christian doctrines, called the apostles' creed, and which from the fourth century onward, was attributed to Christ's ambassadors themselves; but at this day, all who have knowledge of antiquity, confess unanimously, that this OPINION IS A MISTAKE, and has no foundation." And, still more, when it was made, it was not a test. It will be observed that, in this argument, "creed" means not articles of belief, but articles made authoritative tests. There was no such test in existence during nearly the whole of the two first centuries. They were never heard of until after councils appeared. During the whole of that time churches were independent, all members equal. Each church chose her own officers, and each church was a Presbytery in itself. The modern forms of Presbyteries, Synods and General Assembles, were unknown. The first idea of them was borrowed from the political world by the Greeks, who were versed in such features of civil administration. The idea of an authoritative creed is, therefore, exclusively political. It is not of Christian parentage. "These councils," says Mosheim, "of which no vestige appears before the middle of this (second) century, changed nearly the whole form of the church; for by them, in the first place, the ancient rights and privileges of the people were very much abridged, and, on the other hand, the influence and authority of the bishops were not a little augmented." By thus consolidating the churches, by delegates, into a political union, was formed a HIERARCHY. For the delegates, little by little, transformed themselves into legislators, and avowed that Christ had given them power to make laws of faith and practice for the people. Things went on gradually until A. D. 325, when the first General Council was called, and the first general creed made, viz. the Council of Nice, and the Nicene Creed.

How was this council called? By the authority of Christ? By the authority of the church? It was called by the authority of a man who was not even a member of the Christian church—a man who was an Emperor, and that of Rome. The Roman Emperor, by his absolute political power, assembled a general council of the Christian church! Three hundred and eighteen bishops fully settled the doctrines taught in the Bible, banished Arius in Illyria, and compelled his followers to subscribe. Here is the happy origin of authoritative creeds.

Had I time, I could go on to show you how they multiplied in swarms; creating and fomenting those very divisions they designed to suppress—part and parcel of that ambitious and apostate hierarchy. I would show you how the creed-making power, thus unknown to apostolic times, thus a political idea, thus first exercised under a Roman Emperor's mandate, became the constant, inspiring spirit of the apostacy in all its stages, and having masked and gagged the Bible with creed upon creed, tradition upon tradition, fable upon fable, lodged at last in the papal chair, and launched imperial thunders against the Bible itself. This is what I mean by saying that the creed-making power was a radical feature of Roman apostacy; and this power it is that we are now reviving under a Protestant form. For, we are doing the self-same things by which that creed-making then and there began; and, strange to say, are using the self-same arguments therefor. What were the Romish arguments, from the days of the Nicene debate down to the pontifical anathema? They were, Truth is one—therefore true believers cannot differ. But they do differ. Therefore there is heresy. Heresy must be kept out. Make a creed to keep it out; and as to which side is heresy, 'Quod semper, Quod ubique, quod ab omnibus,'—that is, heresy is the opinion which is in the minority. A strange rule in the world when wise heads are certainly not generally in the majority, but a rule eminently convenient and practical. Yes, shear off the troublesome thinkers, and sing stagnant hallelujahs! This by way of keeping the church pure! This has been Rome's policy. Mother of harlots! How holily she has protected the PURITY OF THE CHURCH!"

There, dear reader, you have the face of the man standing out in bold relief.—We will now offer a few remarks on the following language of the Revelator:—

"A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine."

During the famines and pestilences, there would necessarily be a great scarcity of food, and instead of the usual quantities being sold, it would be dealt in small parcels. Let me quote a short extract from Gibbon, vol. 3, page 269:—

"The unfortunate city of Rome gradually experienced the distress of scarcity, and at length, the horrid ravages of famine; the daily allowance of three pounds of bread was reduced to one HALF, to one THIRD, TO NOTHING; and the price of corn still continued to rise in a rapid and extravagant proportion, * * * and the progress of the famine invaded the marble palaces of the senators themselves. The persons of both sexes who had been educated in the ease and enjoyment of luxury, discovered how little is required to supply the demands of nature, and lavished their unavailing treasures of gold and silver to obtain the coarse and scanty sustenance which they would formerly have rejected with disdain. The food the most repugnant to the sense or imagination, the aliments the most unwholesome and pernicious to the constitution, were eagerly devoured and forcibly disputed by the rage of hunger."

Truly there was a most literal fulfilment of "a measure of wheat for a penny, and a measure of barley for a penny."—"And see thou HURT NOT the oil and the wine." This may have reference to the abolishing of the decree of Diocletian, issued in A. D. 303 in the nineteenth year of his reign, to persecute the saints, which was counteracted by a decree from Constantine granting all free toleration throughout the empire. Grace, or in plainer terms, let me say religion is compared to wine. See the first verse of the fortieth chapter of Isaiah, "Buy wine," &c. The saints are called in one instance, the "sons of oil." See Zech. 4: 14.—Speaking doubtless, in my opinion, of John and Daniel, Zechariah calls them the two "anointed ones," (margin,) "sons of oil." They are called two witnesses in Rev. xi: 3; and, in the 10th verse, they are called two prophets—two sons of oil. We read of the oil of gladness—"he hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness." Isaiah speaks of the "oil of joy for mourning." "See thou hurt not the oil and the wine." We shall have to recur to some points again in the explanation of this seal. We leave it for the present and proceed to an examination of the fourth seal.

HERMON, Me., Sept. 4, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam: I thought I would report myself through the Crisis. For the last weeks I have visited the following places, viz: Pittston, Windsor, Prospect, Newburgh, Ripley, Dover, Exeter, Levant and Hermon. In all these places I find some that are believing God, and looking for the promise at the end of the days, which will take place this present year, in the tenth day of the seventh month, to fulfil the word of the Lord written in the law and the prophets. So, we perceive, we have but a very short time to toil here. If faithful, we shall soon be free from sickness, sorrow, pain and death. Glory to God! It cheers my heart to think of the rest that remains to the people of God who have been downtrodden and persecuted ever since the days of Abel. But God remembers them, and will soon gather them to himself.

There are quite a number here who are looking for the Lord this fall. We had a good Conference on Saturday. Some eighty gave in their testimony in favor of the truth. I pray God they may be ready when the Bridegroom comes.

I am your brother in tribulation.

An Exposition of the Seven Seals.

BY S. S. BREWER.

By way of introduction to this little Tract, I wish to say to the reader, it is published at the request of quite a number of the friends and lovers of truth, and as to what amount of truth it may contain, I will leave you to judge: but let me say it is offered with a sense of my own inability to produce anything without God's blessing, beneficial to the cause of the same.

The Book to which we are about to invite your special attention, has been considered by many, a series of inexplicable mysteries—A SEALED BOOK; and, I need not tell you that it is held to a greater or less extent, in the same estimation, by many to this very hour: but I now propose to you, dear reader, the necessity of letting its AUTHOR stamp ITS CHARACTER and ITS OBJECT.

First, its character. It is stated to be, "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, TO SHEW unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: Who bare record of the WORD OF GOD, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. BLESSED IS HE THAT READETH, AND THEY THAT HEAR THE WORDS OF THIS PROPHECY, and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand." What sense or reason is there in such a sentiment, "A SEALED BOOK OF REVELATION?" To reveal, is to show that which is or was secret. We will examine in the second place, its object. It is "TO SHEW UNTO HIS SERVANTS THINGS WHICH MUST SHORTLY COME TO PASS." Now, then, if it is to shew things which must come to pass, it certainly is not to seal them in such a sense as many contend they are. In Rev. xxii: 10, John is commanded to "SEAL NOT the sayings of the prophecy of this BOOK." The Apostle declares, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." The Most High spake to Amos in the third chap. seventh verse, and declared, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his SECRETS unto his servants the prophets." Can you believe that? Again, what saith the Scriptures, Deut. xxix: 29, "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are REVEALED belong to us and our children forever." Now, then, the revelations of God belong to us, so saith the Lord. Did God reveal his secrets to his servants? He most assuredly did. Proof. When he determined to destroy the world, he revealed it to Noah in his day. When he was about to destroy Sodom, he revealed it to Lot. When he purposed to destroy Babylon, he made it known to his servants, Isaiah and Jeremiah. When he purposed in his heart to destroy Nineveh, he revealed it to Jonah. He has purposed in his heart to destroy this wicked world, and as he "will do nothing without REVEALING his SECRETS to his servants the prophets," he has done it, and fixed the times and bounds. Hear the apostle: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." He has done it in the prophecies of his servant Daniel. Read and believe them. "He hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Heb. i: 1, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." John xv: 15, "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." The apostle Paul declares, "He hath appointed a DAY in the which he will judge the world." Men are not judged at death—there is a DAY appointed. Acts xvii: 31, "Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained: whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked." So it seems it is to be at the resurrection of the dead. And we are exhorted to look and see the day approaching. Heb. x, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering: for he is faithful that promised: And let us consider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good works; Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the DAY approaching." How vastly different are the teachings of the apostle concerning the day and the knowledge of it, when contrasted with the preaching of the present age! He would have us see there is a day coming and mark its approach. But how shall we see it approaching? This question will be answered hereafter, in the explanation of the sixth seal. It may be necessary here to offer a remark on the expressions, "things which must shortly come to pass," also "the time is at hand," as found in Rev. i: 1, 3. Observe, dear reader, he is commanded thus, "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter."—There it was to be a history of the past, present, and, in advance, or the future.—Some things did shortly come to pass.—But in the investigation of this subject, the reader must perceive that there were events to transpire covering centuries; for instance, take Rev. xii: 6, which all, except those who basely pervert the word of God, allow to be years, "And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days." Will those who take the ground, that it was all fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem, be candid enough to stop and consider these two passages, one in the first chapter of Revelation, "Behold he cometh with clouds; and EVERY EYE SHALL SEE HIM."—The other, in the twentieth chapter and twelfth verse: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of those things written in the books." Turn and read the three succeeding verses—the sea was to give up her dead—these are all in the future. Lastly, in these preliminary remarks, let me observe, this Book was written after the destruction of Jerusalem, and as there were things written which should be after that time, we must look for the fulfilment of them as predicted, in the consecutive and chronological order of the Book, and as referred to in the first verse of the fifth chapter: "And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a BOOK written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me, "Weep not: Behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof. And they sung a new song saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof." We read of seven churches, which are prophetic, covering seven periods of the Gospel dispensation, commencing with the church of Ephesus, which means chief, desirable; and ending with the Laodicean, which means judgment of the people—age of judgment—the present age. If you will take your Bible, and read the history of this church, as recorded in the third chapter, beginning at the fourteenth verse, you will perceive by the account there written, that there was no such church in existence at the time this book was written. It was to be a lukewarm church, neither cold nor hot—rich, increased in goods, wretched, miserable, blind and naked, to be spued out of God's mouth. A perfect picture of the present church.

There is an account of Seven Trumpets, covering as many periods in the present dispensation. Seven Vials also. Now, in our humble opinion the Seven Seals cover seven periods of the church's history. Six of them reached to the Judgment of the Great Day. The first, commencing with the preaching of John the Baptist, and ending with the sixth, under which we are now living. John's message was the commencement of dispensational truth. The present message, now ringing in the ears of a sleepy church and a guilty world, is the closing dispensational truth to the last generation. This is the dispensation, Christ refered to in Matt. xxiv, that should not pass away till all be fulfilled. Now for the reasons. You shall have them. The generation then living did not see all the events consummated as recorded in his discourse on that occasion—they did not see the events, recorded in the 29th, 30th, and 31st verses, transpire. They certainly did not see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. The army of the Roman hero, Titus, was not the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory—They did not hear the great sound of the trumpet that the Saviour spake of in the 31st verse. Neither were the cruel Roman murderers, or the unbelieving Jews, His, (the Son of God's) elect. The elect referred to in the 31st verse, are those spoken of by the apostle Peter in his first epistle, 1st chapter, 2d verse. "Elect according to the foreknowldge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied." 1st Cor. xv: 51, 52, Those in their graves and those now alive. "Behold I shew you a mystery: We shall not all SLEEP, but we shall all be changed, In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."—That trump you soon will hear. Let me add, the present generation is the only one that has ever lived to see all the signs fulfilled, and you are one of them.

By the above remarks we see first, it was to be a Revelation—to show what was to come to pass. In the second place, John was commanded not to seal the sayings of his prophecy. Rev. xxii: 10.—In the third place, we see it reaches to the resurrection of the dead.

We are now prepared to examine the BOOK referred to. John was solicitous to know concerning the things written in the Book. "And I wept much because no man was found worthy to open and read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me, "Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof." Let us proceed to notice the sixth chapter, in which the SEVEN SEALS are recorded, and the events as they were to transpire.

FIRST SEAL.

"And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts, saying, Come and see.

"And I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering and to conquer."

The reader will observe the expression, "ONE OF THE FOUR BEASTS, saying, Come and see." The four beasts referred to are recorded in the fourth chapter, seventh verse, "And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle."—The first beast, or living creature, is, in our opinion, the SYMBOL OF THE CHURCH. The WHITE HORSE, the government. A white horse. Why a white horse? White denotes purity, and in the exposition of this subject you will observe a transition from white to red, then to black, then to a pale horse. As soon as the first seal is opened, he hears as it were the noise of thunder. Thunder, in the natural world, causes a division. It results in a separation of pure from impure elements. In making an application of the metaphor to the church, we see its fitness. John xv: 19. "I have chosen you out of the world." Again, "Come out from among them, be ye separate." Truly John's preaching broke like thunder on the impure carnal ears and hearts of the Jews. And the preaching of Jesus brought out and separated his children from sin and sinners.—The first beast, or living creature, was like a lion. Why was the church like a lion? In Prov. xxviii: 1, we are told that "the righteous are bold as a lion." And truly the church were righteous and free from fear of men or death. They counted not their lives dear, so that they might win Christ."

We will now make an application of the white horse under this first seal. He sees him with one seated thereon, having a bow and crown, going forth conquering and to conquer. This, doubtless signifies the emperor Cæsar Augustus. He wore a crown of universal empire, as it is stated in Luke ii: 1. He decreed that the world should be taxed. "And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed." Having a bow—the principal weapon of warfare at that epoch. Why a white horse? I suppose this color was chosen from the fact that the Roman government was free from shedding the blood of the disciples or apostles, for the faith of the gospel, at the precise time when this thunder was heard, and this seal opened. The slaying of the children by Herod was previous to the loosening or opening of the first seal.—That took place under the law. We will now proceed to examine the

SECOND SEAL.

"And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see.

"And there went out another horse that was red; and power was given to him that sat thereon TO TAKE PEACE FROM THE EARTH, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a GREAT SWORD."

The reader will be careful to observe a change in the symbols of the church from a lion to a calf. The horse from white to red. The third beast said, COME AND SEE. The church is called to see and pass through a series of cruel and bloody persecutions. This seal was opened in the days of NERO, who commenced a bloody persecution on the church, which was carried through the reigns of his successors, Domitian, Trajan, Antonius, Severus, Maximian, Decius, Valerian, Aurelian, Diocletian. What a change—from white to red! The power that had not shed the blood of saints at the commencement of the gospel dispensation, under the symbol of a white horse, is now seen in vision with a sword in hand taking peace from the earth, and red with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. The second beast, or living creature, or state of the church, is compared to a calf, harmless, non-resistant. In that state they were slaughtered like calves. The sword of political vengeance was unsheathed by these monsters, and made gory with the blood of millions of the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. For facts on the above, you can consult Ecclesiastical History. We will now proceed to examine the

THIRD SEAL.

"And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo, a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

"And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny; and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine."

The third beast was heard to say, COME AND SEE. And the THIRD BEAST HAD A FACE AS A MAN. O what a change in the condition of the church! O how is the gold become dim! The most fine gold changed from the courage of the lion and the innocence of the calf, to the fearful and depraved condition of poor, corrupt human nature, the face of the man. Under this third seal, the church begins to lose its identity with the gospel simplicity, taking only the rule laid down by the apostle Paul, to Bishop Timothy, in his 2d epistle, 3d chapter, 15th verse, "That from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Under this seal the church begins to grow wiser and better, in their own opinions, than the apostles; and so they originated creeds with the face of the man on their broad phylacteries, and became "penny wise, and pound foolish." The holy scriptures were no longer sufficient or profitable for doctrine. They then begot illegitimate churches, with their OWN LIKENESS upon them. And the THIRD BEAST was like the face of the man—proud, selfish, sectarian, worldly-minded, lovers of pleasure more than God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. Dear reader, it saddens our heart to think of it. O how true the language of the poet!

> "Thy very bride her portion
> And calling hath forgot,
> And seeks for ease and glory,
> Where thou, her Lord, art not."

There is a change also in the political symbol from a red to a BLACK HORSE, denoting calamity, famine and discord.—Come and see—is heard by the third living creature. This seal was opened in the days of Constantine, and shortly a series of sad calamities befell the government, which did not close with the reign of the above monarch. War, pestilence and famine trod on the steps of each other. For proof see Gibbon, on the decline and fall of the Roman Empire. On page 328, of vol. 1, we find the following account of calamities which befell mankind:—

—"But a long and general famine was a calamity of a more serious kind; it was the inevitable consequence of rapine and oppression, which extirpated the produce of the present, and the prospect of the future harvest. Famine is almost always followed by epidemical diseases, the effect of scarcity and unwholesome food. Other causes must, however, have contributed to the furious plague which, from the year 250 to the year 265, raged without interruption in every province, every city, and almost every family in the ROMAN EMPIRE. During some time, five thousand persons died daily in Rome. And many towns, they that had escaped the hands of the barbarians, were entirely depopulated."

Such is the language of the historian, Gibbon. Truly it was a black period.

We will now introduce on this point, the testimony of Chas. Beecher, son of the venerable Lyman Beecher. It is taken from his sermon on "The Bible a sufficient creed."

"Our best, most humble, devoted servants of Christ, are fostering in their midst what will one day, not long hence, show itself to be of the spawn of the dragon.—They shrink from any rude word against creeds with the same sensitiveness with which those holy fathers would have shrunk from a rude word against the rising generation of saints and martyrs which they were fostering. * * * This is a radical feature of Romanism, revived under a Protestant form, just as really as saint-worship was a radical feature of Paganism, revived under a Christian form. What has been a radical feature of the Roman apostacy from the first, more marked than this one thing, as admitted by all Protestants, that she claimed the sole right of interpreting the Bible? Has not Rome always either deprived the people of the Bible altogether, or else set up that ineffable church fog of tradition for an infallible interpretation? And how was it that this celebrated feature of the Roman system took its rise? I answer, in the voice of history, by creed-making. It was the creed-making power, which began in the second century, that crept slowly and stealthily forward, and was first exercised in general council in the fourth century, which afterwards centered in the Vatican, and sets its veto on the Bible. This making an authoritative creed, to which the clergy were compelled to subscribe, was the first step; the absolute prohibition of the Bible to the people was the last step. The difference between was only the growth of the principle. For the right to dictate what a man shall find in the scriptures, and the right to dictate that he shall find nothing, are one. * * * Look at the facts. The apostolic churches, during the whole of the first century, had no creed but the Bible. The apostles' creed even, the simplest, oldest, most harmless of the species, was not made by the apostles. "There is," says Mosheim, "indeed extant, a brief summary of Christian doctrines, called the apostles' creed, and which from the fourth century onward, was attributed to Christ's ambassadors themselves; but at this day, all who have knowledge of antiquity, confess unanimously, that this OPINION IS A MISTAKE, and has no foundation." And, still more, when it was made, it was not a test. It will be observed that, in this argument, "creed" means not articles of belief, but articles made authoritative tests. There was no such test in existence during nearly the whole of the two first centuries. They were never heard of until after councils appeared. During the whole of that time churches were independent, all members equal. Each church chose her own officers, and each church was a Presbytery in itself. The modern forms of Presbyteries, Synods and General Assembles, were unknown. The first idea of them was borrowed from the political world by the Greeks, who were versed in such features of civil administration. The idea of an authoritative creed is, therefore, exclusively political. It is not of Christian parentage. "These councils," says Mosheim, "of which no vestige appears before the middle of this (second) century, changed nearly the whole form of the church; for by them, in the first place, the ancient rights and privileges of the people were very much abridged, and, on the other hand, the influence and authority of the bishops were not a little augmented." By thus consolidating the churches, by delegates, into a political union, was formed a HIERARCHY. For the delegates, little by little, transformed themselves into legislators, and avowed that Christ had given them power to make laws of faith and practice for the people. Things went on gradually until A. D. 325, when the first General Council was called, and the first general creed made, viz. the Council of Nice, and the Nicene Creed.

How was this council called? By the authority of Christ? By the authority of the church? It was called by the authority of a man who was not even a member of the Christian church—a man who was an Emperor, and that of Rome. The Roman Emperor, by his absolute political power, assembled a general council of the Christian church! Three hundred and eighteen bishops fully settled the doctrines taught in the Bible, banished Arius in Illyria, and compelled his followers to subscribe. Here is the happy origin of authoritative creeds.

Had I time, I could go on to show you how they multiplied in swarms; creating and fomenting those very divisions they designed to suppress—part and parcel of that ambitious and apostate hierarchy. I would show you how the creed-making power, thus unknown to apostolic times, thus a political idea, thus first exercised under a Roman Emperor's mandate, became the constant, inspiring spirit of the apostacy in all its stages, and having masked and gagged the Bible with creed upon creed, tradition upon tradition, fable upon fable, lodged at last in the papal chair, and launched imperial thunders against the Bible itself. This is what I mean by saying that the creed-making power was a radical feature of Roman apostacy; and this power it is that we are now reviving under a Protestant form. For, we are doing the self-same things by which that creed-making then and there began; and, strange to say, are using the self-same arguments therefor. What were the Romish arguments, from the days of the Nicene debate down to the pontifical anathema? They were, Truth is one—therefore true believers cannot differ. But they do differ. Therefore there is heresy. Heresy must be kept out. Make a creed to keep it out; and as to which side is heresy, 'Quod semper, Quod ubique, quod ab omnibus,'—that is, heresy is the opinion which is in the minority. A strange rule in the world when wise heads are certainly not generally in the majority, but a rule eminently convenient and practical. Yes, shear off the troublesome thinkers, and sing stagnant hallelujahs! This by way of keeping the church pure! This has been Rome's policy. Mother of harlots! How holily she has protected the PURITY OF THE CHURCH!"

There, dear reader, you have the face of the man standing out in bold relief.—We will now offer a few remarks on the following language of the Revelator:—

"A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine."

During the famines and pestilences, there would necessarily be a great scarcity of food, and instead of the usual quantities being sold, it would be dealt in small parcels. Let me quote a short extract from Gibbon, vol. 3, page 269:—

"The unfortunate city of Rome gradually experienced the distress of scarcity, and at length, the horrid ravages of famine; the daily allowance of three pounds of bread was reduced to one HALF, to one THIRD, to NOTHING; and the price of corn still continued to rise in a rapid and extravagant proportion, * * * and the progress of the famine invaded the marble palaces of the senators themselves. The persons of both sexes who had been educated in the ease and enjoyment of luxury, discovered how little is required to supply the demands of nature, and lavished their unavailing treasures of gold and silver to obtain the coarse and scanty sustenance which they would formerly have rejected with disdain. The food the most repugnant to the sense or imagination, the aliments the most unwholesome and pernicious to the constitution, were eagerly devoured and forcibly disputed by the rage of hunger."

Truly there was a most literal fulfilment of "a measure of wheat for a penny, and a measure of barley for a penny."—"And see thou HURT NOT the oil and the wine." This may have reference to the abolishing of the decree of Diocletian, issued in A. D. 303 in the nineteenth year of his reign, to persecute the saints, which was counteracted by a decree from Constantine granting all free toleration throughout the empire. Grace, or in plainer terms, let me say religion is compared to wine. See the first verse of the fortieth chapter of Isaiah, "Buy wine," &c. The saints are called in one instance, the "sons of oil." See Zech. 4: 14.—Speaking doubtless, in my opinion, of John and Daniel, Zechariah calls them the two "anointed ones," (margin,) "sons of oil." They are called two witnesses in Rev. xi: 3; and, in the 10th verse, they are called two prophets—two sons of oil. We read of the oil of gladness—"he hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness." Isaiah speaks of the "oil of joy for mourning." "See thou hurt not the oil and the wine." We shall have to recur to some points again in the explanation of this seal. We leave it for the present and proceed to an examination of the fourth seal.

HERMON, Me., Sept. 4, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam: I thought I would report myself through the Crisis. For the last weeks I have visited the following places, viz: Pittston, Windsor, Prospect, Newburgh, Ripley, Dover, Exeter, Levant and Hermon. In all these places I find some that are believing God, and looking for the promise at the end of the days, which will take place this present year, in the tenth day of the seventh month, to fulfil the word of the Lord written in the law and the prophets. So, we perceive, we have but a very short time to toil here. If faithful, we shall soon be free from sickness, sorrow, pain and death. Glory to God! It cheers my heart to think of the rest that remains to the people of God who have been downtrodden and persecuted ever since the days of Abel. But God remembers them, and will soon gather them to himself.

There are quite a number here who are looking for the Lord this fall. We had a good Conference on Saturday. Some eighty gave in their testimony in favor of the truth. I pray God they may be ready when the Bridegroom comes.

I am your brother in tribulation.

An Exposition of the Seven Seals.

BY S. S. BREWER.

By way of introduction to this little Tract, I wish to say to the reader, it is published at the request of quite a number of the friends and lovers of truth, and as to what amount of truth it may contain, I will leave you to judge: but let me say it is offered with a sense of my own inability to produce anything without God's blessing, beneficial to the cause of the same.

The Book to which we are about to invite your special attention, has been considered by many, a series of inexplicable mysteries—A SEALED BOOK; and, I need not tell you that it is held to a greater or less extent, in the same estimation, by many to this very hour: but I now propose to you, dear reader, the necessity of letting its AUTHOR stamp ITS CHARACTER and ITS OBJECT.

First, its character. It is stated to be, "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, TO SHEW unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: Who bare record of the WORD OF GOD, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. BLESSED IS HE THAT READETH, AND THEY THAT HEAR THE WORDS OF THIS PROPHECY, and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand." What sense or reason is there in such a sentiment, "A SEALED BOOK OF REVELATION?" To reveal, is to show that which is or was secret. We will examine in the second place, its object. It is "TO SHEW UNTO HIS SERVANTS THINGS WHICH MUST SHORTLY COME TO PASS." Now, then, if it is to shew things which must come to pass, it certainly is not to seal them in such a sense as many contend they are. In Rev. xxii: 10, John is commanded to "SEAL NOT the sayings of the prophecy of this BOOK." The Apostle declares, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." The Most High spake to Amos in the third chap. seventh verse, and declared' "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his SECRETS unto his servants the prophets." Can you believe that? Again, what saith the Scriptures, Deut. xxix: 29, "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are REVEALED belong to us and our children forever." Now, then, the revelations of God belong to us, so saith the Lord. Did God reveal his secrets to his servants? He most assuredly did. Proof. When he determined to destroy the world, he revealed it to Noah in his day. When he was about to destroy Sodom, he revealed it to Lot. When he purposed to destroy Babylon, he made it known to his servants, Isaiah and Jeremiah. When he purposed in his heart to destroy Nineveh, he revealed it to Jonah. He has purposed in his heart to destroy this wicked world, and as he "will do nothing without REVEALING his SECRETS to his servants the prophets," he has done it, and fixed the times and bounds. Hear the apostle: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." He has done it in the prophecies of his servant Daniel. Read and believe them. "He hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Heb. i: 1, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." John xv: 15, "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." The apostle Paul declares, "He hath appointed a DAY in the which he will judge the world." Men are not judged at death—there is a DAY appointed. Acts xvii: 31, "Because he hath appointed a DAY in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained: whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked." So it seems it is to be at the resurrection of the dead. And we are exhorted to look and see the day approaching. Heb. x, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering: for he is faithful that promised: And let us consider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good works; Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the DAY approaching." How vastly different are the teachings of the apostle concerning the day and the knowledge of it, when contrasted with the preaching of the present age! He would have us see there is a day coming and mark its approach. But how shall we see it approaching? This question will be answered hereafter, in the explanation of the sixth seal. It may be necessary here to offer a remark on the expressions, "things which must shortly come to pass," also "the time is at hand," as found in Rev. i: 1, 3. Observe, dear reader, he is commanded thus, "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter."—There it was to be a history of the past, present, and, in advance, or the future.—Some things did shortly come to pass.—But in the investigation of this subject, the reader must perceive that there were events to transpire covering centuries; for instance, take Rev. xii: 6, which all, except those who basely pervert the word of God, allow to be years, "And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days." Will those who take the ground, that it was all fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem, be candid enough to stop and consider these two passages, one in the first chapter of Revelation, "Behold he cometh with clouds; and EVERY EYE SHALL SEE HIM."—The other, in the twentieth chapter and twelfth verse: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of those things written in the books." Turn and read the three succeeding verses—the sea was to give up her dead—these are all in the future. Lastly, in these preliminary remarks, let me observe, this Book was written after the destruction of Jerusalem, and as there were things written which should be after that time, we must look for the fulfilment of them as predicted, in the consecutive and chronological order of the Book, and as referred to in the first verse of the fifth chapter: "And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a BOOK written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me, "Weep not: Behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof. And they sung a new song saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof." We read of seven churches, which are prophetic, covering seven periods of the Gospel dispensation, commencing with the church of Ephesus, which means chief, desirable; and ending with the Laodicean, which means judgment of the people—age of judgment—the present age. If you will take your Bible, and read the history of this church, as recorded in the third chapter, beginning at the fourteenth verse, you will perceive by the account there written, that there was no such church in existence at the time this book was written. It was to be a lukewarm church, neither cold nor hot—rich, increased in goods, wretched, miserable, blind and naked, to be spued out of God's mouth. A perfect picture of the present church.

There is an account of Seven Trumpets, covering as many periods in the present dispensation. Seven Vials also. Now, in our humble opinion the Seven Seals cover seven periods of the church's history. Six of them reached to the Judgment of the Great Day. The first, commencing with the preaching of John the Baptist, and ending with the sixth, under which we are now living. John's message was the commencement of dispensational truth. The present message, now ringing in the ears of a sleepy church and a guilty world, is the closing dispensational truth to the last generation. This is the dispensation, Christ refered to in Matt. xxiv., that should not pass away till all be fulfilled. Now for the reasons. You shall have them. The generation then living did not see all the events consummated as recorded in his discourse on that occasion—they did not see the events, recorded in the 29th, 30th, and 31st verses, transpire. They certainly did not see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. The army of the Roman hero, Titus, was not the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory—They did not hear the great sound of the trumpet that the Saviour spake of in the 31st verse. Neither were the cruel Roman murderers, or the unbelieving Jews, His, (the Son of God's) elect. The elect referred to in the 31st verse, are those spoken of by the apostle Peter in his first epistle, 1st chapter, 2d verse. "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied." 1st Cor. xv: 51, 52, Those in their graves and those now alive. "Behold I shew you a mystery: We shall not all SLEEP, but we shall all be changed, In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."—That trump you soon will hear. Let me add, the present generation is the only one that has ever lived to see all the signs fulfilled, and you are one of them.

By the above remarks we see first, it was to be a Revelation—to show what was to come to pass. In the second place, John was commanded not to seal the sayings of his prophecy. Rev. xxii: 10.—In the third place, we see it reaches to the resurrection of the dead.

We are now prepared to examine the BOOK referred to. John was solicitous to know concerning the things written in the Book. "And I wept much because no man was found worthy to open and read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me, "Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof." Let us proceed to notice the sixth chapter, in which the SEVEN SEALS are recorded, and the events as they were to transpire.

FIRST SEAL.

"And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts, saying, Come and see.

"And I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering and to conquer."

The reader will observe the expression, "ONE OF THE FOUR BEASTS, saying, Come and see." The four beasts referred to are recorded in the fourth chapter, seventh verse, "And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle."—The first beast, or living creature, is, in our opinion, the SYMBOL OF THE CHURCH. The WHITE HORSE, the government. A white horse. Why a white horse? White denotes purity, and in the exposition of this subject you will observe a transition from white to red, then to black, then to a pale horse. As soon as the first seal is opened, he hears as it were the noise of thunder. Thunder, in the natural world, causes a division. It results in a separation of pure from impure elements. In making an application of the metaphor to the church, we see its fitness. John xv: 19. "I have chosen you out of the world." Again, "Come out from among them, be ye separate." Truly John's preaching broke like thunder on the impure carnal ears and hearts of the Jews. And the preaching of Jesus brought out and separated his children from sin and sinners.—The first beast, or living creature, was like a lion. Why was the church like a lion? In Prov. xxviii: 1, we are told that "the righteous are bold as a lion." And truly the church were righteous and free from fear of men or death. They counted not their lives dear, so that they might win Christ."

We will now make an application of the white horse under this first seal. He sees him with one seated thereon, having a bow and crown, going forth conquering and to conquer. This, doubtless signifies the emperor Cæsar Augustus. He wore a crown of universal empire, as it is stated in Luke ii: 1. He decreed that the world should be taxed. "And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed." Having a bow—the principal weapon of warfare at that epoch. Why a white horse? I suppose this color was chosen from the fact that the Roman government was free from shedding the blood of the disciples or apostles, for the faith of the gospel, at the precise time when this thunder was heard, and this seal opened. The slaying of the children by Herod was previous to the loosening or opening of the first seal.—That took place under the law. We will now proceed to examine the

SECOND SEAL.

"And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see.

"And there went out another horse that was red; and power was given to him that sat thereon TO TAKE PEACE FROM THE EARTH, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a GREAT SWORD."

The reader will be careful to observe a change in the symbols of the church from a lion to a calf. The horse from white to red. The third beast said, COME AND SEE. The church is called to see and pass through a series of cruel and bloody persecutions. This seal was opened in the days of NERO, who commenced a bloody persecution on the church, which was carried through the reigns of his successors, Domitian, Trajan, Antonius, Severus, Maximian, Decius, Valerian, Aurelian, Diocletian. What a change—from white to red! The power that had not shed the blood of saints at the commencement of the gospel dispensation, under the symbol of a white horse, is now seen in vision with a sword in hand taking peace from the earth, and red with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. The second beast, or living creature, or state of the church, is compared to a calf, harmless, non-resistant. In that state they were slaughtered like calves. The sword of political vengeance was unsheathed by these monsters, and made gory with the blood of millions of the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. For facts on the above, you can consult Ecclesiastical History. We will now proceed to examine the

THIRD SEAL.

"And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo, a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

"And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny; and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine."

The third beast was heard to say, COME AND SEE. And the THIRD BEAST HAD A FACE AS A MAN. O what a change in the condition of the church! O how is the gold become dim! The most fine gold changed from the courage of the lion and the innocence of the calf, to the fearful and depraved condition of poor, corrupt human nature, the face of the man. Under this third seal, the church begins to lose its identity with the gospel simplicity, taking only the rule laid down by the apostle Paul, to Bishop Timothy, in his 2d epistle, 3d chapter, 15th verse, "That from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Under this seal the church begins to grow wiser and better, in their own opinions, than the apostles; and so they originated creeds with the face of the man on their broad phylacteries, and became "penny wise, and pound foolish." The holy scriptures were no longer sufficient or profitable for doctrine. They then begot illegitimate churches, with their OWN LIKENESS upon them. And the THIRD BEAST was like the face of the man—proud, selfish, sectarian, worldly-minded, lovers of pleasure more than God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. Dear reader, it saddens our heart to think of it. O how true the language of the poet!

> "Thy very bride her portion
> And calling hath forgot,
> And seeks for ease and glory,
> Where thou, her Lord, art not."

There is a change also in the political symbol from a red to a BLACK HORSE, denoting calamity, famine and discord.—Come and see—is heard by the third living creature. This seal was opened in the days of Constantine, and shortly a series of sad calamities befell the government, which did not close with the reign of the above monarch. War, pestilence and famine trod on the steps of each other. For proof see Gibbon, on the decline and fall of the Roman Empire. On page 328, of vol. 1, we find the following account of calamities which befell mankind:—

—"But a long and general famine was a calamity of a more serious kind; it was the inevitable consequence of rapine and oppression, which extirpated the produce of the present, and the prospect of the future harvest. Famine is almost always followed by epidemical diseases, the effect of scarcity and unwholesome food. Other causes must, however, have contributed to the furious plague which, from the year 250 to the year 265, raged without interruption in every province, every city, and almost every family in the ROMAN EMPIRE. During some time, five thousand persons died daily in Rome. And many towns, they that had escaped the hands of the barbarians, were entirely depopulated."

Such is the language of the historian, Gibbon. Truly it was a black period.

We will now introduce on this point, the testimony of Chas. Beecher, son of the venerable Lyman Beecher. It is taken from his sermon on "The Bible a sufficient creed."

"Our best, most humble, devoted servants of Christ, are fostering in their midst what will one day, not long hence, show itself to be of the spawn of the dragon.—They shrink from any rude word against creeds with the same sensitiveness with which those holy fathers would have shrunk from a rude word against the rising generation of saints and martyrs which they were fostering. * * * This is a radical feature of Romanism, revived under a Protestant form, just as really as saint-worship was a radical feature of Paganism, revived under a Christian form. What has been a radical feature of the Roman apostacy from the first, more marked than this one thing, as admitted by all Protestants, that she claimed the sole right of interpreting the Bible? Has not Rome always either deprived the people of the Bible altogether, or else set up that ineffable church fog of tradition for an infallible interpretation? And how was it that this celebrated feature of the Roman system took its rise? I answer, in the voice of history, by creed-making. It was the creed-making power, which began in the second century, that crept slowly and stealthily forward, and was first exercised in general council in the fourth century, which afterwards centered in the Vatican, and sets its veto on the Bible. This making an authoritative creed, to which the clergy were compelled to subscribe, was the first step; the absolute prohibition of the Bible to the people was the last step. The difference between was only the growth of the principle. For the right to dictate what a man shall find in the scriptures, and the right to dictate that he shall find nothing, are one. * * * Look at the facts. The apostolic churches, during the whole of the first century, had no creed but the Bible. The apostles' creed even, the simplest, oldest, most harmless of the species, was not made by the apostles. "There is," says Mosheim, "indeed extant, a brief summary of Christian doctrines, called the apostles' creed, and which from the fourth century onward, was attributed to Christ's ambassadors themselves; but at this day, all who have knowledge of antiquity, confess unanimously, that this OPINION IS A MISTAKE, and has no foundation." And, still more, when it was made, it was not a test. It will be observed that, in this argument, "creed" means not articles of belief, but articles made authoritative tests. There was no such test in existence during nearly the whole of the two first centuries. They were never heard of until after councils appeared. During the whole of that time churches were independent, all members equal. Each church chose her own officers, and each church was a Presbytery in itself. The modern forms of Presbyteries, Synods and General Assemblies, were unknown. The first idea of them was borrowed from the political world by the Greeks, who were versed in such features of civil administration. The idea of an authoritative creed is, therefore, exclusively political. It is not of Christian parentage. "These councils," says Mosheim, "of which no vestige appears before the middle of this (second) century, changed nearly the whole form of the church; for by them, in the first place, the ancient rights and privileges of the people were very much abridged, and, on the other hand, the influence and authority of the bishops were not a little augmented." By thus consolidating the churches, by delegates, into a political union, was formed a HIERARCHY. For the delegates, little by little, transformed themselves into legislators, and avowed that Christ had given them power to make laws of faith and practice for the people. Things went on gradually until A. D. 325, when the first General Council was called, and the first general creed made, viz. the Council of Nice, and the Nicene Creed.

How was this council called? By the authority of Christ? By the authority of the church? It was called by the authority of a man who was not even a member of the Christian church—a man who was an Emperor, and that of Rome. The Roman Emperor, by his absolute political power, assembled a general council of the Christian church! Three hundred and eighteen bishops fully settled the doctrines taught in the Bible, banished Arius in Illyria, and compelled his followers to subscribe. Here is the happy origin of authoritative creeds.

Had I time, I could go on to show you how they multiplied in swarms; creating and fomenting those very divisions they designed to suppress—part and parcel of that ambitious and apostate hierarchy. I would show you how the creed-making power, thus unknown to apostolic times, thus a political idea, thus first exercised under a Roman Emperor's mandate, became the constant, inspiring spirit of the apostacy in all its stages, and having masked and gagged the Bible with creed upon creed, tradition upon tradition, fable upon fable, lodged at last in the papal chair, and launched imperial thunders against the Bible itself. This is what I mean by saying that the creed-making power was a radical feature of Roman apostacy; and this power it is that we are now reviving under a Protestant form. For, we are doing the selfsame things by which that creed-making then and there began; and, strange to say, are using the self-same arguments therefor. What were the Romish arguments, from the days of the Nicene debate down to the pontifical anathema? They were, Truth is one—therefore true believers cannot differ. But they do differ. Therefore there is heresy. Heresy must be kept out. Make a creed to keep it out; and as to which side is heresy, 'Quod semper, Quod ubique, quod ab omnibus,'—that is, heresy is the opinion which is in the minority. A strange rule in the world when wise heads are certainly not generally in the majority, but a rule eminently convenient and practical. Yes, shear off the troublesome thinkers, and sing stagnant hallelujahs! This by way of keeping the church pure! This has been Rome's policy. Mother of harlots! How holily she has protected the PURITY OF THE CHURCH!"

There, dear reader, you have the face of the man standing out in bold relief.—We will now offer a few remarks on the following language of the Revelator:—

"A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine."

During the famines and pestilences, there would necessarily be a great scarcity of food, and instead of the usual quantities being sold, it would be dealt in small parcels. Let me quote a short extract from Gibbon, vol. 3, page 269:—

"The unfortunate city of Rome gradually experienced the distress of scarcity, and at length, the horrid ravages of famine; the daily allowance of three pounds of bread was reduced to one HALF, to one THIRD, to NOTHING; and the price of corn still continued to rise in a rapid and extravagant proportion, * * * and the progress of the famine invaded the marble palaces of the senators themselves. The persons of both sexes who had been educated in the ease and enjoyment of luxury, discovered how little is required to supply the demands of nature, and lavished their unavailing treasures of gold and silver to obtain the coarse and scanty sustenance which they would formerly have rejected with disdain. The food the most repugnant to the sense or imagination, the aliments the most unwholesome and pernicious to the constitution, were eagerly devoured and forcibly disputed by the rage of hunger."

Truly there was a most literal fulfilment of "a measure of wheat for a penny, and a measure of barley for a penny."—"And see thou HURT NOT the oil and the wine." This may have reference to the abolishing of the decree of Diocletian, issued in A. D. 303 in the nineteenth year of his reign, to persecute the saints, which was counteracted by a decree from Constantine granting all free toleration throughout the empire. Grace, or in plainer terms, let me say religion is compared to wine. See the first verse of the fortieth chapter of Isaiah, "Buy wine," &c. The saints are called in one instance, the "sons of oil." See Zech. 4: 14.—Speaking doubtless, in my opinion, of John and Daniel, Zechariah calls them the two "anointed ones," (margin,) "sons of oil." They are called two witnesses in Rev. xi: 3; and, in the 10th verse, they are called two prophets—two sons of oil. We read of the oil of gladness—"he hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness." Isaiah speaks of the "oil of joy for mourning." "See thou hurt not the oil and the wine." We shall have to recur to some points again in the explanation of this seal. We leave it for the present and proceed to an examination of the fourth seal.

HERMON, Me., Sept. 4, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam: I thought I would report myself through the Crisis. For the last weeks I have visited the following places, viz: Pittston, Windsor, Prospect, Newburgh, Ripley, Dover, Exeter, Levant and Hermon. In all these places I find some that are believing God, and looking for the promise at the end of the days, which will take place this present year, in the tenth day of the seventh month, to fulfil the word of the Lord written in the law and the prophets. So, we perceive, we have but a very short time to toil here. If faithful, we shall soon be free from sickness, sorrow, pain and death. Glory to God; it cheers my heart to think of the rest that remains to the people of God who have been down-trodden and persecuted ever since the days of Abel. But God remembers them, and will soon gather them to himself.

There are quite a number here who are looking for the Lord this fall. We had a good Conference on Saturday. Some eighty gave in their testimony in favor of the truth. I pray God they may be ready when the Bridegroom comes.

I am your brother in tribulation.

Commencement of the Jewish Year.

It has become with us a question of much interest, when did the Jewish ecclesiastical or sacred year commence? for if we can find the commencement of the first Jewish month, we can easily determine when the seventh began. It is often asserted, that the Rabbinical reckoning commenced the year with the next new moon after the vernal equinox, but that the Caraite reckoning was governed by the barley harvest, agreeably to the Mosaic law, which required the offering of the first fruits of the barley harvest on the sixteenth day of the first month; and it is understood that the latter reckoning, being the true Bible reckoning, is one month later. I do not, however, find authority for this last reckoning from the authors I have consulted.

Horn, in his "Introduction to a critical study and knowledge of the Holy Scriptures," a work of great celebrity, gives the following account of the Jewish years.

"The Hebrews had their MONTHS, which, like those of all other ancient nations, were lunar ones, being measured by the revolutions of the moon, and consisting alternately of twenty-nine and thirty days. While the Jews continued in the land of Canaan, the commencement of their months and years was not settled by any astronomical rules or calculations, but by the phasis or actual appearance of the moon. As soon as they saw the moon, they began the month. Persons were therefore appointed to watch on the tops of the mountains for the first appearance of the moon after the change: as soon as they saw it, they informed the Sanhedrin, and public notice was given, first, by the sounding of trumpets, to which there is an illusion in Psal. lxxxi. 3.; and afterwards lighting beacons throughout the land; though (as the mich nical rabbins tell us) after they had frequently been deceived by the Samaritans, who kindled false fires, they used to announce the appearance by sending messengers. As, however, they had no months longer than thirty days, if they did not see the new moon the night following the thirtieth day, they concluded that the appearance was obstructed by the clouds; and, without watching any longer, made the next day the first day of the following month. But, on the dispersion of the Jews throughout all nations, having no opportunities of being informed of the appearance of the new moons, they were obliged to have recourse to astronomical calculations and cycles, in order to fix the beginning of their months and years. At first, they employed a cycle of eighty-four years; but this being discovered to be defective, they had recourse to the Metonic cycle of nineteen years; which was established by the authority of rabbi Hillel, prince of the Sanhedrin, about the year 360 of the Christian æra. This they still use, and say that it is to be observed until the coming of the Messiah. In the compass of this cycle there are twelve common years, consisting of twelve months, and seven intercalary years, consisting of thirteen months.

The Civil Year commenced on the fifteenth of our September, because it was an old tradition that the world was created at that time. From this year the Jews computed their jubilees, dated all contracts, and noted the birth of children, and the reign of kings.

The Ecclesiastical or Sacred Year began in March, or on the first day of the month Nisan, because at that time they departed out of Egypt. From that month they computed their feasts, and the prophets also occasionally dated their oracles and visions. Thus Zechariah (7: 1) says, that the word of the Lord came unto him in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chisleu; which answers to our November, whence it is evident that he adopted the ecclesiastical year, which commenced in March. The month Nisan is noted in the old Testament for the overflowings of Jordan (Josh. 3: 15; 1 Chron. 12: 15); which were common at that season, the river being swollen by the melted snows that poured in torrents from Mount Lebanon. The following table presents the months of the Jewish ecclesiastical year, compared with our months:—

1. Nisan or Abib (Neh. 2: 1, Esth. 3: 7)	answers to part of March or April.
2. Jyar or Zif	April and May.
3. Sivan (Esth. 8: 9.)	May and June.
4. Thammuz	June and July.
5. Ab	July and Aug.
6. Elul (Neh. 6: 15.)	Aug. and Sept.
7. Tisri	Sept. and Oct.
8. Marchesvan	Oct. and Nov.
9. Kisleu or Chisleu (Zech. 7: 1, Neh. 1: 1)	Nov. and Dec.
10. Thebet	Dec. and Jan.
11. Sebat (Zech. 1: 7)	Jan. and Feb.
12. Adar (Ezra 6: 15, Esth. 3: 7)	Feb. and March.

—[Horn's In., pp. 73, 74.

It seems that the Hebrews were required to begin their sacred year from the time they came out of Egypt; and they were not allowed to eat any portion of the barley harvest until the offering of the first fruits on the 16th day. Upon consulting Robinson's Calmet, which is a work esteemed to be of the highest authority, I find he gives a particular account of the productions of each month in the land of Palestine, and he states that the barley harvest was matured in April, as will be seen by the following quotation:

Calmet, speaking of the productions of Canaan in the month of April, says, "The harvest depends upon the duration of the rainy season. After the rains cease, the corn soon arrives at maturity. Wheat Zea or spelt, and barley ripen."
Robinson's Calmet Art. Canaan.

"The crops in the southern parts of Palestine and in the plains, come to maturity about the middle of April. • • • •—The second day of the Passover, i. e. the sixteenth from the first new moon of April, the first handful of ripe barley was carried to the altar, and then the harvest commenced, compare John 4: 35.—The barley was first gathered, then the wheat, millet, &c." Jahn's Archaeology, p. 70.

I do not find in any of the above authors any importance attached to the Caraite reckoning, and Jahn, one of the greatest antiquarians that ever wrote, does not even give them an existence till the eighth century of the Christian era; but however that may be, there could be no propriety in carrying forward the beginning of the year so far, that the 16th day of the first month would come a month later than the barley harvest. Josephus says:

"In the month of Xantichus, which is by us called Nisan, and is the beginning of our year, on the fourteenth day of the lunar month, when the sun is in Aries, (for on this month it was that we were delivered from bondage under the Egyptians) the law ordained that we should every year slay that sacrifice which I before told you we slew when we came out of Egypt, and which was called the Passover." Josephus, b. 3, ch. 10, sec, 5.

"The Sadducees, in progress of time appear to have admitted the existence of Angels, and also to have embraced the belief of the immortality of the soul; and in the eighth century, were distinguished as a sect, merely by rejecting the authority of traditions. Whence they were called Caraites.

If any are disposed to doubt this statement, it is, nevertheless, certain, that the Caraites are comparatively of recent origin, since Joseph has said not a word, concerning them". Jahn's Archaeology, p. 409.

On the whole, it seems to me more probable, although not certain, that the true Hebrew reckoning of time this year, would bring the commencement of the year on the first new moon after the vernal equinox, when it was visible at Palestine, which would be probably on the 29th of March. Hence the seventh month would commence on the evening of the 23d of September, which would make the 10th day of the month begin on the evening of the 2d day of October.

I am informed that Bro. Hook has conversed with a Jewish Rabbi of late, who states explicitly that the next moon begins the seventh month.

As the spring types were fulfilled chronologically at the first Advent of Christ, on the opening of the Gospel dispensation, may we not look with great interest, nay, may we not expect the fall types to be fulfilled chronologically, at His second coming, and at the close of the Gospel dispensation?

☞ We have received two very interesting articles; one printed in 1780 respecting the darkening of the Sun, and the other relating to the spread of the '54 doctrine in Africa. We regret they are too late for this paper.

☞ Bro. S. Dwight: You inquire how it can be, that after threescore and two weeks Messiah was to be cut off, (Dan. 9: 26,) when it is evident from the preceding verse, that it was to be after 69 weeks.

Ans.—The entire period of 70 weeks was divided into three smaller periods, viz. 7 weeks, 62 weeks and 1 week. Where it reads "after threescore and two weeks," &c., it evidently means after the accomplishment of the second period, which is 62 weeks, commencing where the first period of 7 weeks ended.

☞ I would just remark in regard to Bro. Hiram Bishop, that I have received a letter from Bro. Lucius I. Cook stating that he has for twenty years known Bro. B. as an industrious and economical man until deprived of his health within the year past. I would be happy to give place to the letter, but our columns are too well filled to furnish room. Having conversed with Bro. Grant, and become acquainted with Bro. and Sist. Bishop at Winsted Camp meeting, I have reason to believe them worthy the sympathy and aid of friends.—[ED.

☞ We have just closed our meeting at Hillsdale, Mich. It was a good meeting; five were baptized, and probably more will go forward soon. I only had time to give them the key of prophecy, viz: that the Abomination of Desolation was not the Roman army, but the Papacy. This I regard as the key to the whole subject.—Amen.

FRIGHTFUL RAVAGES OF THE YELLOW FEVER. The ravages of the yellow fever in Charleston and Savannah are frightful. Savannah is almost depopulated.

On Giving Alms.

"And he said unto them, Take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Luke 12: 15. The circumstances which called forth from our Saviour this precept, were these: An innumerable company of people were seen collecting together, made up of persons of different views and sentiments, and Jesus, apprehensive of the dangers to which his disciples would be exposed while they were about coming in contact with the multitude, turned to them and said, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy—assuring them that there was nothing covered that shall not be revealed; and after having instructed them on various points, one of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me. Jesus said, man who made me a judge or a divider over you? or in other words, the object of my mission is not to divide up people's inheritances, and to assign to A B and C certain portions of the same, but to lay down principles by which men of wealth may know how to dispose of that they have under their control in a manner so as to please God—acting as stewards; and to inspire such believers as are poor in this world, with a living trust and confidence in God. Consequently he says a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth—that is, the abundance a man possesseth is no pledge to him of long life or of much enjoyment in this world; and now, to give this instruction force, he spake a parable unto them illustrating the folly of one's course who thinks a great amount of this world's goods is a pledge of long life or of good days. "The ground of a rich man brought forth plentifully, and he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do because I have no room where to bestow my fruit?" Many at the present age of time, are virtually talking in a similar strain, though they may not in every case make use of the same terms. The rich man said, "this will I do: I will pull down my barns and build greater, and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods;" (here was one like men of modern times, laying up something against a rainy day) "and I will say to my soul, soul take thine ease, thou hast much laid up for many years; eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall these things be which thou hast provided?"

According to the instruction of our Saviour, this is a fair representation of every man who lays up for himself treasures here, and is not rich toward God. But an inquiry may arise like this: May not a person lay up a treasure here, and be rich toward God at the same time? I think not. The 21st v. clearly implies to my mind, that whoever pursues the course already mentioned, cannot be rich towards God, unless he can have a treasure in heaven and earth both at once, which would be a violation of the 34th v. "And he said to his disciples, therefore take no thought for your life what ye shall eat, neither for the body what you shall put on; the life is more than meat, and the body more than raiment." I do not understand the Saviour to prohibit us from taking them for our present necessities; for a course of that kind, according to Paul's reckoning, would be a denial of the faith. In the case of the rich man already referred to, the Lord had been portraying the common course of this world, which is to lay up for many years; and now he would have his followers take a course directly the reverse; being assured that their life did not consist in an abundance of this world's goods, but that having food and raiment they should therewith be content. Now, if by adopting this rule of conduct, any of his disciples should entertain fears of coming to want, by reason of not providing for years to come, like the nations of the world, he calls on them to "consider the ravens, for they sow not, neither do they reap, which neither have store-house nor barn, and God feedeth them; how much more are ye better than the fowls? And which of you by taking thought, can add to his stature one cubit? And seek not ye what ye shall eat, nor what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind;" (margin, in careful suspense)—i. e. you are not to make it the greatest object of life to seek what ye shall eat, drink, &c., for all these things do the nations of the world seek after; that is the object of life with them, to lay up of those things for many days to come; "and your father knoweth that ye have need of these things. But rather seek ye first the kingdom of God." Let this be the great object of life with you, to secure an heirship to the kingdom of God, and all these things—your present wants, your daily necessities, shall be supplied. Sell that ye have and give alms; if ye have houses and farms which bring you in a revenue by which ye may be enabled to lay up a treasure here, like the nations of the world, sell them, and do good with the proceeds, as you have opportunity, and by so doing provide for yourselves bags that wax not old, and a treasure in the heavens that faileth not; for where your treasure is there will your heart be also. Now I ask, can we have a treasure in earth and not have our heart on it? And if our treasure and heart are here, they are not in heaven. Doubtless some will say these are hard sayings, who can hear them?—But none will have a disposition to say thus unless they have a mind for filthy lucre. The commandments of the Lord are not grievous to those who love and know the truth; and the commandment to sell and give alms, is as important as any other portion of divine truth; it is the language of our Saviour; and if he did not mean what he said, it was idle talk.—But I am aware that things of this kind may be carried to excess. Every thing assuming the appearance of extravagance should be avoided. All we should be anxious to know is simply the instruction our Saviour meant to impart, and then strictly conform to those instructions.

If we comply with all the requirements of the Gospel, we shall be any thing but worldly minded persons. We shall not act as though our treasure or home were here; but our conduct will be such as to declare plainly we seek a country which is heavenly, where God will not be ashamed to be called our God, for He hath prepared for us a city: our lamps will be trimmed and burning, and we shall be like unto them that wait for the Lord when He comes from the wedding. This is the condition we are to be in if we would be found ready to welcome the Master when He comes. We must be entirely detached from this world, like one with his goods packed up for a journey. When Jesus left the earth, He left in it a pure church, free from human organization, and standing aloof from political compacts, who gazed after Him as He ascended to His Father. In this condition He will find a people when He comes, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. But who is standing out thus disengaged from the world? Many say they are; but are they in reality? Have they on the whole armor?—Perhaps they may with boldness and zeal advocate some of the prominent principles of the Advent faith—or they may go so far as to sell their possessions, and be active in imparting to such as are needy—which is all necessary, so far as it goes—yet all this will not constitute us ready for the coming of the Bridegroom unless we are in possession of the love of God. Let all things be done in charity, or love. If you sell your possessions and give alms, take care that you do not do this for fear of being disfellowshiped if you do not do it. But rather walk out on the commandment because Christ has laid the injunction, and because you love and mean to live by every word of God. Do it with cheerfulness and not grudgingly.

For the World's Crisis.

The River Euphrates.—Rev. 16: 12.

"And the sixth Angel poured his cup upon the great river Euphrates; and its waters dried up, so that the way might be prepared for the kings from the rising of the sun." (Murdock.)

I have for a long time held different views from most of my brethren in respect to the application of this scripture; but have not, until within a short time, thought of writing on this subject.

Some have positively asserted that the Lord cannot come until the Mohammedan Empire is broken down, which they understand is represented by the river Euphrates. This view is generally received; but it has a tendency to close the eyes of many to the time of the coming of the Lord; and they seem cold and indifferent, because they cannot see how it is possible for that power to be overthrown while it is sustained by the allied governments of the West, which prevent, or keep back that power which is to overflow, and pass over, and dry up the river Euphrates. The first mention of the river Euphrates is in the 9th chap. of this book, and from that we must determine its meaning. In giving an exposition of that chapter, too many confound the whole subject by making the four Angels that were bound, the river Euphrates, when in fact they were bound in, or at, or by, the river Euphrates.—Certainly they did not bind themselves, nor were they bound in the literal river Euphrates. It must have a figurative application. If it mean a literal river, as some think, it would not require the Autocrat of Russia to dry it up. If the river Euphrates symbolizes a government, it must have been the Roman Power: for there was no power on earth except the Roman, that was able to bind or restrain the four Angels at that time. That power became weakened in the 15th centnry, and one third of its territory was over-run, and dried up by the four Angels which were to torment men for an appointed time, leaving two thirds of the river Euphrates to be dried up according to prophecy. It is quite absurd to make the thing bound, the binder. When Paul was bound with cords, the cords that bound him were not Paul. The four Angels that were bound in, or by the river Euphrates, were not the river Euphrates, themselves; but they were bound by some other power which must have been the Roman Empire, which was symbolized by the river Euphrates. As Babylon of old was supported and protected by the literal river Euphrates, and was dried up by Cyrus, whom God had chosen to do his will, so the support of Mystical Babylon has been dried up "to prepare the way for the kings from the rising of the sun"—the kings that are to sit on thrones in the world to come, (Matt. 19: 28.) That power was literally dried up in 1809; for the purpose of preparing the way for the coming of the Lord, that he might have some flesh alive when he comes to say, "Lo this is our God; we have waited for him," and to tell the world of his approach. From that time that power has been under the protection of the four powers which gave to it in 1815, ten kingdoms for its support. The subjects of the same are now hating her, and making her desolate and naked, and eating her flesh. There was never a time that her corruptions have been so exposed to the world as at present. The world is engaged against her—banded together for her destruction, which will be accomplished this year, as I believe. Amen.

It was in consequence of the drying up of this power, that the spirits like frogs went forth to the kings of the earth; because the waters were dried up. They have about accomplished their work. The great hail will soon begin to fall, when the slain will be from one end of the earth to the other. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, Amen.

Vernon Camp-Meeting.

Bro. Merriam: I wish to say to the scattered flock, that the "Cry" is still going with effect. I am on my return from Vernon camp-meeting, which was one of interest and profit; and by request, would say the scattered ones came together from a great distance. A goodly number became obedient to Christ, and some followed Him in the ordinance of baptism.

Although some of the brethren were opposed to the time when first they came on to the ground, I found no such opposition when the meeting closed. The preaching was such that convinced the congregation generally that it came from honest hearts. More than this—that it was the truth. May the Lord give them courage to venture upon it. The public services closed up with the afternoon service on Sunday, and the falling tear, and enquiring look, told of deep impressions and heart-felt sorrow. Intermingled with the scenes of this solemn hour, might be heard the out-bursting of overflowing hearts, as they realized that they were going home. Praise the Lord. It was a good time for the little flock; but a better is coming.

The prayer-meetings were very interesting, and most of the Brn. had a mind to work; but few were to be seen idling away their time, or spending it in fruitless controversy. The great object seemed to be to get an understanding of the truth, and impart it to others. Such a course will always result in good.

The evening of the Sabbath was spent in commemoration of the sufferings of Christ, with the assurance of his personal, real, literal coming again, by coming around the table of the Lord. A blessed time, in which the poor were made rich, and many had the privilege of transferring some of their treasure over on the other side of the burning day, by lending to the Lord. May the Lord help us all to do likewise. Yours, H. PRATT.

☞ Our last edition of Hymn Books is exhausted, consequently we can supply no more orders, as we shall not publish another edition. Bro. Hart, of Concord, N. H., is publishing a Hymn Book which we understand is to contain the principal part of the hymns in the Songster and the Advent Hymn Book, with some selections from The Harp. We hope it will tend to remedy the confusion which the multiplicity of hymn books have occasioned. When it is ready we shall give notice.

The Power and Excellency of Faith and the Great Sin of Unbelief.

BY RALPH MERRY, SENIOR.

I have read many pointed and excellent observations about faith, which have been rendered a great blessing to me. Many have highly recommended it, and shown its power and beneficial effects, who have not sufficiently informed us how to obtain the blessing. Will the reader permit an aged pilgrim, who has been taught many years in the school of Christ, and, through grace, has been enabled to make some proficiency, to present a few ideas on the first steps to be taken to get possession of the indispensible grace of faith. For we should ever bear in mind what the scripture affirms, viz., "Without faith it is impossible to please God." And now, dear reader, with a heart filled with love for your soul, I proceed with my message of mercy and good will to you. If you lack faith and are anxious to obtain it, first, get down to the very bottom of the valley of humiliation, and then, under a feeling sense of your vileness and want, earnestly entreat God, for the Redeemers's sake, to assist you in the pursuit of this great grace, and grant you enlarged and clear views of his dread majesty and glorious and unbounded attributes; after which ask yourself the following question: "Is it possible that the Almighty, who is above control, should go in direct opposition to himself, and to his own attributes, and let one promise fail, and thus stain his holy, unsullied character, when he is the very truth itself, and has unbounded power, wisdom and goodness, and every qualification which is needful to aid in the accomplishment of what the lips of truth have spoken?" And by thus reflecting, like a consistent and rational creature, you can get a view of the impossibility of the failure of any promise that God has made. Then let these reflections pass through your mind, viz., what a vile, daring, contemptible wretch I have been, that I should ever suffer, even for a moment, my vain and foolish mind to attend to the base suggestions of the old serpentine deceiver, when he made his mean and wicked efforts to cause me to doubt the very truth itself. Oh, how greatly I have insulted Omnipotence; but may God pity me, and graciously pardon these great offences, and through assisting grace, I will do so no more; but will this moment cast my all, for time and eternity, upon his unalterable word, and upon that Almighty arm that sustains the universe, and he will continually protect me, and cause all things to work together for my good.—But it will probably be suggested to you, that you are so vile and contemptible that God cannot, or will not, bestow any special blessing on you, or, if he ever will, that he will not at the present time, or not till you have met him half way, by duties and good works, and it would be presumption to ask the fulfilment of the promises on one, every way, so unworthy. But God says, "Now is the accepted time.—Now is the day of salvation," "And whosoever will, let him take the waters of life freely." Therefore instead of its being presumption for you to obey him, and take him at his offer, now the great presumption and sin is, that if you are following the foregoing suggestions, you are joining with the devil, the father of lies, to cavil with and to contradict the God of truth, and to set limits to his Almighty power. Let not the reader think me too plain or harsh in the preceding lines; for I speak from long experience, having, in former years, often suffered much from disobedience in this way, and having more recently, often felt and proved the blessed effects of coming to God by faith and prayer without delay, and expecting an immediate answer. I feel to sympathise with the burdened and afflicted, but you know that the kind and compassionate physician will sometimes cut off a limb to save the life of a patient, and that the distressed may be relieved in the quickest and best way possible. Although you are more unworthy and vile than you can conceive, and God knows all about it far better than you do, yet this is no just reason why you should still sin and rebel, by continuing to doubt his word and disobey him. His thoughts are not as your thoughts, neither are his ways like your ways; they are as far above them as his power, wisdom and mercy are above yours, and when he bids a rebel to come now and believe and receive pardon, it is not in the power of angels, or men, to find a reasonable excuse for the delinquent who refuses by doubts and delay the proffered blessings of the beneficent Jehovah.

Unbelief and pride are among the very first causes of there being so many backsliders, dwarfish Christians, and unconverted people. O, what blindness and horrid sin it is, for an ignorant, base worm of earth to give the Almighty the lie.—Behold, he says, "Now is the accepted time; all things are now ready;" and will you dare even to contradict the Being, who could destroy a thousand worlds with a nod. If you are a penitent sinner, or a professor of Christianity, and wish to obtain additional faith, or grace by coming humbly and penitently to him, then the great God, the Maker of heaven and earth, has bound himself, by promise, to grant you grace on condition of your taking him at his word, and coming now at his bidding, and throwing yourself, this moment, into the arms of Almighty Power, by an act of mighty faith. God says, now is the accepted time. God gives you power to believe, and he requires you to use it. He will never believe for you; the act of faith is the creature's. Consider which you are bound to believe, God, your own heart, or Satan. Remember that the Almighty is not trifling with you in this matter. While you delay and doubt, you peril your own soul, and stand aloof from that peace which the Lord is waiting to bestow. "He needs no price, no worthiness, no delay." He commands you to come now, just as you are, with your entire helplessness, and with all your sins and unworthiness about you; it is not possible for you to make yourself any better, by all your prayers and duties: for whenever you find pardon or additional grace, it must be entirely a free gift, through the merit of Christ. Then, I entreat you, to venture on him now, and you shall feel his mighty power, and refining fire run through your heart, and illuminate your soul, and such sacred peace and joy will follow, as none but God can give. I have felt to mourn over the destitution of the church, and over the folly and unskillfulness of individuals, respecting the things whereof I have treated. I see it is the will of the beneficent Creator that they should be strong in faith, and happy in God, and on that account, I am constrained to write thus pointedly. Soul work is too solemn and important to be performed slightly; therefore I write faithfully, as scripture, conscience and experience dictate.

For a further ground for faith, we should reflect thus, viz.: There is no foundation at all for unbelief; it floats on the lying suggestions of Satan, and on the extreme folly of vile, weak mortals. But for faith there is the most permanent foundation, as firm as the throne of Jehovah. A holy and Almighty Being has spoken the word; he cannot deny himself. It is impossible for him to lie. 2 Tim 2: 13. Heb. 6: 18. All his glorious attributes stand ready to aid in the fulfilment of what the very truth itself has pronounced; the Saviour has spilt his own blood for me, and says, "Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out." And he ever liveth to make intercession for me.

I'll plead the promises of God,
Keep Jesus's righteousness in view;
I'll plead the Savior's speaking blood,
And powerful intercession too.
It is impossible to fail
While Jesus intercedes for me,
If I myself of faith avail
And use it perseveringly.

I am not required to work out a righteousness of my own, worthy of God's acceptance, for that would be impossible.—But I am commanded to come now just as I am, with all my sins, imperfections, and unworthiness, without vainly waiting to make myself better, and receive an imputed righteousness, the only righteousness which God will accept.

If you tarry till you're better,
You will never come at all,
Not the righteous, not the righteous,
Sinners Jesus came to call.

The pious Carvosso says, "This is the mystery of faith, that while I have, on one hand, a painful consciousness of my deserts as a sinner, I have at the same time, on the other, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. Now is the accepted time with God; all that Christ requires is that you feel your want of him. What are all the promises without faith? It is faith alone that is the foundation of all our holiness, strength and happiness. How does a life of faith triumph over everything that would distress the soul! I have nothing to keep my soul in motion but faith!" We must be careful that our self-righteous souls do not want something within us to recommend us to God, before we come to him. We must come just as we are, with all our sins and unworthiness, with just such a heart as we now have, with all our helplessness and misery, and come as hell-deserving sinners, to be saved by grace through faith in the merits of a precious Redeemer.—Having thus viewed the scriptural, glorious and permanent foundation for faith, and having seen the great sin and rebellion of unbelief, we are led at once to see the propriety of laying hold on the promises this moment, and of venturing our all upon an Almighty arm, which is able, in an instant, with the power of Omnipotence, to sweep every foe and difficulty from our path; although, to our weak sight, the one has risen like giants, and the other, as mountains, to obstruct our way. For, as quoted before, the scriptures affirm that all things are possible to him that God has in every age of the world stamped with the broad seal of his smiling approbation, and has powerfully sustained, honored and greatly blessed all those who placed unshaken confidence in his holy word.

Believe the Lord doth reign,
And constant aid receive;
Believe and constant victory gain,
Your souls to heaven believe.

I have often been astonished to see how many there are who profess Christianity, who are living beneath their privilege respecting this important grace. Such must remain dwarfs in religion, and live most of the time in a cold and comfortless state unless their faith is augmented. Although prayer and other duties are absolutely necessary, yet, by all our performances, though continued for years, we can merit nothing nor make an atonement for one sin; "For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast" Eph. 2: 8, 9.—Whenever a Christian obtains additional grace or pardon for an offence, it is entirely a free gift. Then why not come now at God's bidding, and through repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, recieve the proffered blessing; and when the Almighty says, "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of Salvation," believe with all the heart, O doubting professor, dare not charge a holy God, the God of truth, with insincerity and falsehood; but, by naked faith, lay hold of the naked promise this moment, and you shall rejoice in a present victory; and thus you will find that those who honor God in this way, he will honor with constant and special blessings.

O trust his word, believe him true,
Who sent his son to die for you;
He formed the shining worlds above,
Has boundless wisdom, goodness, love.
Each moment trust Almighty pow'r,
And live by faith from hour to hour;
And have a hope which cannot fail,
An anchor sure within the vail.
[See Heb. 6: 19.

Let none wonder that some have a good degree of faith; for it is truly astonishing that one soul who receives the Bible as a guide to heaven, should disbelieve the promises of its holy and Almighty Author, and at the same time believe the father of lies. And now, reader, with prayers for your present and eternal welfare, I bid you adieu, being in the sixty eighth year of my age, and the forty-fifth of my Christian war are. This may be the last attempt that I shall ever make with my pen for the good of souls; for I have made this effort with pain and great difficulty on account of extreme weakness of sight, which I fear will terminate in blindness.

Word of Warning.

"And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."—[Matt. 25: 6.

I shall not say that the above "cry" is made before certain events come to pass of a nature to cause all men to know that the long-looked for second advent of Christ has at length come; such events as "the sign of the Son of Man in Heaven," "shaking of the powers of Heaven," &c. I shall only say that it is possible, or probable, that the above "cry" is an event prior to such events as just mentioned, and is to be known as a matter of belief, instead of actual knowledge. It is probable or possible, therefore, that the present awakening to the subject of the second advent, is the "cry" mentioned in the text. If such is the probable or even possible state of the case, it is very important that we know it, for the cry under consideration demands action on the part of those to whom it is addressed—it is a call to certain obedience, and of possibly an obedience of such kind as only will insure an acceptance of Christ when he comes. The cry, therefore, is a probable, or possible event in probation.

1. Because it is a call to obedience of some kind.

2. Because the wise or true servants of God who had gone forth to meet the bridegroom, encourage those who had with them gone forth, but without sincerity, or without making the needful preparation, they encourage them to seek a preparation after or when the cry is made. "And the foolish said unto the wise—Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell and buy for yourselves." Vs. 8 and 9.

3. Because the coming of Christ, as represented by the parable containing the text, was to be preceded by a call or proclamation to the Church, and that call was to follow a previous proclamation: for the cry under consideration is made after a previous call had caused them to go forth to meet the bridegroom. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." Vs. 1-4. Such a proclamation we have had, previous to and up to the year 1843 and 44, as all know.

4. Because the present proclamation or time has been preceded by a time of suspense and inactivity, caused by a disappointment, delay or tarrying of the event of their expectations—the second personal and visible advent of Christ. "While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." Verse 5.

5. The text seems to show that a proclamation was to be made at a time of the greatest backsliding or lukewarmness of the Church; that is, a moral declension as dark as "midnight." Facts in the case show that the present awakening on the subject, is at a time of the greatest declension in true religion that the Church has passed through since the days of our Saviour's first appearing.

Just at this time of darkness, events occur of so striking a nature, as to call forth a cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh." Behold, see how cold and dead the Church has suddenly become. Behold how depraved and lost to all moral and religious sense of right, justice, mercy and truth have the nations and the mass of men in general become. Behold, since the first call has proved a seeming failure, and men are thereby relieved of the fear that that call caused, how the rejecting of that call to them, to obey the gospel, and to fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour or season of his judgment has come, has inspired them to commit the grossest sins—to commit acts almost unparalleled in any past time of equal light and advantages. Behold, how the seeming failure of the past call has manifested how slight was the separation of the popular church from the world and worldly governments! "While they be folden together as thorns, and while they be drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry." Nahum 1: 10.

Reader, does the present fulfilment of predicted events, cause you, like the wise virgins in the parable, to prepare with alacrity for the coming of the great day; or have you come up to this fearful period of time with so little care for the service of God, or inheritance in the kingdom, that like the foolish virgins, you waste your precious moments in unmeaning resolves?—Beware lest you meet their doom. "And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But he answered and said, Verily, I say unto you, I know you not."—[Selected.

Later from Europe.

By the St. Louis, from Havre via Southampton and London, at New York yesterday, and by the Niagara, from Liverpool, at Halifax last night, we have seven days later advices from Europe, dates to the second inst.

The day appointed for the sailing of the expedition to the Crimea, was the 20th of August, (but some say on the 30th.) It is composed of 70,000 men, including 20,000 Turks. The cholera was not so violent as it had been among the troops. Omar Pacha, with 25,000 men, entered Bucharest on the 22d, and was most enthusiastically received. The cholera is raging very badly at Bomarsund. It is supposed that a descent on the coast of Finland is meditated. The French troops have re-embarked at Bomarsund, and part of the fleet had sailed toward Finland.

German papers announce the approaching conclusion of a treaty, offensive and defensive, between Austria and the Western Powers. The Belgian Ministry has resigned en masse. Queen Christiana left Madrid August 28th for Lisbon. Her departure was unopposed.

Constantinople letters of the 20th announce a great battle near Kars on the 7th; result undecisive; 5000 killed on both sides. Hassan Pasha was killed, and Mustapha Pasha wounded. Three Russian generals were disabled.

A despatch from Varna, received via Rutschuk, says that at the date of the 20th, the allied fleets had not weighed anchor, but that all was ready for a start at a moment's notice.—Five hundred shops and private houses had been destroyed by the fire at Varna on the 10th. The fire broke out in several places at the same time. Several of the Greek incendiaries had already been shot. The loss by the fire at Varna is estimated at £500,000 sterling.

The Vladimir had her captain and sixteen men killed in the recent brush at Sebastopol. The cholera had broken out in the fleets of Boltschick. It has visited some of the French ships with extraordinary virulence.

In the Swedish Diet the house of peasants have proposed a petition to the king to take measures in conjunction with the Diet to prevent the Aland Islands from returning to Russian dominion. Vessels belonging to Aland now sail under the French flag. Five ships of war, all laden with Russian prisoners, passed through the Great Belt, on their way to England, on the 29th ult.

The Vienna Lloyds has authentic news that Marshal St. Arnaud will leave Constantinople on the 2d September to take command of the expedition to the Crimea, which by that time would have reached its destination.

Prince Gortschakoff made a confidential communication to Count Buol, and requested a similar explanation. He also notified the Austrian ambassador that he had communications to make to the emperor in person. Russia will not accept the Austrian invitation to commence negotiations on the basis stipulated by the western powers.

The commanders of the allied forces have concluded to dismantle and abandon the fortifications at Bomarsund and Aland Islands.—The fortifications were so badly damaged, and so large an acquisition being required to hold them against the enemy that it was not deemed expedient to hold possession of them. It is said that they were offered to Sweden on condition of her declaring against Russia, but Sweden refused to accept the offer. It is reported, but not believed, that the allies have offered to pay Sweden a monthly subsidiary if she would form the alliance.

On the 26th Admiral Napier and General Baraguy D'Hilliers proceeded to Hango, when the Russians blew up the fortifications, and retreated to Abo, where there are 15,000 men in garrison. One hundred and twenty-two mounted and eighty dismounted guns, taken at Bomarsund, will be divided between France and England.

An engagement, without loss, occurred at Abo on the 18th, between 18 Russian gunboats and some English steamers.

Reports continue to be received of great preparations to invade the Crimea, but up to August 21, nothing was known of any embarkation. The cholera continues at Varna.—Stormy weather prevails in the Black Sea. A private despatch from Varna of 24th says—Five ships with troops sailed yesterday and six to-day, but their destination is secret. The opinion gains currency that the first destination of the expedition will be Anapa, and that the allied fleets will winter there. Marshal St Amand was to hold a general military council at Varna to inquire whether the army is fit for service during the present sickness.

The Turks continue to occupy Bucharest, and are strengthening all the surrounding positions. They are also re-fortifying Tirnova, which was razed by the treaty of Adrianople. Omar Pasha has ordered rations to be delivered at Obelestchi, in Wallachia, and it is reported that an English division will be sent there.

A portion of the Turkish force was moving upon Galatz and Ivrail. The Russians would be at Jassy on the 2d of September. Their headquarters were at Baland August 25. A Russian force still holds Galatz.

Further Foreign News by the Niagara.

There was some trouble in Denmark.

The Austrians have entered Wallachia, but their future movements are not reported. Gen. Cornorini has gone to Bucharest to consult with Omar Pacha. In the recent fire at Varna, half a million pounds of bread, equal to two week's consumption of the British army, was burned.

The French troops are getting impatient at their long inactivity. The cholera has made terrible ravages in both armies and fleets, and many thousands have perished, but it is now abating.

Asia. The disasters to the Turks in Asia are confirmed. On the 19th July, Selim Pacha was defeated, and the Russians occupied Bajazia. On the 7th of August, a vaporary display of the Turkish force brought on a general engagement, and a general battle was fought near Kars. The Turks lost 4000 men, and confess that the Russians were the victors. The Russians suffered very severely, however, and an armistice of two days was agreed to by both parties after the battle. The Turks retreated into Kars, and abandoned their camp, which was taken possession of by the Russians, who acknowledge a loss of nearly 1000 killed. The battle lasted five hours. 40,000 men and 150 pieces of cannon were engaged. Selim Pacha, the Turkish commander on this occasion, has been superseded by Mustapha Pasha, who has already distinguished himself on the Dobrudscha.

Greece. The excitement caused by the announcement of the French commander, that, as the Piraeus is unhealthy, he will remove his troops to Athens, is very great.

Spain. The Union Republican Club is closed by order of the government, and detachments of the National Guards had been ordered to arrest the members if they persisted in assembling. Madrid is tranquil. All the provincial juntas are suppressed. Government publishes the accounts of the defalcations of the Ministry, showing $30,000,000 deficit, with the revenue of Cuba mortgages for two years, and all the extra resources of the kingdom pledged. Espartero had raised a temporary loan of $2,000,000 on security of the customs at Havana, and upon bank securities. Notwithstanding the supposed profound tranquility, private advices report outbreaks at Madrid on the 28th, when it became known that Queen Christina had escaped. A few barricades which had been put up, were pulled down by the National Guard, and the opportune entry into the city of some regiments of cavalry, prevented much mischief. Saragossa continues restless, and the whole province of Arragon was unquiet. Carlist movements are spoken of in one or two quarters, and there are hints of military disaffection in Galicia.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Southington, sister Angeline I. Wiard, of this city, aged 25 years. Sister W. was converted to God in the winter of 1843, and at the same time to the doctrine of Christ's second coming in '43, at the age of 14., but in the fall of '44, having left her home, through the influence of young associates, she became somewhat backslidden from God, although she never denied her faith in Christ's soon coming, nor ceased to love the doctrine.—Last winter she listened to the Midnight Cry, and at once awoke, trimmed her lamp, embraced the truth, and lived it out, until she fell asleep. After some months of lingering disease, which she bore with Christian patience, while on a visit to her sister, she was attacked by a paralytic shock, from which she never recovered.—Although unable to converse except by signs, she seemed conscious of [illegible] around her; and when asked if she thought she should live, answered "no." Being asked if the Saviour was precious, and her hope bright, she answered very emphatically, "yes." Her funeral discourse was delivered by Bro. Gun, from Luke 20: 35, 36.

Waterbury, Ct., Sept. 6, 1854. L. A.

Dear Bro. Merriam: By request of the bereaved friends of Holden Me., readers of the Crisis, I send you the following obituary notices of children;

Died in Holden, Me., August 25th, after severe suffering, L. A. Clewley, son of Isaac and Susan Clewley, aged 19 mos. Although painful to part with their dear child, in resignation they have laid it away to await the summons of the last day, when their dear offspring will be brought again from the land of the enemy, to die no more.

The following lines were composed by a sister of the child.

Dear Adrian sleeps in Jesus now—
Yes, death has bound him fast;
But soon a smile will light his brow,
When death's dark dream is past.

Yes, Adrian sleeps in Jesus now—
But death can't hold him long;
Soon he'll awake in glory bright,
And join the heavenly throng.

Fell asleep in Holden, Me., Sept. 3, 1854, Nancy W. Kenney daughter of Joshua and Philanda Kenny, aged about 1 year. It was very hard for the fond, affectionate mother to part with her loved child, but when she marked its protracted sufferings, she readily submitted her child into the hands of Him without whose knowledge not a sparrow falls to the ground, in full confidence of a speedy redemption, when—

Nancy, "rising from the tomb,
With lustre brighter far shall shine,
Revive with ever-during bloom,
Safe from diseases and decline.

Let sickness blast, let death devour,
If Heav'n must recompense our pains;
Perish the grass and fade the flower,
If firm the word of God remains.

Your brother in hope of eternal life.
T. Smith.

Eddington, Me., Sept. 5, 1854.

My beloved Brother: Since my return from Lowell, death has slain another of our number in Salem. Bro. James McCartney died Sept. 1st, aged 29 years. He has left a wife and three young children to mourn his absence. Thus have three of our church fallen a prey to the enemy death in the course of this season; but we hope to meet them all again at the "resurrection of the just." How joyful the thought that a few weeks may usher in that Glorious Morn when the true Israel will meet in the chambers of God, free from temptation, sorrow and Death! O blessed day—there they shall be safe until the indignation be past! No mourner will be there—no, for our precious Redeemer shall wipe all tears from our eyes.

They sleep in Jesus—soon they'll wake,
When the Archangel's trump the earth shall shake;
Then from their lowly beds they'll spring
To meet their coming, conquering King.

How changed—how beautiful they are;
Their crowns outshine the glittering star;
Their raiment, too, how pure and white;
Their beauteous forms how fair and bright!

O wondrous change—can these be they,
We mourned as lost and laid away
In the cold grave with aching heart,
And wept that we were doomed to part?

Yes, Jesus, blessed be His name,
He's come, He's brought them back again,
He triumphed o'er the tyrant death,
He clothed them with His righteousness.

He's loosed the captives, set them free,
That where He is there they may be:
With joy His glory they behold,
And walk the streets of shining gold.
They bow with rapture and adore
Their great Deliverer evermore.

A. B. Draper.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Sept. 8th, sister Abba M. Thomas, wife of Bro. J. W. Thomas, of Lynn, Mass., aged 23 yrs. 1 mo.

Sister Thomas experienced the pardoning mercy of God through Jesus Christ last Autumn. Since that time, she has been a firm believer in the coming of Jesus, according to the time revealed in the prophetic word. She bore with the utmost patience and Christian fortitude the pangs of dissolving nature; and when death came at last it found her all ready. She bade a short adieu to the dear ones she loved, and fell asleep with a firm, unwavering confidence that she shall awake in immortality in the coming seventh month. Her companion mourns deeply her loss; but the anguish of that bitter hour of separation was divested of much of its poignancy, from the cheering reflection, that after a very few weeks, at the longest, she will be restored in a bond of love and union that will never be broken. Then they and the little daughter she has left behind, will enjoy the pleasures unalloyed of a home in the renewed earth, where none of the inhabitants will say, "I am sick."

The writer endeavored to comfort the mourning relatives with the Christian hope as brought to view in Heb. 6: 17-20, and other portions of the word of God.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, a large congregation were present at the funeral on Sunday, the 10th, who listened with deep attention, while we endeavored to show from the unerring word of truth, that unless Jesus comes the second time, there is no eternal life—no immortality, and no world to come; but death is an eternal sleep, from the fact all depends upon a resurrection; and there can be no resurrection unless Christ comes the second time to complete the atonement, the foundation work of which was laid by virtue of the death of the Son of God on Calvary's Cross.

Appointments.

Bigelow's Mills, Sept. 1, 1854.

I would say to the Brn. in Illinois, you may expect me to visit and preach the word in the following places:

Moline, Rockland Co., Sept. 25th, (eve.), and remain over Sunday. The Brn. will meet me at the Depot.

Basco, Hancock Co., Oct 5th, and continue over Sunday.

Lebanon, St. Clair Co., Sept. 11, and continue till the 24d.

I hope to see the Brn. from adjacent places at these meetings. Brn. can write me and direct to the above places. J. C. Bywater.

Fairhaven, Ct., Sept. 11, 1854.

The Lord willing I will attempt to present the gospel of Christ in such a manner as to edify the church, at Cheshire Street, Sept. 26th.

Southington, Sept. 27th.
New Britain, Sept 28th, and at other places as the way may open. J. E. Clark.

I will preach in Manchester, N. H., Sunday, Sept. 24th, the Lord willing.

S. W. Bishop.

The Lord willing I will preach at
North Springfield, Vt., Sept. 19th and 20th.
Hardscrabble, Sept. 22d and 23d.
Wethersfield, Sept. 24th, as the Brethren may appoint. M. L. Willard.

At Houghtonville, Vt., Tuesday, Sept. 26.
So. Vernon, Wednesday, Sept. 27.
Northfield, Mass., Thursday, Sept. 28.
Athol, Friday, Sept. 29th.
Hubbardston, Saturday, Sept. 30, and continue over the Sabbath, where the brethren may appoint.
Westminster, Monday, Oct. 2, near Bro. Bennet's. Weekly meetings at early candle-light.
W. L. Camp.

Holderness, N. H., Sept. 12, 1854.

I wish to say to the Brn. in Wakefield, that I shall not be able to fulfill my appointment in that place the first Sabbath in October next, but if the Lord will, I will come as soon as possible.
B. P. Manning.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting at East Thompson, Conn., on the farm of Sirril Jacobs, commencing the 20th of Sept., and continuing over the Sabbath. Brn. coming from the east, will come by the N. Y. Central R. R.; Brn. from the west, by the Norwich R. R. to Mechanicsville, thence to East Thompson. This meeting is in a new field, and we hope the Brn. far and near will attend, and come prepared to lodge on the ground. We shall need two or three tents for lodging tents. Will some Bro. or Brn. see that we are provided for? Preaching Brn. are requested to attend, as the Lord may direct. Bro. Cummings is expected to attend. Come, brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord, and help sound the last solemn cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

We appoint this meeting, as servants of the Great Head of the Church.

Fielder Converse,
J. Hemenway.

GROVE MEETING.

A Grove Meeting will be holden in New Milford, Conn., near the village, commencing Sept. 20, and continuing over the Sabbath.

GROVE MEETING.

There will be a Grove Meeting in Hartford, Vt., commencing Sept. 20, and continuing over the Sabbath. It will be held in a grove on the road leading from West Hartford to Woodstock Green, 3 miles from West Hartford. Brother Isaac Adrian promises to attend, and Brn. from abroad are respectfully requested to attend, and bring tents and provisions, all that can; and those that cannot, will be provided for on the ground. Those coming in the cars will stop at West Hartford, and there will be means of conveyance to the ground. E. G. Culver.

TENT MEETING.

If it please the Good Master, there will be a Tent Meeting within a few rods of the depot in Canaan, N. H., to commence on Wednesday, Sept. the 20th, at one o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Board and lodging for fifty cents a day, for all who wish, by the owner of the ground, (Mr. Hutchinson); but all the poor will be provided for.

Brethren who can, had better bring tents and bedding. The Lord's preachers, who can attend this meeting, are urgently invited to come; also the brethren and sisters from the surrounding country, and bring all they can with them, with the hope of doing them good.

Canaan is on the Northern (N. H.) Railroad, about 50 miles from Concord, and about 20 from Lebanon. For Christ's cause.

J. Cummings.

Elder Charles P. Dow will preach at
Three Rivers, 23d and 24th, (Sunday.)
Chicopee Falls, the 25th.
Springfield, the 26th.
Jawbuck, the 27th.
Warehouse Point, the 28th.
Hartford, the 29th.

Week evening appointments at 7 1-2 P. M., unless 5 P. M. be preferred. As Bro. Dow is a stranger in many of the foregoing places, I would hereby commend him to the brethren as a minister worthy of their confidence and christian fellowship. D. T. Taylor.

NOTICE.

If time continues, there will be a meeting at Bristol, Me., commencing Thursday, Sept. 21, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continuing over the following Sabbath. Brethren J. Partridge and R. R. York will attend with me.

S. K. Partridge.

CAMP MEETING.

The Camp Meeting to be held in Springfield, will commence Sept. 27, on land owned by Bro. Chauncy Bradley, three miles east of the armory, to continue over the Sabbath. Those coming by carriages will follow the old Boston road from the hill; those coming by cars, will stop at the Indian Orchard Depot, 1 1-2 miles from the ground, which is on the traveled road to Springfield. Conveyance to the ground on the arrival of each accommodation train.

Those coming from the North or South by railroad, will change cars at the Springfield Depot, and take cars for Indian Orchard Depot—the first station East.

Fare to and from the ground, about 12 1-2 cts. each way.

Provision will be made for board and horse-keeping on the ground, at a reasonable price.—The Lord's poor will be welcomed.

Brn. are requested to come prepared to tent on the ground. It is expected that the brethren will come from Winstead, Hartford, Westfield, Warehouse Point, &c., &c. Also, from Waterbury and Worcester. So far from this meeting being a small one, we expect a general rally and a great development of truth and power in this probably last meeting of the season.

Bro. Cummings, Bro. Hemenway, and Bro. H. Pratt, have engaged to attend. Bro. Mathewson is expected. Brn. in the ministry are invited to attend.

Hiram Munger,
Almon Spoor,
R. E. Ladd,
Danl. Stocking,
S. Chapman,
H. Twing,
W. S. Campbell,
} Committee.

Springfield, Sept. 10th, 1854.

GROVE MEETING.

I will, by Divine permission, attend a Grove Meeting at Daysville, Ogle Co., Ill., at Bro. R. Chown and the Brn. there may appoint, commencing Wednesday, Sept. 20th, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and continuing over Lord's day. It is expected there will be a general attendance of the Brn. in that region. Come in the name of the Lord, and expect God's blessing will attend the word. [illegible]

J. C. Bywater.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting at South China, Me., to commence Wednesday, September 20th, and hold through the week.

Provision will be made for boarding and horse-keeping on the ground. The brethren in China are very desirous of having a general gathering of the saints, and hence they extend an invitation to all, both far and near, to come and bring their tents with them. This will probably be the last Tent Meeting in this region of country, before our Lord shall come, and we hope that all who can will improve this opportunity of meeting with the saints. Brn. Couch, Colby and others will attend.

In behalf of the brethren,
F. H. Bassett.

P. S.—Brethren coming from the west, by steamboat or cars, will stop at Augusta, and proceed from thence by stage to the ground. Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, the stage runs directly to the meeting.

Providence permitting, I will meet with the Brn. in East Sanbornton, N. H., on Tuesday, 26th inst., at 3 P. M.

At the Osgood School-House in Gilmanton, N. H., Wednesday, 27th, at 3 P. M.

B. P. Manning.

Conferences.

There will be a Conference at Newark, N. J., to commence Wednesday, Sept. 27, and hold over the Sabbath. Brn. Couch and Grant will attend and preach the word.

In behalf of the brn.,
F. H. Berick.

P. S. At first it was thought best to pitch our tent at Newark, but upon mature consideration we have concluded to have a Conference. Let there be a general rally of the brethren.

F. H. B.

Notices and Requests.

☞ Bro. Elam Burnham is expected to preach at the Merrimac Hall, Lowell, on Sunday next.

At Parisville, Ohio, they are anxious to have preachers come and give them the word of Life.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

Meredith Center, N. H., August 17, 1854.

Will Brn. Berrick and Couch come to this place and hold a Tent Meeting soon? If you can come, please inform us through the Crisis when—and if you cannot come inform us in the same way. In behalf of the Brn.

Thomas D. Veasey,
Lorenzo D. Dolloff.

☞ It is requested that Bro. Edwin Burnham, or some other ministering brother capable of presenting the argument on definite time in a clear manner, would visit Lee, N. H. Should any one comply with the request he will please give notice through the Crisis.

Benj. Durgin.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

Will Brn. Berrick and Couch come into this region and hold one Conference soon? We are exceedingly anxious to have them come. I believe they will have a good hearing. "Do come over and help us." If they cannot come, will not Bro. I. Adrian, or some other able Watchman come and sound the alarm in this section once more? There is not a Watchman in all this region to tell the people when the Lord is coming.

In behalf of the Brn.,
C. L. Percival.

The place for a meeting will be the old Meeting house in Hatley, C. E.

Advent Brethren hold regular meetings at Lyceum Hall, in Lawrence, on Sundays, also on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings.

☞ Brn. in Lowell who believe in the coming of the Lord in '54, hold meetings every Sabbath; also on Wednesday and Saturday Evenings, at Merrimack Hall. Preachers from abroad will be obtained when convenient.

Business Items.

☞ Bro. Z. Campbell, we would be happy to hear from you.

We have on hand a few copies of "The Church not in Darkness," by H. L. Hastings.

My post-office address hereafter will be West Poland, Me. R. R. York.

☞ Notices and appointments must be written as they are expected to appear in the paper.

☞ We hope persons returning papers to have them discontinued, will be careful to give the P. O. address to which they are sent.

☞ The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3,00.

peril your own soul, and stand aloof from that peace which the Lord is waiting to bestow. "He needs no price, no worthiness, no delay." He commands you to come now, just as you are, with your entire helplessness, and with all your sins and unworthiness about you; it is not possible for you to make yourself any better, by all your prayers and duties: for whenever you find pardon or additional grace, it must be entirely a free gift, through the merit of Christ. Then, I entreat you, to venture on him now, and you shall feel his mighty power, and refining fire run through your heart, and illuminate your soul, and such sacred peace and joy will follow, as none but God can give. I have felt to mourn over the destitution of the church, and over the folly and unskillfulness of individuals, respecting the things whereof I have treated. I see it is the will of the beneficent Creator that they should be strong in faith, and happy in God, and on that account, I am constrained to write thus pointedly. Soul work is too solemn and important to be performed slightly; therefore I write faithfully, as scripture, conscience and experience dictate.

For a further ground for faith, we should reflect thus, viz.: There is no foundation at all for unbelief; it floats on the lying suggestions of Satan, and on the extreme folly of vile, weak mortals. But for faith there is the most permanent foundation, as firm as the throne of Jehovah. A holy and Almighty Being has spoken the word: he cannot deny himself. It is impossible for him to lie. 2 Tim. 2: 13. Heb. 6: 18. All his glorious attributes stand ready to aid in the fulfilment of what the very truth itself has pronounced; the Saviour has spilt his own blood for me, and says, "Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out." And he ever liveth to make intercession for me.

I'll plead the promises of God,
Keep Jesus's righteousness in view;
I'll plead the Savior's speaking blood,
And powerful intercession too.
It is impossible to fail
While Jesus intercedes for me,
If I myself of faith avail
And use it perseveringly.

I am not required to work out a righteousness of my own, worthy of God's acceptance, for that would be impossible.—But I am commanded to come now just as I am, with all my sins, imperfections, and unworthiness, without vainly waiting to make myself better, and receive an imputed righteousness, the only righteousness which God will accept.

If you tarry till you're better,
You will never come at all,
Not the righteous, not the righteous,
Sinners Jesus came to call.

The pious Carvosso says, "This is the mystery of faith, that while I have, on one hand, a painful consciousness of my deserts as a sinner, I have at the same time, on the other, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. Now is the accepted time with God; all that Christ requires is that you feel your want of him. What are all the promises without faith? It is faith alone that is the foundation of all our holiness, strength and happiness. How does a life of faith triumph over everything that would distress the soul! I have nothing to keep my soul in motion but faith!" We must be careful that our self-righteous souls do not want something within us to recommend us to God, before we come to him. We must come just as we are, with all our sins and unworthiness, with just such a heart as we now have, with all our helplessness and misery, and come as hell-deserving sinners, to be saved by grace through faith in the merits of a precious Redeemer.—Having thus viewed the scriptural, glorious and permanent foundation for faith, and having seen the great sin and rebellion of unbelief, we are led at once to see the propriety of laying hold on the promises this moment, and of venturing our all upon an Almighty arm, which is able, in an instant, with the power of Omnipotence, to sweep every foe and difficulty from our path; although, to our weak sight, the one has risen like giants, and the other, as mountains, to obstruct our way. For, as quoted before, the scriptures affirm that all things are possible to him that God has in every age of the world stamped with the broad seal of his smiling approbation, and has powerfully sustained, honored and greatly blessed all those who placed unshaken confidence in his holy word.

Believe the Lord doth reign,
And constant aid receive;
Believe and constant victory gain,
Your souls to heaven believe.

I have often been astonished to see how many there are who profess Christianity, who are living beneath their privilege respecting this important grace. Such must remain dwarfs in religion, and live most of the time in a cold and comfortless state unless their faith is augmented. Although prayer and other duties are absolutely necessary, yet, by all our performances, though continued for years, we can merit nothing nor make an atonement for one sin; "For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast" Eph. 2: 8, 9.—Whenever a Christian obtains additional grace or pardon for an offence, it is entirely a free gift. Then why not come now at God's bidding, and through repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, recieve the proffered blessing; and when the Almighty says, "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of Salvation," believe with all the heart, O doubting professor, dare not charge a holy God, the God of truth, with insincerity and falsehood; but, by naked faith, lay hold of the naked promise this moment, and you shall rejoice in a present victory, and thus you will find that those who honor God in this way, he will honor with constant and special blessings.

O trust his word, believe him true,
Who sent his son to die for you;
He formed the shining worlds above,
Has boundless wisdom, goodness, love.
Each moment trust Almighty pow'r,
And live by faith from hour to hour;
And have a hope which cannot fail,
An anchor sure within the vail.
[See Heb. 6: 19.

Let none wonder that some have a good degree of faith; for it is truly astonishing that one soul who receives the Bible as a guide to heaven, should disbelieve the promises of its holy and Almighty Author, and at the same time believe the father of lies. And now, reader, with prayers for your present and eternal welfare, I bid you adieu, being in the sixty eighth year of my age, and the forty-fifth of my Christian war are. This may be the last attempt that I shall ever make with my pen for the good of souls; for I have made this effort with pain and great difficulty on account of extreme weakness of sight, which I fear will terminate in blindness.

MAGOG, C. E., Sept. 20, 1853.

Word of Warning.

"And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."—[Matt 25: 6.

I shall not say that the above "cry" is made before certain events come to pass of a nature to cause all men to know that the long-looked for second advent of Christ has at length come; such events as "the sign of the Son of Man in Heaven," "shaking of the powers of Heaven," &c. I shall only say that it is possible, or probable, that the above "cry" is an event prior to such events as just mentioned, and is to be known as a matter of belief, instead of actual knowledge. It is probable or possible, therefore, that the present awakening to the subject of the second advent, is the "cry" mentioned in the text. If such is the probable or even possible state of the case, it is very important that we know it, for the cry under consideration demands action on the part of those to whom it is addressed—it is a call to certain obedience, and of possibly an obedience of such kind as only will insure an acceptance of Christ when he comes. The cry, therefore, is a probable, or possible event in probation,

1. Because it is a call to obedience of some kind.

2. Because the wise or true servants of God who had gone forth to meet the bridegroom, encourage those who had with them gone forth, but without sincerity, or without making the needful preparation, they encourage them to seek a preparation after or when the cry is made. "And the foolish said unto the wise—Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell and buy for yourselves." Vs. 8 and 9.

3. Because the coming of Christ, as represented by the parable containing the text, was to be preceded by a call or proclamation to the Church, and that call was to follow a previous proclamation: for the cry under consideration is made after a previous call had caused them to go forth to meet the bridegroom. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." Vs. 1–4. Such a proclamation we have had, previous to and up to the year 1843 and 44, as all know.

4. Because the present proclamation or time has been preceded by a time of suspense and inactivity, caused by a disappointment, delay or tarrying of the event of their expectations—the second personal and visible advent of Christ. "While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." Verse 5.

5. The text seems to show that a proclamation was to be made at a time of the greatest backsliding or lukewarmness of the Church; that is, a moral declension as dark as "midnight." Facts in the case show that the present awakening on the subject, is at a time of the greatest declension in true religion that the Church has passed through since the days of our Saviour's first appearing.

Just at this time of darkness, events occur of so striking a nature, as to call forth a cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh." Behold, see how cold and dead the Church has suddenly become. Behold how depraved and lost to all moral and religious sense of right, justice, mercy and truth have the nations and the mass of men in general become. Behold, since the first call has proved a seeming failure, and men are thereby relieved of the fear that that call caused, how the rejecting of that call to them, to obey the gospel, and to fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour or season of his judgment has come, has inspired them to commit the grossest sins—to commit acts almost unparalleled in any past time of equal light and advantages. Behold, how the seeming failure of the past call has manifested how slight was the separation of the popular church from the world and worldly governments! "While they be folden together as thorns, and while they be drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry." Nahum 1: 10.

Reader, does the present fulfilment of predicted events, cause you, like the wise virgins in the parable, to prepare with alacrity for the coming of the great day; or have you come up to this fearful period of time with so little care for the service of God, or inheritance in the kingdom, that like the foolish virgins, you waste your precious moments in unmeaning resolves?—Beware lest you meet their doom. "And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But he answered and said, Verily, I say unto you, I know you not."—[Selected.

Later from Europe.

By the St. Louis, from Havre via Southampton and London, at New York yesterday, and by the Niagara, from Liverpool, at Halifax last night, we have seven days later advices from Europe, dates to the second inst.

The day appointed for the sailing of the expedition to the Crimea, was the 20th of August, (but some say on the 30th.) It is composed of 70,000 men, including 20,000 Turks. The cholera was not so violent as it had been among the troops. Omar Pacha, with 25,000 men, entered Bucharest on the 22d, and was most enthusiastically received. The cholera is raging very badly at Bomarsund. It is supposed that a descent on the coast of Finland is meditated. The French troops have re-embarked at Bomarsund, and part of the fleet had sailed toward Finland.

German papers announce the approaching conclusion of a treaty, offensive and defensive, between Austria and the Western Powers. The Belgian Ministry has resigned en masse. Queen Christiana left Madrid August 28th for Lisbon. Her departure was unopposed.

Constantinople letters of the 20th announce a great battle near Kars on the 7th; result undecisive; 5000 killed on both sides. Hassan Pasha was killed, and Mustapha Pasha wounded. Three Russian generals were disabled.

A despatch from Varna, received via Rutschuk, says that at the date of the 20th, the allied fleets had not weighed anchor, but that all was ready for a start at a moment's notice.—Five hundred shops and private houses had been destroyed by the fire at Varna on the 10th. The fire broke out in several places at the same time. Several of the Greek incendiaries had already been shot. The loss by the fire at Varna is estimated at £500,000 sterling.

The Vladimir had her captain and sixteen men killed in the recent brush at Sebastopol. The cholera had broken out in the fleets of Boltschick. It has visited some of the French ships with extraordinary virulence.

In the Swedish Diet the house of peasants have proposed a petition to the king to take measures in conjunction with the Diet to prevent the Aland Islands from returning to Russian dominion. Vessels belonging to Aland now sail under the French flag. Five ships of war, all laden with Russian prisoners, passed through the Great Belt, on their way to England, on the 29th ult.

The Vienna Lloyds has authentic news that Marshal St. Arnaud will leave Constantinople on the 2d September to take command of the expedition to the Crimea, which by that time would have reached its destination.

Prince Gortschakoff made a confidential communication to Count Buol, and requested a similar explanation. He also notified the Austrian ambassador that he had communications to make to the emperor in person. Russia will not accept the Austrian invitation to commence negotiations on the basis stipulated by the western powers.

The commanders of the allied forces have concluded to dismantle and abandon the fortifications at Bomarsund and Aland Islands.—The fortifications were so badly damaged, and so large an acquisition being required to hold them against the enemy that it was not deemed expedient to hold possession of them. It is said that they were offered to Sweden on condition of her declaring against Russia, but Sweden refused to accept the offer. It is reported, but not believed, that the allies have offered to pay Sweden a monthly subsidiary if she would form the alliance.

On the 26th Admiral Napier and General Baraguy D'Hilliers proceeded to Hango, when the Russians blew up the fortifications, and retreated to Abo, where there are 15,000 men in garrison. One hundred and twenty-two mounted and eighty dismounted guns, taken at Bomarsund, will be divided between France and England.

An engagement, without loss, occurred at Abo on the 18th, between 18 Russian gunboats and some English steamers.

Reports continue to be received of great preparations to invade the Crimea, but up to August 21, nothing was known of any embarkation. The cholera continues at Varna—Stormy weather prevails in the Black Sea. A private despatch from Varna of 24th says—Five ships with troops sailed yesterday and six to-day, but their destination is secret. The opinion gains currency that the first destination of the expedition will be Anapa, and that the allied fleets will winter there. Marshal St Amand was to hold a general military council at Varna to inquire whether the army is fit for service during the present sickness.

The Turks continue to occupy Bucharest, and are strengthening all the surrounding positions. They are also re-fortifying Tirnova, which was razed by the treaty of Adrianople. Omar Pasha has ordered rations to be delivered at Obelestchi, in Wallachia, and it is reported that an English division will be sent there.

A portion of the Turkish force was moving upon Galatz and Ivrail. The Russians would be at Jassy on the 2d of September. Their headquarters were at Baland August 25. A Russian force still holds Galatz.

☞ Further Foreign News by the Niagara.

There was some trouble in Denmark.

The Austrians have entered Wallachia, but their future movements are not reported. Gen. Cornorini has gone to Bucharest to consult with Omar Pacha. In the recent fire at Varna, half a million pounds of bread, equal to two week's consumption of the British army, was burned.

The French troops are getting impatient at their long inactivity. The cholera has made terrible ravages in both armies and fleets, and many thousands have perished, but it is now abating.

Asia. The disasters to the Turks in Asia are confirmed. On the 19th July, Selim Pacha was defeated, and the Russians occupied Bajazia. On the 7th of August, a vaporary display of the Turkish force brought on a general engagement, and a general battle was fought near Kars. The Turks lost 4000 men, and confess that the Russians were the victors. The Russians suffered very severely, however, and an armistice of two days was agreed to by both parties after the battle. The Turks retreated into Kars, and abandoned their camp, which was taken possession of by the Russians, who acknowledge a loss of nearly 1000 killed. The battle lasted five hours; 40,000 men and 150 pieces of cannon were engaged. Selim Pacha, the Turkish commander on this occasion, has been superseded by Mustapha Pasha, who has already distinguished himself on the Dobrudscha.

Greece. The excitement caused by the announcement of the French commander, that, as the Piraeus is unhealthy, he will remove his troops to Athens, is very great.

Spain. The Union Republican Club is closed by order of the government, and detachments of the National Guards had been ordered to arrest the members if they persisted in assembling. Madrid is tranquil. All the provincial juntas are suppressed. Government published the accounts of the defalcations of the Ministry, showing $30,000,000 deficit, with the revenue of Cuba mortgages for two years, and all the extra resources of the kingdom pledged. Espartero had raised a temporary loan of $2,000,000 on security of the customs at Havana and upon bank securities. Notwithstanding the supposed profound tranquility, private advices report outbreaks at Madrid on the 28th, when it became known that Queen Christina had escaped. A few barricades which had been put up, were pulled down by the National Guard, and the opportune entry into the city of some regiments of cavalry, prevented much mischief. Saragossa continues restless, and the whole province of Arragon was unquiet. Carlist movements are spoken of in one or two quarters, and there are hints of military disaffection in Galicia.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Southington, sister Angeline I. Wiard, of this city, aged 25 years. Sister W. was converted to God in the winter of 1843, and at the same time to the doctrine of Christ's second coming in '43, at the age of 14; but in the fall of '44, having left her home, through the influence of young associates, she became somewhat backslidden from God, although she never denied her faith in Christ's soon coming, nor ceased to love the doctrine.—Last winter she listened to the Midnight Cry, and at once awoke, trimmed her lamp, embraced the truth, and lived it out, until she fell asleep. After some months of lingering disease, which she bore with Christian patience, while on a visit to her sister, she was attacked by a paralytic shock, from which she never recovered.—Although unable to converse except by signs, she seemed [illegible] around her; and when asked if she thought she should live, answered "no." Being asked if the Saviour was precious, and her hope bright, she answered very emphatically, "yes." Her funeral discourse was delivered by Bro. Gun, from Luke 20: 35, 36.

Waterbury, Ct., Sept. 6, 1854. L. A.

Dear Bro. Merriam: By request of the bereaved friends of Holden Me., readers of the Crisis, I send you the following obituary notices of children:

Died in Holden, Me., August 25th, after severe suffering, L. A. Clewley, son of Isaac and Susan Clewley, aged 19 mos. Although painful to part with their dear child, in resignation they have laid it away to await the summons of the last day, when their dear offspring will be brought again from the land of the enemy, to die no more.

The following lines were composed by a sister of the child.

Dear Adrian sleeps in Jesus now—
Yes, death has bound him fast;
But soon a smile will light his brow,
When death's dark dream is past.

Yes, Adrian sleeps in Jesus now—
But death can't hold him long;
Soon he'll awake in glory bright,
And join the heavenly throng.

Fell asleep in Holden, Me., Sept. 3, 1854, Nancy W. Kenney, daughter of Joshua and Philanda Kenny, aged about 1 year. It was very hard for the fond, affectionate mother to part with her loved child, but when she marked its protracted sufferings, she readily submitted her child into the hands of Him without whose knowledge not a sparrow falls to the ground, in full confidence of a speedy redemption, when—

Nancy, "rising from the tomb,
With lustre brighter far shall shine,
Revive with ever-during bloom,
Safe from diseases and decline.

Let sickness blast, let death devour,
If Heaven must recompense our pains;
Perish the grass and fade the flower,
If firm the word of God remains.

Your brother in hope of eternal life.

T. SMITH.

Eddington, Me., Sept. 5, 1854.

My beloved Brother: Since my return from Lowell, death has slain another of our number in Salem. Bro. James McCartney died Sept. 1st, aged 29 years. He has left a wife and three young children to mourn his absence. Thus have three of our church fallen a prey to the enemy death in the course of this season; but we hope to meet them all again at the "resurrection of the just." How joyful the thought that a few weeks may usher in that Glorious Morn when the true Israel will meet in the chambers of God, free from temptation, sorrow and Death! O blessed day—there they shall be safe until the indignation be past! No mourner will be there—no, for our precious Redeemer shall wipe all tears from our eyes.

They sleep in Jesus—soon they'll wake,
When the Archangel's trump the earth shall shake;
Then from their lowly beds they'll spring
To meet their coming, conquering King.

How changed—how beautiful they are;
Their crowns outshine the glittering star,
Their raiment, too, how pure and white;
Their beauteous forms how fair and bright!

O wondrous change—can these be they,
We mourned as lost and laid away
In the cold grave with aching heart,
And wept that we were doomed to part?

Yes, Jesus, blessed be His name,
He's come, He's brought them back again,
He triumphed o'er the tyrant death,
He clothed them with His righteousness.

He's loosed the captives, set them free,
That where He is there they may be,
With joy His glory they behold,
And walk the streets of shining gold.
They bow with rapture and adore
Their great Deliverer evermore.

A. B. DRAPER.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Sept. 8th, sister Abba M. Thomas, wife of Bro. J. W. Thomas, of Lynn, Mass., aged 23 yrs. 1 mo.

Sister Thomas experienced the pardoning mercy of God through Jesus Christ, last Autumn. Since that time, she has been a firm believer in the coming of Jesus, according to the time revealed in the prophetic word. She bore with the utmost patience and Christian fortitude the pangs of dissolving nature, and when death came at last it found her all ready. She bade a short adieu to the dear ones she loved, and fell asleep with a firm, unwavering confidence that she shall awake in immortality in the coming seventh month. Her companion mourns deeply her loss; but the anguish of that bitter hour of separation was divested of much of its poignancy, from the cheering reflection, that after a very few weeks, at the longest, she will be restored in a bond of love and union that will never be broken. Then they and the little daughter she has left behind, will enjoy the pleasures unalloyed of a home in the renewed earth, where none of the inhabitants will say, "I am sick."

The writer endeavored to comfort the mourning relatives with the Christian hope as brought to view in Heb. 6: 17–20, and other portions of the word of God.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, a large congregation were present at the funeral on Sunday, the 10th, who listened with deep attention, while we endeavored to show from the unerring word of truth, that unless Jesus comes the second time, there is no eternal life—no immortality, and no world to come; but death is an eternal sleep, from the fact all depends upon a resurrection; and there can be no resurrection unless Christ comes the second time to complete the atonement, the foundation work of which was laid by virtue of the death of the Son of God on Calvary's Cross.

S. W. BISHOP.

Appointments.

BIGELOW'S MILLS, Sept. 1, 1854.

I would say to the Brn. in Illinois, you may expect me to visit and preach the word in the following places:

Moline, Rockland Co., Sept. 25th, (eve.), and remain over Sunday. The Brn. will meet me at the Depot.

Basco, Hancock Co., Oct. 5th, and continue over Sunday.

Lebanon, St. Clair Co., Sept. 11, and continue till the 24d.

I hope to see the Brn. from adjacent places at these meetings. Brn. can write me and direct to the above places. J. C. BYWATER.

FAIRHAVEN, Ct., Sept. 11, 1854.

The Lord willing I will attempt to present the gospel of Christ in such a manner as to edify the church, at Cheshire Street, Sept. 26th.

Southington, Sept. 27th.
New Britain, Sept 28th, and at other places as the way may open. J. B. CLARK.

I will preach in Manchester, N. H., Sunday, Sept. 24th, the Lord willing.

S. W. BISHOP.

The Lord willing I will preach at
North Springfield, Vt., Sept. 19th and 20th.
Hardscrabble, Sept. 22d and 23d.
Wethersfield, Sept. 24th, as the Brethren may appoint. M. L. WILLARD.

If the Lord will, I will preach at the following places:

At Houghtonville, Vt., Tuesday, Sept. 26.
So. Vernon, Wednesday, Sept. 27.
Northfield, Mass., Thursday, Sept. 28.
Athol, Friday, Sept. 29th.
Hubbardston, Saturday, Sept. 30, and continue over the Sabbath, where the brethren may appoint.
Westminster, Monday, Oct. 2, near Bro. Bannet's. Weekly meetings at early candle-light.

W. L. CAMP.

HOLDERNESS, N. H., Sept. 12, 1854.

I wish to say to the Brn in Wakefield, that I shall not be able to fulfill my appointment in that place the first Sabbath in October next, but if the Lord will, I will come as soon as possible.

B. P. MANNING.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting at East Thompson, Conn., on the farm of Sirril Jacobs, commencing the 20th of Sept., and continuing over the Sabbath. Brn. coming from the east, will come by the N. Y. Central R. R.; Brn. from the west, by the Norwich R. R. to Mechanicsville, thence to East Thompson. This meeting is in a new field, and we hope the Brn. far and near will attend, and come prepared to lodge on the ground. We shall need two or three tents for lodging tents. Will some Bro. or Brn. see that we are provided for? Preaching Brn. are requested to attend, as the Lord may direct. Bro. Cummings is expected to attend. Come, brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord, and help sound the last solemn cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

We appoint this meeting, as servants of the Great Head of the Church.

FIELDER CONVERSE,
J. HEMENWAY.

GROVE MEETING.

A Grove Meeting will be holden in New Milford, Conn., near the village, commencing Sept. 20, and continuing over the Sabbath.

GROVE MEETING.

There will be a Grove Meeting in Hartford, Vt., commencing Sept 20, and continuing over the Sabbath. It will be held in a grove on the road leading from West Hartford to Woodstock Green, 3 miles from West Hartford. Brother Isaac Adrian promises to attend, and Brn. from abroad are respectfully requested to attend, and bring tents and provisions, all that can; and those that cannot, will be provided for on the ground. Those coming in the cars will stop at West Hartford, and there will be means of conveyance to the ground. E. G. CULVER.

TENT MEETING.

If it please the Good Master, there will be a Tent Meeting within a few rods of the depot in Canaan, N. H., to commence on Wednesday, Sept. the 20th, at one o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Board and lodging for fifty cents a day, for all who wish, by the owner of the ground, (Mr Hutchinson); but all the poor will be provided for.

Brethren who can, had better bring tents and bedding. The Lord's preachers, who can attend this meeting, are urgently invited to come; also the brethren and sisters from the surrounding country, and bring all they can with them, with the hope of doing them good.

Canaan is on the Northern (N. H.) Railroad, about 50 miles from Concord, and about 20 from Lebanon. For Christ's cause.

J. CUMMINGS.

ELDER CHARLES P. DOW will preach at
Three Rivers, 23d and 24th, (Sunday.)
Chicopee Falls, the 25th.
Springfield, the 26th.
Jawbuck, the 27th.
Warehouse Point, the 28th.
Hartford, the 29th.

Week evening appointments at 7 1-2 P. M., unless 5 P. M. be preferred. As Bro. Dow is a stranger in many of the foregoing places, I would hereby commend him to the brethren as a minister worthy of their confidence and christian fellowship. D. T. TAYLOR.

NOTICE.

If time continues, there will be a meeting at Bristol, Me., commencing Thursday, Sept. 21, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continuing over the following Sabbath. Brethren J. Partridge and R. R. York will attend with me.

S. K. PARTRIDGE.

CAMP MEETING.

The Camp Meeting to be held in Springfield, will commence Sept 27, on land owned by Bro. Chauncy Bradley, three miles east of the armory, to continue over the Sabbath. Those coming by carriages will follow the old Boston road from the hill; those coming by cars, will stop at the Indian Orchard Depot, 1 1-2 miles from the ground, which is on the traveled road to Springfield. Conveyance to the ground on the arrival of each accommodation train.

Those coming from the North or South by railroad, will change cars at the Springfield Depot, and take cars for Indian Orchard Depot—the first station East.

Fare to and from the ground, about 12 1-2 cts. each way.

Provision will be made for board and horse-keeping on the ground, at a reasonable price.—The Lord's poor will be welcomed.

Brn. are requested to come prepared to tent on the ground. It is expected that the brethren will come from Winstead, Hartford, Westfield, Warehouse Point, &c., &c. Also, from Waterbury and Worcester. So far from this meeting being a small one, we expect a general rally and a great development of truth and power in this probably last meeting of the season.

Bro. Cummings, Bro. Hemenway, and Bro. H. Pratt, have engaged to attend. Bro. Mathewson is expected. Brn. in the ministry are invited to attend.

GROVE MEETING.

I will, by Divine permission, attend a Grove Meeting at Dayville, Ogle Co., Ill., at Bro. R. Chown and the Brn. there may appoint, commencing Wednesday, Sept. [illegible] o'clock, A. M., and continuing over Lord's day. It is expected there will be a general attendance of the Brn. in that region. Come in the name of the Lord, and expect God's blessing will attend the word. Looking for [illegible]

J. C. BYWATER.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting at South China, Me., to commence Wednesday, September 20th, and hold through the week.

Provision will be made for boarding and horse-keeping on the ground. The brethren in China are very desirous of having a general gathering of the saints, and hence they extend an invitation to all, both far and near, to come and bring their tents with them. This will probably be the last Tent Meeting in this region of country, before our Lord shall come, and we hope that all who can will improve this opportunity of meeting with the saints. Brn. Couch, Colby and others will attend.

In behalf of the Brethren,

F. H. BERICK.

P. S.—Brethren coming from the west, by steamboat or cars, will stop at Augusta, and proceed from thence by stage to the ground. Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, the stage runs directly to the meeting.

Providence permitting, I will meet with the Brn. in East Sanbornton, N. H., on Tuesday, 26th inst., at 3 P. M.

At the Osgood School-House in Gilmanton, N. H., Wednesday, 27th, at 3 P. M.

B. P. MANNING.

Conferences.

There will be a Conference at Newark, N. J., to commence Wednesday, Sept. 27, and hold over the Sabbath. Brn. Couch and Grant will attend and preach the word.

In behalf of the brn.,
F. H. BERICK.

P. S. At first it was thought best to pitch our tent at Newark, but upon mature consideration we have concluded to have a Conference. Let there be a general rally of the brethren.

F. H. B.

Notices and Requests.

☞ Bro. Elam Burnham is expected to preach at the Merrimac Hall, Lowell, on Sunday next.

At Parisville, Ohio, they are anxious to have preachers come and give them the word of Life.

NOTICE.—The believers in the coming of the Lord in 1854 hold meetings in Pleasant st. Hall, Museum Building, on Sunday, day and evening; also, on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings of each week.

In behalf of the Brn.
Manchester, N. H. W. C. ABBOTT.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

Meredith Center, N. H.,
August 17, 1854.

Will Brn Herrick and Couch come to this place and hold a Tent Meeting soon? If you can come, please inform us through the Crisis when—and if you cannot come inform us in the same way. In behalf of the Brn.

THOMAS D. VEASEY,
LORENZO D. DOLLOFF.

☞ It is requested that Bro. Edwin Burnham, or some other ministering brother capable of presenting the argument on definite time in a clear manner, would visit Lee, N. H. Should any one comply with the request he will please give notice through the Crisis.

BENJ. DUROFF.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

Will Brn Berrick and Couch come into this region and hold one Conference soon? We are exceedingly anxious to have them come. I believe they will have a good hearing. "Do come over and help us." If they cannot come, will not Bro. I. Adrian, or some other able Watchman come and sound the alarm in this section once more? There is not a Watchman in all this region to tell the people when the Lord is coming.

In behalf of the Brn.,
C. L. PERCIVAL.

The place for a meeting will be the old Meeting house in Hatley, C. E.

Advent Brethren hold regular meetings at Lyceum Hall, in Lawrence, on Sundays, also on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings.

☞ Brn. in Lowell who believe in the coming of the Lord in '54, hold meetings every Sabbath; also on Wednesday and Saturday Evenings, at Merrimack Hall. Preachers from abroad will be obtained when convenient.

Business Items.

☞ Bro Z. Campbell, we would be happy to hear from you.

We have on hand a few copies of "The Church not in Darkness," by H. L. Hastings.

My post-office address hereafter will be West Poland, Me. R. R. YORK.

☞ Notices and appointments must be written as they are expected to appear in the paper.

☞ We hope persons returning papers to have them discontinued, will be careful to give the P. O. address to which they are sent.

☞ The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3,00.

Eden Home.

BY [illegible] CUDWORTH.

This earth once bloomed in a fairer dress,
With sunny skies of loveliness;
There was not a shrub, or flower, or tree,
But was perfect in graceful symmetry;
The happy birds on golden wing
Ne'er felt the archer['s] pointed sting;
And man in his dignity then walked forth,
And gazed with delight on this virgin earth,
O that [illegible] —O that Eden home!

But the Tempter sought the peaceful bower
Where the first bride, past the nuptial hour,
When her [illegible] lord was far away,
And led the yielding Eve astray;
They both partook the costly fruit;
No more she wears that trusting look;
And Adam trembles when he hears
His Maker's voice on the evening breeze,
O that Eden home—O that Eden home!

This doom'd earth's change is quickly shown;
The dreadful earthquake chasms yawn;
[illegible] lightnings burst the vapor shroud;
And darkly rolls the thunder cloud;
The hateful briar springs up to view,
Where the rose and lily-bell lovingly grew;
The robin its carols of love kept on,
But a sorrowful note, was the lay she sung.
O that blighted home—O that blighted home!

No eye was found to pity the lost,
No angel friend could pay the cost;
Then speaks the WORD in the courts of heaven,
"Repenting rebels shall be forgiven;
I'll freely die for this poor lost race,
And I'll save a world from death's embrace;
I'll sell my glory, my life, my all,
And buy the field with its costly pearl.
O that blighted home—O that blighted home!

At the appointed hour the foe shall yield,
And fire shall cleanse the bloody field;
When man has proved his love for me
I'll invest him again with a kingdom free;
My bride shall be tried with fire and sword,
And her dowry shall be an Eden restored;
The "first dominion" to me shall come,
And man shall again have an Eden home."
O that Eden home—O that Eden home!

Tis eighteen hundred fifty-four,
The usurpers reign is almost o'er,
Sufficiently tried is the sorrowing Bride
To wear a crown by the Conqueror's side;
The great Coronation day rolls on,
May I be found with that happy throng,
Where Jesus sits on his dazzling throne
With his "many crowns" in an Eden home.
O that Eden home—O that Eden home!

Come and Reign.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Air—Home Again.

Come and reign—come and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne;
And O it fills my heart with joy
To know we're almost home.

Here I drop the falling tear
As Pilgrim-like I roam,
An exile from my Father's house,
But soon he'll call me home.
Come and reign, &c.

Here amid life's changing scenes
My cup of grief runs o'er;
But there I'll share unmingled bliss
On Canaan happy shore.
Come and reign, &c.

Here I grieve the friends I love,
And they in turn grieve me;
But, O my Father, grant me grace,
That I may not grieve thee.
Come and reign, &c.

Here disease invades our frames,
We wither, droop and die;
But there eternal youth shall bloom,
And bright shall beam each eye.
Come and reign, &c.

Here we meet and part again,
And round [illegible] we roam,
But there we'll meet and part no more,
And sweetly rest at Home.
Come and reign, &c.

The Sanctuary.

As there is much being said on this subject at the present time, I thought I would like to give my views. Dan. viii: 13, 14. "Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot." "And he said unto me, unto two thousand and three hundred days then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Here is a question asked; and it is about two definite things: 1st. The sanctuary and the host thereof, and 2d. The daily sacrifice; and the question is answered, and the time given. The first thing that claims our attention is the sanctuary. It is settled beyond a doubt in my own mind that the true worship of God was taken away from the Church by Papacy, A. D. 538.—Proof, see [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] there [illegible] no doubt after reading the evidence on that page? God forbid. [illegible] the sanctuary to be the Church. [illegible] considerations—See Eph. 2: [illegible], 19, 20, 21. Here is where the daily was restored after the Babylonish captivity. Restored to what? To the [illegible] the Church; and this was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] time we see that the daily sacrifices were observed until it was taken away by Julian, A. D. 319. [illegible] or Church fled into the wilderness. But that is not all.

See Eph. 1: 22–23; ch. 2: 20–22; Rom. 12: 5; 1st Cor. 12: 27; Col. 1: 18–24. In all of the above citations the body of Christ which is the Church, is referred to as being the true sanctuary, tabernacle or temple; and I have no authority from the Word to believe otherwise. There is another fact in connection with this, and it is this: you may ask any of our opponents what the man of sin is, and they will tell you at once that it was Papal Rome. Where did he sit for 1260 years? In the temple of God. Does that mean old Rome or not?

Let God be true; and let us have a Bible sanctuary. I believe that God has a sanctuary on the earth, and that he has been getting it ready to be cleansed, and it is this Church. Amen.

Oh, when we think of making any thing out to suit our own prepossessed opinions which it does not substantiate, what confusion it causes at once. But when we stand on the naked word, as we do in regard to the 2300 days, and the 1260, 1290, 1335 days, it makes us feel strong. I do believe, Bro. Merriam, that we are right. I do not believe God would darken the sun and moon 18 years before a certain given point of time had run out to establish the fulfillment of it, as he would have done provided the 1260 commenced in A. D. 538. Now it is all right that we did not see those difficulties before from fact, Matt. 25: 1-10, must be fulfilled, and Paul's tarrying time, and comforteth your brother, looking for life and immortality in 1854, which ends the 1335 days.

CORRESPONDENCE.

For the World's Crisis.

Dear Brother Merriam:—How applicable the admonition of the inspired Apostle at this time, who says, "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you, an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God," for most truly we are amid the perils of the last days, when many are falling from the truth. Surely we must "take heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip," and by an evil example of unbelief fall by the way, while almost in sight of the promised rest. Of 600,000 that came out of Egypt, only two entered the promised land. And Moses, the great law-giver and leader of Israel's host, was only permitted to see from Pisgah's height Canaan's glorious land; and the Lord said unto him, "This is the land, I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither;" thus he died in sight of Canaan. So then those who have been prominent in the cause of truth may fail of the kingdom of God through unbelief, if they take pride in human wisdom. The Lord will have a humble people, who will give him the glory, though the number be very few. How often do we hear it said, "if I live right I shall be saved whether I believe the Lord is coming or not." If a part of his word is to be believed, so is it all. Not one jot or tittle of it shall fail. "If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." O how fearful the injunction, not to believe all the word of God, and especially the signs of Christ's second coming. Yet few will believe. The mass will stumble over his second coming as the Jews did over his first.

The Saviour asked the question, "When the son of man cometh will he find faith on the earth?" In other portions of Scripture we learn that it will be as it was in the days of Noah. They were then engaged in all the worldly pursuits of the day, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away. What did they not know? Noah told them of the coming flood, and had they believed, they would have known the time, as did Noah, and would have found a shelter from the storm. "So will it be when the son of man is revealed." I praise the Lord that I am not left in unbelief to reject his word. I have no fears but that God will fulfill his promise, and at the end of the 1335 days Daniel will stand in his lot, and I do believe that the darkening of the sun, May 19th, 1780, was the sign that marked the termination of the 1260 days of tribulation. If this is not so, what did the Saviour mean when he said, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened," &c.? There are certain days spoken of, and a certain sign to mark the termination of them. Now shall we believe as the Saviour has given them? Though we may have had many darkenings of the sun, yet we must believe that which marks the termination of those days and fulfills the Saviour's words. With this also harmonizes the opening of the 4th, 5th and 6th seals, Rev. 6th. Under the opening of the fourth seal they had "power to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth," which is in perfect harmony with Matt. 24: 9. "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you," &c. "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God." &c., and they cried, "How long, O Lord," &c., "and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season until their brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled." These had their fulfilment during the dark reign of the Papacy of 1260 years. "And when the sixth seal was opened there was a great earthquake, and the sun became black, as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind," &c. Here we have a minute description of Matt. 24: 29, and it is a beautiful explanation of the Saviour's words, showing their appearance. So when the Church of God now sees the signs fulfilled they know redemption is nigh. As the angel said to Daniel, "blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred five and thirty days," 1260 being a part and ending immediately before the darkening of the sun, 1780, just 75 years more will fill up the 1335, and according to God's chronology cannot pass May 19th, 1855, and here I wait rejoicing in hope of seeing Jesus within this time. I am sorry to hear some of my brn. and srs. saying their faith is shaken in this time, because the Lord did not come on the 10th of June. If they had rested their faith more on the Bible than history, I think their faith would grow stronger instead of decreasing as the time of deliverance draws near. The Saviour's words are so simple and plain to be understood when he is coming, that all who have a desire to understand may, without a labored argument on history. When we realize that within a few months the scenes of earth will close—probation end—the sinners night of mourning come—how important that we do all we can to save our fellow-men from the wrath to come.

M. M. EASTMAN.

Landaff, N. H., Aug. 30, 1854.

CAMDEN, Me., Aug. 25, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam: For the benefit of the children scattered abroad, who would no doubt like to hear about our health, and where we are, we write for the Crisis; and this will relieve us of the obligation of many private letters to our friends. Sunday evening, 13th ult., at 8 o'clock, we left Northern Indiana, in company with bro. and sist. Howell, and bro. Wells, to attend some meetings in the East. We had been providentially confined to the house with sickness, first one, then both of us, all of three weeks; and we thought surely this would be the last opportunity we should ever enjoy of meeting the brn. and srs. in the East before the great meeting at the marriage of the Lamb. When we took the cars we were unable to sit up all day and were quite fearful we should not be able to ride far before leaving the cars to rest; but being assured it was the will of the Lord that we should come to the East, we started, trusting in Him who was able to carry us through. Surely, the Lord strengthened us to remain on board the cars and boat, and we arrived on the ground in Newburg, on Wednesday, at 2 o'clock P. M., the first day of the meeting. We saw the Great Tent erected on a very convenient spot, and small tents well arranged around it; enough to accommodate all who wished to stop on the ground. We were surprised to see so many brn. and srs. on the ground at the commencement of the meeting; and they continued to come. We think we never saw so many brn. and srs. at one meeting in the State of Maine. We were able to attend nearly all of the meetings. The congregations were attentive and peaceable, and the preaching came to us as from one having authority, and we think was profitable to those who had ears to hear. Love and union prevailed among all the saints, and it seemed to be the desire of all to see the King in his beauty this year. On Sunday afternoon the Great Tent was lowered to the ground, and some of the brn. and srs. took leave of each other, which caused tears to flow, and the deep-toned sigh [illegible] from many a burdened heart, and a desire was manifest to meet again, where parting would be no more.

On Monday morning the remaining company took leave of each other, and we were soon on board a boat which conveyed us down river fifty miles, to Camden, where our bro. Brown Mansfield was waiting to convey us to his house. Here we have had for a few days a quiet resting-place, beside the old homestead where the parents and most of the children are gone to the grave. A few of us survive to think o'er the past. Truly, "this groaning earth is too dark and drear for the saints' eternal home." Last Tuesday evening an accident occurred to our little son Elijah, by which he came near losing an eye; but he is now recovering. Our health has somewhat improved since we left the West. We hope to be able to attend the meeting at West Winstead, Ct., and the Lord willing, we shall thence proceed on our way to the West. Will the brn. and srs. who have an interest at the Throne of Grace, pray for us, that the Lord may heal us of our infirmities, that we may once more resume our places in the field of labor as before? Unless the Lord does undertake our case and heal us, our work of proclaiming truth to the world is done.

In love to all.

D. R. and M. S. MANSFIELD.

[This should have been inserted last week, had we not been crowded with matter.]

TEMPLETON, Aug. 29th, 1854.

Bro. Merriam:—Thinking it might not be uninteresting to the readers of the Crisis to learn the result of the meeting held in Hubbardston the past week, I seat myself to pen a few lines to inform them that on account of the presence of our God, the meeting was an interesting and profitable one to those who attended. We were favored with the faithful labors of Brn. S. S. Brewer and H. Pratt, who continued through the meeting, and Bro. J. W. Brittan, who was with us a part of the time. The subjects presented for the consideration of the people, were, the coming of the Lord, the time of his coming, signs to precede the event, and the preparation necessary to meet it in peace. These were presented in a clear, forcible manner; and the result was that the children were exceedingly strengthened in the faith of the immediate coming of the Lord, and conviction deep was fastened on the minds of those who had independence enough to give the subject a candid hearing.

The prayer and conference meetings were full of interest, as there were no jarring strings; but all was peace, happiness and love.

The Saviour says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." It is a blessed thought, that amid all the counterfeits of the devil, he cannot counterfeit divine love; "for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God."

On Sunday, there were 7 who followed the Lord in the ordinance of baptism; and at the close of the afternoon service, the ordinance of the Lord's supper was administered. Truly our fellowship was with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ, and with one another, the blood of Christ cleansing us from all sin.

Now Brethren, seeing God is so good to us in giving us such light from the sure word of prophecy, and in filling our souls with such joy and peace in believing, such victory in the hour of temptation and trial, such unshaken confidence in every word of God, what is our duty? Shall we stand all the day idle? O no! Whatsoever our hands find to do, we will do with our might; for the day (of labor) is nearly past, and the night is soon coming in which no man can work. "And knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. Let us walk honestly as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof." We praise the Lord for sending us such faithful watchmen, who have the cause of God in their hearts; and are willing to labor, not for filthy lucre's sake, but "for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man; unto the measure of the fulness of Christ." We do not praise them, but esteem them very highly in love, for their works' sake. The actual result of the meeting cannot be fully summed up now; but I have no doubt that the word was spoken, which in the end will result in the salvation of some, and the condemnation of others. O how solemn the thought, that what is made an instrument of life to one, should be an instrument of death to another. Who is sufficient for these things? O my God, help the watchmen to realize their solemn calling, and as Moses and Aaron stood between the living and the dead, (when the children of Israel murmured against the Lord, and He sent a plague among them,) so may they lift up their voices like a trumpet; "cry aloud and spare not; and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Israel their sins," that they may "give the trumpet a certain sound," that men may prepare themselves for the battle.

"The Midnight Cry in mercy sounds,
The judgment day draws near."

My brethren, let us all be clothed in humility, and in all things obedient, that when the Master comes he may say unto us, well done good and faithful servants, enter ye into the joy of your Lord. Amen.

In hope, thy brother looking for Jesus.

J. D. MERRIAM.

LOWELL, Sept. 11, 1854.

We would just say to the faithful watchmen who are proclaiming the speedy coming of the Lord, and who love his appearing, that we still, by the blessing of God, continue our meeting at the Kirk Street Chapel, at the old place; and although we have had many storms to face in these last days, yet God in mercy has blessed us with his protecting care, and we still live a band of believers in the Second Advent of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ at hand. Believing that all the signs of his coming, as is recorded by his apostles in Matthew xxiv. and Mark xiii. and Luke xxi. are in the past, and that we are now witnessing the signs of the end of the world, and as we now see "upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, therefore we would say to our brn. scattered abroad that this is a free Advent, and a time meeting, where all God's Watchmen can preach the present truth, according as they understand it, without opposition, whether they are established in the theory, the present arrangement of the Lord's coming this year, 1854, as advocated by many of our Brn., or whether they believe from the signs, and the events, now transpiring that it may come this year, and that it is near, even at the doors. We acknowledge no creeds but the Bible, and we further profess to be free from all sectarianism, and we have no desire to sit in the temple of God, as the POPE, nor to assume any right to control the consciences of men; but we remember that to our own Master we must stand or fall for ourselves. Therefore we extend a hearty welcome to all the faithful Watchmen, who love our Lord Jesus Christ and his appearing, to the Chapel on Kirk St., Lowell, to preach the word of life to this branch of the Church of Christ, that we may have meat in due season, and be prepared for the approaching crisis.

IRA THOMPSON, Church Com.

Bro. Thompson wished me to say that he alone is responsible for the above.—ED.

CARMEL, Me., Aug. 30, 1854.

Bro. Merriam: My health has been very poor since I saw you at the Salem meeting; but through the mercy of God, it is improving, and the word of the Lord is burning in my heart, and I feel like going out again to sound the last note of warning to this fire-doomed world. The Crisis is a welcome messenger to our dwelling, although when it was first talked of I did not feel favorable to the enterprise. My principal objection was this: I have seen that when men have got into the editorial chair they felt as though they were dictators; and if there is anything I abhor, it is a spiritual dictator, one that desires to "lord it over God's heritage." But since I have seen the spirit of the paper, and the disposition manifested to be a servant to the church, I am glad it was started, and my prayer is for its prosperity, and for grace and wisdom from on High to direct and sustain the editor, and give him an honorable discharge at last, and an abundant entrance into His everlasting kingdom this year. Amen.

Your brother in hope of redemption this year.

HENRY PERKINS.

FITCHBURG, Mass., Sept. 3, 1854.

Bro. Merriam: I was a believer in the coming of Christ in 1843. The time passed over, and I went into the dark. I have never lost, fully, my sympathy for the Advent doctrine; but it has remained in my bosom smothered, unto this day.—I left my home (Atkinson, Me.) in April last, to journey in New York as an agent. While passing through Charlemont, Mass., in April, I fell in with a bro. and sr. established in the faith; and as Providence would have it, I must be detained there two days, during a rain storm. They told me of their faith and hope, and explained to me the reason why they believed. It looked perfectly plain, and yet I did not believe. I went away with a heavy heart. They gave me books to read. I asked for none. I thought and I prayed. I did not confess with my mouth, and so I obtained no salvation. But Providence directed me to the same place again in August last; and now, to the glory of God, and to the praise of His grace, I am a believer in the speedy coming of my Lord Jesus Christ.

May the Lord enable you dear bro., to be faithful and humble, and to conduct the World's Crisis in the spirit of Christ. It has been to me as a cooling draught to the thirsty soul.

Yours, in the blessed hope of soon seeing my Lord.

R. B. GOULD.

WATERFORD, Sept 4th, 1854.

Brother Merriam: I attended the Grove meeting in this place, and glory to God, He is at work in Waterford.

The result of this meeting is glorious. One soul is hopefully converted to God, and that is worth all the labor that has been bestowed upon this people. A good impression has been left on the minds of the commuity.

G. W. STEVENS.

SENECA FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 4, 1854.

Brother Merriam: I am happy to inform you that Bro. Pinney wrote on Sept. 2d to Bro. Cummings at Buffalo, concerning time; took a vote of the little flock yesterday for the purpose of sustaining the Bro., and opening their Hall for him. I think it the duty of Brn. travelling West, to stop and give us the word that would be meat in due season. They would receive in return our aid and assistance in the cause they are laboring in. I thank God that here are signs of good; and that Brn. are hungering and thirsting after the truth, craving substantial food from God's storehouse. Your excellent paper, the Crisis, has accomplished a great work here. I find Brn. are fast falling in with its views. When they see such fulfilment of the word of God, how can they do otherwise than believe? The nations are occupying the very position to fulfill the four angels holding the winds until the angel from the East hath sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. I am, and have been firm in the '54 time, and think the Types should be a sufficient foundation for Bible students to stand upon, and advocate the idea that our High Priest will come out and bless his people on the tenth day of the 7th month. O Brother, for a preparation! Awful thought, and yet sublime! That we may meet our God in peace, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in the bonds of Christ.

C. P.

P. S. Br. Pinney's health is much improved. He has been out three Lord's days; was at Auburn, Friday. Br. Hanford informed him that the Church in Auburn is united in the cause, has a good Sunday school well attended, and that Br. Cummings had done them good. May he come and strengthen the Brn., that they may trim their lamps, is the prayer of God's humble servant.

EAST WALLINGFORD,
VT., Sept. 6th. 1854.

[I] want to say to Bro. Isaac Adrian, that when I returned from the Camp-meeting in Houghtonville I informed the Brn. in our place, as far as I was able, in relation to the evidences of the coming of the Lord this year; and there are quite a number in this vicinity that appear to be anxious to hear Bro. Adrian. Will he come and spend two or three days with us soon? If so, please give notice in the Crisis or drop a line to me. Your expenses will be paid—should you come in the cars, you will stop at East Wallingford, and I will meet you there. I believe the Lord is coming this year and I want the virgins to wake up in this place.

In haste,

WM. JACKSON.

An Exposition of the Seven Seals.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Concluded.

SIXTH SEAL.

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon as blood:

"And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

"And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places.

"And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond-man, and every free-man hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains:

"And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb;

"For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a GREAT earthquake." There had been earthquakes before, but this was A GREAT ONE. Read the following historical facts on this matter:—

Nov. 1, 1755, Lisbon was destroyed by the most terrible earthquake that ever occurred: 60,000 persons perished in six minutes. The sea first retired, then rolled in, rising 50 feet above its usual bed. The largest mountain in Portugal rocked and split asunder, and sent forth flames and clouds of dust. The shock was felt nearly ALL over Europe in the North part of Africa—in the Atlantic and even in the West Indies—a vast wave swept over the coast of Spain, and in some places 60 feet in height. Near Morocco the earth swallowed up about 10,000 persons with their herds and then closed over them.—[Cyclopedia of History p. 639, printed and published by Case, Tiffany and Barnham, 1845, Hartford Ct.

Hear another writer on this event:—

"In 1755, a very remarkable and destructive Earthquake extended over a large part of Europe, Africa and America, desolating whole cities and destroying thousands upon thousands of human beings. It was most terrible in Portugal and the neighbouring countries. St. Ubes was swallowed up in the sea, and Lisbon was almost destroyed. The population of Lisbon was about 256,000—that of St. Ubes, I think about 200,000. This remarkable earthquake was felt in the North of Europe and the Nothern United States, and even the Western Great Lakes of North America were agitated by it".

Other historians might be quoted, but the above is sufficient. I will quote however, one short extract from Blackwood's Magazine, July 9, 1844:—

"On the morning of All-Saints day, the 1st of November, 1775, Lisbon was almost torn from the foundations by the most terrible earthquake on European record. As it was a high Romish festival, the population were crowding to the churches, which were lighted up in honor of the day. About a quarter before ten, the first shock was felt, which lasted the extraordinary length of six or seven minutes; then followed an interval of about five minutes. The concussions were so violent in both instances that nearly all the solid buildings were dashed to the ground, and the principal part of the city almost wholly ruined. The terror of the population, rushing through the streets, gathered in the churches, or madly attempting to escape into the fields, may be imagined; but the whole scene of horror, death, and ruin, exceeds all description. The ground split into chasms, into which the people were plunged in their flight. Crowds fled to the [illegible]; but the Tagus, agitated [illegible] the land, suddenly rose to an astonishing height; burst upon the land, and swept away all within its reach. It was said to have risen to the height of five and twenty or thirty feet above its usual level, and to have sunk again as much below it. And this phenomenon occurred four times."

The next event he sees is the darkening of the sun. We will let history testify on this [illegible].

"In May 19th, 1780, there was a remarkable fulfilment thereof, and in reference to the facts and date, there can be no place for doubts: for aside from historical accounts, in which there is found no discrepancy, there are thousands now living who can attest thereto. They say the darkness was supernatural from morning until night, and during most of the night; and although the moon had fulled only the night previous, the Rev. Mr. Tenny, of Exeter, N. H. says, 'I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete.'"

"In the month of May, 1780, there was a very terrific dark day in New England, when 'all faces seemed to gather blackness,' and the people were filled with fear. There was great distress in the village where Edward Lee lived; 'men's hearts failing them for fear that the judgment day was at hand, and the neighbors all flocked around the holy man, for his lamp was trimmed and shining brighter than ever, amidst the unnatural darkness. Happy and joyful in God, he pointed them to their only refuge from the wrath to come, and spent the gloomy hours in earnest prayer for the distressed multitude.—His nephew, who was then a little child, in after life retained a lively recollection of that scene, and in his childish feelings is an interesting exhibition of the manner in which Mr. Lee was regarded, for he felt not the least alarm in his presence, thinking that he was perfectly safe where his good uncle was, even if the day of judgment had come." [Tract No. 379 of Am. Tract Society. Life of Edward Lee, of Mass.

"The 19th of May, 1780, was a remarkably dark day; candles were lighted in many houses; the birds were silent, and disappeared; the fowls retired to rest; it was the general opinion that the day of judgment was at hand. The Legislature of Connecticut was in session, at Hartford, and being unable to tarnsact business, adjourned. A motion of adjournment was before the Council; but when the opinion of Col. Davenport, of Stamford, was requested, he replied, I am against the adjournment. The day of judgment is either at hand, or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for adjournment; if it is, I wish to be found in the line of my duty. I wish therefore that candles may be brought."—[Pres. Dwight in Ct. Hist. Col.

"Dark day of May 19th, 1780. The sun rose clear, and shone for several hours; at length the sky became overcast with clouds, and by ten o'clock, A. M., the darkness was such as to occasion the farmers to leave their work in the fields and retire to their dwellings; fowls went to their roosts, and before noon, lights became necessary to the transaction of business within doors. The darkness continued through the day, and the night, till near morning, was as unusually dark as the day." [Gage's Hist. of Rowley, Mass.

The Saviour, speaking on the signs of his coming, in answer to that question in the 14th of Matthew, classifies the signs in the following manner:—The sun shall be darkened, the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven. On the 19th of May, the sun was supernaturally darkened from morning till night, and even into the night; so that although there was at the time a full moon, (the moon having fulled the 18th,) "it was so dark that a sheet of the whitest of paper was equally invisible, six or eight inches from the eye, with the blackest of velvet." The sun was darkened, and the moon did not give her light.

"The darkness of the following evening was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light."—[Rev. Mr. Tenney of Exeter, N. H., quoted by Mr Gage to the Historical Society.

"The third sign is the falling of the stars, which was literally fulfilled on the night of Nov. 13, 1833. I am aware that some view that phenomenon an exhibition of meteors not of stars, and therefore no fulfilment of that sign. I ask what kind of a star piloted the wise men to the birth-place of the Saviour? Surely no planet or fixed star. How many planets could fall from heaven on this earth without producing its destruction? The distinction between meteors and stars is of modern invention, the discovery of modern astronomers. It is well known the ancients understood by the Greek word aster, (here used) the smaller lights of heaven. It is, therefore, evident that this sign must have a shower of meteors, or small stars, for its fulfilment; and that the phenomena of Nov. 1833 fully exhibit the sign, the following extract will show."

"The first, from Henry Dana Ward, of New York, published in the Journal of Commerce, Nov. 15, 1833:

"At the city, 'Look out of the window,' I sprang from a deep sleep, and with wonder, saw the east lighted up with the dawn and meteors. The zenith, the north and the west also showed the falling stars, in the very image of one thing, and of only one I ever heard of. I called to my wife to behold; and while robing, she exclaimed, 'See! how the stars fall!' I replied, 'that is the wonder;' and we felt in our hearts that it was a sign of the last days. For truly 'the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind,' (Rev. 6: 13.) This language of the prophet has always been received as metaphorical. Yesterday it was literally fulfilled. The ancients understood by aster, in the Greek, and stella, in Latin, the smaller lights of heaven.—The refinement of modern astronomy has made the distinction between the stars of heaven and the meteors of heaven.—Therefore the idea of the prophet, as it is expressed in the original Greek, was literally fulfilled in the phenomena of yesterday, so as no man, before yesterday, had conceived to be possible that it should be fulfilled. The immense size and distance of the planets and fixed stars forbid the idea of their falling unto the earth. Larger bodies cannot fall in myriads unto a smaller body; but most of the planets and all the fixed stars are many times larger than our earth. They cannot fall unto the earth; but these fell toward it."

"And how did they fall? Neither myself nor one of the family heard any report; and were I to hunt through nature for a simile, I could not find one so apt to illustrate the appearance of the heavens, as that which St. John uses in the prophecy before quoted. 'It rained fire,' says one; another, 'It was like the large flakes of falling snow, before a coming storm, or large drops of rain before a shower.' I admit their fitness for common accuracy; but they come far short of the accuracy of the figure used by the prophet: 'The stars of heaven fell unto the earth;' they were not sheets, or flakes, or drops of fire; but they were what the world understand by 'falling stars;' and one speaking to his fellow in the midst of the scene, would say, 'See how the stars fall!' and he who heard would not pause to correct the astronomy of the speaker, any more than he would be so precise as to reply, 'the sun does not move,' to one who should tell him 'the sun is rising.' The stars fell 'even as the fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come as if from several trees shaken, but from one: those which appeared in the east fell toward the east; those which appeared in the north fell toward the north: those which appeared in the west fell toward the west; those which appeared in the south (for I went out of my residence into the Park) fell toward the south. And they fell not as the ripe fruit falls. Far from it; but they flew; they were CAST like the unripe fruit, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and when under a violent pressure it does break its hold, it flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling, some cross the track of others, as they are thrown with more or less force, but each one falls on its own side of the tree. Such was the appearance of the above phenomena to the inmates of my house."

This was from an eye witness who penned the following, and years since avers it was not overdrawn. The second is from Prof. Olmstead, of Yale College, a distinguished meteorologist.

"The extent of the shower of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the EARTH'S SURFACE, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coast of South America, to undefined regions among the British Possessions on the north, the exhibition was visible, and everywhere presented the same appearance.

"In nearly all places, the meteors began to attract notice by their unusual frequency as early as eleven o'clock, and increased in numbers and splendor until about four o'clock, from which time they gradually declined, but were visible until lost in the light of day. The meteors did not fly at random over all parts of the sky, but appeared to emanate from a point, in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the bend of the sickle."

This is important testimony, in regard to the vast extent of the exhibition of the phenomenon, and also of the falling stars; all emanating from a single point in the heavens.

"Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13th, 1833, probably saw the GREATEST DISPLAY of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history."

The moon has had the appearance of blood. I will quote the following extract from a letter of Mr. Beadle, of Aleppo, and published in the Missionary Herald, of June 1842, p. 234. It is an account of an earthquake at that place in 1822. He says:

"On the night of the earthquake, there was something peculiar in the atmosphere, the moon appearing as red as blood. This greatly alarmed the inhabitants, who were continually crying out 'Now we shall hear the trumpet sound! and the dead will rise! the day of judgment has arrived."—Litch's Exp. vol. i. p. 153.

Those who witnessed the dark day have testified that on the subsequent night the moon, on coming from under the darkness of the cloud, had the exact appearance of blood.

We will now remark that A. D. 1779, was, in our opinion, the commencement of "THE TIME OF THE END;" for the Church—the saints—were given into the hands of the Little Horn in 519; they were to remain there 1260 years, which, from that date would reach to 1779, and "the time of the end" commenced at that point, being a period of 75 years, and reaching to the end of the 1335 years.—Let me quote the two dates. Daniel is told that "the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end;" implying that THEN it would be unsealed. "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." Jesus said they should be shortened. (See Matt. xxiv. 15 and 22.) How much?—In Rev. xi. 2, he says, forty-two months, which make 1260 days (years); as also Rev. xii. 6, "a thousand two hundred and threescore days," (1270 years.) Dan. xii. 12, "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days," (1335 years.) The difference, then, between these two dates constitutes what is called "the TIME OF THE END," i. e. the difference between the 1290 shortened to 1260 and the 1335 days or years; since which period, God, in mercy, has been doing all that he promised he would do, to convince, bless and save his favorite creature—man. He has shown signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars. Permit me to invite your attention to the following very interesting testimony on this point. The Rev John Cox, speaking on the second advent of Christ, makes the following remark:—

"This I conceive is the next great event that we are NOW to look for. So far as I can discern, no further signs are to be expected, as it seems to me we have entered into that LAST period of AWFUL EXPECTATION during which the church is likened to TEN VIRGINS. By comparing the signs of the times with the numerical prophecies, we may know with certainty when the AWFUL and GLORIOUS day of the Lord is rapidly advancing upon us. The great and broad outlines of prophecy are obvious to every man who is a student of the prophetical writings, long before the predicted events are fulfilled. The prophecies of Daniel were closed up and sealed till the TIME OF THE END, when the book was to be opened, the seals to be removed—the mysterious dates were to be developed—many were to run to and fro and prophetical knowledge was to be increased. The period here foretold is that in which we are now living: for never, since the time of the reformation, has there been such deep and intense interest felt in the sacred prophecies, as within the last thirty or forty years.

"The seals are now being removed—the signs of the times shed a light on prophetical dates, and the dates shed light upon the signs of the times. All these signs, shedding their light upon the mysterious dates, and drawing light from them in return, i. e., the present concussion of nations; the simultaneous shaking of the Ottoman and Papal empires; the reign and dominion of infidelity; the extensive propagation of the Gospel beyond the limits of the Western Roman empire; the state of feeling and excitement in the Jewish nation; the infidel indifference of the world; the death-like slumber of the Church; and the Midnight Cry that has been recently raised and that is now ringing in the ears of the infidel world and a sleeping Church, all indicate that the 1260 years have run out their course. And when ye see these things, know that the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Dr. Duffield, who has recently published a work on the prophecies, relative to the second coming of Christ, says:—

"Among other signs that 'time of the end,' that is, the season during which the great periods of chronological prophecy run out, and the great things so long predicted will transpire, is described by very strong and marked signs, and particularly signs in the heavens. 'The sun shall be darkened—the moon shall not give her light—the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken.' It is supposed, by some, and we think with some plausibility, that while these physical events are to be regarded as symbolical of the revolutions and commotions of empires, they nevertheless will literally occur, striking atmospheric and celestial phenomena shall be observed, which being beyond the reach of man's philosophy, may be regarded as the visible symbols which God himself hangs out in the heavens to predict the consummation coming. It is remarkable, especially for the last fifty or sixty years, the atmospheric and celestial phenomena have been more marked, frequent and varied, than in any previous age of the world. It is said not less than fifteen hundred stars have faded from the vault of heaven; and some of them were observed in a state of conflagration. Ever since the French revolution, the peculiar signs, both moral and political, which were predicted to mark THE TIME OF THE END, have been developing. The preparation is making for a great and fearful crisis. The kings and rulers of the earth are leaguing and conspiring together and becoming more and more involved in their ambitious schemes. The Lord is sealing his people, pouring out his spirit and gathering his elect."

"THE DOOM OF OUR WORLD.—What this change is to be, we dare not even conjecture; but we see in the heavens themselves, some traces of destructive elements, and some indications of their power. The fragments of broken planets, the descent of meteoric stones upon our globe, the wheeling comets welding their loose material at the solar furnace, the volcanic eruptions in our own satelite, the appearance of new stars, and the disappearance of others,—are all foreshadows of the impending convulsions to which the system of the world is doomed. Thus placed on a planet which is to be burned up, and under heavens which are to pass away—thus treading, as it were, on the cemeteries and dwelling upon the mausoleums of former worlds—let us learn the lesson of humiliation and wisdom, if we have not already been taught in the school of revelation.—[North British Review."

A recent writer remarks:—

"Science, indeed, tells us that the centre of the earth is filled with floods of rolling liquid fire which are continually wasting and destroying it. Better than science, we have 'a more sure word of prophecy:' 'As for the earth, out of it cometh bread: and under it is turned up as it were fire.' Job xxvii. 5. These fires continually rolling to and fro, seeking to escape through the safety-valves, (volcanic mountains,) which God has prepared that the earth might not explode—while thus in motion, they operate on the various strata of the earth, wasting, exploding and removing it—causing a rumbling of the earth which we call earthquakes. Thus these fires have been at work for about 6000 years; and is it not reasonable that the effect of them should be still more apparent?—Hence we conclude, that having in a great measure devoured the very foundations of the earth—there must be more frequent alarms felt and seen of them. But the thinness and weakness of the remaining strata cannot long hold them down. They must immediately 'set on fire the foundations of the mountains and consume the earth with her increase.' Deut. xxxii. 22. [Preble's Voice of God.

At the TIME OF THE END, according to prophecy, "many were to run to and fro." M. Brock, of England, has said:—

"Another sign of our being near the END is, 'many shall run to and fro, and knowledge' was to be 'increased.' How manifestly do we see this NOW to be the case, and to an extent hitherto quite unparalleled. All kinds of science have been wonderfully developed; as to religious knowledge, since the beginning of this century, the word of God has been circulated in upwards of 200 languages and dialects. The present long period of European peace, with the commercial ascendency of Protestant and scientific Britain, throughout the world, doubtless have not been without their object in the divine councils."

AT, OR IN THE TIME OF THE END, "perilous times shall come." Read the following from the pen of Inspiration, as drawn by the Apostle Paul, in his second letter to Timothy, chap. iii. 1 to 9.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affections, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God: having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women, laden with sins, led away of divers lusts; ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.—Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was."

What a contradistinction in the above picture to that drawn by the pen of [illegible] [illegible] distinction of D. D. [illegible] [illegible] 10, [illegible]. There is one more picture in this portrait gallery of the last days, I wish to introduce to your solemn consideration. You will find it in [illegible] ii. 1-3: [illegible] among the people [illegible] false teachers among [illegible] shall bring in damnable [illegible] denying the Lord that bought [illegible] bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not."

The result of their false teaching would be a heaping to THEMSELVES teachers, and MANY SHALL FOLLOW THEIR PERNICIOUS WAYS. They will have the face of men on the HEAPS. Let the following extract from Prof. N. N. Whiting's "Origin, Nature and Influence of Neology" testify:—

"About fifty years since, Selmer, Professor of Divinity at Halle, began to lecture and publish on the subject of interpretation, in a manner that excited the attention of the whole German Empire.—The grand principle by which he explained away whatever he did not think proper to believe, was that which has been called accommodation. He maintained that the apostles and the Saviour often admitted representations and doctrines into their instructions, which were calculated merely for the purpose of persuading the Jews being accommodated to their prejudices, but which were not intended to be a real directory of sentiment. In this way whatever was inconsistent with his own views, he called accommodation, and thus, at once, expunged it from the list of Christian doctrines.

"In like manner Ammon, Professor of Theology at Erlangen, tells us in respect to the miracle of Christ's walking on the water, that, 'to walk on the sea, is not to stand on the waves, as on the solid ground, as Jerome dreams, but to walk through the waves so far as the shoals reached, and then to swim.' Theiss, in his commentary on the Acts, explains the miraculous effusion of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, (Acts ii.) in the following manner:—'It is not uncommon, says he, in those countries, for a violent gust of wind to strike on a particular spot or house; such a gust is commonly accompanied by the electric fluid; and the sparks of this are scattered all around. These float about the chamber, become apparent, and light upon the disciples. They kindle into enthusiasm at this, and believe the promise of their Master is now performed. This enthusiasm, spectators assemble to witness; and instead of preaching as before, in Hebrew, each one uses his own native tongue, to proclaim his feelings. The case of Annanias represented by the same writer! Annanias fell down terrified; but probably he was carried out and buried while still alive.' Heinrichs, however, who produces this comment of Theiss, relates another mode of explaining this occurrence, viz: 'that Peter stabbed Ananias; which,' says Heinrichs, 'does not at all disagree with the vehement and easily exasperated temper of Peter.' Numerous systems of Hermeneutics, i. e. the art of interpretation, have been written and published in Germany, on this plan. Meyer, in a very labored system of Hermeneutics of the Old Testament, in two large octavos, has a body of rules, by which everything miraculous is to be explained away. He concludes that there is the same objection to admitting any one miracle, as to admitting all. He, therefore, rejects the whole. 'At present, the leading German critics, (rejecting accommodation, and casting off all ideas of the divine origin of the scriptures,) are disputing with great zeal the questions, whether a miracle be possible. Whether God and nature are one and the same? (Schelling, a distinguished at the head of a great party, which maintains that they are the same.) And whether the Jews ever expected a Messiah? Some time ago, many of their critics maintained, that no Messiah was predicted in the Old Testament; and now they question altogether whether the Jews had any expectation of such one. It would seem, now, that they had come nearly to the end of questions on Theology.' We have made these long extracts from Prof. Stuart, because [illegible] [illegible] for the soundness of the remarks which he has made on the subject of Neology,—because he is well acquainted with writers of this school,—because we believe [illegible] [illegible] (p. 152.) An Exposition of the Seven Seals.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Concluded.

SIXTH SEAL.

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon as blood:

"And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

"And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places.

"And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond-man, and every free-man hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains:

"And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb;

"For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a GREAT earthquake." There had been earthquakes before, but this was a GREAT ONE. Read the following historical facts on this matter:—

Nov. 1, 1755, Lisbon was destroyed by the most terrible earthquake that ever occurred: 60,000 persons perished in six minutes. The sea first retired, then rolled in, rising 50 feet above its usual bed. The largest mountain in Portugal rocked and split asunder, and sent forth flames and clouds of dust. The shock was felt nearly ALL over Europe in the North part of Africa—in the Atlantic and even in the West Indies—a vast wave swept over the coast of Spain, and in some places 60 feet in height. Near Morocco the earth swallowed up about 10,000 persons with their herds and then closed over them.—[Cyclopedia of History p. 639, printed and published by Case, Tiffany and Barnham, 1845, Hartford Ct.

Hear another writer on this event:—

"In 1755, a very remarkable and destructive Earthquake extended over a large part of Europe, Africa and America, desolating whole cities and destroying thousands upon thousands of human beings. It was most terrible in Portugal and the neighbouring countries. St. Ubes was swallowed up in the sea, and Lisbon was almost destroyed. The population of Lisbon was about 256,000—that of St. Ubes, I think about 200,000. This remarkable earthquake was felt in the North of Europe and the Nothern United States, and even the Western Great Lakes of North America were agitated by it".

Other historians might be quoted, but the above is sufficient. I will quote however, one short extract from Blackwood's Magazine, July 9, 1844:—

"On the morning of All-Saints day, the 1st of November, 1775, Lisbon was almost torn from the foundations by the most terrible earthquake on European record. As it was a high Romish festival, the population were crowding to the churches, which were lighted up in honor of the day. About a quarter before ten, the first shock was felt, which lasted the extraordinary length of six or seven minutes; then followed an interval of about five minutes. The concussions were so violent in both instances that nearly all the solid buildings were dashed to the ground, and the principal part of the city almost wholly ruined. The terror of the population, rushing through the streets, gathered in the churches, or madly attempting to escape into the fields, may be imagined; but the whole scene of horror, death, and ruin, exceeds all description. The ground split into chasms, into which the people were plunged in their flight. Crowds fled to the [illegible], but the Tagus, agitated like the land, suddenly rose to an astonishing height; burst upon the land, and swept away all within its reach. It was said to have risen to the height of five and twenty or thirty feet above its usual level, and to have sunk again as much below it. And this phenomenon occurred four times."

The next event he sees is the darkening of the sun. We will let history testify on this [illegible].

"In May 19th, 1780, there was a very remarkable fulfilment thereof, and in reference to the facts and date, there can be no place for doubts: for aside from historical accounts, in which there is found no discrepancy, there are thousands now living who can attest thereto. They say the darkness was supernatural from morning until night, and during most of the night: and although the moon had fulled only the night previous, the Rev. Mr. Tenny, of Exeter, N. H. says, 'I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete.'"

"In the month of May, 1780, there was a very terrific dark day in New England, when 'all faces seemed to gather blackness,' and the people were filled with fear. There was great distress in the village where Edward Lee lived; 'men's hearts failing them for fear that the judgment day was at hand, and the neighbors all flocked around the holy man, for his lamp was trimmed and shining brighter than ever, amidst the unnatural darkness. Happy and joyful in God, he pointed them to their only refuge from the wrath to come, and spent the gloomy hours in earnest prayer for the distressed multitude.— His nephew, who was then a little child, in after life retained a lively recollection of that scene, and in his childish feelings is an interesting exhibition of the manner in which Mr. Lee was regarded, for he felt not the least alarm in his presence, thinking that he was perfectly safe where his good uncle was, even if the day of judgment had come." [Tract No. 379 of Am. Tract Society. Life of Edward Lee, of Mass.

"The 19th of May, 1780, was a remarkably dark day; candles were lighted in many houses; the birds were silent, and disappeared; the fowls retired to rest; it was the general opinion that the day of judgment was at hand. The Legislature of Connecticut was in session, at Hartford, and being unable to tarnsact business, adjourned. A motion of adjournment was before the Council; but when the opinion of Col. Davenport, of Stamford, was requested, he replied, I am against the adjournment. The day of judgment is either at hand, or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for adjournment; if it is, I wish to be found in the line of my duty. I wish therefore that candles may be brought.'"—[Pres. Dwight in Ct. Hist. Col.

"Dark day of May 19th, 1780. The sun rose clear, and shone for several hours; at length the sky became overcast with clouds, and by ten o'clock, A. M., the darkness was such as to occasion the farmers to leave their work in the fields and retire to their dwellings; fowls went to their roosts, and before noon, lights became necessary to the transaction of business within doors. The darkness continued through the day, and the night, till near morning, was as unusually dark as the day." [Gage's Hist. of Rowley, Mass.

The Saviour, speaking on the signs of his coming, in answer to that question in the 14th of Matthew, classifies the signs in the following manner:—The sun shall be darkened, the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven. On the 19th of May, the sun was supernaturally darkened from morning till night, and even into the night; so that although there was at the time a full moon, (the moon having fulled the 18th,) "it was so dark that a sheet of the whitest of paper was equally invisible, six or eight inches from the eye, with the blackest of velvet." The sun was darkened, and the moon did not give her light.

"The darkness of the following evening was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light."—[Rev. Mr. Tenney of Exeter, N. H., quoted by Mr Gage to the Historical Society.

"The third sign is the falling of the stars, which was literally fulfilled on the night of Nov. 13, 1833. I am aware that some view that phenomenon an exhibition of meteors not of stars, and therefore no fulfilment of that sign. I ask what kind of a star piloted the wise men to the birthplace of the Saviour? Surely no planet or fixed star. How many planets could fall from heaven on this earth without producing its destruction? The distinction between meteors and stars is of modern invention, the discovery of modern astronomers. It is well known the ancients understood by the Greek word aster, (here used) the smaller lights of heaven. It is, therefore, evident that this sign must have a shower of meteors, or small stars, for its fulfilment; and that the phenomena of Nov. 1833 fully exhibit the sign, the following extract will show."

"The first, from Henry Dana Ward, of New York, published in the Journal of Commerce, Nov. 15, 1833:

"—— 'At the cry, 'Look out of the window,' I sprang from a deep sleep, and with wonder, saw the east lighted up with the dawn and meteors. The zenith, the north and the west also showed the falling stars, in the very image of one thing, and of only one I ever heard of. I called to my wife to behold; and while robing, she exclaimed, 'See! how the stars fall!' I replied, 'that is the wonder;' and we felt in our hearts that it was a sign of the last days. For truly 'the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind,' (Rev. 6: 13.) This language of the prophet has always been received as metaphorical. Yesterday it was literally fulfilled. The ancients understood by aster, in the Greek, and stella, in Latin, the smaller lights of heaven.— The refinement of modern astronomy has made the distinction between the stars of heaven and the meteors of heaven.— Therefore the idea of the prophet, as it is expressed in the original Greek, was literally fulfilled in the phenomena of yesterday, so as no man, before yesterday, had conceived to be possible that it should be fulfilled. The immense size and distance of the planets and fixed stars forbid the idea of their falling unto the earth. Larger bodies cannot fall in myriads unto a smaller body; but most of the planets, and all the fixed stars are many times larger than our earth. They cannot fall unto the earth; but these fell toward it."

"And how did they fall? Neither myself nor one of the family heard any report; and were I to hunt through nature for a simile, I could not find one so apt to illustrate the appearance of the heavens, as that which St. John uses in the prophecy before quoted. 'It rained fire,' says one; another, 'It was like the large flakes of falling snow, before a coming storm, or large drops of rain before a shower.' I admit their fitness for common accuracy; but they come far short of the accuracy of the figure used by the prophet: 'The stars of heaven fell unto the earth;' they were not sheets, or flakes, or drops of fire; but they were what the world understand by 'falling stars;' and one speaking to his fellow in the midst of the scene, would say, 'See how the stars fall!' and he who heard would not pause to correct the astronomy of the speaker, any more than he would be so precise as to reply, 'the sun does not move,' to one who should tell him 'the sun is rising.' The stars fell 'even as the fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come as if from several trees shaken, but from one: those which appeared in the east fell toward the east; those which appeared in the north fell toward the north; those which appeared in the west fell toward the west; those which appeared in the south (for I went out of my residence into the Park) fell toward the south. And they fell not as the ripe fruit falls. Far from it; but they flew; they were CAST like the unripe fruit, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and when under a violent pressure it does break its hold, it flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling, some cross the track of others, as they are thrown with more or less force, but each one falls on its own side of the tree. Such was the appearance of the above phenomena to the inmates of my house."

This was from an eye witness who penned the following, and years since avers it was not overdrawn. The second is from Prof. Olmstead, of Yale College, a distinguished meteorologist.

"The extent of the shower of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the EARTH'S SURFACE, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coast of South America, to undefined regions among the British Possessions on the north, the exhibition was visible, and everywhere presented the same appearance.

"In nearly all places, the meteors began to attract notice by their unusual frequency as early as eleven o'clock, and increased in numbers and splendor until about four o'clock, from which time they gradually declined, but were visible until lost in the light of day. The meteors did not fly at random over all parts of the sky, but appeared to emanate from a point in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the bend of the sickle."

This is important testimony, in regard to the vast extent of the exhibition of the phenomenon, and also of the falling stars; all emanating from a single point in the heavens.

"Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13th, 1833, probably saw the GREATEST DISPLAY of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history."

The moon has had the appearance of blood. I will quote the following extract from a letter of Mr. Beadle, of Aleppo, and published in the Missionary Herald, of June 1842, p. 234. It is an account of an earthquake at that place in 1822. He says:—

"On the night of the earthquake, there was something peculiar in the atmosphere, the moon appearing as red as blood. This greatly alarmed the inhabitants, who were continually crying out 'Now we shall hear the trumpet sound! and the dead will rise! the day of judgment has arrived."—Litch's Exp. vol. i. p. 153.

Those who witnessed the dark day have testified that on the subsequent night the moon, on coming from under the darkness of the cloud, had the exact appearance of blood.

We will now remark that A. D. 1779, was, in our opinion, the commencement of "THE TIME OF THE END;" for the Church—the saints—were given into the hands of the Little Horn in 519; they were to remain there, 1260 years, which, from that date would reach to 1779, and "the time of the end" commenced at that point, being a period of 75 years, and reaching to the end of the 1335 years.— Let me quote the two dates. Daniel is told that "the words are closed up, and sealed till the time of the end;" implying that THEN it would be unsealed. "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." Jesus said they should be shortened. (See Matt. xxiv. 15 and 22.) How much?— In Rev. xi. 2, he says, forty-two months, which make 1260 days (years); as also Rev. xii. 6, "a thousand two hundred and threescore days," (1270 years.) Dan. xii. 12, "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days," (1335 years.) The difference, then, between those two dates constitutes what is called "the TIME OF THE END," i. e. the difference between the 1290 shortened to 1260 and the 1335 days or years; since which period, God, in mercy, has been doing all that he promised he would do, to convince, bless and save his favorite creature—man. He has shown signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars. Permit me to invite your attention to the following very interesting testimony on this point. The Rev John Cox, speaking on the second advent of Christ, makes the following remark:—

"This I conceive is the next great event that we are NOW to look for. So far as I can discern, no further signs are to be expected, as it seems to me we have entered into that LAST period of AWFUL EXPECTATION during which the church is likened to TEN VIRGINS. By comparing the signs of the times with the numerical prophecies, we may know with certainty when the AWFUL and GLORIOUS day of the Lord is rapidly advancing upon us. The great and broad outlines of prophecy are obvious to every man who is a student of the prophetical writings, long before the predicted events are fulfilled. The prophecies of Daniel were closed up and sealed till the TIME OF THE END, when the book was to be opened, the seals to be removed—the mysterious dates were to be developed—many were to run to and fro and prophetical knowledge was to be increased. The period here foretold is that in which we are now living: for never, since the time of the reformation, has there been such deep and intense interest felt in the sacred prophecies, as within the last thirty or forty years.

"The seals are now being removed— the signs of the times shed a light on prophetical dates, and the dates shed light upon the signs of the times. All these signs, shedding their light upon the mysterious dates, and drawing light from them in return, i. e., the present concussion of nations; the simultaneous shaking of the Ottoman and Papal empires; the reign and dominion of infidelity; the extensive propagation of the Gospel beyond the limits of the Western Roman empire; the state of feeling and excitement in the Jewish nation; the infidel indifference of the world; the death-like slumber of the Church; and the Midnight Cry that has been recently raised and that is now ringing in the ears of the infidel world and a sleeping Church, all indicate that the 1260 years have run out their course. And when ye see these things, know that the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Dr. Duffield, who has recently published a work on the prophecies, relative to the second coming of Christ, says:—

"Among other signs that 'time of the end,' that is, the season during which the great periods of chronological prophecy run out, and the great things so long predicted will transpire, is described by very strong and marked signs, and particularly signs in the heavens. The sun shall be darkened—the moon shall not give her light—the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. It is supposed, by some, and we think with some plausibility, that while these physical events are to be regarded as symbolical of the revolutions and commotions of empires, they nevertheless will, literally, occur, striking atmospheric and celestial phenomena shall be observed, which being beyond the reach of man's philosophy, may be regarded as the visible symbols which God himself hangs out in the heavens to predict the consummation coming. It is remarkable, especially for the last fifty or sixty years, the atmospheric and celestial phenomena have been more marked, frequent and varied, than in any previous age of the world. It is said not less than fifteen hundred stars have faded from the vault of heaven; and some of them were observed in a state of conflagration. Ever since the French revolution, the peculiar signs, both moral and political, which were predicted to mark THE TIME OF THE END, have been developing. The preparation is making for a great and fearful crisis. The kings and rulers of the earth are leaguing and conspiring together and becoming more and more involved in their ambitious schemes. The Lord is sealing his people, pouring out his spirit and gathering his elect."

"THE DOOM OF OUR WORLD.—What this change is to be, we dare not even conjecture; but we see in the heavens themselves, some traces of destructive elements, and some indications of their power. The fragments of broken planets, the descent of meteoric stones upon our globe, the wheeling comets welding their loose material at the solar furnace, the volcanic eruptions in our own satelite, the appearance of new stars, and the disappearance of others,—are all foreshadows of the impending convulsions to which the system of the world is doomed. Thus placed on a planet which is to be burned up, and under heavens which are to pass away—thus treading, as it were, on the cemeteries and dwelling upon the mausoleums of former worlds—let us learn the lesson of humiliation and wisdom, if we have not already been taught in the school of revelation.—[North British Review."

A recent writer remarks:—

"Science, indeed, tells us that the centre of the earth is filled with floods of rolling liquid fire which are continually wasting and destroying it. Better than science, we have 'a more sure word of prophecy:' 'As for the earth, out of it cometh bread: and under it is turned up as it were fire.' Job xxvii. 5. These fires continually rolling to and fro, seeking to escape through the safety-valves, (volcanic mountains,) which God has prepared that the earth might not explode—while thus in motion, they operate on the various strata of the earth, wasting, exploding and removing it —causing a rumbling of the earth which we call earthquakes. Thus these fires have been at work for about 6000 years; and is it not reasonable that the effect of them should be still more apparent?— Hence we conclude, that having in a great measure devoured the very foundations of the earth—there must be more frequent alarms felt and seen of them. But the thinness and weakness of the remaining strata cannot long hold them down. They must immediately 'set on fire the foundations of the mountains and consume the earth with her increase.' Deut. xxxii. 22. [Preble's Voice of God.

At the TIME OF THE END, according to prophecy, "many were to run to and fro." M. Brock, of England, has said:—

"Another sign of our being near the END is, 'many shall run to and fro, and knowledge' was to be 'increased.' How manifestly do we see this NOW to be the case, and to an extent hitherto quite unparalleled. All kinds of science have been wonderfully developed; as to religious knowledge, since the beginning of this century, the word of God has been circulated in upwards of 200 languages and dialects. The present long period of European peace, with the commercial ascendency of Protestant and scientific Britain, throughout the world, doubtless have not been without their object in the divine councils."

AT, OR IN THE TIME OF THE END, "perilous times shall come." Read the following from the pen of Inspiration, as drawn by the Apostle Paul, in his second letter to Timothy, chap. iii. 1 to 9.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affections, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God: having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women, laden with sins, led away of divers lusts; ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.— Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was."

What a contradistinction in the above picture to that drawn by the pens of many with honorary distinction of D. D. which you will find by turning to [illegible]. There is one more picture in this portrait gallery of the last days, I wish to introduce to your solemn consideration. You will find it in [illegible] ii. 1-3.

"But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not."

The result of their false teaching would be a heaping to THEMSELVES teachers, and MANY SHALL FOLLOW THEIR PERNICIOUS WAYS. They will have the face of man on the HEAPS. Let the following extract from Prof. N. N. Whiting's "Origin, Nature and Influence of Neology" testify:—

"About fifty years since, Selmer, Professor of Divinity at Halle, began to lecture and publish on the subject of interpretation, in a manner that excited the attention of the whole German Empire.— The grand principle by which he explained away whatever he did not think proper to believe, was that which has been called accommodation. He maintained that the apostles and the Saviour often admitted representations and doctrines into their instructions, which were calculated merely for the purpose of persuading the Jews, being accommodated to their prejudices; but which were not intended to be a real directory of sentiment. In this way whatever was inconsistent with his own views, he called accommodation; and thus, at once, expunged it from the list of Christian doctrines.

"In like manner Ammon, Professor of Theology, at Erlangen, tells us in respect to the miracle of Christ's walking on the water, that, 'to walk on the sea, is not to stand on the waves, as on the solid ground, as Jerome dreams, but to walk through the waves so far as the shoals reached, and then to swim.' Theiss, in his commentary on the Acts, explains the miraculous effusion of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, (Acts ii.) in the following manner:—'It is not uncommon, says he, in those countries, for a violent gust of wind to strike on a particular spot or house; such a gust is commonly accompanied by the electric fluid; and the sparks of this are scattered all around. These float about the chamber, become apparent, and light upon the disciples. They kindle into enthusiasm at this, and believe the promise of their Master is now performed. This enthusiasm, spectators assemble to witness; and instead of preaching as before, in Hebrew, each one uses his own native tongue, to proclaim his feelings. The case of Annanias represented by the same writer! Annanias fell down terrified; but probably he was carried out and buried while still alive.' Heinrichs, however, who produces this comment of Theiss, relates another mode of explaining this occurrence, viz: 'that Peter stabbed Annanias; which,' says Heinrichs, 'does not at all disagree with the vehement and easily exasperated temper of Peter.' Numerous systems of Hermeneutics, i. e. the art of interpretation, have been written and published in Germany, on this plan. Meyer, in a very labored system of Hermeneutics of the Old Testament, in two large octavos, has a body of rules, by which everything miraculous is to be explained away. He concludes that there is the same objection to admitting any one miracle, as to admitting all. He, therefore, rejects the whole. 'At present, the leading German critics, (rejecting accommodation, and casting off all ideas of the divine origin of the scriptures,) are disputing with great zeal, the questions, whether a miracle be possible. Whether God and nature are one and the same? (Schelling, a distinguished, at the head of a great party, which maintains that they are the same.) And whether the Jews ever expected a Messiah? Some time ago, many of their critics maintained, that no Messiah was predicted in the Old Testament; but now they question whether the Jews had any expectation of one. It would seem, now, that they had come nearly to the end of questions on Theology.' We have made these long extracts from Prof. Stuart, because his candor is a guaranty for the accuracy of the remarks which he has made on the subject of Neology,—because he is well acquainted with writers of this school,— because we believe he has never been considered a fanatic. He says of these writers, (p. 152)—'The man who reads these works, will see what the spirit of doubt and unbelief can do, in respect to the Book of God, and where it will carry the man who admits it. [illegible] by it [illegible]. Time has answered the Professor's question. [illegible] publications [illegible] that the Neology [illegible] system of interpretation [illegible] divines who exert a powerful influence on the opinions of the church. But we will not anticipate the proofs of this fact. Eichorn furnishes a curious specimen of the respect in which a neologist may hold the 'sure word of prophecy.' 'All ecstacies and visions are, in my opinion, mere poetic fiction.' John, who, it will be recollected, was a Catholic, in his summary of the book of Daniel, although he seems to have stopped far short of the goal reached by Eichorn, yet he does not hesitate to interpret the vision of the seventh chapter, thus: 'The fourth monster had no resemblance to the others, but was exceedingly strong, and terrible to look at; it had great iron teeth,' &c. With the intention of changing the law or religion, it made war upon and conquered the saints, who were in subjection for a time, times and half a time. Hereupon the Eternal sits in judgment, commands the monster to be put to death, and the others to be delivered of their dominion, but allows them to live until a definite time. Then came in the clouds a human form, and received the dominion; the saints received sight, that is to say, they conquered and fortified the kingdom. All this is emblematic of the times of the Greek kingdoms, which were to spring from the monarchy of Alexander. Although the more considerable of these kingdoms were only four, yet, if the less important are added to them, they will approach so near to ten, that this round number may very properly be used. The little horn, which became great, is Antiochus Epiphanes, who prohibited the worship of the true God, and persecuted and made war upon the pious Jews. THE HUMAN FIGURE IN THE CLOUDS, IS AN EMBLEM OF THE MACCABEES!"

The above is a faint idea of the system of teaching adopted by MANY, in these last days. Instead of their paths growing brighter and brighter to the perfect day, they have grown darker and darker to a perfect night, and they "wrest the scriptures to their own destruction." I will close on this point by enquiring of the reader, has the time come as predicted by the Apostle in the following language?—"For the time will come, when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears: and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."—2 Tim. 4: 3, 4.

[Concluded in our next.]

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, SEPTEMBER 27, 1854.

Light Wanted.

Before commencing my remarks on this subject, I wish to say, that it is our desire to avoid polemic warfare as far as practicable consistently with our obligations to truth. In respect to the doctrine of native immortality, I deemed it essential to present the subject as concisely as possible, in order that those who have not been informed in relation to our interpretation of Scripture, might understand our position. And I esteemed it essential for two reasons, viz., that none might be repelled from the truth of the Lord's coming by misapprehending our position; and also that inquiring minds might be directed into truth. Every moment of my time being occupied, I had no leisure for preparing articles on the subject, and therefore took a series of letters which I had written to a friend on the subject. These letters have presented very imperfectly, it is true, but candidly and kindly, I trust, the true doctrine of Scripture. The ideas were thrown out for the consideration of all, with a perfect willingness that all should scrutinize the same, analyze the passages referred to, and make up their own minds on the point agreeably to their own judgment. But I cannot help remarking that God in his providence and grace has prepared the way for the reception of the present light, in relation to the sleep of the dead. I am sure God's hand moved the truth of Scripture on that point, in that section of the Vineyard in which I was laboring some two years since, till it rolled like thunder-peals; and those who had long resisted all the arguments that could be produced on the subject, bowed under the mighty hand of God, and confessed the truth. I well recollect hearing one excellent Brother plead with the congregation to forgive him that he had long taught that men possessed immortal souls while out of Christ, and added, with flowing tears, "God helping me, I never will teach such a doctrine again."

But is this essential truth? Certainly; or it would not be in the Bible. But is it saving truth? Yes, all divine truth is saving truth, i. e. each part of the system goes to make up one perfect whole. We are to lay up for ourselves a good foundation by building on the rock. (Now if you reject one truth, you leave out that stone from your foundation; and if you reject another, you leave out another stone, and so on till your house is in danger of falling: wherefore we need all the support possible, that our house may never be shaken. I judge no man, but I sometimes observe facts; and one observation I have made is this that the belief in the [illegible] state of the dead forms a [illegible] stepping stone to the doctrine of '54. Another thing: it is almost impossible for any one to believe firmly the time, and cry, as we now understand the subject, without first embracing the Bible doctrine in relation to the dead; and if any one makes the attempt, it is like leaping over the intervening step which God has placed; it not only requires an effort, but the probability is that the individual will fall back again. Why this is so, I cannot fully determine, unless it is because God will have a pure Church, free from all the elements of Catholicism—that the last vestige of this mother of harlots and abominations of the earth might be eradicated, and the waters of life, as they flow undiluted from the fountain of truth, or, in other words, the sincere milk of the word, may nurture the soul unto eternal life.

Now if I had a desire for controversy, and to make the community think I was something, when I was nothing, I might have kept the reader of the Crisis in constant ferment; but the paper is not designed for controversy, or a display of self. We wish to throw out what we believe to be truth, and let the community judge for themselves. But as a correspondent very properly asks for light, it may be proper, in Christian meekness, to give it.

We are on the car of divine truth. God's mighty hand is moving the engine, and whoever braces himself against it, resists the power of the swiftly rolling locomotive.

The best Brethren on earth may believe for a time, and without examination, that the doctrine can be easily overthrown; but to us it is like a man putting forth his hand to stop the sun in its course, or intercept its beams of day. God's sun will shine, and its Author will have it give light to the world.

Our correspondent says:

"DEAR SIR,—I am an inquirer after truth, and if there is any in your new doctrine, do let a hungry soul have some."

That is what we are endeavoring to do. The new doctrine, as you denominate it, is this—Jesus the resurrection and the life—that he that believeth on him shall not perish but have everlasting life; but that no murderer or unbeliever hath eternal life abiding in him. This doctrine, however, is not so new as you imagine: for Jesus brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel, and as a Redeemer he claims the honor, dear Brother, of giving immortality to those "who by patient continuance in well doing seek for honor, and glory, and immortality." He says, "I give unto them, (his sheep), eternal life." If they had by nature possessed immortality, or eternal life, they would not need to seek for it, nor to receive it at the hand of Him who died for the life of the world. But this doctrine is still older than the Christian dispensation. David said, "O spare me that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more." Again: "For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be." Again: "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away." But "the righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever." Ps. 37: 10, 20, 29.

Nay, go back to the days of Job; we find he assures us, that if he had died in infancy, he should, like an "hidden, untimely birth," have had no existence, any more than "infants which never saw the light"—which could not have been, if he had possessed an immortal soul from birth. But yet his faith was strong, that his Redeemer lived, and that he should see Him in the latter day, though his sins might be consumed within him.

Our correspondent continues:

"The Bible, I have sometimes thought, was a curious book."

No wonder, if you understand the Bible to teach such incongruous doctries as some affirm it does. If when it says a man is dead, it means that he possesses a more vigorous life; when a man sleeps in Jesus, that all the powers of his spiritual being are awake and active; if when it says, "the dead know not anything," it means that they know more than ever before; when a man's thoughts perish, that they are more active than ever;—that when a man's hatred and love are perished, that the hatred of the sinner, and the love of the saint are perfected—in short, if while the Bible teaches one thing, it means precisely the opposite, it would indeed be "a strange book." But just let us understand the Scriptures to mean what they teach, and interpret language agreeably to the principles of common sense, and the Bible you will find to be a blessed, glorious, consistent volume of truth.

Correspondent:

"The text quoted in your paper of the 15th inst., from Rev. 22: 9, sounds much like a man who had breathed his breath out, and yet held on to consciousness, memory, &c."

You say the text sounds as if a man had breathed his breath out, &c.; but when the Scripture says, that the being at whose feet John fell, was an Angel, it does not sound to me like a man. A living Angel and a deceased man are, in my judgment, very different beings.

Correspondent:

"The writer attempts to give us a more correct rendering of the Greek text, and then runs away from his own translation, which is in substance the same as the common version."

The common version reads, "I am thy fellow servant and of thy Brethren the Prophets." This rendering might, to some minds, convey the idea that the Angel was one of the Prophets; but no such idea is conveyed in the original, as I supposed all would see by a literal rendering of the Greek, thus: "I am a fellow-servant of thee, and of thy Brethren the Prophets." I therefore thought it unnecessary to make any more remarks on that point, which you call running away from my own translation.

"Now will you just say to the author of said article, (whose name is wanting,) that I say, that a man's soul lives when his body is dead; and my say so is as good and as conclusive an argument as his, on Rev. 22: 9."

I supposed it would be understood that when no name is attached to an article on the editorial page, for the most part, I have written them; and by the way, I hope no more correspondents will write without the signature of their names. You say the soul lives when the body is dead; but the scripture says, "the soul that sinneth IT SHALL DIE." You may reply that this is spiritual death, i. e., death in tresspasses and sins. But the same Prophet says, (Ezekiel 13: 19,) "And will ye pollute me among my people for handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread, to slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live, by your lying to my people that hear your lies?" In this verse he speaks of SLAYING SOULS; if that does not imply their literal death, what does it imply? Again, it speaks of slaying the souls that should not DIE. This explains the meaning, and nails the important truth that it implies the death of the soul. Again, to make it sure without the possibility of a doubt, the contrast is drawn: and that is, to save the souls alive that should not live. If this dees not express clearly and unequivocally the death of the soul, I ask, what language on earth can express it? You will not deny perhaps it means death; but will say it means spiritual death. Let us see. If so, the souls that God condemned to death were preserved alive spiritually by man, when the Lord says those souls should not live. Nor is this all: they were kept spiritually alive by lying to His people. Now we can conceive how souls could be saved from literal death by lying to screen them from condign punishment; but how souls could be kept alive spiritually by lying, remains to be explained by those who deny the death of the soul. If it be not demonstrated by this verse, that the soul is liable to death, then language is powerless to prove anything by the Bible; and I must set the Bible down to be, as you say, "a strange book."

Well, now you say when the body is dead the soul lives; but inasmuch as the scripture declares that the soul that sinneth it shall die, permit me to ask, if the soul lives when the body is dead, what part of the man lives when the soul is dead?

"You must excuse me for writing thus; but the fact is, said writer gives about as much light as my candles in a box and down cellar."

If a person's affections are buried in the earth, and himself inclosed within sectarian walls, which some compare to a box, his condition would not be inaptly represented by the comparison you have drawn; and by such I would not expect the light to be apprehended; for Jesus says, "the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not." But as I hope this is not your case, I am left to wonder why you could not perceive that the Angel's being a fellow-servant of the Prophets (according to the literal rendering), no more constituted him a Prophet, than his being a fellow-servant of John, constituted him John. Observe, it is not said, he was one of the Prophets, but a fellow-servant of the Prophets. It simply implies that he was a creature, and not the Creator; a worshipper of God, as were John and the Prophets, instead of being himself an object of worship.

"Now, Mr. Editor, you must be capable of sustaining the hypothesis, to which a portion of your paper is devoted. I therefore ask you, as an inquirer after truth—Was not the person whom St. John was about to worship, a disembodied spirit?"

By no means, Brother. But as my authority is nothing, I will just refer to one or two standard authors on this verse. Says Thomas Scott: "Now nothing could give more energy to this protest, than the repeated injunction laid on him, not to pay any homage resembling adoration, to a most glorious, benevolent ANGEL, when visibly present, and acting the part of an Instructor to him."

Albert Barns gives the same idea. In commenting on Rev. 22: 9, he refers us for an explanation to Rev. 19: 10, where he says: "Evidently this was an Angel, and yet he here speaks of himself as a 'fellow-servant' of John." * * "The sentiment is, that in promoting religion in the world, we are associated with Angels."

Correspondent:

"Jesus Christ said, 'There was a certain rich man,' &c.—'and there was a certain beggar,' &c. Now, did the 'rich man' lift up his eyes, &c., &c., as stated in the New Testament? and is the truth also spoken of Lazarus?"

It is evident the rich man, when his eyes were closed in death, could not literally lift them up in the grave, and see Lazarus afar off; for the place to which he went was hades, the grave, or the place of the dead, and not Gehenna, the place of hell-fire of which Jesus speaks, and which is claimed by the advocates of the popular theory as being the place of endless punishment. And it is equally evident, that Lazarus was not literally conveyed into Abraham's bosom. I think no intelligent Christian will contend for the literal interpretation of this entire passage; no Commentator, I believe, has so regarded it. But of late, when all the literal passages are clearly shown to teach no such thing as the immortality of a soul out of Christ, or a state of future endless misery to any class, these symbolical passages, that have been acknowledged as such, are seized on as liberal verities to prop up a theory that by fair scriptural argument has been, I sincerely think, completely demolished by able writers.

To make the ideas presented in this parable literal, would involve many inconsisences. The principal idea of heaven is, that it is dwelling with Christ; and that is the theory maintained by those who believe in native immortality, viz: that when a Christian dies his soul goes to dwell in heaven with Christ. Now the rich man went to hades, the underground world of the departed; but Jesus ascended to heaven. How could Lazarus in hades literally converse with Abraham in heaven? Are heaven and hell contiguous, so that the wailings of the lost are mingled with the hallelujahs of the redeemed? I think no one can really believe so. Well, if this description is not literal, it is symbolical, i. e. it is a Parable. One more remark. Hades is to be destroyed; for we read that death and hell (hades) was cast into the lake of fire.

For an exposition of this Parable see our last page.

"Does Jesus teach to the Sadducees the doctrine of the soul's consciousness after death, where He says, God is not the God of the dead, but of the living? Give me light here"

Far from it. His language, indeed, proves the reverse, and that very conclusively. The Sadducees, it seems, denied all rewards and punishments in a future life. In order to puzzle our Saviour in relation to the resurrection of the dead, they propound to Him the question respecting the woman who had seven husbands, inquiring which of them would have her to wife in the resurrection. This question, as all must allow, involved not the intermediate state between death and the resurrection, but the resurrection of the dead. Jesus replies accordingly, and to prove that the dead rise, quotes the language of Moses, viz. the Lord is "the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." Well, Master, how does that prove that the dead wil rise?—Because God is not the God of the dead but of the living.

Now people usually understand this language thus: God is not the God of the dead, but of the living; but He is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; therefore it follows that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are living, and of course in heaven.—What then is proved? It is proved that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are now in heaven, and this is all that is proved. But the question of the Sadducees related to the resurrection, and Jesus in reply undertook to show that the dead rise; but agreeably to your understanding of this paragraph, he has departed from this question at issue, and instead of showing the resurrection, has proved an intermediate state, leaving the resurrection untouched.

But you inquire, how do you understand it? I understand Jesus gave an appropriate answer, and proved what they denied, and of which they asked Him, so that certain of the Pharisees said, "Master, thou hast well said; and after that they durst not ask Him any question at all." And He proved it in this way. If there be no resurrection, as Paul clearly shows us, they that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished. This proves to a demonstration, that if there be no resurrection, there is no future life. Although they may have fallen asleep believing in Jesus, yet the Apostle says explicitly that if the dead rise not, Christ is not raised, and the departed believers in Christ are perished, i. e. ultimately and forever lost. No language can speak more plainly than this—no resurrection, no future life. The Apostle shows by a demonstrative argument, that the whole foundation of Christianity is the death and resurrection of Christ; and that the whole fabric of the Christian's hope in relation to a future life—a world to come, is based on the resurrection of the dead; and that the whole argument in relation to the resurrection of the saints, is dependent on the fact of the resurrection of Christ; and that the moment you knock away that great block on which the whole superstructure of the kingdom rests, viz the resurrection of Christ, the resurrection of the saints falls, and hence the entire edifice of the Christian's hope is laid in ruins.—And to confirm this idea beyond question, that that is the Apostle's meaning, he adds: "If in this life ONLY we have hope, we are of all men most miserable"—equivalent to saying, if Jesus was not resurrected, then the saints will not be resurrected, and we, of all men on earth, are the most miserable; for we have sacrificed every thing and received nothing in return. We have given all for Christ and the world to come, we peril our lives, and sacrifice our substance, and abandon the world for the kingdom of God, and now if there be no such kingdom—nor future life for the saints, of all beings in the wide world we are most to be pitied.

Now Christ's argument with the Sadducees in relation to the dead, was the same, viz. no resurrection, no life. But if the saints have no life, or existence, God cannot be their God. But when, blessed Saviour, wilt thou impart this life to the saint? "I will raise him up at the last day." The idea, therefore, is clearly this, that death is merely a temporary suspension of life; and for that reason is called in Scripture sleep: for as sleep is a temporary suspension of the mental and physical powers, to be again brought into action when that sleep is broken, so that although all action of the mind may cease in profound slumber, yet the man is regarded still as a man possessed of all those powers and faculties, since they return in full vigor the moment he is startled from sleep, so a man who dies in the Lord is regarded as one asleep in Jesus; because the slumber of death is to be broken, and all the energies of his being will return in renovated vigor. Therefore, in the eye of God, who sees things that are not, as though they were, a deceased saint is regarded as a sleeping child to be awakened at the sound of the trumpet; for all live unto Him, i. e. in the eye of God who sees the end from the beginning, they are regarded as living.

Thus we have the resurrection proved. And the proof is this. God is not the God of those who are forever perished, as all would be without a resurrection; but God is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; therefore Abraham, Isaac and Jacob must have a resurrection. We have, then, two things proved in this passage; one is a resurrection, and the other, that there is no other way for God to be the God of the patriarchs, except by raising them from the dead; which clearly demonstrates that they are not alive now: for if they were, God would still be their God without a resurrection.

Thus much we hope will suffice for our views in relation to the unconscious state of the dead.

A Scriptural Account

OF THE

Uncommon Darkness that happened on Friday, May 19, 1780.

LOVING BROTHERS:—In as much as we have so many undeniable Proofs that the Day of the Lord draws near, I think it is more certified to us in the Sun, Moon and Stars all being smitten at once, which no Writing, that I ever found, gave any Account of such a Thing, before the 19th of May, 1780; neither can I find but one Day and Night of that uncommon Darkness mentioned in Scripture before Christ's second Coming.—That these few Lines may be a Warning and Comfort to you, is the hearty Wish of your loving Brother,

JOHN KENNEDY.

I Begin at Isaiah 13th, and 6th Verse—Howl ye for the Day of the Lord is at Hand; it shall come as a Destruction from the Almighty.

Verse 10. For the Stars of the Heavens, and the Constellations thereof, shall not give their Light: the Sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the Moon shall not cause her light to shine.

EZEKIEL 32, 7. And when I shall put thee out, I will cover the Heaven, and make the Stars thereof dark. I will cover the sun with a Cloud, and the Moon shall not give her light.

JOEL 2, 31. The Sun shall be turned into Darkness, and the Moon into Blood, before the great and terrible Day of the Lord come.

Chap. 3d, Verse 15. The Sun and the Moon shall be darkened, and the Stars shall withdraw their shining.

AMOS 5, 16, 17, 18, 20. Therefore the Lord God of Hosts, the Lord saith thus,—Wailing shall be in the Streets, and they shall say in all the Highways, Alas! And they shall call the Husbandman to Mourning, and such as are skillful of Lamentation to Wailing. (which may be referred to the 19th of May, 1780, as it was the case in most Towns in the State of Massachusetts Bay.)

And in all Vineyards shall be Wailing: for I will pass through thee, saith the Lord.

Wo unto you that desire the Day of the Lord: To what End is it for you? The Day of the Lord is Darkness and not Light.

Shall not the Day of the Lord be Darkness and not Light? even very Dark, and no Brightness in it.

MATTHEW 24. 7. For Nation shall rise against Nation, and Kingdom against Kingdom: And there shall be Famines and Pestilences, and Earthquakes in divers places.

Verse 8. All these are the Beginning of Sorrows.

Verse 10. Then shall many be offended, and betray one another, and shall hate one another.

Verse 11. And many false Prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many.

Verse 24. For there shall arise false Christs, and false Prophets, and shall shew great Signs and Wonders, insomuch that (if it were possible) they shall deceive the very elect.

MATTHEW 24, 25. Behold I have told you before.

Verse 29. Immediately after the Tribulation of those Days shall the Sun be darkened, and the Moon shall not give her light, and the Stars shall fall from Heaven, and the Powers of Heaven shall be shaken.

Verse 33. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these Things, know that it is near, even at the Doors.

Verse 44. Therefore, be ye also ready: For in such an Hour as you think not, the Son of Man cometh.

MARK 13, 24, 25. But in those Days, after that Tribulation, the Sun shall be darkened, and the Moon shall not give her light. And the Stars of Heaven shall fall, and the Powers that are in Heaven shall be shaken.

Verses 28, 29. Now learn a Parable of the Figtree: When her Branch is yet tender, and putteth forth Leaves, ye know that Summer is near:—So ye in like Manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the Doors.

LUKE 21, 25. And there shall be signs in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars; and upon the Earth Distress of Nations, with Perplexity, the Sea and the Waves roaring.

Verse 33. Heaven and Earth shall pass away: But my Word shall not pass away.

Verse 35. For as a Snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the Face of the whole Earth.

1 THESSALONIANS 5, 3, 4. For when they shall say Peace and Safety, then sudden Destruction cometh upon them, as Travail upon a Woman with Child; and they shall not escape.—But ye, Brethren, are not in Darkness, that that Day should overtake you as a thief.

REVELATION 8, 12, 13. And the fourth Angel sounded, and the third part of the Sun was smitten, and the third part of the Moon, and the third part of the Stars; so as the third part of them were darkened; And the Day shone not for a third part of it, and the Night likewise.

And I beheld, and heard an Angel flying through the Midst of Heaven, saying, with a loud Voice, Wo, Wo, Wo, to the inhabitants of the Earth, by Reason of the other Voices of the Trumpet of the three Angels which are yet to sound.

The publication of this notice to the community so soon after the fulfilment of the sign, is a striking illustration of the fact, that the Simeons and Annas of that period were divinely warned of the approaching judgment. They began to see, at first indistinctly, like the blind man who saw "men as trees walking," and hence applied scriptures to the subject which evidently did not belong there; but the great and all-important idea is plain, that they recognized the accomplishment of the sign given in Matt. 24: 29 in relation to the darkening of the sun, and published it to the Church as a matter of comfort.

Bro. Kennedy spoke of the darkness in Massachusetts Bay. Perhaps at that time, as news was conveyed very slowly, the writer might not have known how extensively the darkness prevailed. Here we perceive the first budding of the fig tree; had he lived in our day what must have been the strength of of his faith, when all the signs are developed, and we are required to "lift up our heads, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh."

The Types.

Having just returned from visiting the Brethren of some six towns, I find them just on a turning point. While some are looking at, and tracing out the types, and bringing all their arrangements within the first part of November, others are distrusting God, and expecting to winter here, having professed and proved their firm faith in '54.

Being satisfied that men are taking their last step, I am constrained to write. There cannot be too much importance attached to faith in carrying out its principles, when evidence on the subject is sufficient. Now, is there evidence of the Lord's coming this fall? You say it is conclusive. God, therefore, holds you to act accordingly. Nothing is recognized as faith in the Bible, only that which produced the same effect as knowledge. Look at Noah, Abraham, Lot, &c., and especially Lot's wife, who, having yielded to a lingering desire for something she had left, stands in sacred History a caution to us. Oh, may we remember our Savior's admonitions, and look not behind.

The children of Israel left Egypt on the self-same day foretold in Prophesy. Observe their faith while eating the Passover, Ex. 12: 11. "And thus shall you eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste: it is the Lord's Passover, (first type fulfilled at the Cross, viz., the killing of the Paschal lamb at the exact time, 14th day of the first month at evening. John 19: 14.) "And it was the preparation of the Passover, and about the sixth hour; and he saith unto the Jews, behold your King." Luke 23: 44, 46. "And it was about the sixth hour, and there was darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour." And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice he gave up the Ghost.

How exact God was in commencing a fulfilment of the Types; and Jesus says Matt. 5: 17, 18, he did not come to destroy the law, but to fulfill it; and till heaven and earth pass away, one jot or tittle should not pass from the law till all be fulfilled. And as time is the most prominent feature, it must be met exactly in the anti-type, otherwise no fulfilment. As our Lord approached his hour, He said to his disciples (Matt. 26: 2) "Ye know that after two days is the feast of the Passover, and the son of man is betrayed to be crucified." Why then, Master? Because that lamb was slain then. They knew the time, therefore. Why did not the soldiers break his legs? "Neither shall ye break a bone thereof." (Ex. 12: 46.) Oh how perfect! Brethren, can ye believe God so as to stand with your loins girded, as those Israelites were commanded to do? Could they, think you, have moved with the Church, when the command of God through Moses was heard, if they had not been all ready? Can we respond to our deliverer, I am ready, when he calls? (which will be in a few days from this) unless we make the previous preparation? Would they have been ready without time? No. Can we? No. Do we understand the time? Yes, glory to God!

But to our examples of faith,—The three in the fiery furnace (Dan. 3,)—also, Daniel in the lion's den (Chap 6); John on Patmas, after going through the boiling oil, one of our tested witnesses, with Christ and Daniel, on the Abomination of Desolation—best of authority. Praise the Lord, it is established forever. Brethren, look at the old land-marks; they are firm; that of '44 was good. We must, however, have a tarry, which we could not have had without a disappointment. We have had it. The Church have been sifted from error—got freed from the name, "mystery"—have learned that man was made of the dust of the ground, and never would have lived without the breath of life, which was breathed into his nostrils, and which goeth forth and he dies, and has no more a reward without a resurection. Also we have learned, that Christ was and is the Son of God, composed of that which was of the seed of David, (therefore David's son,) anointed with that which was produced by the Word of God, through the influence of the Holy Ghost; and as an article of the Methodist Discipline says, "Never to be separated;" therefore we have a perfect sacrifice. Peter says, God raised him (Christ) who was put to death in the flesh, not the son of David only, but David's Lord. We have learned also, that he is to stand up for the deliverance of those who have waited till the end of the (1335) days, which terminate this year. Now comes the time for the seventh month Types to have their fulfilment.

Read Lev. 23. There in connection with the spring types, one of which I have spoken of, you find the fall types commencing on the first day of the 7th month, one of which was the blowing of trumpets until the 10th; then a day of atonement, on which day the High Priest went in (and of course came out, as they completed their offering in one day,) to bless the waiting people. Again, (Lev. 25: 9), on the same day the Jubilee Trump was to be blown. This has always been considered a type of the trump that is to raise the dead. Look at your old hymn books; did not the poets of former days look forward to the fulfilment. (1 Thess. 4: 10), "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." Christ says "The harvest is the end of the world; the reapers are the Angels." Again he says, at harvest time he will send his Angels to gather his people. The Feast of Tabernacles evidently typifies the feast at which Jesus promised to gird himself and come forth and serve his people.

Now read Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, from the 3d to the 10th chas. He traces down Christ's priesthood, comparing it with the Levitical priesthood, showing the greater importance of Christ's. After, coming down to the Judgment, he says, (ch. 9: 27, 28,) "And as it is appointed unto man once to die, but after this the Judgment, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Again: "for the law having a shadow of good things to come." He then brings us down to ch. 10: 24: "And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works." Verse 25th: "But exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Ques. What day? Ans. The Day of Judgment, and the coming of Christ our High Priest, spoken of in the last of the 9th chapter. But, says one, he did not enter the Holy of Holies on the same day as they did under the law. True, our passover was not taken up on the 10th of the first month, and kept until the fourteenth, yet Paul says he was our passover. (1 Cor. 5: 7) So you see the time of its termination is the important point. Therefore, I believe on the 10th day of the 7th Jewish month, 1854, our High Priest will appear, and am making arrangements accordingly; and so will every man that believes it. Now, Brethren, this is your last point in time; and it is all we want. If you let your minds run past this time, all is uncertainty and perplexity. There is no evidence there. Then let us rally to the point. Bend all our actions and conversation to make ready—right all wrongs with neighbors and Brethren—sacrifice all property and pride, selfishness of every kind. Sell that ye have, and liberate that poor Brother. Brother, covet not; but trust in God. Elders, I intreat you as fathers to do your duty to the Church. Give us present truth and trust in God. Be humble enough to receive this with meekness.

NEWELL N. WOOD.

Orrington, Me., Sept. 5, 1854.

To the Saints of God waiting for Redemption.

CANAAN, Sept. 22, 1854.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in the Lord, you will see by the "Crisis" the notice of the meeting at Exeter, N. H., commencing Friday, the 6th day of October, which is expected to be the last meeting of this kind we are ever to enjoy this side of the day of God. And Oh my brethren, what a thought! Is it so, that we are now to close up the warfare of the saints on earth? Yes, it must be so; the long-looked for day will come at length, and this is the time—true time.

And now, dear brethren, we beg of you in the name of Christ, if you are permitted to attend this meeting, and come with the profession of a "midnight cry" and "time believer," see that you examine yourselves carefully, and know that you are in the faith. And if you are prepared to say to your brethren when you meet them at this meeting, "I believe that I shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ this fall or this year to receive my reward," see that all your affairs of this world which you leave behind, correspond with your profession. God will know about all your matters, how they are left; and can you, with such a faith, leave them in a condition that you would not like to meet them in at the judgment? O may the indulgent Lord help you to quit yourselves like men of God at this important point in our history. We shall be "a gazing stock" to the world and heaven, as the cause of God and of Christ [illegible]? Yes. If we believe it is with all our hearts. Then it is worthy of the noblest acts; and in the name of all that is dear—as we prize life, as we prize immortality, as we prize the glories and joys of the everlasting kingdom, as we prize the society of saints and angels, and above all, as we desire the approbation of our Master, let us show to the world, to each other, and to high heaven, that we are in possession of the meek and quiet spirit of the blessed Saviour—that we are children of faith indeed in all the word of God—that we believe what we have declared to the world, and what we profess, that the crisis of this world has come—that the day of God is now to commence, even "the great day of his wrath" and "perdition of ungodly men!" And let our prayer be, "O God help us to glorify thee."

Many will have a desire, doubtless to attend this meeting, who will not have the means to come, but you that have means, see to it, that you love your poor Brother or Sister as yourself. If one of the lambs for whom Christ died should be neglected, Father will hear their cries, and the King will say, "inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." Let us be sure and do what we can before it is too late to do anything.

We do hope there will be a great representation of the poor at this meeting.—Are not the poor rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom? Bro. you who have got goods, houses, lands, or money, relieve thy poor Brother or Sister; and do it while you can. Come up to this feast, you that have property, and you that have none, be sure and come if you have a desire to, but be sure and come Christians if you profess to be.

There need be no fears of delusion and wild fire. God is with the host, and "the shout of a king is among them." The Church have salt in themselves, fear not.

Come up to this feast, you who cannot see the present truth, and you who cannot see your duties clear; come, and may the God of light sow light in your path, or you get into the path rather where light is already sown. Let no prejudice keep any from coming. All will be done that can be to make every one comfortable, and to supply their wants. Let not distance keep you away.

We remain your servants for Jesus' sake,

J. HEMENWAY,
J. CUMMINGS.

P. S. Three of the first days of the meeting I must be in Maine, but if the Lord will, shall meet the saints at Exeter, Monday the 9th; and hope all the Church in Maine, who do not come before, will come with me. J. C.

Later from Europe.

Great decline in Breadstuffs.—The Eastern War.—Russia Refuses to Evacuate the Principalities.—Austria again "defines her position," &c.

The steamship Ottowa arrived at Quebec yesterday afternoon, from Liverpool Sept. 6.—The most important news—that which will most gladden the hearts of the great human family—is, that all breadstuffs were cheaper, the reported fall of wheat being 4 to 6 shillings per quarter. This is good.

Strict orders have been sent to the Austrian Consul at St. Petersburg, not to deviate from the four points laid down in M. Drouyhn de L'Huy's Note, nor to admit of any modification of the Russian answer.

A despatch from Vienna says that the Emperor of Russia rejects absolutely to give the required guarantee that the Principalities should be evacuated; and the Moniteur of Sunday confirms this despatch. It is said in Vienna that the Emperor of Russia added, that he would rather sacrifice his last soldier than to accept such conditions.

Vienna, Sept. 2d. Some people still say that Prince Demidorff has not brought any definite answer from St. Petersburg, but merely a private note from the Czar to the King of Prussia, wherein the four points are interpreted differently. And it is for this reason that the Czar is willing to enter on fresh negotiations.

Another despatch says that Baron Manteuffel has received the official answer of the Czar to the proposals to re-commence negotiations upon the basis stipulated by the Western Powers, and that Russia unequivocally declines to accept the proposals. She will still maintain the offensive. This last report is probably correct.

Advices from Bucharest to the 20th ult, state that Derbest Pasha had arrived in the capital, and that he had issued a proclamation in the name of the Sultan, stating that the Austrians would occupy the Principalities as the allies of the Ottoman Porte. All the former privileges of the Principalities would be maintained.

The cholera had abated in both armies. No new movements had taken place except that the French were embarking fascines, gabions and artillery.

The Czar's Refusal to accede to the Conditions of the Allies—Further Decline of Breadstuffs.

The Atlantic arrived at New York Wednesday, from Liverpool Sept. 6—one day later than our last news.

The unconditional refusal of the Czar to accede to the peace proposals of the four powers, is confirmed. A Cabinet Council was held at Vienna immediately on the reception of the reply. The Austrian and Swedish Ministers are expecting to leave St. Petersburg.

Prince Albert and the King of Belgium are with the Emperor Napoleon at the Camp at Boulogne. The camp is now completely organized, and consists of 100,000 men of all arms.—In military parlance this is called the Army of the North. It will remain in camp until the spring, and then be drafted into active service, as it may be required, to be opposed to the enemy. Louis Napoleon in person commands the manoeuvres. The English papers are unbounded in their [illegible] Camp. His Royal Highness of Prince Albert is to [illegible] squadron of the Queen's Life Guards. Four ships-of-war, and an [illegible] large ships, accompanied the Prince Marshal, on his visit to France. For three days Prince Albert is to be the guest of Louis Napoleon.

Prince Jerome Bonaparte and Louis Napoleon are to visit Belgium, and will be met at Tournay by the King of Belgium, on the 18th of September.

It is reported that Christina, ex-Queen of Spain, is now insane from the effects of the intense excitement consequent upon the recent revolution in Spain, and the dangers through which she had passed in making her escape.

Madrid was quiet. Queen Christina had been escorted by cavalry in her escape into Portugal. Her children had arrived in England.

Constantinople dates of Aug. 25, state that the Siege Artillery of the French had arrived. All the Turkish men-of-war on the coast of Asia had been put in requisition for Varna.

The Russians had captured another vessel and carried her into Sebastopol.

General Guyon has taken command of the Turkish army in Asia. Artillery had been embarked at Varna, and troops were actively being prepared.

Schamyl will support the Turks in Asia with 8000 men.

The Turkish government contemplates taking from the Greek clergy their judicial jurisdiction.

Steamer Arabia, from Liverpool 9th inst., arrived at New York Thursday afternoon.

War Intelligence. The Emperor of Russia has refused the terms proposed by Austria, but will retire beyond the Pruth, and there await the course of events, whether they may be hostile or peaceable.

A special meeting of the Austrian government has decided that this is not to be considered a casus belli against Russia. Consequently, Austria will maintain her present position, awaiting the result of the action of the allied armies and fleets upon Sebastopol.

New negotiations are being patched up between Austria, Prussia and the German States, with a view to peace.

It is said that the Czar is about to proclaim his third son, Nicholas, King of Poland.

Romarsund has finally been destroyed and the troops re-embarked.

Accounts from Rutschuk of the 3d state that all the vessels of the expedition to the Crimea had left Varna on the 2d. It is said that the fleet will consist of 100 steamers, 300 transports, 36 sail of the line, 70,000 troops, and an immense amount of siege and storming material. The first part of the expedition will include 36,000 French troops, 25,000 English and 10,000 Turks. Marshal St. Arnaud had issued an order of the day, acquainting the troops with the destination of the expedition, dated Varna, Aug. 25. It was for the Crimea, and the duty of the allied forces would be to take Sebastopol as a pledge of peace.

The Duke of Cambridge and Prince Napoleon, against the advice of their physicians, had proceeded to join the expedition.

The Moniteur states that on the 25th ult., the cholera had almost totally disappeared at Varna.

Lord Gough had been suddenly summoned to London. It is supposed that he will be induced to accept a command in the eastern army.

The Russian embassay at Vienna has received notice that the greater part of the Russian army will have quitted Moldavia on the 20th September, and the remainder would leave by the beginning of October, unless hostilities should render a fresh concentration necessary.

The condition of affairs in Asia has improved.

Georgia had been surprised by Schamyl with twenty thousand Circassians. The Russians were defeated, and have retired into their fortresses.

Another despatch says that Schamyl had made a descent into Georgia, where he destroyed about two hundred villages. Forty Russian ladies were carried off. Gen. Bebuto has blown up the fortifications of Bayazid and abandoned the town, in order to throw his forces on the points more immediately threatened.

The Baltic. Dantzic, Thursday. Marshal Baraguay d'Hilliers and staff arrived here in the Fulton, on their way to France.

On the 4th the fleet was at Ledsund, and it is reported that there is nothing more to be done this season.

Greece. Advices have been received from Athens to the 2d inst. They state that the commander of the French troops, now in Greece, insists upon their removal to Athens from their present location, as a thousand men have died from cholera.

The Ministry was endeavoring to re-establish relations with Turkey.

Spain. The Madrid correspondent of the London Times charges Mr Soule, the American Ambassador, with having stimulated the insurrectionary attempt. He began his operations in a few hours after Queen Christina's departure. He had his agents among the barricades, and supplied money. Mr Soule has left Madrid, and the inference is that he will not again return to his post.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 2. All the convicts in Poland, except murderers, have been liberated on the promise that they would set fire to any place that the enemy might attack.

Obituary.

Sister Maria A. Adams, wife of Geo. T. Adams, Boston, fell asleep in Jesus, at Melrose, Sept. 14, aged 39 years.

She has been a devoted Christian for many years, beloved by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. She was accomplished and amiable, a kind mother, and an affectionate companion.

Bro. Adams feels deeply his loss, as he is left alone with his loved little ones, to meet the frowns of a cold world; yet he sorrows not as those who have no hope.

Sister A. has been a firm believer in the Advent faith for several years, and has fallen asleep in the expectation of a speedy resurrection to life and immortality at the coming of Jesus.

A large number of Brn and Srs from Boston and vicinity, assembled to sympathize with the bereaved, at the delightful residence where our sister bade farewell forever to earth's sorrow and care.

Her last hours were peaceful as the quiet setting of a summer's sun, when nature sinks to rest. Farewell sister, till the resurrection.

M. GRANT.

N. B. The writer was present at the funeral, and endeavored to comfort the mourners according to Paul's directions in I. Thess. iv: 13–18, showing from the Bible, that the only hope of future life for those who sleep in Jesus, is in the resurrection of the dead, at the coming of Christ, which we believe will take place this year.

M. GRANT.

Died, in Richmond, Me., of Cholera, August 7, Joseph F. Hodge, son of Ezra Hodge, of West Gardiner, aged 20 years 6 months, after about eleven hours of severe suffering. He was a young man of most amiable disposition, universally respected and beloved by all who knew him; and he has left a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his early death. Weep not for him, dear Parents, Brothers, Sisters and friends. Jesus has said, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he [illegible]

Died, in [illegible], Sept. [illegible], N. H., [illegible] She has suffered much during past [illegible] sickness, severe pain in the head, and had often expressed herself that she feared she would lose her reason. She has long been a member of the Baptist Church—she had long lived in a cold, luke-warm state of feeling, occasioned by neglect of prayer. At times she has been sensible of her slumbering situation, and resolved and re-resolved; but oh, how strong are the influences of Satan thrown around us, and we are led astray by him before we are aware. Watch and pray should ever be the watch-word of the faithful Christian. By the persevering efforts of her companion during the last few weeks of her sickness, in bringing before her the faithful promises God has given through Jesus Christ, after much struggle of mind, she yielded herself up to the arms of the Savior, where she soon found joy and peace, and a lively exercise of that Hope that maketh not ashamed. Her joy was greatly increased as the evidences of Jesus being near at hand was brought to her view, and she became convinced of the truth that was so plain. She has felt for nine weeks, and has often said within that time, that it seemed impressed upon her, that this was her last sickness. Said she, "I have but one desire to live, and that is to see Jesus come, and attend some meetings of the Advent Brn., and remove, if possible, the stumbling blocks that I have thrown in the way of others." She looked back with deep feelings of regret on her past life. She spoke volumes to those that called to see her the last few days. She triumphed over death, and had her reason to her last moments, and her prayer was signally granted. Less than half an hour before she died, she said, "It grows dark;" and afterwards, "most done, most done."

S. HALE.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Sept. 16th, our dear son William, aged 5 years. Our hearts are filled with sorrow, yet we sorrow not as those having no hope. We are looking for the coming of the Master and the resurrection of the dead. Yes, glory to God, we expect soon to see the church of Christ arise and shake herself from the dust in which she has so long slept. Dear Brothers and Sisters, I believe that we shall soon hail our darling boy on the other shore. Little William, ever since he could talk, has claimed to be looking for the coming of Jesus, and would often say, "O can it be true, Jesus will come in '54, to raise the sleeping dead and give us immortality."

Appointments.

TENT MEETING AT LINCONVILLE, ME.

There will be a Tent Meeting in Linconville, Maine, near the spot where the meeting was holden some five years ago, to commence Oct 4, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn. Couch, Cummings, Colby, Berick, and others will be in attendance.

Provision will be made for board on the gronnd; it is hoped, however, that all who can, will come prepared to board themselves. Let those who can, bring their Tents. Those from the West, who attend this meeting, will find good conveyance from Boston, Mass., or Portland, Me., by steamboat, and will stop at Camden, Me., some three miles from the ground, where there will be carriages to convey them to the meeting.

J. K. PATRIDGE,
J. POPE,
GEO. L. MCKENNEY.

It was thought best at first to hold the above meeting at Whitefield, but after mature consultation, the Brethren concluded to remove it to Linconville.

[illegible] LAST TENT MEETING.

There will be a general [illegible] at Exeter, N. H., commencing Friday, Oct. 6th, and continuing ten days.

As this is the last meeting of this kind ever to be held before our King comes, we invite our Brethren in this and the neighboring States, to come and worship with us; we care not from how far; for we should like to meet our Brethren from the uttermost parts of the earth, if possible, to enjoy with them one heavenly season, even before our Lord comes.

The object of the meeting will be to glorify God—to make a greater effort as we see the day approaching, to meet together, to exhort one another, and comfort each other's hearts, that our mutual faith may be strengthened, and we prepared for the great day of God.

Ample provision for boarding and lodging will be made for all, and should it be wet or cold, they will be made comfortable.

The meeting will be conducted on the free principle, that none lack; for distribution will be made to all as they have need. So, dear Brn and Srs., one and all, who can, come in and let us share and praise together; and may God grant that it may prove a preparatory step indeed for the final gathering of the saints.—The meeting may not close till our dear Saviour comes.

Those that can, who are commissioned of God to give present truth, are invited to attend.

Brn., bring all the tents and bedding you can. Remember this.

Arrangements will be made with the R. R. companies for a reduction of fares.

A place of worship will be fitted up to seat comfortably from five to ten thousand persons.

For the Master's cause.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting at Newark, N. J., to commence Wednesday, Sept. 27, and hold over the Sabbath. Brn. Couch and Grant will attend and preach the word.

In behalf of the brn.,
F. H. BERICK.

TENT MEETING.

There will be a Tent Meeting in Whitefield, Me., on or near the place where the meeting was holden last fall, commencing Oct. 4, and continuing over the Sabbath. Bro. J. Cummings will attend, and other preaching Brn. are invited. Provisions for board on the ground.—Brn. who can, had better bring tents and bedding.

S. K. PARTRIDGE,
JOHN POPE.

CANAAN, Sept 22, 1854.

In behalf of the brn at Buffalo, N. Y., I would say through the Crisis, to any who are preaching present truth, give them an appointment if possible. They are laboring for God there. They have put up a board Tabernacle to sound the "Midnight Cry" in, that the city of Buffalo may be warned and souls saved. There is an open door and a great chance to do good in Buffalo—lend them a helping hand brn in this time of need.

J. CUMMINGS.

If time continue, and the Lord willing, I will be at Old Town, Me., Sept. 29; Bradley, Sept. 30; Greenfield, Sunday, Oct. 1st; to attend such meetings as the Brn. may appoint at said places.

R. H. CLARK.

This is to inform those interested, that I wish my appointments, as published in the Crisis, withdrawn from all the places after the 26th of Sept., on account of the failure of my horse;—and because the Springfield camp-meeting will interfere with the last of them, being so near [illegible]

NOTICE.

If time continue, there will be a Conference at our place in Freedom, N. H., commencing Thursday, Oct. 5th, at 7 o'clock P. M., continuing over the following Sabbath. Bro. Spinay, Thompson and J. Smith are expected to be present to give the word. Come, Dear Brn., in the name of the Lord.

FREDERICK PHILBRICK.

If the Lord will, I will preach in Frankfort, Me., Sept. 28, eve.

Orrington, Me., Sept. 30, and remain over the Sabbath.

Hallowell, Oct. 5th, eve.

Bowdoinham, Oct. 6th eve.

Brunswick, Oct. 7th.

Some one will meet me at Frankfort.

E. HOPKINS, 2D.

If time continues, a general conference of Advent believers will be held at Port Perry Beach, C. W., commencing Oct. 12, at 7 o'clock P. M., and holding over Sunday. A general invitation is given to all from East to West to attend this meeting. We want a general rally. Come, Brn.—come one, come all, in the name of the Lord.

Those coming by boats will land at Whitby, where the stage leaves every morning for this place. Call at the store of J. Squire & Co., Port Perry.

JOHN BOWER.

Port Perry, C. W., Sept. 13, 1854.

BIGELOW'S MILLS, Sept. 1, 1854.

I would say to the Brn. in Illinois, you may expect me to visit and preach the word in the following places:

Moline, Rockland Co., Sept. 25th, (eve.), and remain over Sunday. The Brn. will meet me at the Depot.

Basco, Hancock Co., Oct. 5th, and continue over Sunday.

Lebanon, St. Clair Co., Sept. 11, and continue till the 22d.

I hope to see the Brn. from adjacent places at these meetings. Brn. can write me and direct to the above places.

J. C. BYWATER.

FAIRHAVEN, Ct., Sept. 11, 1854.

The Lord willing I will attempt to present the gospel of Christ in such a manner as to edify the church, at Cheshire Street, Sept. 26th.

Southington, Sept. 27th.

New Britain, Sept 28th, and at other places as the way may open.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.—No. 1.

That this is a parable, and a parable only, is very evident. It is the most intricate among the many the Saviour taught during his brief sojourn among men. By way of introduction, I will present to the reader a few comments of some of the great and good men, whose names many delight to honor:

Dr. Adam Clark remarks on Matt. 5: 26—"Let it be remembered, that by the general consent of all, (except the basely interested,) no metaphor is ever to be produced in proof of a doctrine. In the things that concern our eternal salvation, we need the most pointed and express evidence on which to establish the faith of our souls." Bishop Lowth says—"Parable is that kind of allegory which consists of a continued narration of fictitious or accommodated events, applied to the illustration of some important truth."

Lightfoot says: "That it was a parable, not only the consent of all expositors may assure us, but the thing itself speaks it."

Whitby: "That this is only a parable, and not a real history of what was actually done, is evident: 1. Because we find this very parable in the Gemara Bablyonian, whence it is cited by Mr. Sheringham, in the preface to his Joma. 2. From the circumstances of it, viz., the rich man's lifting up his eyes in hell, and seeing Lazarus in Abraham's bosom, his discourse with Abraham, his complaint of being tormented with flames, and his desire that Lazarus might be sent to cool his tongue; and if all this be confessedly parable, why should the rest, which is the very parable in the Gemara, be accounted history?" Annot. in loc.

Wakefield: Ver. 23, "In the grave; (en to hads,) and, conformably to this representation, he is spoken of as having a body, ver. 24. It must be remembered, that hades nowhere means hell—(gehenna)—in any author whatsoever, sacred or profane; and also, that our Lord is giving his hearers a parable, (Matt. xiii. 34,) and not a piece of real history. To them who regard the narration as a reality, it must stand as an unanswerable argument for the purgatory of the papists. The universal meaning of hades is the state of death; because the term sepulchrum or grave, is not strictly applicable to such as have been consumed by fire, &c. See ver. 30." Note in loc.

Jabez Bate, M. A., Rector of Deptford, says:—"We will suppose, then, the rich man who fared so sumptuously, to be the Jew, so amply enriched with the heavenly treasure of divine revelation. The poor beggar who lay at his gate, in so miserable a plight, was the poor Gentile, now reduced to the last degree of want, in regard to religious knowledge. The crumbs which fell from the rich man's table, and which the beggar was so desirous of picking up, were such fragments of patriarchial and Jewish traditions, as their travelling philosophers were able to pick up with their utmost care and diligence.—And those philosophers were also the dogs that licked the sores of heathenism, and endeavored to supply the wants of divine revelation, by such schemes and hypotheses, concerning the nature of the gods, and the obligation of moral duties, as (due allowance for their ignorance and frailties) did no small honor to human nature, and yet [illegible] how little a way [illegible] reason could go without [illegible] of the wisest [illegible] About [illegible] spiritual [illegible] into Abraham's bosom [illegible] foretold. The rich man being reduced to this state of misery, complains bitterly of his hard fate, but it is told by Abraham, that he slipped his opportunity, while Lazarus laid hold on his, and now receives the comfort of it. The Jew complains of the want of more evidence, to convince his countrymen, the five brethren, and would fain have Lazarus sent from the dead to convert them. But Abraham tells them, that if their own scriptures cannot convince them of their error, neither would they be persuaded though one rose from the dead. And exactly so it proved in the event. For this parable was delivered towards the end of the third year of our Lord's ministry; and in the fourth, or following year of it, the words put into the mouth of Abraham, as the conclusion of the parable, are most literally verified, by our Lord's raising another Lazarus from the dead. And we may presume, that the beggar had the fictitious name of Lazarus given him in the parable, not without some reason, since the supposed request of the rich man was fully answered, by our Lord's raising another, and a real Lazarus, from the dead. But what was the consequence? Did this notorious miracle convince the rich man's brethren? No, truly. His visit to them from the dead, was so far from convincing them, that they actually consulted together that they might put Lazarus also to death; because that, by reason of him, many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus.

To my mind, the teaching of the Saviour on this occasion, is simply this.—The time was fast approaching, and would very soon arrive, when the law would become a dead letter,—and the Priesthoood would die with it.

Just turn to Luke xvi., 19th, and read the parable. You will then observe—1st, a rich man; 2nd, a beggar; 3rd, father Abraham; 4th, the dogs; 5th, the five brethren; 6th, the gulf; 7th, the hell.—The question now arises, what are we to understand by the above seven points? I understand them in the following manner: First, the rich man to be the priesthood.—He was clothed in purple and fine linnen. Turn to EX. XXVIII., 1st to 9th. "These are the garments which they shall make a breastplate, an ephod, and a robe, and a broidered coat, a mitre, and a girdle; and they shall make holy garments for Aaron, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office—and they shall take gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet. They made clothes of service to do service in the holy place; and made holy garments for Aaron as the Lord commanded Moses." &c.

The above is the rich man,—he fared sumptuously every day. The following is the feasting or sumptuous faring of the rich man. Please turn and read from the 1st to the 14th verse of DEUT. xxviii. They had the feast of Passover, the feast of Pentacost, the feast of Tabernacles, the feast of Trumpets, which was celebrated on what was called their civil year, being ushered in by the blowing of trumpets,—the feast of the new moon, which was celebrated on the first day the moon appeared after the change,—the feast of expiation, which was celebrated on the 10th day of Tisri,—the feast of Lots and Purim,—the feast of Dedication,—the feast of Branches, to commemorate the taking of Jericho,—the feast of Collections on the 10th day of Sept. when they made contribution for the temple,—and the feast of Sabattical year. Besides the above mentioned feasts, they have all the fullness of God's blessing spoken of in the 28th of DEUT. Truly, they fared sumptuously every day.

And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus. Permit me here to introduce a criticism of Adam Clark's, the celebrated commentator. Clark says, "The word Lazarus is a contraction of the word Eleazer, which signifies the help or assistance of God," a name properly given to a man who was both poor and afflicted, and had no help but that which came from God.—Such was Jesus Christ. Mark, reader, the Saviour sometimes introduces himself as a vine, a door, an heir, a stone. Why should it be thought strange that he should be the beggar, or the Lazarus of this parable? He is, in my humble opinion, the Lazarus of this parable.

The dogs are the Gentiles. Father Abraham—God the Father. Why such an application? See Matt. xxi: 33d.—Where the "certain householder" is assuredly God the Father. So I understand [illegible] application of the parable [illegible] buried, by the [illegible] bosom. The rich man also died and was buried." When Jesus [illegible] the rich man, i. e., the [illegible] also. Yes, it is a fact, [illegible] all their peculiar blessings. See Col. ii: 14, 15, also Rom. vii: 4, "Ye are become dead to the law by the body of Christ," &c.

The rich man (priesthood) dies a political death. His dispensation ceases, never to be raised to his former favor—rejected from being any longer the peculiar son of God. "In Hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." By this I understand that Father Abraham, or God the Father, now permits all the awful calamities foretold by the prophets to come upon them as the fruit of their rejection of the Messiah. "I will kindle a fire in mine anger that shall burn to the lowest Hell." "I will burn you with hunger." "The Lord shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an extremeburning, and with the sword," &c. Please turn and read Deut. xxxii: 11 to 30: Jer. xv: 14. When rejected of God, scattered, torn to pieces, all their national privileges destroyed, hated, unpitied; their city destroyed, tormented by all nations, starving with hunger—these are the torments, this truly the hell spoken of in Deut. thirty-second, twenty-second. Jonah cries out of the Belly of Hell. Ch. 2: 2. God there casts him into Hell in the whale's belly. God casts the Jews into a hell of national calamities. Such to my mind, is the Hell in the parable. The priesthood rejected Jesus; they did not believe in him; they are still looking for him to make his first advent; they would not believe their prophets. They are suffering God's displeasure, and hence the Savior charges home their unbelief by stating they would not believe though one rose from the dead.

They are represented as crying to Father Abraham, to alleviate their sufferings. Now mark the answer—"Son, remember that thou, in thy life time, receivedst thy good things. And likewise Lazarus evil things—now he is comforted and thou art tormented." During all your priesthood you received your good things, but Lazarous, the Savior, in his sojourning on earth, evil things; now he is comforted and you are tormented. He then tells the reason of the sufferings they endure, by the gulf fixed between him and them, which is a fact in reality, that we cannot pass from hence, from the gospel back under the law; neither can you while you reject the Messiah pass to us. He feels a solicitude on the part of his five brethren. Probably the five brethren are some of the tribes that did not consent, or have any part or lot in putting Christ to death. I do not consider the five brethren in this instance, a specific number any more than I do the five wise and five foolish virgins. What, you may enquire, is the probable meaning of the beggar being fed with the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table? I understand it as follows:

All those parts of Scripture that spoke of the manner, the time, and the life and character of Jesus—i. e., Lazarus—they rejected, treated them just as a person would, in affluent circumstances, small fragments or crumbs from their table.

But Jesus was fed with them. How often he addresses them thus: "Did ye never read in the Scriptures?" (See MAT. xxi: 42) Or, to make an application of present truth, see how many of the rich preachers of the present day treat those portions of Scripture concerning the time and event of Christ's second coming. O, say they, they will do for the Millerites. Well, thank God, they do well for us; they are precious crumbs; we are fed by them; they are meat in due season. Just so it seems to me, with respect to the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. Finally he tells them, "neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

Behold, Lazarus rose from the dead; yes, Jesus, the Lazarus of the parable, rose from the dead, and they would not believe.

Mexico.—Another bloody engagement has taken place between the insurgents and the Government forces before the city of Victoria. It seems that Governor de la Garza was besieged in Victoria by a regular force of 2000 men. The different charges were made upon the triple intrenchments, and each time was the enemy repulsed with heavy loss. The insurgent statement estimates the loss in killed and wounded, on the part of the enemy, at 400, and we are told that the officers of the regulars themselves acknowledge a loss of 160 men.—[N. Y. CORRESPONDENCE.

Notes by the Way.

FROM A SISTER'S JOURNAL.

Aug. 17th. This morning we disposed of the last care, and duty, that bound us to our city home, for the purpose of seeking in some retired spot, that rest and strength, that the wasted energies of body and mind, so much needed. Several ways were opened before us to spend a few weeks pleasantly, with that object in view. But before deciding, thought we would go over to the Bergen C. Meeting.

Can hardly tell why we did so, years ago, we lost our interest in such meetings, except as a social gathering. In this case, we had no chosen friend to accompany us. We expected no warm greeting nor the smiling, hearty welcome, that used to await us on such occasions, when we were one with the many. But knowing we could return before night we passed on.

A pleasant ride brought us to the beautiful grove, where a few tents spread, and a small congregation seated before the stand, listening to the closing remarks of the morning service. As we looked around, there was one, and but one, familiar object our eye rested upon. The large chart stretched out behind the wide desk, with its great image beasts and figures looked the most like an old friend, of any thing we saw, although the aspect of the beasts seemed more fierce and terrible than ever before.

After a short intermission, we were called to the stand where Daniel's vision of the 2,300 days, was taken up. The whole subject reviewed and explained. The mistake in commencing the days in the 7th year of Artaxerxes instead of the 20th, pointed out. The whole subject was presented in such a clear lucid manner, that a child could understand it. And ere we were aware, a chord was touched that vibrated through our whole being. Oh, can it be possible, that after all our sorrow and disappointment, we are on the sure line of prophecy? Like the disciples, we had thought, that ere this, the Deliverer of Isreal would have redeemed his people. For ten long years we had been like an exile in a foreign land. Our kindred ties all sundred by the monster death. The loved ones, for whom, and with whom, we could so cheerfully labour and suffer have fallen under his dominion, awaiting the sound of the last triumph, that shall break his cruel power. Oh how often has the expression been wrung from the heart.

"My company is gone before
And I am left alone with thee."

The little band, with whom we once enjoyed such sweet fellowship, scattered to the four winds. No sympathy with the churches. Spoiled indeed for any enjoyment in this world.

Hope deferred hath made many a heart sad in these latter days. But the scriptures must needs be fulfilled, and, blessed be God, our Lord and master, can in these last days, so open the understanding of his humble blelieving children that they need not walk in darkness. Oh praise the Lord, ceaseless praise be to our Saviour given. He hath opened up a living spring in the desert. He hath brought us to his banqeting house, inscribed on the banner is Love. Who can describe it? an abyss without bottem or shore. Oh how it fills the soul; all we can say is, "Praise, Praise the Lord." "Let every thing that hath breath, praise the Lord." "Our willing soul would stay in such a place as this." No desire to return home. The brethren and sisters already seem like old friends. Oh how little we thought this morning that our Heavenly Father had such a feast of fat things prepared for us. Blessed be his Holy name.

18th. We have been blessed a great many times, during our pilgrimage, but somehow the streams of Salvation, never seemed so sweet, rich, and full, as on this glad day. How one glimple of that glorious city, that Abraham beheld afar off, can captivate the soul, when "Faith lends its realizing light." But to us, the Kingdom of God is nigh, even at the door.—Our coming King has given us permission to lift up our heads and rejoice,—and we will rejoice.

19th. Preaching instructive, and profitable. Prayer meetings good, a heavenly spirit pervades the meeting. The most fastidious cannot complain of confession, or fanaticism. Delightful weather, the beautiful grove to worship in, encompassed with loving brethren and sisters. A glorious hope of immortality and eternal life, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Who could not be happy? It would seem that the company of angels that announced the first advent of the Saviour had [illegible] passed over the encampment, and breathed upon us the heavenly spirit of "Peace on earth, good will to man."

20th. The last day of the feast has come, and if the shining happy faces about us, are a true index to the inner man, then there is a goodly number rejoicing in hope of the glory to be revealed at the appearing of Christ. A larger number in attendance than on any previous day who listened attentively to the preaching, which was calculated to impress the most careless mind. The signs of the times; the prophetic periods; the present state of the world; our glorious hope, with kindred subjects have passed in review before us. This has not been what might be called a great meeting, but many beside to the wearied spirit, like being led into a green pasture and sitting down by the side of still waters, and we would here record a tribute of praise and thanksgiving our Heavenly Father, that he even put into our heart to visit this hallowed spot. We have formed an acquaintance with some of the choicest spirits of earth, and as we look around on the intelligence and experience assembled here, we feel honored in having a place with them, but, the best of all is, "God is with us."

Farewell, then, shady grove, thou art beautiful now, and the scenery about thee, is beyond description—but we anticipate meeting with the people of God, beneath the tree of life where the leaf shall not wither, and by the side of that river, clear as chrystal, that makes glad the city of our God.

Salem, Sept. 17, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam; I understand you wish to learn what the Negroes, who of late have entered this port from the West Coast of Africa, have said about the Lord's coming being proclaimed in their country.

Two of them came into my shop, some six or eight weeks since, and seeing the chart as it hung in the shop, asked what it meant. I told him it represented the kingdoms and governments of this world down to the end, when Jesus Christ would come, set up his kingdom, destroy the wicked, create new heavens and a new earth and save his people.

They looking earnestly at me, said—"Do da preach dat in dis country?"

"Yes, we do."

"De wild Methodist preach dat on de West Coast of Africa, where we came from."

"What do they say about it there?"

One of them stood up and imitated them, clapped his hands, saying—"The Lord is coming, de Lord is coming, bless de Lord, O, glory, glory. Da berry happy. De oder Methodists no like dem, no, no."

"When do they look for the Lord's coming?"

"Dis year. De other Methodists say something is coming on the world. Da preach de Lord be coming two or three hundred miles in de country."

A few weeks after, another of the crew came in, who appeared to know more about it. He asked me a few questions about the chart, which I answered, explaining it briefly, and asked him if he understood.

"I do." "Dat be good, aint it?"

"Have you ever seen a chart before?"

"I have."

"Where?"

"De Mishonary got them from England. Dat will soon be good time, when good Master come."

He seemed very happy in prospect of soon seeing Jesus. I cannot do justice to their expressions and simplicity. He endeavored to explain the chart to his companion, expressing much joy.

A gentleman working in the same shop, an unconverted man, confessed that hearing them tell about the time as proclaimed in Africa, had more weight upon his mind than all he had heard on the subject before.

At the tent-meeting on Liberty Hill, I mentioned this, not knowing any one was present, who knew any thing about it.—After meeting, the mate of the same ship, came to me saying—"It is so, I was one."

"Are you sure?"

"He replied—it is so."

How good the Lord is! He fulfills all his promises. Praise the Lord, the good time is at hand. Amen.

Fairhaven, Ct., Sept. 11, 1854.

Bro. Merriam;—The Brn. in Fairhaven, Ct., have been getting along well, since the Winsted meeting. O that parting circle, and the commemoration of Christ's death and suffering till he come. As we partook of the bread and wine, my mind was carried back to Mount Calvary, from thence to a little in the future from this, when the despised Jesus will come forth and serve us at the marriage supper of the Lamb. By the grace of God I'll be there, to meet the redeemed saints of God. My spirit was refreshed at the Winsted meeting, for which I give God the glory.

My determination is to warn my fellow men of the approaching day of Wrath. My prayer is that the Lord may bless you and all who are preaching and believing the present truth. I hope that some may yet see the truth. Amen.

James E. Clark.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—Several of our brethren have expressed the opinion that the termination of the prophetic periods is restricted to the present Roman year, which they understand to extend only to the 1st of January. But I observe in the 4th column of the 5th number of the Crisis, and on what I suppose to be good authority, that prior to 1752, the Roman year commenced on the 25th of March.—As this fact seems to have been overlooked by many, I have been requested to call attention thereto through the Crisis.

Bro. Merriam;—Sir: I thought I would speak a few words relative to the Burgen Neck Camp Meeting. I arrived there on Wednesday P. M., when I heard it stated that Eld. Cummings had been there, and after delivering one or more lectures, had left for other parts. Eld. Grant was on hand as one of the principle speakers, and gave great satisfaction in elucidating the principles of the Advent believers' hope in the soon coming of Him who went up from Calvary's Mountain—"long time ago." Sabbath morning at 8 o'clock there was a love feast—one Br. said that he had come on foot more than six miles to the breakfast feast, and much more than got paid for his trouble. Two other brethren felt that they had been more than paid for coming 150 and 200 miles to the feast of tabernacles.

☞ We cut the following from a Boston paper. How deplorable is the departure therein manifested from the simplicity of the gospel! When men think more of the height of their tower, and the splendor of their organ and choir than the inward purity of the heart, as a preparation for the worship of God, we may expect that the blessing, Jesus has purchased for his little, humble flock, will be withdrawn from the assembly, and Ichabod be written on their magnificent walls.

Rev. Dr. Neal's Church. A Boston correspondent of the N. Y. Review has the following:—

"There is a church erecting in Somerset street which attracts much attention—I refer to the church building by Rev. Dr. Neal's society. It will be a splendid edifice when completed, and its spire will be the highest in the city. I understand that with the new church a new choir will be inaugurated, which is intended to equal any in the city. It will be a quartette; Miss Sophia Bothamly is the soprano, Mr. Mozart the base, and Mr. Hall, tenor and conductor. Miss Bothamly and Mr. Mozart are from a choir in Charlestown, and Mr. Hall is a protege of Mr. Bruce of Bowdoin-street church. The other arrangements are unknown to me, but I shall take an early opportunity to hear the choir. I know of no better voices than the soprano and base. A magnificent organ is building for the church by W. B. D. Simmons & Co; of this city. I saw it a day or two since, and was much pleased with its architecture; of the inside, of course there is nothing to be said."

Riot in New Orleans. New Orleans has been the scene of some terrible riots between the Americans and Irish, in which several lives were lost and many badly injured. The first outbreak occurred on Sunday evening, Sept. 10, growing out of a political discussion between a party of Americans and Irish. A savage fight ensued, in which fire-arms and clubs were freely used. A number of the participants in the riot were badly wounded before it could be quelled by the police. On the following day one of the wounded died, and much excitement followed in consequence. The excitement continued on the increase throughout Monday, and as soon as night set in the riot was renewed with still greater violence—each party apparently being prepared for it. The news spread rapidly through the city, and it was reported that several had been killed, but this report fortunately proved to be premature. Pistols and guns were fired into the crowds, and many of the rioters received serious injuries. The police again succeeded in making several arrests and restoring order. The rioters again assembled on Tuesday evening, when the struggle was renewed with redoubled ferocity. Two of the rioters were killed on the ground, and quite a number were carried off—some of them shockingly wounded. The Mayor ordered out the National Guard and the entire police force, which had the effect of intimidating the rioters.—[N. Y. Tribune.

☞ In Bro. Brewer's article on the Parable of Luke 16th, he remarks that he does not regard the five Brethren as a definite number; but [illegible] the five Brn. had reference to the 12 tribes [illegible] by one man, the other [illegible] ratio, would be represented by five Brn.—Ed.

The Wine-Cup of God's Wrath.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Respected Friend:—If you have not, let me exhort you to fix this one solemn fact in your mind, the present time is clearly and most strikingly marked in the Holy Scriptures! It is in the most emphatic sense THE VOICE OF THE DAY OF GOD! (Zeph. i. 14.) It is speaking in solemn, awful and encouraging tones—perhaps to meet thy God. The apostle declares in Acts xiii. 27, "Because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets, which are read every Sabbath." Did they read the VOICES of the prophets? They did; and it was the Lord God speaking through them. "GOD, WHO AT SUNDRY TIMES AND IN DIVERS MANNERS SPAKE IN TIME PAST UNTO THE FATHERS BY THE PROPHETS, HATH IN THESE LAST DAYS SPOKEN UNTO US BY HIS SON." (Heb. i. 1.) Ah, say some, I believe in the New, but not in the Old Testament. Kind reader, turn to 2 Pet. iii. 1,2. "This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken by the HOLY PROPHETS." Again: "For whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning! (Rom. xv. 4.) Now, then, let me refer you to some of the voices of the prophets.

"For in the hand of the LORD there is a CUP, and the wine is red; it is full of mixture; and he poureth out of the same: but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them." Psa. lxxv. 8.

"For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me; Take the WINE-CUP OF THIS FURY AT MY HAND, AND CAUSE ALL THE NATIONS, TO WHOM I SEND THEE to drink it. And they shall drink, and be moved, and be MAD, because of the SWORD that I will send among them. Then I took the CUP at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the Lord had sent me:

"And all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and ALL THE KINGDOMS OF THE WORLD, WHICH ARE UPON THE FACE OF THE EARTH: and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them. Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the SWORD which I will send among you. And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, thus saith the Lord of hosts; Ye shall certainly drink.

"For lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished; for I will call for a SWORD UPON ALL THE INHABITANTS OF THE EARTH, saith the Lord of hosts.

"And the slain of the Lord shall be at THAT DAY from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground." Jer. xxv. 15, 16, 17, 26, 27, 28, 29, 33.

Such is the awful malediction of the high and holy One against the wicked nations of the earth; read and ponder them in thy heart, and if thou art yet a stranger to God—still unprepared to meet the approaching crisis of the nations, and the destiny of the wicked—look abroad and see the dark, portentous cloud hanging over all the nations of the earth. What a striking simile, "Take the cup and cause all the nations to drink." In some instances anciently, when criminals were condemned to be executed, they were sentenced to drink a cup of poison, and while insensible to death, they slept its sleep.

The nations now, at this very moment, in like manner, are drunken with the dregs of worldly ambition, pride, infidelity, and hatred, leaguing and combining in their schemes to perpetuate their blood-crimsoned dynasties. But the MENE, MENE TEKEL is written by the finger of God upon all the kingdoms of the world: and while every breeze bears tidings from afar, of the waking up of nations, it is only the coming event casting its shadow before. Soon earth will be a battle field, amid the shout of the warrior, confused noise, and garments rolled in blood.

The Lord Jesus in his instruction to his church, ere he took his departure from his disciples, gave the unerring precursors of his coming; among which, the very last one is, (read it in Luke xxi. 25, 26, 27,) 'And upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring: Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking"—mark—"and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of the heaven shall be shaken. And then shall THEY see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." He does not say distress of Jerusalem—of a nation—but of NATIONS. If he did, it was a most singular fulfilment of the 28th verse; a strange redemption for the poor unbelieving Jews, to die by sword, famine, pestilence, sold into slavery, scattered, peeled, broken as one breaketh a potter's vessel that cannot be made whole again. Yes, EVEN SO WILL I BREAK THIS PEOPLE AND THIS CITY. (Turn to and read Jeremiah xix 1 to 12.) Dear reader, the generation referred to in the 32 verse, is the one now living. The one then living, did not see the times of the Gentiles fulfilled, the signs in the sun, moon and stars. They did not see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. The 35th and 36th verses were not fulfilled in their day. They did not stand before the Son of man. "Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and" (the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall wail) no, "ALL THE KINDREDS OF THE EARTH shall wail because of him." Rev. i. 7.

The reader of this little tract constitutes one of the generation referred to. You live in a day when the signs are all in the past—when there is distress among the nations of the earth, and men's hearts begin to fail them for fear and for LOOKING after those things which are COMING on the earth.

Let me now refer you to some facts alluded to in the above declaration of the coming one, the Lord Jesus. It is declared, "out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh." Ponder well the following. CHARLES BEECHER, in a sermon published some time since, says:

"The waves of the coming conflict, which are to convulse Christendom to her centre, are now beginning to be felt. The deep heavings begin to swell beneath us. 'All the old signs fail God answers no more by Urim and Thummim, nor by dream, nor by prophet.' Men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth. Thunders mutter in the distance. Winds moan across the surging bosom of the deep. All things betide the rising of that final storm of indignation!"

The editor of The Living Age observes:

"We stand at a great starting point in the history of the world. Old things are about to pass away, and we know not what shall be the new. The continent of Europe, startled by the warning Trumpet of 1848, has cowered into silence; and while all faces gather blackness, and men's hearts fail them for fear of what is coming on the earth, the rulers of great nations council together how they may consolidate and extend the reign of despotism—keep down the rising tide and shut out the coming day."

In the British Banner of Feb. 8th, 1853, we notice an an address to Christians throughout Great Britain, the first two paragraphs of which we here insert, as follows:

"The present is a time of darkness and great perplexity, a period in which 'wars and rumors of wars' are agitating and alarming the hearts of more than half of mankind. Since the astounding years of the French Revolution, no events of so significant and momentous a character have occurred in the civilized world, as those that are now passing, like tempest-driven clouds, over the heads of the wondering nations. The statesman, the politician and the merchant, are equally at a loss to comprehend the present, or to predict the future condition of the social fabric; but they are all alike convinced, and many of them have already confessed, that there are elements at work in the conflict on which we are entering, that threaten lasting injury to all that is precious in civilization, and a return to the semi-barbarianism from which the leading parties in the struggle have not yet emerged.

"At such a time, may it not be asked, with humility and deference, but with all earnestness, What is the duty of the Christian Church? Is it fit and becoming in her to whose care the dearest interests of mankind are intrusted, to sit still, or, what would be worse, to encourage by word or deed, the carnage into which the short-sighted nations are about to plunge? Can she perform no appropriate part in the present tremendous crisis of European affairs? If she cannot accomplish her noblest mission, by becoming the peace-maker among rival and ambitious politicians, is there nothing in strict keeping with her character, her pretensions, and her responsibility, that she can do; and which, unless she tacitly consents to surrender her prerogatives as the appointed conservator of the cause of God on earth, she must do? Yes, verily, there are some things which the Church of God can do to alleviate the disasters, and to check the fury of the coming struggle; and these, one may be pardoned for conceiving to be her most appropriate and her most necessary duty at the present alarming period."

We select the following articles from political journals, some older and some of more recent date. But all, all bearing on their face the prophetic marks of Jesus—"distress" and "perplexity" of nations, "men's hearts failing them for fear":

The London Times has said, "The foundations of the great political deep seem breaking up THE WHOLE EARTH IS SHAKEN."

The New-York Evangelist has said, "Had the present state of Europe been prophesied fifty years ago, would any have credited the prophecy? We believe that in this year (1848) we have seen the beginning of the end"

An anonymous English writer has said: "Restless and uneasy, the world tosses to and fro like a fevor patient upon his death-bed. A vague, undefined expectation of some approaching catastrophe generally, we do not say universally, prevails."

Another has said: "No doubt a better than Paradise is coming. But what is coming first? what is before that Paradise? what is nearest, yea, nigh at hand, to this secure, unthinking world? The tempest-cloud of heaven's judgment! the filling up of God's wrath! the last vial already trembling in the angel's hand! that baptism of fire!"

The British Banner of Feb. 8th notices a pamphlet, entitled the "Present Crisis," the object of which is to set forth the consequences of the Russo Rurkish war to England and the world. The writer (Coningsby) says that the balance of power, secured by its distribution among a body of independent states, is, at this moment, seriously shaken. He says:

"All men of sense seem both to see and fear this,—POLITICIANS AND POWERS ARE ALIKE PERPLEXED. There is great difficulty in moving backwrd or forwayd."

In connection with noticing the work above mentioned the Banner thus remarks:

"Poland is at any hour ripe for rising; Hungary is ill at ease; and Kossuth is at any moment ready to resume its dictatorship. The Italian Stat s are a volcano pent up, ready to burst forth, pouring the lava of Democratic RAGE and HATE on the head of despotism."

Another publication has appeared in England, entitled, "The Russians of the South," a notice of which we find in the Banner, with a few extracts from it, one of which we insert here, with the remarks of the Banner on the same:

"Military rank is necessary to elevate them into a decent, sociable position, and military rank is accorded to them; a captain birches your little boy, and a major prescribes your rhubarb and magnesia, and a lieutenant designs the pediments and architraves for your grand new houses; custom house clerks, post office clerks, passport clerks, are all in uniform. * * There are no less than fourteen different ranks in the civil service, and each of them has a corresponding military value."

"'All in uniform.' The sons of Mars in this most religious empire of the Czar, are everywhere apparent; war first, war midst, war last, war without end! Much of the volume is of a character to illustrate the WAR SPIRIT which meets you at every turn, CARRYING EVERYTHING BEFORE IT."

We extract the following paragraph from the New-York Tribune, of January 28th:

"The eastern sky is red with the portents of a general conflagration. Monarchs turn pale at the prospect and fidget on their tottering thrones. Nations start from their uneasy slumbers and grasping tightly their chains, so as to stifle their clanking, ask in whispers, if the clock of Destiny has struck the hour of freedom and revenge. Gaunt artisans and ragged laborers roaming in hungry desperation, thank God that the crisis visibly approaches, when the poor who cannot live, shall at least have an opportunity to die like men."

The following is from the "World's Crisis," and taken from political journals:

"The words of our Savior are fulfilled before our eyes, 'a fearful looking after those things that are coming on the earth,' everywhere exists; the last moral condition of the human mind is developed. From the king on the throne, to the beggar in the street, there is the same involuntary outburst of feeling. As a demonstration of this characteristic mark, I present you with the following from political journals:

'Every observer of men and things must feel conscious that a momentous crisis in the affairs of mankind is rapidly approaching. Everything seems trembling beneath some impending doom, some tremendous power, that is about to burst upon the world. There is little to tell us whether the coming strife will be fraught with good or evil. But that some great change, some universal transition, is near at hand, is as plainly to be felt as the sultan breath of the gathering storm. There is an oppressive sultriness and heaviness in the moral atmosphere, a hurrying to and fro of the animate world, a clattering and clamoring, an intense energy and activity, that presage the rushing tornado, or the rumbling earthquake. We see the giant thunder-columns towering above the horizon, massive, sullen, and grand; and we hear the low, stifled rumble, and feel the deep, subdued quiver, beneath our feet. The sunlight assumes a sickly hue, a veil of quiet gloom envelopes the face of nature; and wherever we turn our eyes we are greeted with the scowl of portentous preparation. All Europe is one boiling cauldron of revolutionary elements—China has long been torn by contending forces—the Indies and Southern Africa have not slept for years—Australia is a new volcanic continent over which the lava tide may sweep at any moment—South America is still rolling and rocking as if shaken by an earthquake—Mexico bids fair to be swallowed up of the United States, the land of security trembles to its very base.

"In the absence of all proof against a great moral and political revolution, why conjure up evidence to prove what is manifest in every thing around us? We have but to look and see that a sublime change is already begun. We have but to look into the mirror of truth, and behold the shadow of approaching reality. The education, actions, words, thought and feeling of men, all bear witness that we are tending toward a new order of things—and experience, and faith in the progressive operations of nature, tell us that it will be one far above anything ever yet realized by mankind. But the birth of the new era will not be a pangless one. Pain and suffering, and tears, and blood will consecrate and baptize the darling of ages. We shudder and shrink from the thought; but we yearn for the event, as parent never yearned for the sight of offspring.'

"A western editor made the following singular expression:—'The world is making huge efforts to die!'

"The celebrated ALBERT BARNES, of Philadelphia, has attempted to prove that this rocking and razing of thrones in Europe is a fulfilment of Dan. vii. 9: 'The thrones were cast down., If so, the ANCIENT OF DAYS will soon sit in solemn judgment.

"The learned Dr. ELLIOT remarks: 'With regard to our present position, we have been led, as the result of our investigations, to fix it but a short distance from the end of the now existing dispensation, and the expected second advent of Christ.'

"A London journal remarks—"The horizon reddens with the menace of UNIVERSAL CONFLAGRATION. We do not hail the omen with pleasure; we can draw no smiling horoscope for the now probable convulsion.'

"The Scientific Mechanic has said: The world is now just about six thousand years old—and we cannot avoid the anticipation of events incomparably more important than any which have been prognosticated by the secular press.'

"Said the London Episcopal Recorder: 'There is an undefinable impression abroad upon all spirits, of a coming crisis, and a better day. All things seem to travel onward to a general crisis and a new era.'"

On the revolutions throughout Europe, the London British Banner remarks:—

"From the 7th to the 12th of February 1848, the subject of reform was fiercely debated in the French Chambers; on the 22nd, the people of Paris rose against the constituted authorities; on the 24th, the Monarchy fell; and a Republican Government was set up in its place! On the 8th of March, the freedom of the press was proclaimed in Saxony, and the censorship abolished; on the 13th, the spirit of the revolution broke out in Vienna: the chains of the Empire, in a moment were snapped asunder; Metternich, the Patriarchal High Priest of the temple of Austrian Despotism, fled, and the Imperial Deity did homage to the throne of Constitutional Freedom! Five days after, the rhyming King of Bavaria, cast aside the crown he had so unworthily worn, and made way for another. On the same day, the flame of Revolution burst forth in Berlin. It were long to recount the series of smaller changes,—suffice it to say, all the minor powers of the Continent have been more or less revolutionized. From the Atlantic to the Vistula, every throne has been shaken. The shores of the Baltic and the mountains of Sicily have alike been swept by the mighty WHIRLWIND. The laws, governments and armies of fifteen centuries, departed like a scroll—they are gone! At eventide they existed in full power, and, in man's esteem, in more than pristine glory, and on the morrow, they were not! The regal master of a million of soldiers in the morning, in the afternoon, himself alone, on the brink of destruction, fled for his life!"

Let me here insert an extract from one of Kossuth's speeches:—

'Royalty has lost its prestige in France, Germany, Italy, Austria, and in Hungary. Both parties equally recognize, that the time has come when the struggle of principles must be decided. Absolutism or Republicanism—the Czar or the principles of America—there is no more transaction, no more time possible. The two antagonist principles meet upon the narrow bridge of a knife's edge breadth, cast across the deep gulf, ready to swallow him who falls. There is no giving way. There is no turning round possible. He who would give way to his enemy would fall into the yawning gulf himself. He would turn round, would be pushed down by his enemy pressing in the rear. It is a struggle for life and death. That is the condition of the European continent in general. A great, terrible, bloody Revolution is unavoidable. That is known and felt by every one. And every sound man knows equally well that the temporary success of Louis Napoleon's usurpation made but the terrible crisis more unavoidable yet. Ye men of "peace at any price," do not shut willingly your eyes, before the finger of God pointing to the mene tekel upharsin, written with gigantic letters upon the sky of Europe. Despots never yield to justice, and mankind, inspired with love of Freedom, will not yield to annihilation cowardly.—Peace is impossible. Nobody can stop the wheels of destiny. It would be a mistake terrible in its consequences to believe, that if I should fail in my mission here, and if the United States should remain indifferent, then no revolution would break out on the European continent. That is an unavoidable necessity, which no power on earth can avert. Should even the United States not only remain indifferent, but with all their immense power, even side with despots of the world, that the church peace of Europe may not be disturbed (which the United States of course would never do,) even that could not prevent a revolution in Europe. Hungary, Austria, Italy, Germany, would fight, be it against the combined power of the world. They would fight even with the certainty of death.

Because there is a condition in the life of nations when oppression is more hated, than death is feared. No, gentlemen, the success of my mission here can insure the victory of freedom—can prevent torrents of martyrs' blood—can shorten the Earthquake of impending war, and bring nearer the restoration to solid peace—but be sure the certainty of European Revolution is not in the slightest manner depending upon my good luck here. And your government's support, as also my failure, would not for a single week retard the outbreak of that Hurricane, the scent of which is already perceived in the air."

The following was handed me by a friend, taken from a N. Y. paper, some two years since:—

"At the present time, peace reigns in Europe, but a thickening cloud hangs over her future destiny. Perfidious England, beholds with dismay, the apparition of the murdered prisoner of St. Helena, and casting her vulture eye beyond the straits of Dover, she perceives an unusual commotion reigning throughout the land. In the navy yard the axe of the workman is no longer at rest, while from the many provinces of LA BELLE FRANCE, eight millions stentorian voices demand that Waterloo shall be avenged, and from young and old, in thunder tones, the universal cry is borne on the breeze, 'Vive Napoleon.' Yes, the old world is calm, but the greater the calm the more terrible will be the storm that is at hand; we know not the hour it will break forth on the world. Distrust, fear, jealousy prevail to such an extent through out these rotten Monarchies, that nothing short of a general war can effect a change.

England, England "my Eternal nightmare," thou art surely marked. Yes, Irish Americans, the day of her difficulty approaches; are you prepared to take advantage of it?" * * *

The following is taken from the N. Y. Citizen:—

"Once again rosy morn dawns upon the earth. The Peace and Order establishment, established in Europe, at the point of five millions of bayonets, begins to grow nervous. The nightmare of five years loosens its clutch upon the breast of the nations, and we see daylight and hear the cheerful cock-crow. Many a time in this long, dark unrest, misnamed Peace, brave and just men wished they were dead. The righteous cause they said is crushed hopelessly for our generation—'That which is crooked cannot be made straight, and that which is wanting cannot be numbered.'—

But, courage! courage! The unwearied sun chases his own shadow still; and it is well to be alive and not dead when the dawn is breaking, calling us to the work and play of life again! * * It gives us delight to see and to feel, notwithstanding the dismal decadence of voices which prevail in these times, that our mother earth breeds the same sort of sons as of old. * * * But already the Hungarians are swarming into Turkey. Others are setting forth from America to join them. If Turkey can hold her ground notwithstanding the false friendship of the western powers, Hungary will be the first country in arms. Then a gallant game will be on foot, indeed. In Berlin, Vienna, Milan, Paris, men are already eyeing the lines and corners of the streets with a view to judicious barricades; and it is pleasing to the benevolent mind to see the terror of Kings and Courts. The 'legitimate' pulse beats somewhat tremulously; and even Serene Highnesses lose their serenity. Perhaps the great day of deliverance is indeed dawning in Europe. * * The war, however, is very likely to grow and spread; no man can tell how many powers will be brought into it. If it last long, America will not be able to avoid collisions, and we shall be glad of it.—Look up ye life weary exiles of all lands, and see if it be not indeed the morning, that is red in the Eastern sky. We have a vision of royal thrones crackling, and blazing, and dropping to ashes in the public squares of capitol cities; dungeons razed, and the captives set free; barricades coming down, and leaving the streets clear again, for processions of gay citizens, and funerals of the glorious dead; smoking walls and rafters of ruined palaces."

A regular correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune writing from Vienna, Dec. 18th, says:—

"Of the political dangers which menace Austria, it is hardly necessary to speak. Her immense army and a police which has in its service almost half the citizens of the Empire, are barely sufficient to prevent outbreaks, and to dry up individual drops of disaffection. On the one side she is menaced by France, and in case of a European war, is sure to loose her Italian provinces, and on the other, the Hungarians and Poles are moving Heaven and Earth to fan the flame which has broken out along the Danube into a general war.

Speaking of the Revolutions of 1848, The Alliance and Visitor has said:

"The events of Europe have followed each other in quick and startling succession. The events of centuries have been crowded into a year. The amazing rapidity has astonished the human race. The hand of God should be recognized in these remarkable events."

The Boston Traveller in an article headed the "SHAKING OF THE NATIONS," says:—

"These events are a FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY, uttered many hundred years ago; distinct enough to be understood by all [illegible] them. They are [illegible] seem more like the visions of the night, than the sober realities of the day. There is not a throne that has not been shaken by the uprising of the past few months. That the work of overturning in the Earth, of which the ancient sang, is commenced in very deed, it seems inpossible to doubt."

Says the Reflector:—

"We can hardly begin to measure the results of these great events in Europe. There never lived in the imagination of the most visionary, that these nations would be shaken to their centre, with notions of REPUBLICANISM, and all, too, within the very short space of three months, and that without any premonitions of what was coming. It is indeed startling to pause and consider it. The Almighty appears to be driving asunder the nations, is causing the everlasting hills to bow—they seem to be on the verge of crumbling."

MR. KIRK has said:—

"We are living at an unusual period.—The voice of God is speaking through his providence in solemn, awful and encouraging tones. We have heard all the while the rolling of his chariot wheels. It is his hand that sways the nations. He has caused the great ground-swell which men cannot resist. Men cannot meet under such circumstances without peculiar feelings; and all whom we have heard, have evinced the same deep under-current.—His own heart had been full of it."

At an anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, speaking of the movements of the nations, LORD MORPETH said:

"But whatever may be the final issue of these momentous events which we are called on to contemplate,—and we can hardly keep our breath, while we run, as it were, along with them,—yet I think it will be felt by all whom I address, that, at a time like this, when the constitutions, the politics, the powers, the [illegible] of this world which we have been accustomed to, are heaving with unwonted throes,—when the old foundations seem to be all broken up, when historic thrones are tottering, and [illegible] shaking, we do receive the [illegible] and the most thrilling warnings [illegible] relates to our individual [illegible] strengthen our foundations upon the Rock of Ages [illegible] cies, to inculcate those [illegible] and promises which belong [illegible] that maketh not ashamed."

Now, then, dear reader, there is no lack of testimony the momentous declaration of the Saviour, "Men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

DR. TYNG, an Episcopal minister of NEW YORK, who is looking for [illegible] [illegible] opinion that the present gathering of the kings of this earth will soon [illegible] the battle of the Great Day of God Almighty [illegible] He has also said that, [illegible]

North Adams, Mass.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.—NO. I.

That this is a parable, and a parable only, is very evident. It is the most intricate among the many the Saviour taught during his brief sojourn among men. By way of introduction, I will present to the reader a few comments of some of the great and good men, whose names many delight to honor:

Dr. Adam Clark remarks on Matt. 5: 26—"Let it be remembered, that by the general consent of all, (except the basely interested,) no metaphor is ever to be produced in proof of a doctrine. In the things that concern our eternal salvation, we need the most pointed and express evidence on which to establish the faith of our souls." Bishop Lowth says—"Parable is that kind of allegory which consists of a continued narration of fictitious or accommodated events, applied to the illustration of some important truth."

LIGHTFOOT says: "That it was a parable, not only the consent of all expositors may assure us, but the thing itself speaks it.

WHITBY: "That this is only a parable, and not a real history of what was actually done, is evident: I. Because we find this very parable in the Gemara Bablyonicum, whence it is cited by Mr. Sheringham, in the preface to his Joma. 2. From the circumstances of it, viz., the rich man's lifting up his eyes in hell, and seeing Lazarus in Abraham's bosom, his discourse with Abraham, his complaint of being tormented with flames, and his desire that Lazarus might be sent to cool his tongue; and if all this be confessedly parable, why should the rest, which is the very parable in the Gemara, be accounted history?" Annot. in loc.

WAKEFIELD: Ver. 23, "In the grave; (es to hades,) and, conformably to this representation, he is spoken of as having a body, ver. 24. It must be remembered, that hades nowhere means hell—(gehenna)—in any author whatsoever, sacred or profane; and also, that our Lord is giving his hearers a parable, (Matt. xiii. 34,) and not a piece of real history. To them who regard the narration as a reality, it must stand as an unanswerable argument for the purgatory of the papists. The universal meaning of hades is the state of death; because the term sepulchrum or grave, is not strictly applicable to such as have been consumed by fire, &c. See ver. 30." Note in loc.

JAMES BATE, M. A., Rector of Deptford, says:—"We will suppose, then, the rich man who fared so sumptuously, to be the Jew, so amply enriched with the heavenly treasure of divine revelation. The poor beggar who lay at his gate, in so miserable a plight, was the poor Gentile, now reduced to the last degree of want, in regard to religious knowledge. The crumbs which fell from the rich man's table, and which the beggar was so desirous of picking up, were such fragments of patriarchial and Jewish traditions, as their traveling philosophers were able to pick up with their utmost care and diligence.—And those philosophers were also the dogs that licked the sores of heathenism, and endeavored to supply the wants of divine revelation, by such schemes and hypotheses, concerning the nature of the gods, and the obligation of moral duties, as (due allowance for their ignorance and frailties) did [illegible] honor to human nature, and yet [illegible] how little a way [illegible] reason could go without [illegible] About [illegible] spiritual [illegible] into Abraham's [illegible] [illegible] also. [illegible] foretold. The rich man being reduced to this state of misery, complains bitterly of this hard fate, but it is told by Abraham, that he slipped his opportunity, while Lazarus laid hold on his, and now receives the comfort of it. The Jew complains of the want of more evidence, to convince his countrymen, the five brethren, and would fain have Lazarus sent from the dead to convert them. But Abraham tells them, that if their own scriptures cannot convince them of their error, neither would they be persuaded though one rose from the dead. And exactly so it proved in the event. For this parable was delivered towards the end of the third year of our Lord's ministry; and in the fourth, or following year of it, the words put into the mouth of Abraham, as the conclusion of the parable, are most literally verified, by our Lord's raising another Lazarus from the dead. And we may presume, that the beggar had the fictitious name of Lazarus given him in the parable, not without some reason, since the supposed request of the rich man was fully answered, by our Lord's raising another, and a real Lazarus, from the dead. But what was the consequence? Did this notorious miracle convince the rich man's brethren? No, truly. His visit to them from the dead, was so far from convincing them, that they actually consulted together that they might put Lazarus also to death; because that, by reason of him, many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus.

To my mind, the teaching of the Saviour on this occasion, is simply this.—The time was fast approaching, and would very soon arrive, when the law would become a dead letter,—and the Priesthoood would die with it.

Just turn to Luke xvi., 19th, and read the parable. You will then observe—1st, a rich man; 2nd, a beggar; 3rd, father Abraham; 4th, the dogs; 5th, the five brethren; 6th, the gulf; 7th, the hell.—The question now arises, what are we to understand by the above seven points? I understand them in the following manner: First, the rich man to be the priesthood.—He was clothed in purple and fine linnen. Turn to EX. XXVIII., 1st to 9th. "These are the garments which they shall make a breastplate, an ephod, and a robe, and a broidered coat, a mitre, and a girdle; and they shall make holy garments for Aaron, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office—and they shall take gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet. They made clothes of service to do service in the holy place; and made holy garments for Aaron as the Lord commanded Moses." &c.

The above is the rich man,—he fared sumptuously every day. The following is the feasting or sumptuous faring of the rich man. Please turn and read from the 1st to the 14th verse of DEUT. XXVIII. They had the feast of Passover, the feast of Pentacost, the feast of Tabernacles, the feast of Trumpets, which was celebrated on what was called their civil year, being ushered in by the blowing of trumpets,—the feast of the new moon, which was celebrated on the first day the moon appeared after the change,—the feast of expiation, which was celebrated on the 10th day of Tisri,—the feast of Lots and Purim,—the feast of Dedication,—the feast of Branches, to commemorate the taking of Jericho,—the feast of Collections on the 10th day of Sept. when they made contribution for the temple,—and the feast of Sabattical year. Besides the above mentioned feasts, they have all the fullness of God's blessing spoken of in the 28th of DEUT. Truly, they fared sumptuously every day.

And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus. Permit me here to introduce a criticism of Adam Clark's, the celebrated commentator. Clark says, "The word Lazarus is a contraction of the word Eleazer, which signifies the help or assistance of God," a name properly given to a man who was both poor and afflicted, and had no help but that which came from God.—Such was Jesus Christ. Mark, reader, the Saviour sometimes introduces himself as a vine, a door, an heir, a stone. Why should it be thought strange that he should be the beggar, or the Lazarus of this parable? He is, in my humble opinion, the Lazarus of this parable.

The dogs are the Gentiles. Father Abraham—God the Father. Why such an application? See Matt. xxi: 33d.—Where the "certain householder" is assuredly God the Father. So I understand it in this instance. Now then let us make an application of the parable. And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the Angels into Abraham's bosom. The rich man also died and was buried." When Jesus died on the cross, the rich man, i. e., the priesthood, died also. Yes, it is a fact, the priesthood lost all their peculiar blessings. See Col. ii: 14, 15; also Rom. vii: 4, "Ye are become dead to the law by the body of Christ," &c.

The rich man (priesthood) dies a political death. His dispensation ceases, never to be raised to his former favor—rejected from being any longer the peculiar son of God. "In Hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." By this I understand that Father Abraham, or God the Father, now permits all the awful calamities foretold by the prophets to come upon them as the fruit of their rejection of the Messiah. "I will kindle a fire in mine anger that shall burn to the lowest Hell." "I will burn you with hunger." "The Lord shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an extremeburning, and with the sword," &c. Please turn and read Deut. xxxii: 11 to 30: Jer. xv: 14. When rejected of God, scattered, torn to pieces, all their national privileges destroyed, hated, unpitied; their city destroyed, tormented by all nations, starving with hunger—these are the torments, this truly the hell spoken of in Deut. thirty-second, twenty-second. Jonah cries out of the Belly of Hell. Ch. 2: 2. God there casts him into Hell in the whale's belly. God casts the Jews into a hell of national calamities. Such to my mind, is the Hell in the parable. The priesthood rejected Jesus; they did not believe in him; they are still looking for him to make his first advent; they would not believe their prophets. They are suffering God's displeasure, and hence the Savior charges home their unbelief by stating they would not believe though one rose from the dead.

They are represented as crying to Father Abraham, to alleviate their sufferings. Now mark the answer—"Son, remember that thou, in thy life time, receivedst thy good things. And likewise Lazarus evil things—now he is comforted and thou art tormented." During all your priesthood you received your good things, but Lazarous, the Savior, in his sojourning on earth, evil things; now he is comforted and you are tormented. He then tells the reason of the sufferings they endure, by the gulf fixed between him and them, which is a fact in reality, that we cannot pass from hence, from the gospel back under the law; neither can you while you reject the Messiah pass to us. He feels a solicitude on the part of his five brethren. Probably the five brethren are some of the tribes that did not consent, or have any part or lot in putting Christ to death. I do not consider the five brethren in this instance, a specific number any more than I do the five wise and five foolish virgins. What, you may enquire, is the probable meaning of the beggar being fed with the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table? I understand it as follows:

All those parts of Scripture that spoke of the manner, the time, and the life and character of Jesus—i. e., Lazarus—they rejected, treated them just as a person would, in affluent circumstances, small fragments or crumbs from their table.

But Jesus was fed with them. How often be addresses them thus: "Did ye never read in the Scriptures?" (See MAT. xxi: 42) Or, to make an application of present truth, see how many of the rich preachers of the present day treat those portions of Scripture concerning the time and event of Christ's second coming. O, say they, they will do for the Millerites. Well, thank God, they do well for us; they are precious crumbs; we are fed by them; they are meat in due season. Just so it seems to me, with respect to the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. Finally he tells them, "neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

Behold, Lazarus rose from the dead; yes, Jesus, the Lazarus of the parable, rose from the dead, and they would not believe.

MEXICO.—Another bloody engagement has taken place between the insurgents and the Government forces before the city of Victoria. It seems that Governor de la Garza was besieged in Victoria by a regular force of 2,000 men. The different charges were made upon the triple intrenchments, and each time was the enemy repulsed with heavy loss. The insurgent statement estimates the loss in killed and wounded, on the part of the enemy, at 400, and we are told that the officers of the regulars themselves acknowledge a loss of 160 men.—[N. Y. CORRESPONDENCE.

Notes by the Way.

FROM A SISTER'S JOURNAL.

AUG. 17th. This morning we disposed of the last care, and duty, that bound us to our city home, for the purpose of seeking in some retired spot, that rest and strength, that the wasted energies of body and mind, so much needed. Several ways were opened before us to spend a few weeks pleasantly, with that object in view. But before deciding, thought we would go over to the Bergen C. Meeting.

Can hardly tell why we did so, years ago, we lost our interest in such meetings, except as a social gathering. In this case, we had no chosen friend to accompany us. We expected no warm greeting nor the smiling, hearty welcome, that used to await us on such occasions, when we were one with the many. But knowing we could return before night we passed on.

A pleasant ride brought us to the beautiful grove, where a few tents spread, and a small congregation seated before the stand, listening to the closing remarks of the morning service. As we looked around, there was one, and but one, familiar object our eye rested upon. The large chart stretched out behind the wide desk, with its great image beasts and figures looked the most like an old friend, of any thing we saw, although the aspect of the beasts seemed more fierce and terrible than ever before.

After a short intermission, we were called to the stand where Daniel's vision of the 2,300 days, was taken up. The whole subject reviewed and explained. The mistake in commencing the days in the 7th year of Artaxerxes instead of the 20th, pointed out. The whole subject was presented in such a clear lucid manner, that a child could understand it. And ere we were aware, a chord was touched that vibrated through our whole being. Oh, can it be possible, that after all our sorrow and disappointment, we are on the sure line of prophecy? Like the disciples, we had thought, that ere this, the Deliverer of Isreal would have redeemed his people. For ten long years we had been like an exile in a foreign land. Our kindred ties all sundred by the monster death. The loved ones, for whom, and with whom, we could so cheerfully labour and suffer have fallen under his dominion, awaiting the sound of the last triumph, that shall break his cruel power. Oh how often has the expression been wrung from the heart.

"My company is gone before
And I am left alone with thee."

The little hand, with whom we once enjoyed such sweet fellowship, scattered to the four winds. No sympathy with the churches. Spoiled indeed for any enjoyment in this world.

Hope deferred hath made many a heart sad in these latter days. But the scriptures must needs be fulfilled, and, blessed be God, our Lord and master, can in these last days, so open the understanding of his humble believing children that they need not walk in darkness. Oh praise the Lord, ceaseless praise be to our Saviour given. He hath opened up a living spring in the desert. He hath brought us to his banqeting house, inscribed on the banner is Love. Who can describe it? an abyss without bottom or shore. Oh how it fills the soul; all we can say is, "Praise, Praise the Lord." "Let every thing that hath breath, praise the Lord."

"Our willing soul would stay in such a place as this." No desire to return home. The brethren and sisters already seem like old friends. Oh how little we thought this morning that our Heavenly Father had such a feast of fat things prepared for us. Blessed be his Holy name.

18th. We have been blessed a great many times, during our pilgrimage, but somehow the streams of Salvation, never seemed so sweet, rich, and full, as on this glad day. How one glimpse of that glorious city, that Abraham beheld afar off, can captivate the soul, when "Faith lends its realizing light." But to us, the Kingdom of God is nigh, even at the door.—Our coming King has given us permission to lift up our heads and rejoice,—and we will rejoice.

19th. Preaching instructive, and profitable. Prayer meetings good, a heavenly spirit pervades the meeting. The most fastidious cannot complain of confession, or fanaticism. Delightful weather, the beautiful grove to worship in, encompassed with loving brethren and sisters. A glorious hope of immortality and eternal life, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Who could not be happy? It would seem that the company of angels that announced the first advent of the Saviour, had unperceived passed over the encampment, and breathed upon us the heaven-spirit of "Peace on earth, good will to man."

20th. The last day of the feast has come, and if the shining happy faces about us, are a true index to the inner man, then there is a goodly number rejoicing in hope of the glory to be revealed at the appearing of Christ. A larger number in attendance than on any previous day who listened attentively to the preaching, which was calculated to impress the most careless mind. The signs of the times; the prophetic periods; the present state of the world; our glorious hope, with kindred subjects have passed in review before us. This has not been what might be called a great meeting, but many beside to the wearied spirit, like being led into a green pasture and sitting down by the side of still waters, and we would here record a tribute of praise and thanksgiving our Heavenly Father, that he even put into our heart to visit this hallowed spot. We have formed an acquaintance with some of the choicest spirits of earth, and as we look around on the intelligence and experience assembled here, we feel honored in having a place with them, but, the best of all is, "God is with us."

Farewell, then, shady grove, thou art beautiful now, and the scenery about thee, is beyond description—but we anticipate meeting with the people of God, beneath the tree of life where the leaf shall not wither, and by the side of that river, clear as chrystal, that makes glad the city of our God.

SALEM, Sept. 17, 1854.

Dear Bro. Merriam; I understand you wish to learn what the Negroes, who of late have entered this port from the West Coast of Africa, have said about the Lord's coming being proclaimed in their country.

Two of them came into my shop, some six or eight weeks since, and seeing the chart as it hung in the shop, asked what it meant. I told him it represented the kingdoms and governments of this world down to the end, when Jesus Christ would come, set up his kingdom, destroy the wicked, create new heavens and a new earth and save his people.

They looking earnestly at me, said—"Do da preach dat in dis country?"

"Yes, we do."

"De wild Methodist preach dat on de West Coast of Africa, where we came from."

"What do they say about it there?"

One of them stood up and imitated them, clapped his hands, saying—"The Lord is coming, de Lord is coming, bless de Lord, O, glory, glory. Da berry happy. De oder Methodists no like dem, no, no."

"When do they look for the Lord's coming?"

"Dis year. De other Methodists say something is coming on the world. Da preach de Lord be coming two or three hundred miles in de country."

A few weeks after, another of the crew came in, who appeared to know more about it. He asked me a few questions about the chart, which I answered, explaining it briefly, and asked him if he understood.

"I do." "Dat be good, aint it?"

"Have you ever seen a chart before?"

"I have."

"Where?"

"De Mishonary got them from England. Dat will soon be good time, when good Master come."

He seemed very happy in prospect of soon seeing Jesus. I cannot do justice to their expressions and simplicity. He endeavored to explain the chart to his companion, expressing much joy.

A gentleman working in the same shop, an unconverted man, confessed that hearing them tell about the time as proclaimed in Africa, had more weight upon his mind than all he had heard on the subject before.

At the tent-meeting on Liberty Hill, I mentioned this, not knowing any one was present, who knew any thing about it.—After meeting, the mate of the same ship, came to me saying—"It is so, I was one."

"Are you sure?"

"He replied—it is so."

How good the Lord is! He fulfills all his promises. Praise the Lord, the good time is at hand. Amen.

J. H. CARTY.

FAIRHAVEN, CT, Sept. 11, 1854.

Bro. Merriam;—The Brn. in Fairhaven, Ct., have been getting along well, since the Winsted meeting. O that parting circle, and the commemoration of Christ's death and suffering till he come. As we partook of the bread and wine, my mind was carried back to Mount Calvary, from thence to a little in the future from this, when the despised Jesus will come forth to serve us at the marriage supper of the Lamb. By the grace of God I'll be there, to meet the redeemed saints of God. My spirit was refreshed at the Winsted meeting, for which I give God the glory.

My determination is to warn my fellow men of the approaching day of Wrath. My prayer is that the Lord may bless you and all who are preaching and believing the present truth. I hope that some may yet see the truth. Amen.

JAMES E. CLARK.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—Several of our brethren have expressed the opinion that the termination of the prophetic periods is restricted to the present Roman year, which they understand to extend only to the 1st of January. But I observe in the 4th column of the 5th number of the Crisis, and on what I suppose to be good authority, that prior to 1752, the Roman year commenced on the 25th of March.—As this fact seems to have been overlooked by many, I have been requested to call attention thereto through the Crisis.

15 LAIGHT STREET, Aug. 21, 1854.

Bro. Merriam;—Sir: I thought I would speak a few words relative to the Burgen Neck Camp Meeting. I arrived there on Wednesday P. M., when I heard it stated that Eld. Cummings had been there, and after delivering one or more lectures, had left for other parts. Eld. Grant was on hand as one of the principle speakers, and gave great satisfaction in elucidating the principles of the Advent believers' hope in the soon coming of Him who went up from Calvary's Mountain—"long time ago." Sabbath morning at 8 o'clock there was a love feast—one Br. said that he had come on foot more than six miles to the breakfast feast, and much more than got paid for his trouble. Two other brethren felt that they had been more than paid for coming 150 and 200 miles to the feast of tabernucles.

☞ We cut the following from a Boston paper. How deplorable is the departure therein manifested from the simplicity of the gospel! When men think more of the height of their tower, and the splendor of their organ and choir than the inward purity of the heart, as a preparation for the worship of God, we may expect that the blessing, Jesus has purchased for his little, humble flock, will be withdrawn from the assembly, and Ichabod be written on their magnificent walls.

REV. DR. NEAL'S CHURCH. A Boston correspondent of the N. Y. Review has the following:—

"There is a church erecting in Somerset street which attracts much attention—I refer to the church building by Rev. Dr. Neal's society. It will be a splendid edifice when completed, and its spire will be the highest in the city. I understand that with the new church a new choir will be inaugurated, which is intended to equal any in the city. It will be a quartette; Miss Sophia Bothamly is the soprano, Mr. Mozart the base, and Mr. Hall, tenor and conductor. Miss Bothamly and Mr. Mozart are from a choir in Charlestown, and Mr. Hall is a protege of Mr. Bruce of Bowdoin-street church. The other arrangements are unknown to me, but I shall take an early opportunity to hear the choir. I know of no better voices than the soprano and base. A magnificent organ is building for the church by W. B. D. Simmons & Co; of this city. I saw it a day or two since, and was much pleased with its architecture; of the inside, of course there is nothing to be said."

RIOT IN NEW ORLEANS. New Orleans has been the scene of some terrible riots between the Americans and Irish, in which several lives were lost and many badly injured. The first outbreak occurred on Sunday evening, Sept. 10, growing out of a political discussion between a party of Americans and Irish. A savage fight ensued, in which fire-arms and clubs were freely used. A number of the participants in the riot were badly wounded before it could be quelled by the police. On the following day one of the wounded died, and much excitement followed in consequence. The excitement continued on the increase throughout Monday, and as soon as night set in the riot was renewed with still greater violence—each party apparently being prepared for it. The news spread rapidly through the city, and it was reported that several had been killed, but this report fortunately proved to be premature. Pistols and guns were fired into the crowds, and many of the rioters received serious injuries. The police again succeeded in making several arrests and restoring order. The rioters again assembled on Tuesday evening, when the struggle was renewed with redoubled ferocity. Two of the rioters were killed on the ground, and quite a number were carried off—some of them shockingly wounded. The Mayor ordered out the National Guard and the entire police force, which had the effect of intimidating the rioters.—[N. Y. Tribune.

☞ In Bro. Brewer's article on the Parable of Luke 16th, he remarks that he does not regard the five Brethren as a definite number; but it appears to us the five Brn. had reference to the 10 tribes, and if one tribe were represented by one man, the other tribes, taking the same ratio, would be represented by five Brn.—ED.

The Wine-Cup of God's Wrath.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Respected Friend:—If you have not, let me exhort you to fix this one solemn fact in your mind, the present time is clearly and most strikingly marked in the Holy Scriptures! It is in the most emphatic sense THE VOICE OF THE DAY OF GOD! (Zeph. i. 14) It is speaking in solemn, awful and encouraging tones—perhaps to meet thy God. The apostle declares in Acts xiii. 27, "Because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets, which are read every Sabbath." Did they read the VOICES of the prophets? They did; and it was the Lord God speaking through them. "GOD, WHO AT SUNDRY TIMES AND IN DIVERS MANNERS SPAKE IN TIME PAST UNTO THE FATHERS BY THE PROPHETS, HATH IN THESE LAST DAYS SPOKEN UNTO US BY HIS SON" (Heb. i. 1) Ah, say some, I believe in the New, but not in the Old Testament. Kind reader, turn to 2 Pet. iii. 1,2. "This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken by the HOLY PROPHETS." Again: "For whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning! (Rom. xv. 4) Now, then, let me refer you to some of the voices of the prophets.

"For in the hand of the LORD there is a CUP, and the wine is red; it is full of mixture; and he poureth out of the same: but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them." Psa. lxxv 8.

"For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me; Take the WINE-CUP OF THIS FURY AT MY HAND, AND CAUSE ALL THE NATIONS, TO WHOM I SEND THEE to drink it. And they shall drink, and be moved, and be MAD, because of the SWORD that I will send among them. Then I took the CUP at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the Lord had sent me:

"And all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and ALL THE KINGDOMS OF THE WORLD, WHICH ARE UPON THE FACE OF THE EARTH: and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them. Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the SWORD which I will send among you. And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, thus saith the Lord of hosts; Ye shall certainly drink.

"For lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished; for I will call for a SWORD UPON ALL THE INHABITANTS OF THE EARTH, saith the Lord of hosts.

"And the slain of the Lord shall be at THAT DAY from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground." Jer. xxv. 15, 16, 17, 26, 27, 28, 29, 33.

Such is the awful malediction of the high and holy One against the wicked nations of the earth; read and ponder them in thy heart, and if thou art yet a stranger to God—still unprepared to meet the approaching crisis of the nations, and the destiny of the wicked—look abroad and see the dark, portentous cloud hanging over all the nations of the earth. What a striking simile, "Take the cup and cause all the nations to drink." In some instances anciently, when criminals were condemned to be executed, they were sentenced to drink a cup of poison, and while insensible to death, they slept its sleep.

The nations now, at this very moment, in like manner, are drunken with the dregs of worldly ambition, pride, infidelity, and hatred; leaguing and combining in their schemes to perpetuate their blood-crimsoned dynasties. But the MENE, MENE TEKEL is written by the finger of God upon all the kingdoms of the world: and while every breeze bears tidings from afar, of the waking up of nations, it is only the coming event casting its shadow before. Soon earth will be a battle-field, amid the shout of the warrior, confused noise, and garments rolled in blood.

The Lord Jesus, in his instruction to his church, ere he took his departure from his disciples, gave the unerring precursors of his coming; among which, the very last one is, (read it in Luke xxi. 25, 26, 27,) 'And upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring: Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking"—mark—"and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of the heaven shall be shaken. And then shall THEY see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." He does not say distress of Jerusalem—of a nation—but of NATIONS. If he did, it was a most singular fulfilment of the 28th verse; a strange redemption for the poor unbelieving Jews, to die by sword, famine, pestilence, sold into slavery, scattered, peeled, broken as one breaketh a potter's vessel that cannot be made whole again. Yes, EVEN SO WILL I BREAK THIS PEOPLE AND THIS CITY. (Turn to and read Jeremiah xix 1 to 12.) Dear reader, the generation referred to in the 32 verse, is the one now living. The one then living, did not see the times of the Gentiles fulfilled, the signs in the sun, moon and stars. They did not see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. The 35th and 36th verses were not fulfilled in their day. They did not stand before the Son of man. "Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and" (the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall wail)no, "ALL THE KINDREDS OF THE EARTH shall wail because of him." Rev. i. 7.

The reader of this little tract constitutes one of the generation referred to. You live in a day when the signs are all in the past—when there is distress among the nations of the earth, and men's hearts begin to fail them for fear and for LOOKING after those things which are COMING on the earth.

Let me now refer you to some facts alluded to in the above declaration of the coming one, the Lord Jesus. It is declared, "out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh." Ponder well the following. CHARLES BEECHER, in a sermon published some time since, says:

"The waves of the coming conflict, which are to convulse Christendom to her centre, are now beginning to be felt. The deep heavings begin to swell beneath us. 'All the old signs fail. God answers no more by Urim and Thummim, nor by dream, nor by prophet.' Men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth. Thunders mutter in the distance. Winds moan across the surging bosom of the deep. All things betide the rising of that final storm of indignation!"

The editor of The Living Age observes:

"We stand at a great starting point in the history of the world. Old things are about to pass away, and we know not what shall be the new. The continent of Europe, startled by the warning Trumpet of 1848, has cowered into silence; and while all faces gather blackness, and men's hearts fail them for fear of what is coming on the earth, the rulers of great nations council together how they may consolidate and extend the reign of despotism—keep down the rising tide and shut out the coming day."

In the British Banner of Feb. 8th, 1853, we notice an an address to Christians throughout Great Britain, the first two paragraphs of which we here insert, as follows:

"The present is a time of darkness and great perplexity, a period in which 'wars and rumors of wars' are agitating and alarming the hearts of more than half of mankind. Since the astounding years of the French Revolution, no events of so significant and momentous a character have occurred in the civilized world, as those that are now passing, like tempest-driven clouds, over the heads of the wondering nations. The statesman, the politician and the merchant, are equally at a loss to comprehend the present, or to predict the future condition of the social fabric; but they are all alike convinced, and many of them have already confessed, that there are elements at work in the conflict on which we are entering, that threaten lasting injury to all that is precious in civilization, and a return to the semi-barbarianism from which the leading parties in the struggle have not yet emerged.

"At such a time, may it not be asked, with humility and deference, but with all earnestness, What is the duty of the Christian Church? Is it fit and becoming in her, to whose care the dearest interests of mankind are intrusted, to sit still, or, what would be worse, to encourage by word or deed, the carnage into which the short-sighted nations are about to plunge? Can she perform no appropriate part in the present tremendous crisis of European affairs? If she cannot accomplish her noblest mission, by becoming the 'peace-maker' among rival and ambitious politicians, is there nothing in strict keeping with her character, her pretensions, and her responsibility, that she can do; and which, unless she tacitly consents to surrender her prerogatives as the appointed conservator of the cause of God on earth, she must do? Yea, verily, there are some things which the Church of God can do to alleviate the disasters, and to check the fury of the coming struggle; and these, one may be pardoned for conceiving to be her most appropriate and her most necessary duty at the present alarming period."

We select the following articles from political journals, some older and some of more recent date. But all, all bearing on their face the prophetic marks of Jesus—"distress" and "perplexity" of nations, "men's hearts failing them for fear":

The London Times has said, "The foundations of the great political deep seem breaking up THE WHOLE EARTH IS SHAKEN."

The New-York Evangelist has said, "Had the present state of Europe been prophesied fifty years ago, would any have credited the prophecy? We believe that in this year (1848) we have seen the beginning of the end"

An anonymous English writer has said: "Restless and uneasy, the world tosses to and fro like a fever patient upon his death-bed. A vague, undefined expectation of some approaching catastrophe generally, we do not say universally, prevails."

Another has said: "No doubt a better than Paradise is coming. But what is coming first? what is before that Paradise? what is nearest, yea, nigh at hand, to this secure, unthinking world? The tempest-cloud of heaven's judgment! the filling up of God's wrath! the last vial already trembling in the angel's hand! that baptism of fire!"

The British Banner of Feb. 8th notices a pamphlet, entitled the "Present Crisis," the object of which is to set forth the consequences of the Russo-Rurkish war to England and the world. The writer (Coningsby) says that the balance of power, secured by its distribution among a body of independent states, is, at this moment, seriously shaken. He says:

"All men of sense seem both to see and fear this,—POLITICIANS AND POWERS ARE ALIKE PERPLEXED. There is great difficulty in moving backwrd or forward."

In connection with noticing the work above mentioned the Banner thus remarks:

"Poland is at any hour ripe for rising; Hungary is ill at ease; and Kossuth is at any moment ready to resume its dictatorship. The Italian Stat s are a volcano pent up, ready to burst forth, pouring the lava of Democratic RAGE and HATE on the head of despotism."

Another publication has appeared in England, entitled, "The Russians of the South," a notice of which we find in the Banner, with a few extracts from it, one of which we insert here, with the remarks of the Banner on the same:

"Military rank is necessary to elevate them into a decent, sociable position, and military rank is accorded to them; a captain birches your little boy, and a major prescribes your rhubarb and magnesia, and a lieutenant designs the pediments and architraves for your grand new houses; custom house clerks, post office clerks, passport clerks, are all in uniform. • • There are no less than fourteen different ranks in the civil service, and each of them has a corresponding military value."

"'All in uniform.' The sons of Mars in this most religious empire of the Czar, are everywhere apparent; war first, war midst, war last, war without end! Much of the volume is of a character to illustrate the WAR SPIRIT which meets you at every turn, CARRYING EVERYTHING BEFORE IT."

We extract the following paragraph from the New-York Tribune, of January 28th:

"The eastern sky is red with the portents of a general conflagration. Monarchs turn pale at the prospect and fidget on their tottering thrones. Nations start from their uneasy slumbers and grasping tightly their chains, so as to stifle their clanking, ask in whispers, if the clock of Destiny has struck the hour of freedom and revenge. Gaunt artisans and ragged laborers roaming in hungry desperation, thank God that the crisis visibly approaches, when the poor who cannot live, shall at least have an opportunity to die like men."

The following is from the "World's Crisis," and taken from political journals:

"The words of our Savior are fulfilled before our eyes, 'a fearful looking after those things that are coming on the earth,' everywhere exists; the last moral condition of the human mind is developed. From the king on the throne, to the beggar in the street, there is the same involuntary outburst of feeling. As a demonstration of this characteristic mark, I present you with the following from political journals:

'Every observer of men and things must feel conscious that a momentous crisis in the affairs of mankind is rapidly approaching. Everything seems trembling beneath some impending doom; some tremendous power, that is about to burst upon the world. There is little to tell us whether the coming strife will be fraught with good or evil. But that some great change, some universal transition, is near at hand, is as plainly to be felt as the sullen breath of the gathering storm. There is an oppressive sultriness and heaviness in the moral atmosphere, a hurrying to and fro of the animate world, a clattering and clamoring, an intense energy and activity, that presage the rushing tornado, or the rumbling earthquake. We see the giant thunder-columns towering above the horizon, massive, sullen, and grand; and we hear the low, stifled rumble, and feel the deep, subdued quiver, beneath our feet. The sunlight assumes a sickly hue, a veil of quiet gloom envelopes the face of nature; and wherever we turn our eyes we are greeted with the scowl of portentous preparation. All Europe is one boiling cauldron of revolutionary elements—China has long been torn by contending forces—the Indies and Southern Africa have not slept for years—Australia is a new volcanic continent over which the lava tide may sweep at any moment—South America is still rolling and rocking as if shaken by an earthquake—Mexico bids fair to be swallowed up of the United States, the land of security trembles to its very base.

"In the absence of all proof against a great moral and political revolution, why conjure up evidence to prove what is manifest in every thing around us? We have but to look and see that a sublime change is already begun. We have but to look into the mirror of truth, and behold the shadow of approaching reality. The education, actions, words, thought and feeling of men, all bear witness that we are tending toward a new order of things—and experience, and faith in the progressive operations of nature, tell us that it will be one far above anything ever yet realized by mankind. But the birth of the new era will not be a pangless one. Pain and suffering, and tears, and blood will consecrate and baptize the darling of ages. We shudder and shrink from the thought; but we yearn for the event, as parent never yearned for the sight of offspring.'

"A western editor made the following singular expression:—'The world is making huge efforts to die!'

"The celebrated ALBERT BARNES, of Philadelphia, has attempted to prove that this rocking and razing of thrones in Europe is a fulfilment of Dan. vii. 9: 'The thrones were cast down., If so, the ANCIENT OF DAYS will soon sit in solemn judgment.

"The learned Dr. ELLIOT remarks: 'With regard to our present position, we have been led, as the result of our investigations, to fix it but a short distance from the end of the now existing dispensation, and the expected second advent of Christ.'

"A London journal remarks—"The horizon reddens with the menace of UNIVERSAL CONFLAGRATION. We do not hail the omen with pleasure; we can draw no smiling horoscope for the now probable convulsion.'

"The Scientific Mechanic has said: The world is now just about six thousand years old—and we cannot avoid the anticipation of events incomparably more important than any which have been prognosticated by the secular press.'

"Said the London Episcopal Recorder: 'There is an undefinable impression abroad upon all spirits, of a coming crisis, and a better day. All things seem to travel onward to a general crisis and a new era.'"

On the revolutions throughout Europe, the London British Banner remarks:—

"From the 7th to the 12th of February 1848, the subject of reform was fiercely debated in the French Chambers; on the 22nd, the people of Paris rose against the constituted authorities; on the 24th, the Monarchy fell; and a Republican Government was set up in its place! On the 8th of March, the freedom of the press was proclaimed in Saxony, and the censorship abolished; on the 13th, the spirit of the revolution broke out in Vienna: the chains of the Empire, in a moment were snapped asunder; Metternich, the Patriarchal High Priest of the temple of Austrian Despotism, fled, and the Imperial Deity did homage to the throne of Constitutional Freedom! Five days after, the rhyming King of Bavaria, cast aside the crown he had so unworthily worn, and made way for another. On the same day, the flame of Revolution burst forth in Berlin. It were long to recount the series of smaller changes,—suffice it to say, all the minor powers of the Continent have been more or less revolutionized. From the Atlantic to the Vistula, every throne has been shaken. The shores of the Baltic and the mountains of Sicily have alike been swept by the mighty WHIRLWIND. The laws, governments and armies of fifteen centuries, departed like a scroll—they are gone! At eventide they existed in full power, and, in man's esteem, in more than pristine glory, and on the morrow, they were not! The regal master of a million of soldiers in the morning, in the afternoon, himself alone, on the brink of destruction, fled for his life!"

Let me here insert an extract from one of Kossuth's speeches:—

"Royalty has lost its prestige in France, Germany, Italy, Austria, and in Hungary. Both parties equally recognize, that the time has come when the struggle of principles must be decided. Absolutism or Republicanism—the Czar or the principles of America—there is no more transaction, no more time possible. The two antagonist principles meet upon the narrow bridge of a knife's edge breadth, cast across the deep gulf, ready to swallow him who falls. There is no giving way. There is no turning round possible. He who would give way to his enemy would fall into the yawning gulf himself. He would turn round, would be pushed down by his enemy pressing in the rear. It is a struggle for life and death. That is the condition of the European continent in general. A great, terrible, bloody Revolution, is unavoidable. That is known and felt by every one. And every sound man knows equally well that the temporary success of Louis Napoleon's usurpation made but the terrible crisis more unavoidable yet. Ye men of "peace at any price," do not shut willingly your eyes, before the finger of God pointing to the mene tekel upharsin, written with gigantic letters upon the sky of Europe. Despots never yield to justice, and mankind, inspired with love of Freedom, will not yield to annihilation cowardly.—Peace is impossible. Nobody can stop the wheels of destiny. It would be a mistake terrible in its consequences to believe, that if I should fail in my mission here, and if the United States should remain indifferent, then no revolution would break out on the European continent. That is an unavoidable necessity, which no power on earth can avert. Should even the United States not only remain indifferent, but with all their immense power, even side with despots of the world, that the church peace of Europe may not be disturbed (which the United States of course would never do,) even that could not prevent a revolution in Europe. Hungary, Austria, Italy, Germany, would fight, be it against the combined power of the world. They would fight even with the certainty of death.

Because there is a condition in the life of nations when oppression is more hated, than death is feared. No, gentlemen, the success of my mission here can insure the victory of freedom—can prevent torrents of martyrs' blood—can shorten the Earthquake of impending war, and bring nearer the restoration to solid peace—but be sure the certainty of European Revolution is not in the slightest manner depending upon my good luck here. And your government's support, as also my failure, would not for a single week retard the outbreak of that Hurricane, the scent of which is already perceived in the air."

The following was handed me by a friend, taken from a N. Y. paper, some two years since:—

"At the present time, peace reigns in Europe, but a thickening cloud hangs over her future destiny. Perfidious England, beholds with dismay, the apparition of the murdered prisoner of St. Helena, and casting her vulture eye beyond the straits of Dover, she perceives an unusual commotion reigning throughout the land. In the navy yard the axe of the workman is no longer at rest, while from the many provinces of LA BELLE FRANCE, eight millions stentorian voices demand that Waterloo shall be avenged, and from young and old, in thunder tones, the universal cry is borne on the breeze, 'Vive Napoleon.' Yes, the old world is calm, but the greater the calm the more terrible will be the storm that is at hand; we know not the hour it will break forth on the world. Distrust, fear, jealousy prevail to such an extent throughout these rotten Monarchies, that nothing short of a general war can effect a change.

England, England "my Eternal nightmare," thou art surely marked. Yes, Irish Americans, the day of her difficulty approaches; are you prepared to take advantage of it?" • • •

The following is taken from the N. Y. Citizen:—

"Once again rosy morn dawns upon the earth. The Peace and Order establishment, established in Europe, at the point of five millions of bayonets, begins to grow nervous. The nightmare of five years loosens its clutch upon the breast of the nations, and we see daylight and hear the cheerful cock-crow. Many a time in this long, dark unrest, misnamed Peace, brave and just men wished they were dead. The righteous cause they said is crushed hopelessly for our generation—'That which is crooked cannot be made straight, and that which is wanting cannot be numbered.'—

But, courage! courage! The unwearied sun chases his own shadow still; and it is well to be alive and not dead when the dawn is breaking, calling us to the work and play of life again. • • It gives us delight to see and to feel, notwithstanding the dismal decadence of voices which prevail in these times, that our mother earth breeds the same sort of sons as of old. • • But already the Hungarians are swarming into Turkey. Others are setting forth from America to join them. If Turkey can hold her ground notwithstanding the false friendship of the western powers, Hungary will be the first country in arms. Then a gallant game will be on foot, indeed. In Berlin, Vienna, Milan, Paris, men are already eyeing the lines and corners of the streets with a view to judicious barricades; and it is pleasing to the benevolent mind to see the terror of Kings and Courts. The 'legitimate' pulse beats somewhat tremulously; and even Serene Highnesses lose their serenity. Perhaps the great day of deliverance is indeed dawning in Europe. • • The war, however, is very likely to grow and spread; no man can tell how many powers will be brought into it. If it last long, America will not be able to avoid collisions, and we shall be glad of it.—Look up ye life weary exiles of all lands, and see if it be not indeed the morning, that is red in the Eastern sky. We have a vision of royal thrones crackling, and blazing, and dropping to ashes in the public squares of capitol cities; dungeons razed, and the captives set free; barricades coming down, and leaving the streets clear again, for processions of gay citizens, and funerals of the glorious dead; smoking walls and rafters of ruined palaces."

A regular correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune writing from Vienna, Dec. 18th, says:—

"Of the political dangers which menace Austria, it is hardly necessary to speak. Her immense army and a police which has in its service almost half the citizens of the Empire, are barely sufficient to prevent outbreaks, and to dry up individual drops of disaffection. On the one side she is menaced by France, and in case of a European war, is sure to loose her Italian provinces, and on the other, the Hungarians and Poles are moving Heaven and Earth to fan the flame which has broken out along the Danube into a general war.

Speaking of the Revolutions of 1848, The Alliance and Visitor has said:

"The events of Europe have followed each other in quick and startling succession. The events of centuries have been crowded into a year. The amazing rapidity has astonished the human race. The hand of God should be recognized in these remarkable events."

The Boston Traveller in an article headed the "SHAKING OF THE NATIONS," says:—

"These events are a FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY, uttered many hundred years ago; distinct enough to be understood by all who have lived to see them. They are so astounding as to seem more like the visions of the night, than the sober realities of the day. There is not a throne that has not been shaken by the uprising of the past few months. That the work of overturning in the Earth, of which the ancient sang, is commenced in very deed, it seems inpossible to doubt."

Says the Reflector:—

"We can hardly begin to measure the results of these great events in Europe.—There never lived in the imagination of the most visionary, that these nations would be shaken to their centre, with notions of REPUBLICANISM, and all, too, within the very short space of three months, and that without any premonitions of what was coming. It is indeed startling to pause and consider it. The Almighty appears to be driving asunder the nations, is causing the everlasting hills to bow—they seem to be on the verge of crumbling."

MR. KIRK has said:—

"We are living at an unusual period.—The voice of God is speaking through his providence in solemn, awful and encouraging tones. We have heard all the while the rolling of his chariot wheels. It is his hand that sways the nations. He has caused the great ground-swell which men cannot resist. Men cannot meet under such circumstances without peculiar feelings; and all whom we have heard, have evinced the same deep under-current.—His own heart had been full of it."

At an anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, speaking of the movements of the nations, LORD MORPETH said:

"But whatever may be the final issue of these momentous events which we are called on to contemplate,—and we can hardly keep our breath, while we run, as it were, along with them,—yet I think it will be felt by all whom I address, that, at a time like this, when the constitutions, the politics, the powers, the denominations of this world which we have been accustomed to, are heaving with unwonted throes, when the old foundations seem to be all broken up, when historic thrones are tottering, and imperial sceptres are shaking, we do receive the most solemn and the most thrilling warnings, as far as relates to our individual [illegible], to strengthen our foundations upon the Rock of Ages, and as far as relates to our species, to inculcate those doctrines, precepts, and promises which belong to the hope that maketh not ashamed."

Now, then, dear reader, there is no lack of testimony [illegible] declaration of the Saviour, 'Men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.'

DR. TYNG, an Episcopal minister of New York, who is looking for [illegible] of opinion that the present gathering of the kings of the earth [illegible] battle of the Great Day of God Almighty. He has also said that, [illegible]

"The budding fig-tree does not indicate the approach of summer clearer than the signs of the times betoken the soon coming of the everlasting kingdom."

David Lord, editor of the Literary and Theological Journal, published in New York, remarks as follows:—

"There are no future events more clearly revealed than that Christ is, within a brief period, to come from heaven in person, and visibly raise the sanctified who shall have died, and judge and accept those who are living, and destroy the civil and ecclesiastical powers who usurp his rights and persecute his people.",

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, OCTOBER 4, 1854.

The Crisis is not near large enough.—We have a multitude of excellent letters and communications on hand. Each correspondent naturally expects his or her article to be published, and there is not room. This is one of the most trying circumstances of an Editor's life, but all I can say is, beloved, have patience, patience, patience.

The last Battle.

My time has been too much occupied to admit of that attention to various questions of our correspondents which I would gladly have given; but hope for more leisure during our short future.

I think not. Under the sixth Vial, the nations of the earth were gathered to that final battle by the instrumentality of the three unclean spirits; but that battle is not fought till the outpouring of the seventh Vial. The word rendered battle is defined in Groves' Dictionary thus—"war, warfare, hostility; a battle fought, engagement." The appropriate signification of the word, therefore, is continued warfare, and not a single engagement. It implies, I think, in this case, the controversy which God will have with the nations.—"The nations were angry and thy wrath is come;" i. e. under the seventh Vial the time comes for the indignation of God to be manifested against sin. This indignation will be displayed in various ways.—Babylon the great is the grand centre—the fearful theatre for the exhibition of divine wrath. It is like the lofty battlement or tower to attract the lightnings of heaven; but when that lightning descends, it spreads havoc and desolation all around. Babylon excites the ire of Jehovah, because her sins have reached unto heaven; but inasmuch as all nations "have drank of the wine of the wrath of her fornication," they are partakers of her plagues—having sympathized in her corruption and domination over the saints, they participate in the catastrophe that awaits her. And when her judgment comes, her plagues come in one day—death, and mourning, and famine, and fire. It is, in other words, "because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake," that the "body of the Beast is given to the burning flame," and he is "broken without hand;" and the overthrow of this Beastly government involves the overthrow of all the kingdoms of the world: for then the saints shall take the kingdom under the whole heaven, "and all dominions shall serve and obey him." "Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold broken to pieces together, and became as the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." "And this kingdom shall not be left to other people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand forever when the power spoken of in the latter part of Dan. 11 comes to its end. Michael stands up, and the great time of trouble commences This I understand to be the pouring out of the seventh Vial, when "the battle of the great day of God Almighty" is to be fought, causing a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation.

It is then that the mystery of iniquity is developed, sitting in the temple of God, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power, and signs and lying wonders that Jesus comes to destroy the man of sin by the brightness of his appearing. By the way, I would remark that the idea [illegible] by some that the expression "after the working of Satan," [illegible] the working of Satan, is [illegible] by the original. The term "after" does not have reference to time, [illegible], signifying "after" the same manner as the working of Satan.

When the final destruction of the nations [illegible] in Jer. 25, we find they all drink the same cup, as does Jerusalem, and when we turn to Is. 3, we find the cup of [illegible] was "[illegible] the destruction, the famine, and the sword." Thus it was fulfilled in relation to Jerusalem, and thus doubtless it will be fulfilled in relation to all the wicked nations of the earth.

I understand the gathering of the nations under the sixth Vial to be identical with the gathering of the nations to the valley of Jehoshaphat, (Joel 3.) The term "Jehoshaphat" means, "God will judge," or "God's judgment." The valley of decision (concision, marg.) I understand as referring to the same thing.—I take all these terms as representing the condition into which the governments of earth are brought at the coming of the Lord. It is a state of universal commotion—an outbursting of all the elements of wrath—particularly the hatred of the nations to the rule of the Roman Beast, involving doubtless a hatred and contempt of all sovereign authority, and a repugnance to all control of the civil as well as religious powers that be. This of course will fill the world with anarchy and confusion, and horror. The hostility of the masses to all governmental authority was never so fully developed in the earth as at the present moment; and when the jam breaks, wo to him that is in the way of the floating timber. Wo-be-tide the legitimate authorities and aristocratic classes. The people will rise in their majesty, and sweeping away papal domination, priestcraft and tyranny of every kind, will assert their right to govern themselves; and thus fill the world with popular outbreaks and civil war.

To show that the hatred of the harlot has commenced, I quote the following:

The Universal Jubilee.—The Pope's Encyclical Letter.—The Immaculate Conception.

The Pope has issued an encyclical letter, in which he proclaims a three months indulgence, or general jubilee, to the faithful throughout the world, in consequence of the evils that are afflicting Christendom; and his Holiness calls upon the hierarchy to stir up the clergy to exhort their flocks, to pray fervently to Heaven to put an end to war, pestilence and famine, and other arrows of the Divine wrath. The dire evils which the Pope seeks to avert are thus enumerated:

In glancing with the solicitude and the sentiments of our apostolic charity over the whole Catholic world, we can hardly express, venerable brethren, with what profound sorrow we are penetrated, when we see Christian and civilized society troubled on all sides in a lamentable manner, tormented, and as it were oppressed, by the saddest calamities. You are not ignorant of the fact that Christian nations are at this moment afflicted and disorganized by civil wars, by intestine feuds, by Protestant maladies, by fearful earthquakes, and by other direful calamities.—But what is most to be deplored is, that among so many misfortunes and dire catastrophes to be bewailed, the children of darkness, who in their generation are wiser than the children of light, endeavor more and more, by every kind of devilish artifice, by machinations and conspiracies, to pursue a bitter war against the Catholic church and its salutary doctrine; to overthrow and to ruin all legitimate authority; to pervert and corrupt everywhere the minds and the hearts of men; to propagate in all places the deadly poison of indifferentism and incredulity; to confound all laws divine and human; to create and foster quarrels, discords, revolts and impious revolutions, stopping at no crime, or no evil doing, and not shrinking from any attempt to annihilate—if it were possible—our holy religion, and even to utterly destroy all human society.

The Paris correspondent of the Tribune, in commenting on the Pope's circular, says:

"The Pope has taken religious measures to bring about peace between Christian princes; to appease the spirit of revolt; and to remove the scourges of the cholera and famine. They are to go into effect in the form of a jubilee, sometime in October or November."

According to Joel 3, the proclamation goes forth to prepare war, and the nations gather into the valley of judgment, or Armageddon; and thither God causes his "mighty ones," (the angels which are greater in power and might), "to come down," and the final destruction begins.

I therefore understand that under the sixth Vial the gathering of belligerent powers for war takes place; but not the battle of the great day: for that day begins when the seventh Angel pours out his Vial into the air.

Next, "There came a great voice out of the temple from the throne, saying, it is done." Barnes, in speaking of the temple (ch. 11: 19), suggests the idea that this portion of Rev. refers to "the internal affairs of the Church, or the Church itself—for of this the temple was the proper emblem." This voice therefore may be fulfilled by a movement in the Church; and further, as it comes from the throne, this expression may indicate that it will be an action of the virgins inspired and sustained by Him who is the Head of the Church. The expression, "It is done," may mean as is usually understood, that the work of grace is completed, or rather, as the gathering of the nations for the final conflict is the subject of discourse, it seems to me to have reference to the fact, that the nations of the earth are now in that condition in which they are fully prepared for the judgment scene—the gathering has been affected, and as Barnes says, "that destruction was so certain, that it might be spoken of as actually accomplished." So that, taking the sense either way, it is virtually the same thing, whether we regard it as having reference to the finishing of the work on the part of God and His children for the salvation of men, or to the fact that the world is now given up to destruction, i. e. the time has now arrived for mercy to be withdrawn from the earth, and that particular series of calamities (such as war, pestilence, and famine) to begin, which will sweep the earth of rebellious spirits, and prepare the way for the spirits of just men made perfect to inherit the kingdom of God. This is what I understand to be "the battle," war, or controversy, which God will have with the nations of the earth. May the Lord prepare us to stand in that day before the son of man in his glory.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Brother Merriam:—Please publish he notice of our Meeting entire, with the following—the notice is the voice of the Church at Kirk street, and the responsibility I agreed to take, was alone between yourself and the Publishing Committee.

Ira Thompson,
Committee for the Church.

Lowell, Sept. 11, 1854.

We would just say to the faithful watchmen who are proclaiming the speedy coming of the Lord, and who love his appearing, that we still, by the blessing of God, continue our meeting at the Kirk Street Chapel, at the old place; and although we have had many storms to face in these last days, yet God in mercy has blessed us with his protecting care, and we still live, a band of believers in the Second Advent of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ at hand. Believing that all the signs of his coming, as is recorded by his apostles in Matthew xxiv. and Mark xiii. and Luke xxi. are in the past, and that we are now witnessing the signs of the end of the world; and as we now see "upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, therefore we would say to our Brn. scattered abroad, that this is a free Advent, and time meeting, where all God's Watchmen can preach the present truth, according as they understand it, without opposition, whether they are established in the theory, the present arrangement of the Lord's coming this year, 1854, as advocated by many of our Brn., or whether they believe from the signs, and the events now transpiring, that it may come this year, and that it is near, even at the doors. We acknowledge no creeds but the Bible, and we further profess to be free from all sectarianism, and we have no desire to sit in the temple of God, as the POPE, nor to assume any right to control the consciences of men; but we remember that to our own Master we must stand or fall for ourselves. Therefore we extend a hearty welcome to all the faithful Watchmen, who love our Lord Jesus Christ and his appearing, to the Chapel on Kirk St., Lowell, to preach the word of life to this branch of the Church of Christ, that we may have meat in due season, and be prepared for the approaching crisis.

"And the foolish, said unto the wise, give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out." Matt. 25: 8. The inquiry often arises, when was this question proposed? Thinking that many might desire light on this subject, I have attempted to search out the truth from the word of God: praying that his spirit would lead me into all truth. I take the ground, that the question is still in the future. My reasons are: first we can find no persons now, who say they need oil. If we are right in our view, then the foolish virgins are those who went forth with us in "'44," but now oppose the time. Do this class ask for oil? talk with them; what do they say?—They say to the time Brn. you are the foolish virgins; your time will fail, and your oil will all be gone; but we have enough to last till he comes. Do those who set the time ask for oil? We think not. Let our enemies be judges: they say, you have only a little oil, enough to last till your time runs out. Thanks be to God, that is all we shall need: because "he will surely come and wil not tarry." We cannot be the foolish; for they have no oil. Secondly, it is future, because the wise virgins cannot be found. We have just shown that each class calls the other foolish; where then are the wise? Let us see if the word gives us any light on this point; because if the wise cannot be found, then the foolish cannot ask them for oil. We will turn to Malachi 3: 18.—It reads thus: "Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked." Then shall who return? Walker defines the term "to come back."

Then those who return must first have gone away. Where did they go from?—We answer, from the time, and from those who believe in time. Turn to Rev. 3: 9. "Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of satan, which say they are Jews and are not, but do lie: behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee." Two questions now arise. First, what caused the foolish to feel their need of oil?—Secondly, how did they learn where to find the wise? They saw something which led them to think the time people were right, and that the Lord was coming at their time. They walk by sight, having cast off their first faith. They watch the course of the nations; their faith is pinned to that, and not to the word of God. What do they see transpire which causes this sudden change? It is "the fall of Babylon". This event will alarm the world.—It being a fulfilment of scripture, as interpreted by the wise, it will cause a fearful looking for of judgment: hence the Revelator brings to view certain persons as standing afar off, for fear of her torment, (Rev. 18: 10) The five virgins, having had great light on the prophecies, will see in this event a sure precursor of probation's end. They will then see their error, and seek to retrieve it when too late They will desire to understand and believe the time; and they will ask aid from the wise; but it will be too late. This class will not be able to aid them; they will be coming up to the hour of temptation; they will be absorbed in it, and they will need all their oil, which is faith in God to carry them through; and they will need all their time to set their own hearts in order.

How did they find the wise? Turn again to Rev. 14: 12. We read there these words: "Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Here we find a class that obey God. Turn again to the 9th verse, same chapter; we read, "and the third angel followed them, saying, with a loud voice, if any man worship the Beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God," &c. Here we find a warning against the worship of the Beast, and a dreadful penalty for transgression. If, then, we can find the chronology of this warning to agree with our time, it behoves us to heed it, in order that we may escape. We think every one, by carefully examining its connection, as well as the other text which I have quoted; will see that they apply here

Oh, that God may help us to see to it, that we have oil before it is too late. Finally, Brn. in concluding these broken thoughts, let me say to you, be faithful; trust in God; cling fast to his word; love him with all the heart, obey him in all things, and he will carry you safely through into the kingdom this year. Yes, glory be to God, on the seventh month our great high priest will come out of the holiest of all, and bless the waiting congregation. Oh how I long to be there. Yours, in the blessed hope.

Thos. C. Campbell.
Concord, N. H., Aug, 11, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—A word to the brethren scattered abroad, who would no doubt be glad to know about our health, and where we are.—We left West Winsted, Sept. 4th, and arrived at Laport Co. on the 6th, having been on board the cars two nights and almost three days; were very much fatigued with the journey, but soon found a place to rest at Sister Clark's; were glad to be with our Brethren again, that we left without any one to give them light on the subject of the Lord's soon coming. Our health soon began to improve, and on the 10th we met with our Brethren at Union Mills.

One discourse was delivered showing the evidence of our Lord's coming this year. The evidence given was so conclusive it aroused the Church to action. About an hour was afterward spent in conference, and one poor sinner confessed his faith in the coming of the Lord this year, and was baptized. Last Sunday, the 17th, we met with the brethren at our place, and after listening to our discourse and a conference of prayer and exhortation, we repaired to the water side, and one, who had been some time investigating the subject of our Lord's coming, was buried in likeness of His death.

Our health is still improving, for which we praise the Lord. We expect to start this week for Jo Davis Co., Ill., to meet Brother Wm. Sheldon, having heard he was preaching the faith of Jesus' coming [illegible] this year.

According to the best light that shines from God's word, we have but a short time to work; therefore we have a desire to do all we can in this western field to wake up the slumbering virgins. O what a blessed hope is ours! A few weeks or months, and the long-looked-for lion of the tribe of Judah will come; his voice will awake the dead, and our mortal bodies will be changed for the world to come.

In regard to the paper, dear Brother, one whole week has passed, and we have had no Crisis. The reason, I understand, is the want of means at the Office. It is well known to us that this paper has been the means of waking up many of the slumbering virgins. Yes; in hundreds of places where our brethren have never traveled; and it is the only means that many have of hearing the cry, and obtaining meat in due season. When it is withheld from us one week, no one can tell how much we miss it. We go to the Office, and go away disappointed. O Brother, if you only knew how much we need it, especially in a land where there are but few to proclaim the time, you would not withhold it from us.

Now, Brethren and Sisters, shall we have the paper every week? We think some will say yes; our prayer is that those that have this world's goods, will hold on to it no longer, but let it go to the Office, and Bro. Merriam, by the help of the Lord, will send us the paper, and our hearts will be made glad.

So farewell till the Lord comes.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield.
Bigelow's Mills, Ind., Sept. 19th, '54.

Broter Merriam:—I can say in sincerity, that I never felt a more implicit trust in the truth of the Bible, than at the present time, and in no portion of holy writ have I a sincerer confidence, than in the visions of Daniel; and at the end of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days, prophetic time, that same Jesus will come down the shining pathway of heaven, and his Angels gather his elect, and I think I as fully realize that but one class of character will be selected. And when I consider the straightness of the way, I am often led to exclaim, who are sufficient for these times? By observation I am led to believe that I have, in the past, been far too sanguine respecting the numbers that will return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. I am pressed to the conclusion that the little Advent Band will have to be sifted again and again, and God knows how many will be left. The sight of my eyes effects my heart, while I see some are being drawn away from the sympathy of the Gospel, conferring and seeking the few honors they can glean among the Adventists. It is true, that if they are so disposed they can find some; for God has not only chosen the weak, the poor, the illiterate, and the despised, but some Pauls, some that would and have graced the brightest circles of talent and refinement. But O how can we embrace shadows, when such living realities are about to burst upon us? Dear brother, or sister, suffer the word of exhortation; and as you value the price of your redemption, or the salvation of others, beware how you lavish your encomiums on any of God's children, even if they are doing well. Thank God and take courage, but do not tempt them to be lifted up, when they are wearing the beautiful garment of humility, which God loves. It certainly is duty sometimes to encourage the timid and doubting, and assure them that their gifts are appreciated. But be careful. Some will undoubtedly be lost by the fond injudicious conduct of others; and if many more are not, it is because their hearts are well established by grace. Again: I find harsh and unseasonable reproofs. They crush and dishearten—a word to discourage is wrong; but reprove cautiously, and be sure they have intentionally done wrong; and then do it mildly, but firmly and faithfully, and, if possible, privately. Perhaps I should not speak of those things, if I did not see we were almost to the judgment, where we must stand without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing. I do rejoice that Zion will be purified, made white, and tried. The excellent of the earth will be found in her; she will represent the one altogether lovely; and when I find, as I often do, a pilgrim indeed, whether black or white, learned or unlearned, to me they are precious. Yes, the heart that is meek and beautified with salvation, shines in its own native loveliness, and even simplicity, and needs no foreign ornament, or borrowed dress. I know I love refinement, and elegance, and beauty, but I love piety better. O, I long to partake, in its fulness, all the graces which can never on earth be complete, tho' perfect in love, in motive, to err is human, and we shall find that human weakness will attend us quite through. Well, toil on, poor weary pilgrim, we are passing away from earth, like a midsummer's day, but nearing home, praise God. "O my longing heart, my longing heart is there." Patience clips my wings but a little longer, and my anchor drops within the vale. May God help us to press on, endure to the end, and be saved when Jesus comes in 1854.

Vesta N. Cudworth.
Charlemont, Mass., Sept. 21.

Beloved Pilgrims in the Lord:—To the praise of God I am still on the track of truth, bound to Mount Zion, the city of the living God, feeling that nothing shall be able to separate me from the love of God which I have in Christ Jesus, my Lord. O praise the Lord forever, for the present truth that is now illuminating our pathway in this dark and cloudy day. We truly have the light which shines in a dark place, by which we can walk until the day dawns, and the day star arises in our hearts, which I believe with all my heart will be realized within a few short weeks. I praise the good Lord in the language of my full heart, when I see by the word of the Lord, we are almost within hailing distance of the promised land of rest, for which the weary, way-worn pilgrims have so long sighed. Well may we rejoice, for our King is coming to release and bless us in the seventh month, according to the types. And it makesme rejoice with joy inexpressible and full of glory. With Caleb and Joshua I can say, we are well able to go up and possess the goodly land. O, glory at the thought of going to God! All my soul is exulting where joys are eternal.

O ye faint-hearted and fearful, fear not; for your God will come. He will come and save you this year. O ye desponding and lonely pilgrims, cheer up: "the day breaks o'er thee." Thine afflictions and tears are almost ended, praise the Lord, when you will receive an eternal weight of glory with all who come up "out of great tribulation, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." O, I do mean to number one in the triumphant throng, and help swell the hallelujahs around God's dazzling throne! O come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly, is the prayer of my heart. Your sister in the love of the truth, expecting to sing the song of victory this year, praise the Lord forever.

L. W. Bragg.
Worcester, Sept. 16, 1854.

Dear Brother Merriam:—It is with pleasure that I take my pen in hand to inform you, and the readers of the Crisis, that I am convinced that within a few weeks, the Savior will come in the clouds of heaven.

I deeply regret my past strong stand against the time question, both in my preaching and writing; but it was, in part, in consequence of my honest (yet incorrect) views of the "King of the North," which I claimed to be Russia.

This letter is not written for the purpose of proving that Russia is not the Northern power spoken of by Daniel, (as I intend to prove this in another article;) but for the express purpose of confessing my faith in the Savior's SPEEDY coming. O, I rejoice that Jesus is so soon to gather the saints, and I shall boldly proclaim it to the world; but my heart is pained within me, when I call to mind my past opposition! Ministers and people, be admonished to desist from a similar course. More anon, D. V.

Buchanan, Mich., Sept. 7th, 1854.

Orrington, Sept. 22, '54.

Brother Merriam:—I would just say through the Crisis, that I have believed with all my heart that the Lord would come at some point in this year; but now believe it will be on the 10th day of the seventh month of 1854, when the High Priest will come out of the holy place which is heaven itself, and bless those that have waited and come to the 1335 days, which will end this year. I believe that the 2300 day vision commenced in the seventh month 447 B. C., and "at the time appointed, the end shall be," which is the end of the 2300 days. Daniel was to go his way till the end be, and stand in his lot at the end of the days. Most of the Brethren in this region are looking with much interest to the seventh month this fall; and I believe, with all my heart, "Millerism" ends here. Yes; "He that is to come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by his faith." May the Lord help us all so to live, that when he comes we can say, "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him; he will save us."

Yours, looking for deliverance between this and the second day of November next.

William Chapin.

Notices.

We have received several hundred tracts of different kinds from Bro. Hart, viz: the Laodicean Church or the Judgment Age, by S. S. Brewer; an Exposition on the Book with Seven Seals, by S. S. Brewer; the Battle of the Great Day, by C. N. Sargent; The Traditions of the Present Age Exposed, time revealed, &c. Persons desiring any of the above works will be supplied at a low price.

We have a few copies of the last edition of the Great Crisis in Human affairs which in view of the shortness of time, we will sell at a very low price. Our price has formerly been 33cts but will sell what remain for 20 cts. per copy.—Single copies can be sent by mail to any part of the United States, postage prepaid is only 11 cents.

Our tracts of Investigation by F. H. Berick, are all gone.

The New Hymn Book called the Jubilee Harp, can be had by applying to Oliver Hart, Concord, N. H., or to J. French, Lowell, Mass. Price 15 cents wholesale; 20 cents retail.

Meat in due Season.

1. It was giving meat in due season, when Paul in his time wrote to his Thessalonian brethren, "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day cannot come, except there come a falling away first and that man of sin be revealed—the son of perdition."

2. It was giving meat in due season, when Luther in his time as a faithful watchman of Zion informed the humble followers of Jesus who lived after the falling away (under Constantine), and after the revelation of the man of sin, (Pope of Rome,) that that day cannot come till after the termination of about 300 from years from thatpoint.

3. It was giving meat in due season, when Wesley in his time told his contemporary believers in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, that in a little while that day will be at hand and all things be fulfilled.

4. It was giving meat in due season, when Br. Miller, (blessed be his name,) stirred up the church of God, in causing her to go forth to meet the Bridegroom; and it was to fulfill Scripture that the BRIDE should be disappointed, the BRIDEGROOM tarrying; and it is now to fulfill all Scripture that the sleeping, slumbering Church should be aroused by the True Watchman "giving meat in due season." "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

Dear Brethren and Sisters, Scripture never failed to have its fulfilment, to the very letter; what reason then, I say, to admit the least doubt that our Jesus and Redeemer, whose words, as given and made known to us by his holy prophets, never failed to be fulfilled from the time of the creation of the world to this very day, should now fail to fulfill them, in regard to those few days or months in the future?

Genuine faith in God, is to believe His word in regard to the future, as well as to believe it, in regard to the past; and forget not that the nearer we approach the day of the Lord, the greater the trial of faith will be, in as much as not by observation but by faith only we shall be enabled to discern even the definite time of his coming. May our prayer—answering God, give us sufficient grace to endure unto the end.

In just so much as it was the duty of faithful watchmen to preach in times past, the day of the Lord; 1st., afar off, 2d., nearer, 3d., in a little while, 4th, at the door; so when according to the Scriptures, all mysteries shall be finished, and all the books unsealed, to be read and understood by the Church at the time of the end, nothing short of the preaching of definite time, may safely be considered as "giving meat in due season."

Bear the burden of the day, my brethren, and shrink not at the sneers and scoffs of the professors of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, without and within camp, which necessarily will follow you, if you advocate the doctrine of "definite time."

To preach the day of the Lord is the preaching of ages past, indefinitely.

To live for present truth, to suffer with Christ in the year 1854 A. D., is to preach, according to the best of my conviction, the termination of all prophetic periods, with the termination of the Jewish year 1854.

I shall endeavor to prove this my position in presenting to the public for earnest examination and consideration in a few days from hence, a chronological chart founded solely on the word and sign of our Saviour, Matt. xxiv. 29.

We are sorry to say that some notices must be defined till next weeek, for want of room.

Three Days Later from Europe.

The steamer America arrived at Halifax Sept. 28th, from Liverpool 16th, P. M.

Austria and Prussia.—The Western powers have expressed themselves satisfied with Austria's resolve to remain for the present in armed neutrality.

The War.—The Czar has directed his General-in-Chief, to pass the Pruth with his troops from strategical motives, and Russia will keep on the defensive.

The expedition to the Crimea has sailed. It was the largest naval force ever concentrated, consisting of 700 ships, carrying at once 70,000 men, with horses, guns, pontoons, tents, provisions, and all the material of war. The fleet is manned by 25,000 seamen, and carries 3000 cannon. The land force comprises 25,000 English soldiers, 35,000 French, 10,000 Egyptians, 5000 Tuniseans, and 5000 other Turkish soldiers. On the 3d, the greater part of the English squadron, with the British troops on board, and on the 5th, Marshal St. Arnaud and the Turkish part of the force, left Varna, to join the expedition at Fidonse or Serpent Island, off the mouth of the Danube. Not much is known of the Russian preparations.

A new levy of ten men in every thousand throughout the western part of the Empire has been made.

The Baltic.—There is a report that the Baltic fleet is ordered to return to England, which causes apprehension that the Russian fleet will escape from the Baltic and commit depredations upon commerce in the open sea. There is also a rumor that Sir Charles Napier wishes to resign.

The Danube.—The Russians have evacuated Brailon and Galata, consequently the navigation of the Danube is free. On the 4th Gen. Luders removed his head quarters from Galata to Reni. Before leaving he blew up the fortifications and strand batteries.

It is reported that the Turks entered Faksolamy on the 6th.

Count Coronini, at the head of 4000 Austrians, entered Bucharest, and was formally received by Omar Pasha with a Turkish division and a detachment of Wallachian militia.

The London Daily News reports that there are already disagreements between Omar Pasha and the Austrian commanders.

Asia.—The Russian army corps recently under Prince Bebuterff against the Turks on the frontier of Georgia, has made a sudden and unexpected retrograde movement upon Gumri.—The Turks found the Russian camp deserted, and ten guns spiked. It is not known whether the retreat was caused by the success of Schamyl with a large force near Tiflis, or by the report of the allied movements in the Black Sea.

The rupture between Persia and the Ottoman Porte is complete.

Czar's Reply.—The answer of Russia has been officially notified by Austria to the representatives of the Western powers. The substance of which is that Russia expresses surprise that Austria should have transmitted such proposals to St. Petersburg, unaccompanied by any concession on the part of the Western powers; she therefore rejects them. The Czar infinitely regrets that he has been unable to accept the last overtures made by Austria. He considers that he has made every concession compatible with the honor of Russia.

Of the preparations of the Russians, the London Times of the 12th says:

"There can be but little doubt, in spite of his vain glorious bulletins, that we begin to press the Czar hard, and his discomfiture is manifesting itself in many ways. A proclamation, it is said, has been issued by a Russian General to the inhabitants of Odessa, commanding them, in case the allied forces should attempt the capture of their city, to reduce it to ashes and to retire to a town in the interior.

By way of giving effect to the injunction, it is in the same edict expressly declared that any persons remaining behind or making any attempt to extinguish the flames will do so at their proper peril. The purport of this order, in fact, is to make the utter destruction of this important and populous emporium compulsory upon its own inhabitants, who are directed to set fire to their dwellings and consign their property to ruin under threats of all the punishments with which disobedience can be visited by a government like that of Russia. If this announcement is true—and we have no reason to discredit it—the annals of modern warfare may be searched in vain for a proceeding so indicative of barbarism, ferocity and folly."

FIENDISH RELICS.—There is in Venice a chamber in which you may see the engines which have been invented by the earthly devilry for the persecution of truth. It must resemble the private inquisition in which that diabolical amateur, Cardinal Caraffa, found the delectation of his soul. The rack, the horse, the boot, the cord, the wheel, the strangling chair, screws for thumbs and arms, machines to crush, or compress, or dislocate, or stretch the human frame, are collected, as ghastly memorials of those regretted days when Europe gave her idolatry to Rome. There are bottles and vessels once full of strange and subtle, slow or rapid poisons; scent boxes which conceal knives, to leap out and gash the woman's cheek who used them; jewel cases, from which long sharp needles darted forth, or a pungent detonating powder exploded to blind her who bent over to admire the contents. There are necklaces made to contract and strangle the wearer; bracelets to lacerate the arm; helmets, gauntlets, breast-plates—all forms of fiendish ingenuity—the relics of the time when sunken-eyed, shaven-crowned families of the holy office could gloat over the sudden horror and agony of some young girl, whose snowy form they extended and racked, to conquer her modesty, her piety, or her virtue, or some faithful martyr, refusing to sanction the tyranny of a corrupted church.—Life of Turquato Tasso: Biographical Magazine.

A VISIT TO KOSSUTH.—A writer in The Independent thus describes a recent visit to the great Hungarian revolutionist:

"Of America he says, that he has not the slightest expectation of her ever lifting a finger for the liberal cause in Europe; and as for England, they had no hope of her. They were determined now, in Hungary and Italy, to fight their own battles.

"He has evidently constant communication with Hungary, and knows the tone of the people. It is plain the general feeling is not materially different from what it was in 1851. The people look with unchanging purpose to deliverance. A silent, sullen determination has spread, which grows deeper with time and more intense under the new burdens and shame of Austrian tyranny.

"The feeling with Kossuth and all is, that if Austria now sides decidedly with the western powers, as she seems likely to do, the Czar, driven to the wall, would use any and every means to meet his adversaries, even to the arousing a revolution in Italy or Hungary. The opinion is that his money has already been employed in Spain, in order to call away the attention of the French Government to matters nearer home. We have conversed with Louis Blanc and others, and we do not believe there is a French Liberal who would or could accept aid from the Emperor of Russia. But of course the Italians or Hungarians feel differently; for, as Kossuth says, the object of the French is to change their own internal form of Government, in which they need no outside assistance; of the others, to throw off a foreign tyranny, for which any aid would be acceptable. Kossuth, as all must do, recognizes the exceeding acuteness of the Austrian diplomacy, as well as the narrowness and blindness of the English, by which Austria has almost rescued herself from the most dangerous position in which a government ever was placed, and has, at the same time, never benefited her unnatural allies, but steadily advanced her own interests

"The whole conversation showed that he was steadily at work for his cause, and that his hopes are strong for ultimate success. The strong determination is reached, that henceforth Hungary must depend on herself; and her sons, like brave men, must do their best, and leave the result to God"

ANOTHER RIOT PROVOKED BY CATHOLICS.—The Cincinnati Gazette of Sept. 26th, gives the particulars of a riot on the preceding Sunday, in that city. It was occasioned by the attempts of the Germans, (Catholics doubtless) to prevent the Presbyterians from opening a Sabbath School, near the White Mills, in the 12th Ward. The second Sunday after the school was opened, a party of Germans waited on the managers of it, and requested that it might be discontinued. This not being done, on the next Saturday night the school room was entered, the books were torn to pieces, and the furniture broken up and thrown into the streets. Nothing daunted, the Trustees procured another room and fitted it up. But the Germans swore its destruction if the school was opened in it, and the death of the parties who should make the attempt. To avoid a riot, the trustees did not open the room. In the meantime, the story had got circulation and produced great excitement, and by eight o'clock in the evening hundreds were assembled upon the Harrison road ready for a fight. Soon an attack was made on some German houses, one of which was completely riddled. This brought on a general fight, in which clubs, stones and pistols were freely used, and a scene of the utmost confusion produced—women and children running in every direction, screaming, while the men were fighting like madmen. After three men had been shot down and a number of others more or less seriously injured, the Germans retreated. The other party then attacked the Western Avenue House, broke in the windows and doors, threw the furniture into the road, and then dispersed. The Police all this time were non inventus.—Boston Traveller.

FURTHER OUTRAGES—A WOMAN AND THREE MEN WOUNDED.—We regret to state that the outrages which have disgraced our city for the last week, and which we had hoped were forever at an end, were renewed last night under circumstances of still greater atrocity, if possible, than has ever heretofore characterised them. Between 9 and 10 o'clock, as Mr. Cooper, a member of the Board of Assistant Aldermen, was sitting on the balcony of his house in Suzette street, between Tchoupitoulas and St Thomas streets, in company with his wife, and Mr. Adams and his wife, a party of men came along, and without a word being spoken, one of them fired a pistol into the balcony, the ball striking Mrs. Adams in the arm, the blood from which spirted over Mr. Cooper, who was sitting next to her. This gentleman immediately gave the alarm, and cried "watch!" as loud as he could. The watchman from the corner above ran towards him, and the assassins started up, meeting the watchman and passing him. Before the thing could be explained, the murderous scoundrels passed out of sight

But the outrages of the night did not stop here. Sergeant Thomas, of the First Division police, reports that at 10 o clock he found a man named Michael Hyde, at the corner of Magazine and Girod streets, with a terrible gash in the abdomen, inflicted by some parties unknown.

About the same time, a man named Downey was found on the corner of Tchoupitoulas and Girod streets, badly cut in the head and stabbed in the right side of the abdomen. These men were doubtless assaulted by the same party. Both were sent to the Charity Hospital.

We also heard of a Frenchman having been stabbed on Gravier street. Our informant told us that the wounded man had been carried off by his friends, and that no one appeared to know the assassins.

About 10 o'clock, Sergeant Kearney, of the First District police, having occasion to visit the upper station on Robin street, mounted a horse, and as he passed the Annunciation Market he was fired upon by a party of men concealed in the upper end of the market; but fortunately neither he nor his horse were hurt, and the latter, frightened by the report, rapidly bore him away

We make no comment on the above mentioned transactions. The utter powerlessness of the police has been shown, and the only remedy lies with the citizens of New Orleans. Will they act, and at once?—New Orleans Picayune, Sept 23d.

The last accounts from New Orleans were that quiet had been restored, and that the Mayor had sworn in a large special police force to act in the event of any further outbreak ☞ Extract from a London Correspondent of the Boston Traveller.

In all negotiations, hitherto, the natural views of Austria have been most deeply interested in the South and East—those of Prussia in the North and West. In pursuance of these interests, the object has been to acquire such an influence in the minor German States, as would incline them to one side or the other. The Bund has been consulted, cajoled, intrigued with, bribed and threatened; and the Bund has throughout entertained the idea of acting for herself, without being seduced into war either to the right or the left. But as things have gone on, absolute neutralities have become more and more difficult, and it is all but certain that the Austrian policy has prevailed. Not only have Hanover, Baden, Hesse Cassel, and Hesse Darmstadt approved of the Southern course, but Brunswick is understood to have adhered, and the change of King in Saxony is said to have thrown the weight of that kingdom, previously so fluctuating, into the same scale. A glance at the map will show the importance of these moves; and it is no less important to believe that Bavaria, implicated in Prussian relations and warmly courted by Russia, must, whatever the inclination of her government may be, finally coalesce with Austria. And mentioning "inclinations," either of courts or people, it is worthy of remark that there is not throughout Germany any love of England to be discovered. On the contrary, there is extreme jealousy, and the wonder of all wonders, and occasion of infinite hatred is the cordial, and, to the Germans, inexplicable union between England and France. In these feelings lie the germs of future action; and yet they have scarcely attracted the least public notice. But already may be anticipated their effect when it is observed to operate so far upon the reluctant and trimming government of Prussia as to induce, at the latest moment, a nearer approach toward the Austrian alliance and common cause. There is no doubt that the imperial and imperious rejection of the four bases on which to treat for peace, by the Czar, has forced his brother-in-law into this aspect; for it places him in the dilemma of giving up his Russian predilections, or risking the resistance of his subjects, backed by the opinion of the German Empire.

The mortality from cholera last week, in London, amounted to 1927, more than doubling the usual weekly average. The total of deaths within the seven weeks is above 4,000.

The glorious harvest weather continues without interruption, and the most productive crop grown in England, for a number of years, has been fast carried, so that nearly the whole may now be pronounced safe against even the worst change of season, were it to happen—of which there is no indication. During many days the heat has been tropical, and Death too has been reaping a copious harvest from the scythe of cholera. This inexplicable malady appears to be scattered all over the world, as if it might be the beginning of a fate destined to grow up and consume the human race, and prepare the earth for a new and superior creation. For there is "A Providence that shapes our ends, Rough hew them as we will."

and the universality of this destroyer suggests matter for serious reflection. In limited localities in the metropolis it has broken out with fearful mortality; and people ascribe these exceptionable cases to sewers, and sink-traps, and uncleanness, and many other causes, which do probably contribute to the fatality. But they do not account for it in other quarters. They do not account for it in a ship at sea, struck all at once as if by a simoom, and its crew decimated within eight and forty hours. They do not account for it in clean and healthy situations.

They do not account for it in a moiety of the places where its visitations are desolating, under circumstances widely different to each other. And in this country there appears to be quite a general pre-disposition to the disease, that brings out [illegible] which needs only the mental or physical touch, in addition, to convert the slight affection into irremediable death within the space of a few short hours. If we may judge from the intelligence received from foreign countries, the same condition is spread all abroad. In France the greatest ravages have been experienced at Marseilles, but there is no part free.

The same applies to Italy, where Naples has been the most severely struck. After the capture of Bomarsund, in a cold climate, several hundreds of French soldiers perished by Asiatic cholera. No wonder its horrors have appalled the numerous armies in the East and laid thousands of gallant fellows in their graves. It is reported to be declining there; but the living are almost as much to be pitied as the dead.

It is indeed melancholy to read of noble regiments, composed of men in the prime of life, unable through sickness to march beyond a very few miles—two or ten;—what a reduction of armed strength there must be when individual weakness to this extent is witnessed and confessed. War is dreadful, but pestilence is horrible. There are no triumphs to afford solace and support (poor as they may be) to human nature. (There are no shouts of victory, no blaspheming Te Deums, no exultation, no rejoicing. Blank, silent, dark and dismal is that awful route on which companionship only aggravates the distress and dismay.

What avails it that the wretched serf of Russia suffer also, and probably more; the future throughout is a miserable one, for the philosopher to lament and the Christian to condemn, aye, and even the Mahommedan to bewail.

The Duke of Cambridge and Prince Napoleon are reported hors de combat from illness, and the obituary of many British officers, which appears in the London journals after every arrival from Turkey, speaks volumes of the mortality that has prevailed in the inactive camps and barracks on the Ottoman frontiers. In America you are aware of your own afflictions.

The Saint's Farewell.

BY A. B. DRAPER.

Farewell, vain world, farewell—
You may not tempt me more;
Eternal life I will not sell,
For all your boasted store.
You've promised rest, but yielded none.
Farewell, I seek a Heavenly home.

I've found the precious pearl,
I've tasted joys to come,
I shall be satisfied,
When all the saints get home
While here, my constant prayer shall be,
Come Jesus, come and set me free!

Lord, hear thy children's cry!
Amid the wicked throng,
They raise their voices high,
And cry, "O Lord, how long"
Ee'r thou wilt come, and bid us rise
From this dark earth to yon bright skies?

Come, usher in that day,
Which ends the Pilgrim's wo;
No longer would we stay,
Where dwells our master's foe.
We long to be, where life is sure,
Where friendship, peace, and love endure.

Here on the Usurper's ground
True comfort find we none,
When will the welcome sound
Be heard, "ye saints Come Home?"
O could we hear that Heavenly voice,
How would our grateful hearts rejoice!

Lord, while we linger here,
O give us strength to bear
The ills that us surround,
And make us still thy care:
And when this state of trial's o'er,
O gather us to part no more!

Obituary.

Died in Lowell, Mass., Sept. 18, Brother Achelans Welch, aged 43 yrs. 8 mo

Dear Bro. Merriam: It is painful indeed, to announce to the church of God, that one more of its members has fallen a victim to the cruel and relentless hand of death. Bro. Welch was of feeble constitution and delicate health, and after five weeks of raging fever, he calmly and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, without a struggle or groan, and with a bright prospect of a speedy and glorious resurrection to immortal life.

Through the Providence of God, it was my privilege to be with him the last few days of his illness; and although his sufferings were extreme at times, a more perfect example of meekness, patience and resignation to the divine will, it has never been my lot to witness.

We thought him dying a number of times before the final conflict came. At such times his mind seemed to be clear and his language extremely impressive. I think he had very clear views of the near approach of the judgment. One time, when his family were weeping around his bed, he exclaimed very emphatically "probation is ended; shed no tears for me, I am safe in the rock that was cleft for me." "I have nothing to fear, but let your tears flow for yourselves; and make me an unbroken band in our Father's Kingdom. At one time he said to one of his daughters, "witness to the truth;" to another, "may the Lord [illegible] a [illegible] faithful a few days longer, and meet me again in glory."

The morning of the day he died, he said to us, "do not try to keep me here any longer, for I think it is the will of God to take me home; and I want to go and be at rest from the wicked world. Said he, "tell the children, Archelaus Welch says, not unto us, not unto [illegible] we can take care of you and the children [illegible] A little before he died, he [illegible] On being asked, when he [illegible] replied "glory [illegible] Hallelujah [illegible]" Bro. Welch [illegible] children [illegible] "sorrow not [illegible] as others that have no hope." O, my Brother, I do praise God for [illegible] the mighty Conqueror, who has the keys of death and hell. Conferences.

Bro. Merriam:—If time continue and Providence permit, there will be a Conference in Manchester, commencing Oct. 13, at evening, and held over the Sabbath, and as much longer as expedient. Bro. E. Burnham will be present. All Brn. that can attend, are heartily invited to be present. Come, one and all. Provisions made for those that cannot provide for themselves. In behalf of the Church of God.

W. C. ABBOTT.

Appointments.

By God's Grace, I will attend a meeting in the vicinity of Kimball Hill, in Groton, N. H., commencing Thursday, Oct. 5, where the Brn. may appoint. Will Bro. J. G. Smith attend?

DANIEL S. HOLT.

I will preach at Northampton Village, N. H., in the Methodist meeting House, on Sunday, 22d of Oct., at 10 o'clock, A. M., Providence permitting; and at Southampton at 10 o'clock and at 2 o'clock, and in the evening, according to the request of Bro. S. J. Eaton, where he shall appoint, the Sabbath following.

Yours truly, ELDER WYATT.

Sept. 23d, 1854

NOTICE.

If the Lord will, we will commence a meeting at Hollis, on Friday, Oct. 6th, at 7 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

JESSE PARTRIDGE,
R. R. YORK.

Saccarappa, Sept. 29, 1854.

TENT MEETING IN INDIANA.

There will be a Tent Meeting near Union Mills, Indiana, to commence Sunday, Oct. the 15th, and continue as long as thought advisable.

F. H. BERICK.

TENT MEETING AT LINCONVILLE, ME.

There will be a Tent Meeting in Linconville, Maine, near the spot where the meeting was holden some five years ago, to commence Oct. 4, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn. Couch, Cummings, Colby, Berick, and others will be in attendance.

Provision will be made for board on the ground; it is hoped, however, that all who can, will come prepared to board themselves. Let those who can, bring their Tents. Those from the West, who attend this meeting, will find good conveyance from Boston, Mass., or Portland, Me., by steamboat, and will stop at Camden, Me., some three miles from the ground, where there will be carriages to convey them to the meeting.

J. K. PARTRIDGE,
J. POPE,
GEO. L. MCKENNEY.

It was thought best at first to hold the above meeting at Whitefield, but after mature consultation, the Brethren concluded to remove it to Linconville.

THE LAST TENT MEETING.

There will be a general gathering of the saints at Exeter, N. H., commencing Friday, Oct. 6th, and continuing ten days.

As this is the last meeting of this kind ever to be held before our King comes, we invite our Brn. in this and the neighboring States, to come and worship with us; we care not from how far; for we should like to meet our Brethren from the uttermost parts of the earth, if possible, to enjoy with them one heavenly season, even before our Lord comes.

The object of the meeting will be to glorify God—to make a greater effort as we see the day approaching, to meet together, to exhort one another, and comfort each other's hearts, that our mutual faith may be strengthened, and we prepared for the great day of God.

Ample provision for boarding and lodging will be made for all, and should it be wet or cold, they will be made comfortable.

The meeting will be conducted on the free principle, that none lack; for distribution will be made to all as they have need. So, dear Brn and Srs., one and all, who can, come in and let us share and praise together; and may God grant that it may prove a preparatory step indeed for the final gathering of the saints.—The meeting may not close till our dear Saviour comes

Those that can, who are commissioned of God to give present truth, are invited to attend.

Brn, bring all the tents and bedding you can. Remember this.

Arrangements will be made with the R. R. companies for a reduction of fares.

A place of worship will be fitted up to seat comfortably from five to ten thousand persons.

For the Master's cause.

J. HEMENWAY,
J. CUMMINGS,
I. ADRIAN,
S. S. BREWER,
J. W. BRITTAN.

If time continue, and the Lord willing, I will be at Old Town, Me., Sept. 29; Bradley, Sept. 30; Greenfield, Sunday, Oct. 1st; to attend such meetings as the Brn. may appoint at said places.

R. [illegible] CLARK.

If time continues, there will be a Conference at our place in Freedom, N. H., commencing Thursday, Oct. 5th at 7 o'clock P. M., continuing over the following Sabbath. Bro. Spinney, Thompson and J. Smith are expected to be present to give the word. Come, Dear Brn., in the name of the Lord.

FREDERICK PHILBRICK.

If the Lord will, I will preach in Hallowell, Oct. 5th, eve. [illegible] Bowdoinham [illegible] Brunswick, Oct. 7th [illegible] Some one will meet me at Frankfort [illegible]

E. [illegible]

If time continues, a general meeting of all the Advent believers will be held at Fort Point [illegible] C. W., commencing Oct. 13, at 7 o'clock P. M., and holding over Sunday. A general invitation is given to all from East to West to attend this meeting. We want a general rally. Come, [illegible] Lord. Those coming by [illegible] Whitley [illegible] place. Call at the store of J. [illegible] & Co. Port Perry. [illegible]

Fort Fairfield? [illegible]

[illegible], Sept. 1, 1854.

I would say to the Brethren that they may expect me to visit and preach the word in the following places:

Bosco, Hancock Co., Oct. [illegible] and continue over Sunday.

Lebanon, St. Clair Co., Sept. [illegible] and continue till the 22d.

I hope Bro. [illegible] be present at these meetings. Brn. can write me and direct to the above places. [illegible]

[illegible], N. H., Sept. 12, 1854.

I [illegible] that I shall not be able to [illegible] appointment in that place the first Sabbath in October past, but if the Lord will, I [illegible]

Notices and Requests.

Bro. Merriam:—Having just returned home from Northern New Hampshire, I was desired by the Brethren of Bethlehem, N. H., to say to you that they have obtained a Hall permanently in that town, to hold meetings in. They wish that any preaching Brn. travelling that way, would call on Bro. [illegible] and send an appointment. By request of the Brn.

W. C. [illegible]

Boston, Sept. 26, 1854.

☞ The brethren west are very anxious to see Bro. and Sister Howell this way soon.

D. R. MANSFIELD.

At Parisville, Ohio, they are anxious to have preachers come and give them the word of Life.

NOTICE.—The believers in the coming of the Lord in 1854 hold meetings in Pleasant st. Hall, Museum Building, on Sunday, day and evening; also, on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings of each week.

In behalf of the Brn.

Manchester, N. H. W. C. ABBOTT.

Advent Brethren hold regular meetings at Lyceum Hall, in Lawrence, on Sundays, also on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings.

☞ Brn. in Lowell who believe in the coming of the Lord in '54, hold meetings every Sabbath at Merrimack Hall. Preachers from abroad will be obtained when convenient. Meetings in future on Sabbaths only.

CANAAN, Sept. 22, 1854.

In behalf of the brn. at Buffalo, N. Y., I would say through the Crisis, to any who are preaching present truth, give them an appointment if possible. They are laboring for God there. They have put up a board Tabernacle to sound the "Midnight Cry" in, that the city of Buffalo may be warned and souls saved. There is an open door and a great chance to do good in Buffalo—lend them a helping hand brn. in this time of need.

J. CUMMINGS.

PARTICULAR REQUEST.

Will Brn Berrick and Couch come into this region and hold one Conference soon? We are exceedingly anxious to have them come. I believe they will have a good hearing. "Do come over and help us." If they cannot come, will not Bro. I. Adrian, or some other able Watchman come and sound the alarm in this section once more? There is not a Watchman in all this region to tell the people when the Lord is coming.

In behalf of the Brn.,

C. L. PERCIVAL.

The place for a meeting will be the old Meeting-house in Hatley, C. E.

☞ It is requested that Bro. Edwin Burnham, or some other ministering brother capable of presenting the argument on definite time in a clear manner, would visit Lee, N. H. Should any one comply with the request he will please give notice through the Crisis.

BENJ. DURGIN.

Business Items.

Bro. S. H. Bice:—We have not got them.

Bro. J. Hyde—Shall we direct your paper to East Haverhill or North Haverhill, N. H.?

☞ Bro. E. Burnham: Bro. Adrian requests us to say that he cannot be with you until one week later, in consequence of previous engagements.

☞ Bro. A. W. Sibley: Bro. French requests us to say that your money was received.

☞ Bro. Harding—all right.

☞ Bro. Z. Campbell, we would be happy to hear from you.

We have on hand a few copies of "The Church not in Darkness," by H. L. Hastings.

My post-office address hereafter will be West Poland, Me. R. R. YORK.

☞ Notices and appointments must be written as they are expected to appear in the paper.

☞ We hope persons returning papers to have them discontinued, will be careful to give the P. O. address to which they are sent.

☞ The Lithographic Charts can be sent by mail for 10 cents, prepaid, anywhere within 300 miles. Price of the Charts, $3,00.

Agency.

Prophecy Fulfilled.

By B. P. Hildreth.

Articles have been multiplied on the fulfilment of prophecy, especially on the signs of the coming of Christ; and much light has been shed on the subject by conclusive arguments from vastly abler pens than mine; but the theme is inexhaustible, and has so filled my mind, that I thought I would add a few ideas in connection with our present circumstances, the opposition that we meet, and the absolute necessity of faith in God and His truth, to support us under the frowns and flatteries of a deceitful world.

The coming of Christ was frequently announced by Himself while on the earth, and that it will be a personal coming, we learn from Acts 1: 11. "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." And also Heb. 9: 28. "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

There were certain signs to precede His coming, some of which are contained in the 24th ch. of Matt., which were to be sure precursors of that stupendous event. Some of these prophecies were fulfilled under paganism, and Jewish persecution, as appears by their being beaten in the synagogues, but the great majority were fulfilled under papal domination.—The tribulation of the Church was "such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." This was during the existence of the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the Prophet.

But an objector says:—"all these were fulfilled on that generation, when Jerusalem was destroyed; for the Savior says, 'This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled;' and I know not of a parallel case in the Bible, where the word this, is applied to any future time." Look, then, at Ex. 12, where the passover was instituted. The Lord commanded Moses to speak to the children of Israel that they take a lamb for an house, on the 10th day of the 1st month; they should keep it shut up till the 14th of the same month, when the whole assembly of the congregation should kill it in the evening. "For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first born in the land of Egypt." Now did not the words this night refer to the night of the 14th when the passover was kept? It was thus fulfilled; and moreover there cannot be two times of trouble on the wicked that are both greater than ever have been or will be. We find one in Dan. 12: 1, which will fall on a wicked world; and we have no doubt that this in Matt. 24th is what was to come on the Church during her 1260 days of depression under anti-christ. Whatever the shortening of those days may mean, they are a subject of prophecy, and beyond all doubt were fulfilled in their season.

An exhortation comes from the blessed One—"whoso readeth, let him understand." Understand what? That the times and events of which Daniel prophesied are fulfilling in the world. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days, shall the sun be darkened, the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken." These have all had their fulfilment. "And when ye see these things, know that it is near, even at the doors."

The generation which has seen the most prominent signs of his coming, has not yet passed away. Mark says, "The Gospel must first be published among all nations;" and does not Paul affirm that the Gospel was preached to every creature under heaven, (Col. 1: 23,) even under the domination of pagan Rome? Says Matt., "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." Has this Gospel been preached in all the world? Whether this can be be ascertained to a certainty or not, we do not know; it is supposed to be so.—We know that we are living in the days of those kings represented by the toes of the image, in which the God of heaven will set up His kingdom; that we are on the verge of the great day of God Almighty, nearing the final point.

Yes, says an objector, but you will never learn where that point is by Millennial arithmetic, nor can you know till you come up to it; "for of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the Angels which are in heaven, but my Father only."

Why do you apply this verse to the day of judgment, and all the rest of the chapter to the destrucion of Jerusalem? We do not suppose that it was any part of the mission of Christ to make a revelation of the time; but we believe it is elsewhere revealed, which we should understand if our chronology was perfect.

Says another, "your time has passed, and you have made no confession that you did wrong in promulgating your views of the prophecies.

No, and we never shall; for though we were mistaken in the time of the termination of the vision, yet a great am[illegible] of truth was presented; and if w[illegible] not advanced the truth, we [illegible] heart be[illegible] should have resisted the Holy Spirit; our labors were labors of love, both to God and man; we believed that God was in the work, and we still believe it; we were honest and sincere in our belief, and had the blessing of God in our own souls, sinners were awakened, and many of them converted to God.

Says another, you may as well say that Paul did right when he peasecuted the Church; for he was 'honest and sincere, and verily thought that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth.'

Do you present this, as a parallel case? Yes.

A man that can produce nothing else, but the case of Saul of Tarsus while a murderous persecutor and fighter against God, in comparison with that of some of the meekest followers of Christ, must be hard pressed for material to maintain his opposition against them. But why descend to such low abuse?

"O, we intend no abuse: we know that we are on the very eve of millenial glory, but when we set a time for the fulfilment of prophecy, we lay our sacriligious hands on that which belongs alone to God, and boldly "Rush in, where Angels fear to tread."

Angels did not fear to look into these things, (1st Pet., 1: 12,) nor to ask, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" An Angel did not fear nor fail to tell Daniel, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." And in all the Hebrew part of the book of Daniel, the Angels are represented as taking the most lively and active interest in all that is revealed; asking repeated questions, how long? how long? as if time was one of the most engaging items of the prophecy. An Angel did not fear to lift up his hand to heaven, and swear by Him that liveth forever and ever that time shall be no longer; but in the days of the voice of the seventh Angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished.

"But Jude says an Archangel did not dare to bring a railing accusation even against Satan, and if you are sincere in your professions that you are looking for the Lord, I am truly surprised at your opposition against us. Consistency is a jewel."

We have not followed cunningly devised fables, but proclaimed according to our understanding of Scripture, some of the awful solemnities of a coming judgment; the importance of a full preparation (by repentance, faith and love,) for that dreadful day. The love of God, the slain Lamb as an expiatory sacrifice, the calls of the Gospel, and the terrors of the law have all been presented to induce sinners to flee from the wrath to come, and embrace the only hope set before them, that they might have an abundant entrance into the Kingdom. And is there any thing so very immoral in all this?

We know that our message was from God; we were not moved by a wicked power, to take up the cross,—we have had a mission to accomplish which we were shut up to, and if we had drawn back, we should have fled from God, fully convicted in our own soul of treachery against Him: and our work will not be completed till the Bridegroom comes: we shall wait patiently, if we can, continue our labor, and suffer on till the day of our deliverance, daily expecting to see Him. We shall endeavor to exercise a spirit of christian love toward all who give us any evidence that they have been born of God, whether our views of the prophecies correspond with theirs or not. We know that "love is the fulfilling of the law;" and that it is of God; moreover that God is love. His love is our example, for He sent His Son that we might not perish, "even while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." "If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen?" We are taught that love is a test of christian character, yea christianity itself. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." "If thy [b]rother tresspass against thee seven times [i]n a day, and turn again (as many times) saying I repent, thou shalt forgive him. And not till seven times (only,) but until seventy times seven." And no one, however great his claims to religion or orthodoxy may be, has ever tasted the sweets of redeeming love, but is imbued with a corresponding love to his brother. He esteems him better than himself, espouses his cause, defends him in danger, sympathizes with him in distress, and breathes something of that pure and heavenly flame, which shone with so much lustre in the life and character of the blessed One. If definite time has been the head and front of our offending, we hope our opponents will lay aside their objections (now it is passed,) and all who do love God, labor unitedly together, as the cause of truth may demand. Not rendering railing for railing, but forbearing one another in love; "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit, in a bond of peace;" and thus wait, and watch for the sign of the Son of man, who will reward every one according as his work shall be.

Says another, "The vision did not commence with the petition of Nehemiah, and there is no decree or commandment on record to him from the king; but there is one to Ezra recorded, from which the vision must have commenced; that is, the seventy weeks, which by the way, has no connection with the vision of 2300 days."

It will be seen in Neh. 2 ch., that Nehemiah asked the king to send him to Jerusalem to build it; and for timber for the gates of the palace, and for the wall of the city; and he says the king did send him, as he requested; and it is not to be supposed that the king would send captains of the army and horsemen with him, and a governor's commission, without giving him a commandment to build the city. But the materials which Ezra received consisted of silver and gold, for the purchase of beasts suitable for sacrifice, and wheat, and wine, and salt, all peculiarly adapted to restore the temple service; but not at all suitable for building the walls: and the prophecy says, "from the commandment to build Jerusalem, the streets and walls shall be built in troublous times," which Nehemiah did do; and there is no room for doubt that were our chronology accurate, the vision would be perfectly fulfilled within the first half of the Jewish year, 1855; but now, as far as human computation of time varies from an exact chronology, we must wait. The prophecy of the seventy weeks necessarily alludes, (though indirectly,) to something beyond itself, which Gabriel calls the vision; for which it performs the work of sealing up; and it would be absurd in the extreme to suppose it sealed up itself; and that it is a part of the 2300 days is proved by its being cut off from some greater number, for we find none such, but the 2300 days. I believe the midnight cry has been made, and that the next great prophetic event will be the sign of the Son of man, when the foolish virgins will discover their destitution, and cry, "give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out."

Says another:—"But the Bridegroom has not come, and the cry has ceased."

It does not necessarily follow that the Bridegroom should come while the cry is being made. The parable gives time for both parties to trim their lamps, and separate; "and while they went to buy, the Bride groom came."

True, the cry has in a measure ceased, that is, the time, and was it not thus with Jonah after his proclamation had been fully made? "So Jonah went out of the city and sat on the east side of the city; and there made him a booth, and sat down under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city." Jonah 4: 5. The Prophet believed God, though He was at first afraid to obey Him, because he knew that He was merciful, and he did not like to be called a false prophet; for though a true Prophet, he was subject to like passions as we are. The prophecy against Nineveh was conditional as to time, in all things else, positive, though the conditions do not appear in the announcement; nor does it appear that the Prophet knew positively that it was so, (though he evidently had some misgiving,) till after the time had passed; and hence, disappointment and grief ensued.

But no one will deny that Jonah's mission was from God. So I believe that Br. Miller's message was from God; the most prominent signs of Messiah's coming were then in the past, the smiter smiting his fellow was then fulfilled to the very letter. And when he and his cotemporaries took their lamps and went forth to meet the Bridegroom, they thus commenced the parable. Who does not recollect that thousands under his preaching crowded into the various churches, many of whom have since proved that they have no part nor lot in the matter, their hearts being not right in the sight of God. But, (as might be expected,) when the last great movement was made in the Church, some of these mingled with the lovers of Jesus, and while appearing to others to be trimming their lamps, might be known by the poisonous fruits they brought forth. And this class will not be expected to become awakened to a sense of their lost state, nor find out that their lamps have gone out, till some supernatural occurrence shall convict them, when it will be too late to make their peace with God, and those only who are ready, will be permitted to enter the kingdom.

Letter from Br. W. Shepherd.

Elizabeth City, N. Y., July 4, 1855.

Dear Bro. Merriam:—I send you enclosed * * as a mite to help sustain the Crisis, the contents of which, in general, I esteem very highly indeed. It truly is to me, at least, a welcome messenger, "meat in due season." I do hope that it may be continued until Jesus in glorious majesty shall appear. But sometimes I fear that it may not, (at least if the Master seemingly tarrieth much longer), knowing "that God has chosen the poor of this world." Yet, after all, it is to be hoped that there is sufficient means among the Brn. to perpetuate so excellent a medium of communication among the saints as the Crisis. And now may the good Lord prosper you, my dear Brother, in your worthy occupation—enable you, through the power of the Holy Ghost, to walk worthy of the vocation wherein you are called, being approved of God, as a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth—the Lord be with you together with the entire household of God. And now, unto Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his (Jesus) glory, to God only wise be everlasting praise and glory ascribed through Jesus Christ. Amen.

Your brother in Christ looking and longing for his coming in majesty and great glory, to give reward unto His servants, the Prophets, and as many as love Him, both small and great; and to destroy them which destroy (or corrupt) the earth. Amen.

William Shepherd.

For The Crisis.

The "midnight cry" fulfilled.

By Dr. A. Decker.

The only obstacle in the way of perfectly understanding this part of the parable, seems to be the inquiry, what are we to understand by the oil? Until we can satisfactorily settle this by the "Word," we shall never be able to appreciate, or fully understand this "parable." We believe that the Bible is as clear on this as on all other subjects, and we shall endeavor to settle this by an appeal to its sacred pages.

Heb. 11: 1. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

2 Cor. 4: 18. "While we look not at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." Thus Paul shows that divine things are only to be seen by the eye of faith, as temporal things are seen by the natural eye.

Again, "the just shall live by faith," but "without faith it is impossible to please God."

Eph. 2: 8. "For by grace are ye saved, through faith: and that not of yourselves, it (grace) is the gift of God."

Paul here shows conclusively that the only medium through which we can obtain the grace of God, or salvation, is faith. "For ye stand by faith."

Heb. 10: 35–38. "Cast not away therefore your confidence, (faith) which hath great recompence of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back my soul shall have no pleasure in him."

We think that the above quotations clearly prove, that faith is the oil of the parable.

The next question that arises, is, how can the foolish virgins consistently ask the wise for faith, or oil." I answer: that saving and intelligent faith is always based on the evidences derived from the word of the Lord.

Rom. 10: 17. "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." That is, faith comes by hearing the word of God. So that, for any one to ask for faith, is to ask for the word of God.

V. 8. "But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith which we preach." Then Paul gave faith by preaching the word. But Paul speaks of a certain class of persons thus:—

"The word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."

It is to this class, as we shall see, that the foolish virgins belong. What was to reveal the fact that the foolish virgins never had any genuine, living faith, and to cause them to confess that their lamps were gone out, and to ask the wise for oil? I answer: the trial of their faith.

1 Pet. 1: 7. "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ." v. 9. "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls."

Says Jesus, "but he that shall endure (keep his faith) unto the end, the same shall be saved." "For by faith ye stand."

Rev. 3: 18. "I counsel thee to buy of me gold, (faith) tried in the fire."

Dan. 12: 10. "Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried."

The trial always comes last, and is for the purpose of developing the two classes—those that have faith, and those that have not. As we have already quoted, Paul says, the just shall live by faith, but this is just what the foolish virgins do not possess, and this fact is made manifest when they are put to the trial; then, and not till then, are they compelled to confess their lamps have gone out, and to ask the wise for their faith, or evidence. What are we to understand by the confession, "our lamps are gone out?" Simply, all the evidence and light on the time of the coming of the Lord, that they had previously seen, had now proved a failure to them, and they are now left in profound darkness.

As cause and effect always go together, and as the effect never ceases while the cause is in operation; therefore, the rising and trimming of lamps runs parallel with the Midnight cry, and both cease together. This is not only so in the parable, but has so been fulfilled. So long as the Midnight cry has sounded, and the time of the coming of the Bridegroom been preached, so long have the Virgins continued to rise and trim their lamps.

Now let it be borne in mind, that the wise are not left in the dark at this time, but their lamps continue to burn as brilliant as ever, notwithstanding their disappointment, which, in itself, is light to them—for they see that such a disappointment and trial of faith, is necessary, in order to fulfil the remainder of the parable.—Hence the wise still claim that the movement was right; and, to them, the light shines brighter and brighter, (and will to the perfect day;) and they still believe the Bridegroom is immediately coming.—This has the effect to excite or cause the foolish virgins to ask the wise for their oil—or the evidence of their faith for thus continuing to believe, saying our lamps are gone out; that is, all the previous light or evidence on the time of the coming of the Bridegroom to them has now failed, and proved to be of human calculation. Hence their lamps are gone out. "But the wise answered, saying, not so; lest their be not enough for us and you." To give the foolish virgins oil—or faith, by giving them any additional evidence from the word of God, to prove to them the immediate coming of the Bridegroom after they had given up all the past, and confessed their lamps had gone out, would be impossible. And not only so, but for the wise to labor with such a class of persons, to give them light, would only have the effect to weaken their own faith, and bring doubt and darkness on their own minds. And we venture to say, this has been the experience of all in this matter. Hence there is a refusal on the part of the wise, for they feel concious that they can do them no good; they therefore turn from them, and thus virtually say, "go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves."

The question now arises, to whom do they go to buy? I answer, that they could not have gone to Christ; for, if they had, they, no doubt, would have obtained what they sought for. For He had not yet risen up and shut to the door.

Again: we are informed, that they did not come to Christ until after Christ had come, "and they that were ready went in and the door was shut."

Again: they could not have gone to Christ: for if they had, we should not be able to understand the language, "while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came." I think the parable shows clearly, there is a third party to which the foolish virgins go, that is distinct from both Christ, and the wise. And as light and darkness cannot go together, the foolish virgins must, therefore, [illegible] themselves from the wise, and [illegible] with the third party who sell their oil and are in equal darkness with themselves; for let it be remembered, that there is no class that has the true light—or that understands—but the wise virgins. Who this third class is to whom the foolish virgins [illegible] go to buy, we will not pretend to say, further than they are evidently a class who make merchandize of the word of God to build up organizations, &c., and who have, more or less, been engaged in a warfare against the glorious light and truth of the time of the coming of the Bridegroom. And while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came, and they that were READY, went in, and the door was shut, but NOT TILL THEN.

Dear Brn., we believe this parable has had a most perfect fulfilment, and the only thing to be looked for now is the coming of the Bridegroom. We wait patiently, and confidently, for that event; without a doubt of its soon realization.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, AUGUST 18, 1855.

Particular Notice.

We intended to have called this paper Vol. 2, No. 1; but the matter was neglected through mistake. The next No. will be called No. 2 according to our proposed arrangement.

☞ We have received a great number of letters from the poor stating their inability to contribute anything towards the paper, yet requesting us to send it to them. We hope our Brn. who have the wherewith will remember, that in giving to the poor we lend to the Lord.

It will be noticed that we have not received but a small amount for the poor, and we regret to say that it is impossible to supply the call to the full extent; but we add as many of such names to our list as our means will admit of.

Remarks on the Book of Haggai.

Vs. 1. "In the second year of Darius the king, in the sixth month, in the first day of the month, came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet unto Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, saying,

Darius, the Persian king mentioned in this verse, was not the same Darius referred to in Dan. 5: 31, who, in connection with Cyrus, overturned the empire of Babylon, as the Scripture says, "in that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom:" but the Persian monarch alluded to in Dan. 9: 1, 2, in respect to whom Daniel says:—

"In the first year of Darius, the son of Ahasuerus, of the seed of the Medes, which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans; In the first year of his reign I Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the Prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem."

In the Medo-Persian monarchy, Darius the Median was succeeded by Cyrus, Cyrus by Cambyses who is called in Scripture Ahasuerus, and Cambyses by Darius Hystaspes. It was the reign of Darius Hystaspes, and in his second year, that Daniel offered that most fervent and importunate prayer to heaven in behalf of the city he so much loved. (Dan. 9th) "The fervent effectual prayer of a righteous man availeth much." That prayer, being indited by the Holy Ghost, found a lodgment on the altar of God; it came up before Him like the odours of sweet incense, and soon the accomplishment of His heartfelt request was granted. When God's children begin to pray in earnest the work of God begins to move.

The faithful, praying soul takes hold on that arm that moves the world and help is laid on Him who is mighty to save.—When the Lord is on our side "more are they that be for us, than they that be against us." Evil counsellors stood up against the commonwealth of Israel, Princes combined to prevent the rebuilding of the city and sacred edifice of God's house, but "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision."

How vain and impotent their rage! the purpose of God will stand; and He will do all His pleasure. The time to favor Zion, yea, the set time had now come; and all the powers of earth and hell combined could not interrupt the work of God. How safe is it to trust in God, and abide under the shadow of the Almighty! "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about His people from henceforth even forever."

Zerubbabel and Joshua were among the first company that came to Jerusalem under the decree of Cyrus, in His first year, Zerubbabel officiating as Governor over the land of Judah and Joshua as high priest.

V. 2. "Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built."

It is presumed they had not inquired of the Lord, nor poured out their souls in fervent suplications to heaven, as did Daniel, in relation to the subject, when he cried; "Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake." Daniel believed doubtless that the time for the erection of the beautiful Temple was at hand; his heart was in the work; he examined the prophetic record, and found the captivity to be limited to 70 years. But the Jews who had returned to Jerusalem, through numerous afflictions and much tribulation, had become disheartened and proved faithless to the trust.

When in the economy of God's grace the time comes for the Church to advance from her present position, those who commune most with God in secret, and are most identified with His work, and devoted to His glory, feel as naturally the influence of a new developement, as the bird of passage does the autumnal blast, or the flower the genial influence of spring.—"Unto you, (Christ's disciples,) it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of heaven." Under the pressure of heavy calamities and violent persecution, the Hebrews at Jerusalem had become probably despondent and consequently inactive; they did not sufficiently trust in God, and therefore failed of that protection and blessing which otherwise they might have received. It requires a steadfast faith to stand up amid trials and discouragements, and to persevere onward through much tribulation until we reach the Kingdom of God.

Vs. 3, 4. "Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cieled houses, and this house lie waste?"

How did they ascertain it was time for them to dwell in cieled houses? O there was no difficulty in finding out the time for the advancement of their temporal affairs; "for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light;" but in respect to the honor of God, the observance of the ceremonial law, and all the ordinances of the Lord's house, it was quite another affair. They had not been so solicitous to learn the will of God, as to accomplish their own will; they had not been so ready to devote themselves to the welfare of Zion, as they were to prosecute their personal interests; the world first, and the Kingdom last, seemed to be their motto; our own dwellings are indispensable, the sanctuary of the Most High, the sacred residence of God, may be built at our leisure. On such principles they evidently acted when they ornamented their dwellings with architectural adornments, embossed their walls with beautiful figures, and sought the aggrandizement of self rather than the favor of God. Are there not many such cases in our day? There are those who seek first the vanities of earth and the accumulation of wealth, rather than the glory of God, and an entrance into His Kingdom.

V. 5. "Now therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways."

"Consider your ways." Come to a solemn pause, reflect on the course you have pursued, and learn the result of your evil practises. Says the Scripture, "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider." Serious consideration is one of the first steps towards repentance and reconciliation to God.

V. 6. "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes."

Could anything be more natural? The nation had been crushed from a position of glory to one of obscurity; they had long labored under poverty and oppression in an enemy's land. The youth who had been in Babylon, and had now arrived at the land of their fathers, were ambitious to attain to the exalted position of their fathers, and to retrieve the glory of the Hebrew nation.

How often had the younger men heard their fathers relate the dealings of God with the Jews. All the glory of Babylon doubtless faded into insignificance at the thought of their Father-land; and from their infantile moments their ears had been saluted with descriptions of Canaan's scenery, and the exhaustless stores of her mineral and agricultural wealth. The grapes of Eschol, the glory of Lebanon's cedars, the majesty of Bashan's oaks, the balmy treasures of Gilead, the unrivalled beauty of Sharon's rose, together with the luxuriance of its pasturage, the almost fadeless verdure of Carmel, the boundless resources of that fertile region in the bosom of which lay the sea of Galilee, the sunny plains of Jordan with their luscious wines and golden harvests, the terraced hills of Canaan embowered with the olive and the vine, all these things were familiar to the youth who were born in the prison house of Babylon, and constituted in their minds a sort of terrestrial paradise for which their hearts longed, and to which they were at length permitted to journey with unspeakable delight. On their arrival at this Eden home, no wonder that with all the land before them, they "sowed much", and their expectations were high of receiving an abundant increase. But what was their disappointment when they found it yielded but "little"; proverbially speaking, they ate, but their appetite was unappeased; they drank, but their thirst was insatiate; they were clothed, but were not protected from the chilling blast. This is a striking illustration of the sentiment contained in Mal: 2: 2. "If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart."

V. 7. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways."

They were now solemnly appealed to by the Prophet to consider their own ways, and the dealings of their God with them. Methinks they perceive their deplorable condition, and realize that the judgments of heaven have rested upon them, and begin to enquire, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

V. 8. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord."

Explicit directions are here given as to what is to be done, viz. to repair to Mount Lebanon and thence transport timber for the Lord's house. But will the God of heaven and earth be pleased with the erection of an earthly edifice? Can it be any honor to the Almighty to have a residence in this lower world? Yes, praise the Lord, He will take pleasure in it; nay, He will even be glorified in this work of feeble mortals! What more encouraging, comforting assurance could possibly be given to the Church, than the fact, that the Supreme Lord—the sovereign Creator—should regard with pleasure the progress of His cause among men, and that He will condescend to recognize the labors of His people as promoting the glory of His name?

V. 9. "Ye looked for much, and lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. Because of mine house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house."

Your expectations of abundant harvest have been disappointed, and even what increase you have obtained, I have, as it were, blown it away, like the rolling thing, or the thistle down before the whirlwind. Why has the tiller of the soil labored in vain? why has every thing been blasted and scathed as with the bolts of heaven? Because the ordinances of God's house had not been observed in their due order; because the beautiful Temple of God lay waste. In the second year after their return they had indeed commenced the work, but discouragement, inaction and, at length, apathy, had succeeded to the resolution and energy they had once possessed. Indeed they seem to have become so disheartened by the opposition of their enemies, that they turned their attention to their own private dwellings, and labored more for personal aggrandizement than the glory of God.

It is recorded of our Puritan Fathers, that the first building they erected after landing at Plymouth, was dedicated to the worship of God. This is an illustrious example of piety and heartfelt devotion. The first great object with them was the honor of God's name, and the ordinances of His worship. No wonder such a colony flourished as no other colony ever did. Their eye was upon the glory of God, and God's eye was upon them for good; their hands were employed in His service, His hand was stretched out for their protection; they desired to build up His cause, He exalted them to unrivaled prosperity in the affairs of their commonwealth, thus proving the Scripture maxim: "them that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed." If men would please and honor God, they must make His glory their first object and their ultimate aim. This must take the precedence of all worldly good. Every thing else must bend to that. When our Heavenly Father perceives that such is the desire of our hearts and end of our lives, that His will predominates, His cause is ever in the ascendant over the pleasures and interests of the world, the arm of His strength is underneath us—the shield of His power is all around us—with a parent's care He supplies our wants, and "no good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly."

Vs. 10, 11. "Therefore the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit. And I called for a drought upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labor of the hands."

All the elements of nature became adverse to their prosperity, and the curses recorded in Deut. 28th were, in a measure fulfilled upon them, among which were the following:—

"And thy heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron. The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee until thou be destroyed," vs. 23, 24.

But in thus dealing with rebellious subjects, be it remembered, our heavenly Father uses the rod of chastisement for our good. His design is in the highest degree benevolent, viz., to restore us from our backsliding and sinful practices to the favor of God. When Ephraim began to repent of his evil doings, the Lord said of him:—"Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still; therefore my bowels are troubled for him: I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord."

The moment we humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God; confessing the corruption of our lives and acknowledging the justice of God in our affliction, that moment God "will abundantly pardon." O the goodness and grace of a forgiving God! "He is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil."

V. 12. "Then Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech the high priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the Lord their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the Lord their God had sent him, and the people did fear before the Lord."

The fatherly chastisements of God's providence, together with the admonitions of His servant, had the desired effect, and the people submitted to the authority of God. Happy result! Let us all "go and do likewise."

V. 13. "Then spake Haggai the Lord's messenger in the Lord's message unto the people, saying, I am with you, saith the Lord."

"I am with you"—blessed words—sweet consolation to the child of God!—how comforting to the heart—how strengthening to the hands; for when the Lord is with us we may be safe from the fear of evil.

V. 14. "And the Lord stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people; and they came and did work in the house of the Lord of hosts, their God."

"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—"Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it;" but when God moves the people the work will be done. If we work in God, under the guidance of His Spirit, without any regard to worldly or selfish interests, we may expect the blessing of heaven will be upon us. Of such an one it is promised, "he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season: his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.—Ps. 1: 3.

V. 15. "In the four and twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king."

The labor of rebuilding the Temple had ceased for about 14 years, but within four months of the time that Haggai delivered to them his divine message, it was recommenced in serious earnest.

Chapter 2.

V. 1. "In the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the prophet Haggai, saying,

Scarcely had they commenced on the sacred enterprise of restoring the house and worship of God, before Haggai was repeatedly sent to them with messages of encouragement and consolation, quite different from the first communication which was one of severe reprehension.

Vs. 2, 3. "Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying, Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?

"Who is there left among you that saw this house in her first glory?" The Temple had then been destroyed nearly 70 years; and we learn from Ezra 3: 12 that there were "many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men, that had seen the first house." "And how do ye see it now? Is it not in comparison of it as nothing?" The house which they were then engaged in building was not small in dimensions compared with the first, but vastly inferior in materials, and elegance of workmanship.

In respect to the Temple of Solomon immense stores had been accumulated during the preceeding generation, amounting in gold and silver to over two hundred millions of dollars, in brass to more than a thousand tons, and in iron to five thousand seven hundred tons. (1 Chron. 2: 9.) In relation to the quantity of marble, some idea may be formed from the fact that eighty thousand men were employed as hewers in the mountain. Cedars and other choice timber also was procured in abundance. With such materials, the Temple of Solomon arose in all the splendor of marble and gold, so that, considering its dimensions, it was probably the most expensive and magnificent edifice ever erected by man. But alas! how great the contrast now! how inferior the materials! how few the workmen! how limited the resources! Where are those beautifully wrought blocks of marble—those plates of burnished gold and massive silver? Where the shining jewels—the curiously wrought figures—the resplendent furniture of Solomon's Temple?—Alas! the glory has departed—the nation has fallen, and her accumulated stores of wealth have vanished away!!! When therefore the foundation of the second Temple was laid, "the ancient men who [illegible] seen the first house" in all its glory, [illegible] with a loud voice; and many [illegible] aloud for joy. So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people," Ez. 3: 12, 13.

Methinks their reflections on that occasion were of the most serious and depressing character. They might have compared the state of the Hebrew commonwealth at that time, with that of the nation in the days of Solomon and in subsequent ages. How interesting were the observances of the ceremonial law, more especially at those feasts when all the male population were required to appear before God. Having neither telegraph lines, nor post offices, nor steamers, nor rail cars, nor public vehicles of any kind, their intercourse with different sections of Canaan must have been extremely limited. But on the occasion of the three grand national festivals—the passover, the pentecost, and the feast of tabernacles, occurring respectively in Nisan, Sivan and Tisri, the first in Spring, the second about the commencement of Summer, and the third in Autumn, the nation was all on the stir, and pilgrims from every section of the country could be seen wending their way to Zion; some solitary, others in groups, and others still in larger companies with their white tents for lodging, utensils for cooking, and flocks for sacrifice; but all came with joyful hearts, with oblations according to their several ability, and the faces of all were toward the Zion of God. Then what salutations and congratulations as they met on Zion's sacred hill, or on the consecrated ground of Mount Moriah! a happy nation of one heart and of one mind, congregated from every city and village, mountain and valley throughout the land. Methinks their hearts would swell with joyful emotion at the thought of those heavenly festivals, and I can but think that as the time drew near, the lovers of Zion would naturally take a position from some commanding eminence in Jerusalem, nearly overlooking the entire country, and there wait and watch for the pilgrims who had taken up their line of march for the beloved city.—Casting the eye southward along the road that leads to Bethlehem, they would perhaps watch for those pilgrims from the hill country where afterward Zachariah dwelt, or from Hebron the ancient capital of David's kingdom; or if the eye should be attracted eastward, to that beautiful mount of Olives, they might observe the pilgrims from the wilderness of Judea where afterward John preached, as they pursued their way along those foot paths where afterward Jesus traveled to Bethany and Bethpage, and to the dwelling of Lazarus; or looking westward, they might observe others coming along the road to Emmaus, where afterward Jesus talked by the way to His disciples; or looking northward, along one of the grand thoroughfares of the nation leading to Damascus, they might observe them thronging the road, coming from the land of beauty and plenty, from Lebanon's towering heights, from Bashan's giant forests, from Gilead's balmy plains, from Carmel's vine and olive yards. At this point of concentration the Hebrews of every class met in holy convocation; the shepherd from the rich pasturage of Sharon, the husbandman from the fertile valley of Jerreel, the vine-dresser from the plains of Jordan. They came from Nazareth and Capernaum, Chorazin, Bethsaida and all the numerous cities of Galilee; from Decapelis and all the cities towns and villages of Canaan.—While on their pilgrimage, the eye, at length, catches a glimpse of the battlements that rise above the sanctuary, and of the towers on the walls of Zion. With elastic step they press onward till they are enclosed within her sacred walls, and their feet are planted on the holy mount of Zion, a nation of worshipers commingling their songs and praises around the national shrine of devotion. How blessed the memory of those hallowed scenes to the devoted Jew.

Kitto, speaking of the feast of tabernacles, says:—

"The entire population again dwelt in tents; but not with accompaniments of travel, fatigue, and solicitude; all was hilarity, all wore a holiday appearance; the varied green of the ten thousand branches of different trees; the picturesque ceremony of the water libation, the general illumination, the sacred solemnities in and before the Temple; the feast, the dance, the sacred song; the full harmony of the choral music; the bright joy that lighted up every face, and the gratitude at "harvest home" which swelled every bosom, all conspired to make those days a season of pure, deep and lively joy, which, in all its elements finds no parallel among the observances of men.

Such were the scenes in a community of six millions, but now they are reduced to some fifty thousand. No wonder the old men bewailed with bitter lamentation, the change in the order of things.

But though fallen, yet, thank God, there were among them the elements of moral greatness; there were germs of national glory which, if cultivated and developed, would result in the prosperity of Israel; and that chronological period was now entered upon at the termination of which it would be said, "A GREATER THAN SOLOMON IS HERE;" and they had commenced on the erection of a Temple whose walls would re-echo the sound of His voice "who was born King of the Jews," "Prince of the kings of the earth," "higher than Agag," "the blessed and only Potentate, the KING OF KINGS, and the LORD OF LORDS."—Although in their low estate, a new and momentous era was dawning on the nation, and God was graciously pleased to send messages by His Prophets "in thoughts that breathe, and words that burn;" messages whose consoling power must have been like the oil of joy distilling through their entire being; connecting their puny efforts with the economy of God, and with the ultimate triumphs of redeeming grace; opening to their vision an era of glory in the future, the introduction of a more blessed economy, teaching them to look through the sacred fabric that was then in process of erection to the house of God that would be built of lively stones, and at an epoch when every hostile power and dominion under heaven would be shaken to its fall, and naught but the empire of Israel's God and Judah's Lion would remain to occupy the earth, and fill the world with glory as the waters cover the sea; before which the material glory of Solomon would fade like the twinkling star before the rising sun.

I have thought that the position of the Israelites at the time of Zerubbabel, was not unlike that of the present position of believers in the speedy coming of Christ; of the consolations communicated to the "feeble Jews," I cannot at present speak, but must reserve the subject for a future number.

Letter from Br. S. S. Brewer.

HILLSBURGH, N. S., July 2d, 1855.

The cry for help from this distant land having been made for some time past, and none, so far as I know, except one Br., feeling it duty to respond, after some anxiety and prayer I concluded, if the way opened, I would visit this section of the vineyard. In company with Elder W. M. Ingham and his wife, my companion in tribulation and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus, and my youngest son, I accordingly set sail for this place.

We left Salem on the morning of June 27th, on board of the schooner Hope, Capt. Parker. Soon after leaving, a delightful breeze sprung up, and filled our canvass, and our little bark glided pleasantly over the briny wave. Object after object was lost—the city with its spires soon disappeared—the highlands of my native land sank in the dim distance—when naught but the vast expanse of the azure firmament bounded the mighty deep around us, and beneath dashed the surging, restless waves of the deep, deep sea, while at one and another point of the compass could be seen the different craft, with their canvass flung to the breeze, speeding their way over the bounding billows to their port of destination. As I stood gazing at that beautiful sight—a sunset at sea—I could but exclaim,

O how glorious the scene, when the sun sinks to rest
'Mid the bright fields Elysian, on evening's soft breast,
While brilliant and glowing with purple and gold
The clouds round him flowing, their beauties unfold!
O how calmly, serenely his beams die away
As he lingers so sweetly on the confines of day!

We sung the hymn on the 186 page of the new Jubilee Harp, after which, falling on our knees, we returned thanks to God for mercies past, and felt a sweet, heavenly peace rest upon us, as we united in holy invocation in imploring His protection for the night. Without His presence and blessing, I should fear to be left at the mercy of the winds and waves.

I cannot gaze upon the mighty deep without a feeling of awe as I contemplate the majesty of the High and lofty one that inhabiteth eternity; who made heaven and earth, the sea and the fountains of water. I fell sweetly asleep,

"Rocked in a cradle of the deep,"

after retiring and committing the precious freight our vessel bore to the care of Him who never slumbers.

God bless our dear children we have left behind. Dear saints, remember us in your prayers, that God may sustain us in all our efforts. I remain a pilgrim in a strange land, looking for my coming King. Love to all the saints. God bless the dear tried and tempted ones. Let them cast all their care on Jesus—He is mighty and able to save all that come unto God by Him.

O come, my beloved, haste thine appearing. Amen.

For the Crisis.

"To what purpose is this waste." Matt. 26: 8.

This is an inquiry propounded by the professed, though covetous, disciples of our Lord relative to the costly anointing of his person by Mary. It seemed to originate with Judas, and the sentiment evidently found some sympathy in the hearts of other professed disciples; hence the propriety of recording it in the plural—it is said "the disciples troubled the woman" with accusations of prodigality. But He who perfectly understood the motive that prompted this sacrifice, quickly reproved their parsimony, by assuring them the honor she had just conferred on His person met with His highest approbation. And why? not that He desired this costly odor to gratify His sense of smelling, or to please the olfactory nerves of those around him: nay verily, His whole life proves the contrary.

Why then this commendation from the Son of God? Why should this narrative be reiterated to all nations blessed with the cheering rays of the gospel to perpetuate the memory of this woman?

Ah, it is quite obvious that a principle is here involved worthy the notice of the whole human family! It is the principle of sacrifice! The principle of self-sacrifice for the sake of conferring a benefit on Christ in person, or His followers is always sure to meet with Heaven's highest approbation, however trivial it may appear in the eyes of the world.

But, says one, that which I gave failed to accomplish that for which it was designed! I thought I bestowed my mite on Christ, at the time of disposal; but the case is not in every respect as I thought, or the individual proved unworthy, &c.

Well, these mistakes are trying indeed, but should never tempt us to a discontinuance of these labors of love: for under these circumstances we have the approbation and blessed promise of our Master recorded in Matt. 10: 41, "He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet, shall receive a prophet's reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, shall receive a righteous man's reward." It is a truism as much to be expected now as in the days of the Apostles, that those for whom we have labored, morally and physically, may forget our toilsome exertions, and even turn their back upon us and become our enemies!! But our beloved God will never forget. No; He is not unrighteous to forget our work and labor of love in that we have ministered to the saints and do minister." All these acts are faithfully recorded in his book of remembrance against the great decisive day! when he will say to those bright seraphs that delight to do his bidding, "Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice"

Should any feel disposed to enquire, to what purpose has been the sacrifice of property, of mental and physical labor, also of reputation for the last two years? I answer: where the motive has been the glory of God, notwithstanding some mistakes, God will as assuredly remember the motive that actuated us in such sacrifices, as the one that prompted Mary to pour the costly perfume on her dear Lord, which in value amounted to forty-one dollars and fifty cents.

No marvel that the more cool and calculating, that sustain no nearer relation to Jesus than cousin, should enquire, what good could possibly accrue from pouring forty-one liquid dollars, (so to speak), on the person of Jesus?

But no such enquiry arises in that full, bounding heart of him whose tender love for Christ absorbs every other feeling of nature; no, with such a heart, whatever is designed to benefit Him "that was rich, and for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty might become rich," is not considered as waste.

Who would not hasten with delightful emotions to occupy the place of Martha, Mary and Lazarus, in administering to the temporal wants of Jesus Christ? Then let your mind rest on the last final sentence of the King seated on His royal Throne, surrounded by the promised triple glory! "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." That is, fed, clothed, visited them, &c.

But while writing thus, my heart bethinks me of that poor, lone, widowed voice exclaiming with deep emotion—blessed indeed would it be to entertain the Prophets of God; but alas! my scanty store forbids a suitable reception of such personages; I have no chamber like the noble Shunamitess where I can place a bed, a table, a stool and a candlestick for their accommodation. Would God it were so! Dear Saint, Jesus well understands those noble emotions of thy soul, and has provided means by which even you in your penury may receive the blessed plaudit, at last, of having bestowed necessary benefits on the children of God.

Turn your eye to that sparkling fountain, pouring forth its limpid stream, and tell me whether you do not hasten, Rebecca-like, to let down your pitcher, to refresh the burning lips of the weary pilgrim on his journey? Then let your heart be comforted by reading the promise of the King in Matt. 10: 42, "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones, a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward."

You see then there is no reason for despairing on account of inability—the Master says, "give alms of such things as ye have," whether it be a cup of cold water, or a box of costly perfumery. Hear the the sweet tones of His encouraging voice amid the clamor of professed prudence, saying, "she hath done what she could."

Dearly Beloved, is it not a strong incentive to continue our life of sacrifice and labor of love, when we see every such motive is appreciated and kept in faithful remembrance by the Master? Our fellow beings may impugn our motives, He never; He accepts what we can, not what we would do. His lenient eye is watching over us until every jot and tittle of the Time is fulfilled, when He will delight to say "well done good and faithful servant," &c.

But allow a thought of improvement to both Saint and Sinner.

Dear Friends, I beseech you, let the above Scripture have its due weight on your hearts! If you would at last be associated with those on the right hand of the King, and hear it said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom," &c., because ye have conferred blessings on the little ones belonging to the King who have long been despised but now are entirely victorious—hesitate not when the cause of this King calls for a sacrifice. Do not let us be particular about dwelling in "ceiled houses," when the house of God lieth waste." Let us attend to the weightiest matters first; and then, with care and industry, we may not be obliged to leave the other undone.

Dear sinner, are you aware this subject of sacrifice speaks to you? Read Luke's account (7th chap.) of a sinful woman who, like Mary, began to make a sacrifice of such things as she had for Jesus Christ, and let His unmistakable language be indelibly written on your heart, "Wherefore, I say unto thee, Her sins, which are many, are forgiven." The first sacrifice you make for Jesus Christ will assure me penitential emotions are taking possession of your heart; and I shall hope ere long to hear the same blessed, elevating language addressed to you, which will yield you peace in this present life, and insure you an everlasting home within the pearly portals of Glory.

I close for the present, believing long articles unprofitable generally, but if the Lord will shall speak again soon.

I am, sinner, with Jesus, your sympathizing friend, B. Mathewson.

Riot at Louisville. We have by telegraph a tolerably connected account of the dreadful riot in Louisville. All the dispatches appear to come from persons who sympathize strongly with the Know Nothings, and what with the difficulty of getting correct statements admit such confusion, and the proclivity of the wires to tell large stories, we presume all our dispatches will be modified and some of them flatly contradicted when the truth comes out. From what we have it seems that some drunken or otherwise reckless men, said to be Irish or Germans, fired at a carriage containing two Americans, one of whom was wounded. A police man and two citizens interfered, and they also were fired at and wounded. A crowd assembled, sacked the house whence the shots were fired, and beat two of the Germans found in it almost to death. Other houses were sacked, a brewery burned, a great number of foreigners terribly beaten, and one Irishman shot so that he died a few hours afterward. In consequence of a slight injury to an American by a shot from a street near the burning brewery, the Irishman who was said to have fired it was captured, beaten, and then killed by a shot. It was proposed to sack the Catholic Cathedral, but the Mayor persuaded the crowd to desist. There was now a cessation, and the Americans were about putting up their cannon, which they had dragged about but had not used, when there came rumors of more firing from Irish houses in another quarter. The first step was to hang an Irishman charged with shooting an American.—Meanwhile, the firing continued, the crowd attacked the Irish houses, set them on fire and killed a number of the inmates, besides burning to death many others. One woman was killed. The number roasted is stated at from fifteen to twenty. This was the general result of Monday's work. Yesterday the city was in a constant excitement, no more blood was shed. An extra police force has been organized.

FOREIGN NEWS BY THE BALTIC.

FRANCE.

Paris, July 20, 6 P. M.

Our news from the seat of war, though not very important, continues to be more cheerful than for some weeks past; and on the several occasions that we have had to deal with the enemy we have had the advantage. Sickness is much on the decline, at least in the French camp, notwithstanding the great heat that prevails even on the waters of Kamiesch and on the plateau of Inkermann. A telegraphic despatch was this morning received by the Government from General Pelissier, it is dated last evening, and announces that the cholera has completely disappeared; that many of the sick and wounded are leaving the hospitals and rejoining the army; that the two regiments of African Chasseurs have arrived from Algeria, and that the works were pushed on with vigor. These works, in fact, are so close to the place, that an officer, writing to a friend in Paris, remarks that they seem as if they could get into the city at one leap. The frequent sorties of the Russians show that our deadly embrace is becoming closer and closer, and they already pant for breath. The abundant supplies furnished to the army, the arrival of reinforcements, the great diminution, if not total disappearance, of the scourge which has done the work of many combats, and which is more appalling to soldiers than any battle, and, not the least, the confident hope of another and more successful assault, have all produced a change for the better in the spirit of the army, which is evident from most of the private letters from the camp.

The floating battery Devastation, launched last spring at Cherbourg, is now ready to sail for the Baltic. The last two experimental trips made by this moveable fortress were most successful. Its greatest speed under steam was 4 1-2 knots an hour, and its average speed 3 3-4. This result was considered the more satisfactory as the special construction of the vessel, the bottom of which is flat and the bow round, must lessen its speed. It is almost incredible that so enormous a mass, covered as it is all over with thick iron plates, and every gun of which weighs 9,330 lb., should only draw 7½ feet of water.—M. Guieysse, the engineer, has succeeded in attaining the desired end, and the facility with which the Devastation obeys the rudder is truly remarkable. A steam frigate, which left Toulon in the beginning of the month, is expected at Cherbourg to take in tow and conduct to the Baltic this splendid floating battery.

China. We infer from several conversation with the Rev Dr. Parker, who arrived in the Baltic, and who is probably better versed in Chinese affairs than other American, that he cherishes little hope of any speedy pacification of the distracted Empire. The insurgents are now masters of about half the country, but have made little progress since the repulse of their army that marched to the conquest of Pekin.

Conflicts still occur at one point or another with alternate success to this side and to that; but neither makes any decided progress. Meantime, the continual destruction of property as well as life, with the constant diversion of hundreds of thousands from the fruitful paths of industry, to the sterile efforts of the tented field, are wasting the National resources, and reducing millions from comfort to wretchedness. And this is likely to go on for years longer, as it did at former periods of revolution.

The fact that the two parties seem well balanced, with fortune inclining first to this scale, then to that, insures a continuance of devastation. Were it rendered highly probable that the Tartar dynasty would, or that it would not, be overthrown, millions who have hitherto remained neutral, and been plundered now by this host, then by that, would rush at once to the winning side and make its triumph overwhelming. Until some clear indication of the result is afforded, the timid and the wealthy keep quiet where they can, and do no more for either belligerent than they must.

The high-wrought hopes that the triumph of the insurgents would insure the conversion of China to (at least) external Christianity were long since blasted. The destruction of the idols seems to be the extent of Tee-Ping-Chang's devotion to Christian ideas. And, though each party is chary of demonstrations of hostility to foreigners, hoping to profit by their assistance, there seems little reason to expect better treatment of Europeans and Americans from this party, in case of its complete success, than from the other. Of course, the policy and duty of maintaining a circumspect and thorough neutrality in the contest are obvious.

Opium is destroying the Chinese by hundreds of thousands, and its ravages seem rather to increase than diminish. The general anarchy is favorable to its introduction, and the British East India Company pushes its advantage to the utmost. Any termination of the civil war would be almost certain to insure a circumscription of the nefarious Opium traffic.—[N. Y. Tribune.

The Cholera in Italy. The ravages of the cholera and brigandage in the northern provinces of the Church, are represented as frightful. Ancona, a seaport on the Adriatic, with a population of 30,000, has been nearly depopulated by fright and the cholera. The cholera cases number from 150 to 200 daily. Venice, Padua, Verona, Florence and Leghorn, all suffer. There have been 1,100 cases in Venice alone. The city of Rome has, so far, been happily exempt.

Italy. We learn, from the intelligent correspondent of the Newark Daily Advertiser, dating from Genoa, that the several Austrian garrisons in Italy have been reinforced by 40,000 troops from Vienna.

The vintage of Italy will fail again this year, the disease, for which no remedy has been discovered, having again made its appearance.

Food for Gunpowder. At the rate Louis Napoleon is now progressing with his levies for soldiers, he will as effectually annihilate the generation of young men now arriving at manhood, as did his illustrious uncle in his devastating wars. The French are a martial people, and love the excitement of war as Americans do trade, commerce and money making; yet we would not assert that there are not thousands of active spirits among us, who, now and then, would like to embark in a military enterprise, in which they would show themselves as efficient as a people bred to arms like the French. But this draft of young and active men just arriving at manhood will yet be felt in France.

It appears that in 1853, while France was at peace, her army consisted of 560,000 men. In the two years that followed, levies were made of 140,000 men in each year, making 280,000, and now comes a new demand of the Emperor for 140,000 more. This conscription is to take place in January, and the conscripts will be drawn from those who, being born in the year 1835, will have attained their twentieth year in that month. We thought that during our war with Mexico, drafts of 10,000 and 20,000 men were large; but what would be the effect if drafts of 120,000 a year were made for three years? Then we should have a taste of some of the devastating effects of war.—[Providence Journal.

The Advance of the Russians in Asia Minor. A Vienna letter of the 22d says, all eyes in Vienna are turned at present upon the advance of the Russians in Asia Minor, and the reputed occupation of the Bosphorus by the troops of England and France, which appears to indicate that fears are entertained lest the Russians should be enabled to advance far enough to threaten the city of Constantinople from the Asiatic side. Such a fact is in no way improbable, except extraordinary despatch be used in collecting all available Turkish troops, and shipping them at once to Sinope and Batoum for the purpose of forming a force sufficiently strong to effect a diversion in favor of Kars, and to force the Russians to raise the siege.—The town itself is sufficiently well fortified both by nature and art to enable it to siege of some months duration, in the face of an enemy considerably stronger than the one which now lies before it; but its stock of provisions will soon be exhausted, and the garrison will be compelled to yield, except some unforeseen event should occur to create a diversion in its favor. Should the Russians succeed in capturing Kars, they will press on immediately to Erzeroum, and the garrison there is known to be so weak that it would be unable to offer much resistance, except it be speedily reinforced. The probability seems to be, that Turkish troops will be despatched immediately to Erzeroum, and after occupying the defiles between this place and Kars, will proceed to operate at once against the Russian army.

Three Days Later from Europe. The London News announces the arrival in that city, of General Count Zamoyski, a distinguished Pole, who came by special invitation of Government.

It is supposed that this visit has some reference to the affairs of Poland, which just now are under discussion in ministerial circles.

Obituary.

Died of consumption, June 1st, Lizzie D. Andrews, aged 16 years, 4 months, and 16 days.

While at home last fall on a visit, she was converted to the Lord, and was baptized in December; she then returned to Plymouth, N. H., where she had been living with her uncle. In her sickness she was reconciled to the will of God. She was an example of patience, and meekness, and beloved by all who knew her. Her mother was with her a few days before she died. She said, "tell father I shall meet him in the Kingdom." She wished her brothers and sisters to prepare to meet her in that beautiful world; she requested her friends not to weep for her, for she was happy; then said, "I am ready."

We mourn our loss, but sorrow not as those who have no hope.

J. M. Andrews.

Nashua, N. H., Sept. 13,
Manchester, N. H., Sept. 14,
Concord, N. H., Sept. 15,
Croydon, N. H., Sunday, Sept. 19.

The week-day meetings will be held in the evening, at the hour fixed upon by the brethren. Letters can be directed to me at Sturbridge, Mass., for the present. If any of the above appointments clash with previous arrangements, will brethren please give me seasonable notice. W. Sheldon.

The Lord willing I will preach in Northfield, Sabbath, Aug. 19, in a grove near Br. Humphreysville. S. G. Mathewson.

The Lord willing I will be at Waterbury, Aug. 17th. Geo. L. Teeple.

GROVE MEETING.

There will be a Grove Meeting held on the town line which separates Cambria from Reading, some six miles South-West of Hillsdale, (Michigan), near the plank Road leading from Hillsdale to Basswood Corners, to commence Saturday, September 1st, and continue as long as thought best. All are invited to attend.

F. H. Berick, for the Brethren.

Vernon, Aug. 12, 1855.

Providence permitting, there will be a Camp Meeting in Vernon, Vt., on the old ground, to commence on Monday, Sept. 17, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn and Srs. from the East and West, North and South, prepare for this gathering, and let your prayers be continually ascending to our heavenly Father for the prosperity of this meeting, that every thing may be conducted with an eye to His glory.

There will be a boarding tent on the ground, and horse keeping near by.

In behalf of the church, J. Frost.

GENERAL CAMP MEETING.

Providence permiting, there will be a general Camp Meeting in Cheshire, one half mile from the depot, commencing Monday, Sept. 10, to continue over the following Sabbath. We hope all, far and near, will take an interest in this gathering, and make it a special subject of prayer. Hope they will come on Monday morning, and pitch their tents in good faith, with a full expectation, that with the divine blessing, it will be a meeting that will tell on saint and sinner, not for party, but for God and truth.

Provision made for horse keeping, and a boarding tent will be kept on the ground at which board can be obtained at a fair price.

Preachers invited to attend, Brn M. Bachelder, J. Hemenway, J. Couch, H. Pratt, and others. Alonzo Cummings, For the Brethren.

Cheshire, Aug. 4, 1855.

GENERAL CAMP MEETING.

By divine permission, there will be a general Camp Meeting for all that love the appearing of our Lord, at North Wilbraham, to commence August 20th, and continue over the Sabbath.—It will be located on the old ground, 10 miles east of Springfield, on the Western Railroad.—We hope all the different Churches will be represented, and that as many as can will bring Tents, and especially bedding, which is an essential article. Come, brethren, and bring as many impenitent with you as possible; and let us all labor together for their salvation, and show our faith by our works.

Some twelve to fifteen of our good ministering brethren, are all agreed in this arrangement, and mean to have an old fashioned Camp Meeting, such as God used to own and bless. There will be a Boarding Tent on the ground, and horse keeping near by—all on reasonable terms. Also, provision will be made for the Lord's Poor.—Those that wish to board in the tents by companies or as individuals, will be able to procure all the necessaries on or near the ground.

Hiram Munger, for the brethren.

H. GRANT.

An Evening Prayer.

I come to Thee to-night,
In my lone closet where no eye can see,
And dare to crave an interview with Thee,
Father of love and light.

Softly the moonbeams shine
On the still branches of the shadowy trees,
While all sweet sounds of evening on the breeze,
Steal through the slumbering vine.

Thou gav'st the calm repose,
That rests on all—the bird, the air, the flower,
The human spirit in its weary hour—
Now at the bright day's close.

'Tis Nature's time for prayer;
The silent praise of the glorious sky,
And earth's orisons profound and high,
To Heaven their breathings bear.

With them my soul would bend,
In humble reverence at Thy holy throne,
Trusting the merits of Thy Son alone,
Thy sceptre to extend.

If I this day have striven
With Thy blest spirit, or have bowed the knee
To aught of earth in weak idolatry,
I pray to be forgiven.

If in my heart has been
An unforgiving thought, or word, or look,
Though deep the malice which I scarce could brook,
Wash me from this dark sin.

If I have turned away
From grief or suffering which I might relieve,
Careless the "cup of water" e'en to give,
Forgive me, Lord, I pray.

And teach me how to feel
My sinful wanderings with a deeper smart,
And more of mercy and of grace impart,
My sinfulness to heal.

Father, my soul would be
Pure as the drops of eve's unsullied dew;
And as the stars whose nightly course is true,
So would I be to Thee.

Nor for myself alone
Would I these blessings of Thy love implore,
But for each penitent the wide world o'er,
Whom Thou hast called Thine own.

And for my heart's best friends,
Whose steadfast kindness o'er my painful years,
Has watched to soothe affliction's griefs and tears,
My warmest prayer ascends.

Should o'er their path decline
The light of gladness, or of hope or health,
Be Thou their solace, and their joy and wealth,
As they have long been mine.

And one, O, Father! guide
The youthful traveler in the dangerous hour,
Save him from evil and temptation's power,
And keep him near Thy side.

Watch o'er his couch to-night,
And draw him sweetly by the cords of love
To blest communion with Thee, far above
Earth's withering cares and blight.

And now O, Father! take
The heart I cast with humble faith on Thee,
And cleanse its depth from each impurity,
For my Redeemer's sake.

The Lord's Supper—His Miniature.

There are two great focal points to which all the rays of prophetic light converge—the two advents of the Savior to this world. The first was the "corner-stone," the second is the "cap-stone" to the temple of truth. But for the first, there would be no hope for the guilty; but for the last, that hope would not be consummated. The first, was to atone for sin; the second, will be to restore all things to their primeval beauty, order and glory, as when angels shouted at the view of their perfection, and the Creator pronounced them "very good." At the first, the wicked triumphed; at the second, they will be awfully destroyed.—At the first the saints were confounded, scattered and abased; at the second, they will be honored, triumphant and glorified. At the first, Satan bruised the Savior's heel; at the second, Christ will bruise Satan's head. The first was the seed-time of the Gospel; the last will be the harvest of the world. The first, was personal and real, as the existence of Adam, up to whom his genealogy is traced; the second shall be the return of this same Jesus as he went away into heaven. Both advents are equally the appearing (parousia) of "the Son of man"—a phrase, which the most strongly expresses his humanity as the identical "seed of the woman," "seed of Abraham," "made flesh and dwelt among us."

The Lord's Supper points equally to these two great events. "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come." "I will drink no more of this fruit of the vine, till I drink it new with you in my Father's Kingdom." Like the magnetic needle which points to the north pole and thus equally indicates the south, the Supper directs our attention to Calvary, and Zion—to Jerusalem which was, and to Jerusalem which is to come. It is a radiant point, from whence we view the gory scenes of the garden and the cross, at the same view with new heavens and a new earth, filled with the redeemed. O, what associations cluster around this blessed ordinance!! Here we listen to the rending of rocks and opening of graves, under the echoes of the dying voice of Him, whose soul was the center upon which the sins of the whole world convergently pressed with a force which drove the blood through every pore of his blessed body, so as to fall in a shower of great drops around him upon the ground; and, at the same time, our ears are saluted with the songs of "an innumerable company, which no man can number," spread over the rosy hills and spicy plains of the new earth.

The Jews overlooked the first, in their concentrated view of the last; and alas! how many Christians have inverted the error. It requires both events to constitute [illegible] of Christ. To [illegible] When he went away [illegible] shining garments, testified that "this same Jesus should so come in like manner," as they had seen him ascend in a cloud; when, as the Evangelist informs us in another place, they returned to Jerusalem with great joy, praising and blessing God, (Luke xxviii, 50–53; Acts i 9–12.) Paul does not intimate "a crown of life" to any but "those who love his appearing."

How incomparably dear to the heart, is the miniature of a departed friend! To offer money for the miniature of a husband, wife, parent or child, would outrage the best and strongest feelings of our nature. They are dearer to us than all the world beside.

We also value the miniatures of those whom we venerate, as well as those we love. We gaze on the likeness of a Howard, a Bernard, a Wesley, a Mathew, a Judson, but where is the miniature of Him of whose benevolence theirs was but the faintest reflection? Wherever we go our eye is met with the miniature of a Wellington, a Napoleon, a Washington; but where is the miniature of "the Captain of our salvation?" We admire the almost superhuman form of Nicholas, but where shall we find the likeness of the "Prince of the kings of the earth?" We see many paintings and statues which claim to represent him, but how unlike are they to the prophets' description of him, "His visage was more marred than any man; he hath no form or comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." Yet millions have said, "He is the chiefest among ten thousands, and the one altogether lovely." We "love him, because he first loved us." Do you cry out, "when shall I appear before God?" The answer is, "Not till he returns again."

He does not challenge our admiration by the beauty of his form, as a man,—for he was "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief"—but by his acts; not by the music of his voice, for "he spoke as one having authority;" nor by military prowers, drenching battle-fields with blood, and making widows and orphans; but, by pouring out his own blood for our sins and by every conceivable act of mercy in raising the dead, feeding the hungry, and "healing all manner of diseases."

Do you wonder, that with so many precious gifts, he should not have left us his miniature? Well, my brethren, we have his miniature. You need no longer mourn that while you have the miniatures of nearly all great men, that of the son of man's should be wanting. None was ever so correctly drawn. Himself pronounced it a good likeness. The value of a likeness is, that is gives remembrance of the absent and hence, when one is about to take "a journey into a far country," he usually puts his miniature into the hand of his dearest friend, with a request to keep it till his return. And when the Savior was about to leave this world, he gave the diciples his likeness, saying, "Do this in remembrance of me."

If that likeness had been a painting instead of bread and wine, and was to be exhibited in the churches on the first Sabbath in next month, how would they be thronged! It was his acts, and not his features, that endear him to us: and those acts are more fitly drawn in his Supper, by the bread and wine, than the best artist could delineate them. His sufferings are the only star of hope in the dark horizon of human guilt. He died that we might live. He was abased, that we might be exalted. He mourned and wept, that we might be glad, and rejoice. He became poor, that we, through his poverty, might become rich. He was bruised that we might be healed. He felt the blow from infinite justice, which would have crushed a world to endless wo! What ought to be the measure of our gratitude? Will eternity be long enough to express it?

A criminal, who received his reprieve from President Washington, after the rope had been put about his neck, and the cap drawn over his face, exclaimed three times, "gratitude to General Washington!" and added, with streaming eyes, "every drop of blood in my veins, cries, gratitude to General Washington!" But for this to even approximate an illustration of what ought to be the measure of our gratitude to the Saviour, President Washington must have laid aside his honors of state, and have come on the stand and had the rope put around his neck, and the cap drawn over his face—and been hung! What king, but the King of kings, ever died for his rebellious subjects?

"Bread is the staff of life." Christ "is the way, the truth and the life." "Wine, maketh glad the heart of man." "These are they which came up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne; they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and lead them unto fountains of living waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

What painting could so aptly represent the blessings accruing to us through his death? Of the bread, he said, "This is my body;" and of the wine, "This is my blood." He was accustomed to speak of things that were like, as identical, as, "I am the true vine"—"I am the good shepherd"—"I am the door of the sheep."—And as well might it be claimed that he is truly a vine, growing in Judea and bearing literal grapes, and a shepherd of sheep, and the same time a literal door to some [illegible] and said there was no salvation out of the Roman Catholic Church; and that, as the Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists, and Baptists did not even claim to give the real body and blood of Christ in the communion, they defrauded their people out of their souls!—Said, that robbery in any case was a great crime, but to rob one of Christ, and of his soul, was the height of infernal wickedness."

Poor man! he forgot that the text says, "EXCEPT YE DRINK HIS BLOOD, YE HAVE NO LIFE IN YOU." And as the Romish priests never give the wine to their communicants, but drink it themselves, and only give them the bread, it inevitably follows, from his position, that they have defrauded all their people "of Christ and their souls." And as "he that knoweth his Master's will and doeth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes, while he that knew it not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes only," it follows, that the Romish priests must receive the greater damnation for such a robbery. "Bigotry is a monster without eyes or ears," and hence, is without either justice or mercy. Under the sweeping assumption of Dr. Rider, over fifty millions have poured out their blood on the altar of the true faith! and their souls are crying under the altar, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell upon the earth?"

It is surprising that the Roman Church have not claimed to find some "vine" which is the real Christ, and then sentenced all to torture while they had the power to torture, and since then anathamatize those who would not eat of its grapes, as the only hope of salvation. Or, why have they not found the identical "door," which is the real Christ; and caused all the faithful to pass through it, covered with sheep-skins, on pain of the worst tortures in this life, and eternal damnation in the world to come! That learned popes, cardinals and bishops, together with kings and princes, should join and raise the most expensive fleets and armies, and pour out the blood of fifty millions of her people, and whiten every plain in Europe with their bleaching bones to sustain such maddened foolery, which it would seem that none but an idiot could ever believe, defies all credence, but for the stubborn facts of prophecy and history.

To the broken hearted sinner the Supper presents far different views and associations: he eats of it in remembrance that Christ made an "offering of himself ONCE FOR ALL;" and he does not ask it to be repeated. With this sweet remembrance he lifts his eyes to heaven and sings—

"No condemnation now I dread,
Jesus, and all in him is mine;
Alive in him my living head,
And clothed in righteousness divine,
Bold I approach the eternal throne,
And claim the crown, through Christ, my own."

The law pointed prospectively to the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow. All its sacrifices pointed to the one offering of the Lamb of God; and all its Sabbaths, and Jubilees, to the rest which remains to the people of God. The Supper, points retrospectively, to the antitype of those sacrifices, and prospectively, to the antitype of the Sabbaths and Jubilees. It is a mirror, which reflects all the scenes of Calvary, and of the Restitution. David had his meditation in the (types of the) law both day and night.—In the high priest, he saw reflected "the High Priest of our profession"—in the blood of the victims, "the blood of the everlasting covenant"—in the Passover, the passing over of those whose hearts are "sprinkled from an evil conscience of unbelief"—in the ordinary priests, those who shall be kings and priests unto God in the new earth—in the first fruits, "the first fruits of the spirit"—in the three courts of the tabernacle, the three heavens—in the Sabbaths, "a Sabbattism which remains for the people of God." All this is reflected by the supper. It points to his sufferings as preparatory to the marriage Supper on Mount Zion, when all the redeemed shall return with songs and everlasting joys. The supper therefore becomes, not only a miniature of Him, whom unseen we love, but of ourselves also, when "these vile bodies shall become fashioned like unto his glorious body," so that, while we are permitted to call Him "brother," we are forced to exclaim, "My Lord and my God!" While he deigns to call us his brethren, and friends, we join with angels in worshiping Him. While He recognizes us as joint-heirs with Him, we ascribe all praise, dominion, power, and glory, "to the only wise God our Saviour." While he joins us to Himself and declares, that "he that is joined unto the Lord, is one spirit," we worship Him "who was, and is, and is to come, the Almighty." This Supper does not more reflect his sufferings than his glory; his humility than his exaltation; Calvary than Zion; but like a golden link, unites them in one. It is a moral eminence from whose summit through the telescope of faith, we survey all that is past and all that is future. From this radiant point all is clear; and from this point of view the words of our Savior, "He that endureth unto the end shall be saved," become more impressive; and the Christian girds on his armor anew, and goes forth in the remaining strife with redoubled purpose and zeal, relying alone on the strength of Him who said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee;" assured, that because he lives, we shall live also. [illegible]

In the two advents of our Savior, mirrored forth in the Supper, what thrilling contrasts, are presented to that eye of faith? The prophets searched diligently to ascertain the time which the Spirit of Christ signified, when it testified before hand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Without noticing the strange accumulation of circumstances of suffering around the Savior in the time of his sojourn on earth, we call attention to one only. All who ever felt the sorrow of repentance, will admit that it has no parallel. "Remorse, Remorse! (exclaimed Randolph of Roanoak, as he was dying,) how little the meaning of that word is understood!" If the sins of one man are so insupportable, what must be the sins of the whole world when converged to the soul of the Man of sorrows?—While they caused him to sweat blood in the garden, they wrung from his soul on the cross a groan which veiled the heavens in darkness, rent the rocks, and opened many graves! For a brief period Hell triumphed. Fallen spirits, perhaps, congratulated each other that they would never again be driven out into dry places, and into the swine—the Sandhedrin, the priests and Pharisees, that he would never again call them hypocrites, nor endanger their nation by the Romans.

The disciples were sad, and Angels, who desired in vain to look into it, were doubtless, amazed. But the third morning they were 'begotten again, unto a lively hope, by his resurrection from the dead." "He is alive! He is alive!" I fancy I hear echo over Judea, and along the heavenly plains. Yes, he lives forever more; and unto them that look for Him will He appear, the second time, without a sin offering unto salvation.

"How bright the vision! O how long
Shall this glad hour delay?
Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

When the Crucified, shall step forth on to the starry pavement of the heavens, and by his fiat, spread out a new creation even more beautiful than that at whose birth all the Angels of God shouted aloud for joy, will humillity be exalted and pride be abased, unbelief be humbled and faith be exalted. The throne of David, and all thrones, dominions, principalities and powers, of things in heaven and in the earth, shall then acknowledge and crown the "man of sorrows, Lord of lords, and King of kings."

Instead of a crown of thorns his head will bear a crown of glory, whose brightness will confound the moon and make the sun ashamed; instead of fainting beneath, or expiring upon the cross, he will sit on the throne of Universal Empire. Cherubim and Seraphim with the whole redeemed family, shall join to crown him Lord of all.

O blessed day! when all the weary-worn soldiers of the cross shall repose under the wavings of the flag of victory on Zion, in unclouded view of "the Lamb in the midst of the throne!" Imagination faints with the fatigue of contemplating the vast and unsearchable thought, of "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." A little more patience; a few more trials, crosses, strifes, and self-denials—and all is gained, and gained forever! Though the righteous will be but scarcely saved, yet through Christ strengthening us, as he surely will all those who seek unto him, the fearful battle may be fought, and endless victory be secured. Amen.

Letter from Sr. Susan E. Teeple.

ROXBURY, June 17, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—As time has rolled on, I thought I would communicate my thoughts and feelings to the scattered flock looking for Jesus. I am still bound for the better country, my treasure and my heart are there, and I had expected to have been there before this, but with the rest I have been sadly disappointed. I was in the time last fall; I drank deep into the argument, and my faith said it was so; I meant to act as if I believed it, and could see no possibility of its going beyond. I came up to the passover, as that was the point that I was looking at, and it passed by, the 19th of May is in the past, and I ask where are we? Some say the days have ended, and if so, we are in the day of the Lord; and we are sure of redemption soon. I would not (or could not) say it is my belief, for I am not fully persuaded, but am willing to embrace the truth and follow the light, let others do as they may; I feel we are occupying a momentous position. It requires every energy to be a child of God in these days, we cannot trust a friend nor put confidence in a guide, we have no one to lean upon but the arm of the Lord, and to trust in his word, and we have the promise that can never fail. I must confess I have been sadly disappointed, but am thankful that I can look back and feel and know that I have been honest in my belief. I am still striving for the kingdom, and still looking for the Savior, and mean by the grace of God not to yield to temptation, but to hold out to the end. I have been afraid since the passing of the time that I should become one of the foolish. May God forbid it. As long as I can see a track I will never go back, and when I cannot see any light ahead, I mean to stand still and see the salvation of God. I set my hope for glory ten years ago, counted the cost and took a through ticket; for my hope centers in the resurrection and will be consummated at Christ's coming, for which I cry the more earnestly, come Lord Jesus and come quickly. My trials have been great, my temptations severe, and I know full well how to sympathize with the tempted and tried. But although we have our sorrows and disappointments here; and the world their day of rejoicing, we will have our day soon. And O the contrast! I am willing to be counted the filth of the world if I may only obtain the crown of glory that awaits me at the appearing of Jesus. I sometimes wonder at the goodness and mercy of God in keeping me thus far. He truly is long suffering to us ward, not willing that any should perish. How faithful we ought to be, and how holy in our conversation; and, my dear Brothers and Sisters, be careful that you are not overcharged with the cares of this life, and that day come upon you unawares; but live in love, and in the unity of the spirit, and the God of peace will be with you. Many of you, dear Pilgrims, are acquainted with the writer, and I ask you not to forget her at the throne of grace, but remember she is yet with you in the faith of the gospel, and her motto is onward; for He that shall come, will come and not tarry. I hope not to grow faint nor weary, nor to get discouraged; but to keep watching lest coming suddenly he find me sleeping. How careful then ought we to live, with what religious fear, who such a strict account must give for our behaviour here.

Yours truly in the faith of Christ, soon coming
SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

JULY 29, 1855.

"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."—Heb. 10: 25.

Is this injunction confined to meetings of social worship? If so, what shall those individuals do who are isolated and have not the privilege of such meetings? This question has often arisen from the fact of many of God's dear children being confined at home, from various causes, Sabbath after Sabbath. "Exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." The day is approaching; those who see it, see also the dangers are increasing, and they feel the importance of exhorting one another.—Exhorting one another, what does it mean? A few to exhort, and the rest to keep silence? No, no. As many as meet together, exhort one another.

Since the "Crisis" has been suspended, I have thought much of the loss the Church would sustain if it be stopped entirely. Its weekly visits to our secluded homes, separated as we are from the world and the nominal Church, though in the midst of them, is the more like a social meeting of kindred spirits than anything we can enjoy while scattered abroad. And as we anticipate its continuance, the spirit of God has indited special prayer for those who shall write for its pages, who, in the comparison, are the exhorters and teachers in the meetings, that they may seek for and depend upon the Holy Spirit's influences, that their communications may administer grace to the readers. All who rightly worship God and serve Him, inquire, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Dear Brn. and Srs., will not every one of you that reads this, make the inquiry in reference to the "Crisis." Whatever the will of the Lord is, will please his humble, believing children; whether it be to pray, write, or give alms. And you who give alms, remember Cornelius, whose "prayers and alms came up for a memorial before God." Shall we not engage anew in the work of benefiting one another through the Crisis? We are not independent of each other; we hear the voice of the Lord through the prophet Jeremiah saying, "Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not." That call has been, and is still being made by the Church; and to prepare her to learn doctrine, she has to go through the process of being weaned. And is she not really to exclaim, what a process! what a breaking off from the friendship of the world! what a yielding up of sectarian notions and prejudices! what a severing of ties natural and religious! what a crying after knowledge and understanding and the fear of the Lord! what earnest desires to be saved from vain imaginings—from every delusive spirit—to be kept by the mighty power of God blameless unto his coming and kingdom! And how is she to learn doctrine? By precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little.—The Lord will not give all his truth to some highly esteemed brethren; but whosoever "inclines the ear unto wisdom, and cries after knowledge, and lifts up the voice for understanding, seeks her as silver, and searches for her as for hid treasures, shall understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God." And as we freely receive, freely we should give, and remember the words of Bro. Paul, (Phil. 2: 3, 4,) "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." If I lightly esteem any truth because the Lord has given it to such an one, I lightly esteem Christ and His word. Truth is precious, truth is mighty and will prevail—more to be desired than our necessary food; and whatever God wants us to deal to others, if we refuse, we rob God and His people. Therefore let us bring all the tithes into the store-house, and prove God therewith, and see if a blessing will not follow.

Much love to the saints scattered abroad.

For The Crisis.

"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

This was the language of Him on whom God had laid help in accomplishing the salvation of man. It was uttered by His expiring breath when He completed His mission as the "Man of sorrows."

Surely in infinite wisdom and love was the plan devised for our redemption from the lost condition in which the whole family are, without Christ. The law demanding the life of the sinner, mercy could not interpose, for the law knows no mercy. The stern decree of Jehovah was, "Thou shalt surely die."

At length the Son of God made his appearance—the human mingled with the divine—constituting a character adored and worshipped by Angels; hated and condemned by those He came to save.—He could be touched with a feeling of our infirmities by being tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin—could drink the bitter cup with all its dregs, without a murmur, although it called forth the above exclamation, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

And is His course on earth indeed the path marked by Him for His disciples?—He said, "I am the way," and, "He that taketh not his cross and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." Could the suffering part be an exception? Again we hear a voice from the Scriptures; "If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him. If children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together." And shall our suffering increase till our race is run? So it was with our pattern. The parable Jesus gave of the unjust judge represents the Church in such a suffering state as that she is crying night and day, when God rises to avenge her.

Nature shrinks from suffering, and the natural man is constantly devising means to avoid it; but the spirit of Jesus endures the cross—despises the shame—the true Zion bows down that whatever exalts itself may go over, resists not evil, but lets the little Horn spirit prevail. In so doing, the flesh is crucified with its affections and lusts—thus we become Christ's—Abraham's seed—and heirs according to the promise.

CHARLEMONT, MASS.

The long expected Advent of our blessed Savior to this dark and wretched world, to gather his exiles home, and set up his glorious kingdom, has cheered my lonely pathway for two happy years in the past. Yes, happy, I may truthfully affirm; for it has been the brightest era in the history of my short life. And although disappointment has followed in its train, still I do not regret the past; fully believing God has recognized the Advent movement, and approbated it, (with a few exceptions, of course.) O, dear children, it has proved a blessing to me; and in the dust I would acknowledge its benefits. Rich and rare are the blessings I have garnered in my grateful heart, of which disappointment, scorn or fear cannot rob me. It has been a profitable school in which I have made a little proficiency. And as I have learned more perfectly the geography of that country promised to Abraham, and the heirs by faith, a new and earnest aspiration has pervaded my whole being for a realization of its blessings; and, thank God, it is still a reality, though we are pilgrims and strangers, and have not yet found that city which hath foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God. Dear children, press on; we have nothing to lose, and everything to gain by being good. Let us deal justly, love mercy, walk humbly, and we shall be rewarded by a peaceful heart, an unaccusing conscience, and the blessed Comforter; with the love and fellowship of all the pure in heart, and when Jesus comes, an enduring home in the Kingdom of God.

Prophecy Fulfilled.

By B. P. HILDRETH.

(Concluded.)

Says another:—"You have written largely on the subject, but your arguments have been very illogical; and if you set times, you forfeit your influence over the minds of your fellows, when it passes by; they lose confidence in you as a teacher, and will not be likely to hearken to you again; your power over them is gone."

And by this you can see a fulfilment of prophecy, and prove that the end is near; for "when he shall have accomplished to scatter (or disperse) the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." It matters not how that power is removed, if it is gone; were it not so, how should we know that we belonged to that class here designated as the "holy people?"—As to my arguments, they are before the Church and the world; and I have only to say, (take them as a whole,) I have no desire to recal them; before my Judge I expect very soon to stand, and I long to see the day. I believe we are as near the truth as our opponents, to say the least.

If it were a fault for me to write at all, and ten or twenty articles, and some of them very small, can be called writing "largely," I shall be constrained to plead guilty. We acknowledge that we have been mistaken in the time of the termination of the vision; but alas, how different are the rebukes that we meet with from the Seventy, who returned with joy to their Master, saying, "Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." They were mistaken; they thought it was right for them to rejoice; but did the Lord rebuke them? No, but kindly said, "In this, rejoice not." If any of the children, who have, with the greatest artlessness and singleness of purpose, designed to follow in the footsteps of their Lord and Master, have met with unkind treatment, I hope they will consider Him who endured such contradiction of sinners, lest (they) be weary and faint in their minds; and exercise that faith which overcomes the world. The grace of God is sufficient for you; He will never, no, never, leave nor forsake you.

Dear Brn. and Sis.—We sympathize with you in your tribulation; we would bear your burdens, "and so fulfil the law of Christ." We must put no trust in man, but in the living God, and keep on the armor; for we are on "the enchanted ground." Let us beware of the flatterer, and ever feel that we are the body of Christ, and members in particular. If we then are members one of another, and even of His body, of His flesh and of His bones, it certainly follows that we shall love one another [illegible] of the natural body do not war against, and destroy each other. Love is the first fruit of the Spirit, and is followed by joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance." We may be joyful, peaceful, gentle, and temperate, and yet not heirs of the grace of life. We may have all faith, so as to remove mountains, and yet be nothing, if it do not work by love.

Probably we shall have no more light on the chronological prophecies; but by "the signs of the times," we find ourselves within soundings of the better country.—Of the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, we have the testimony of Apostles, who were "eye-witnesses of His majesty," and likewise a more sure word of prophecy, on which we may rely till the heavens shall reveal Him. The enemy is still walking about, "seeking whom he may devour," even now, especially, is a time when false teachers will "bring in damnable heresies; even denying the Lord that bought them; and bring upon themselves swift destruction." How important the exhortation, "resist the devil, and he will flee from you." But if we forsake the light of truth, and follow the seducers of these last days, the fruits of our "harvest will be a heap, in the day of grief, and of desperate sorrow." "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: for when they say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape." "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.—For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth."

We learn that there are great commotions in different parts of the world, that the slaughter of human life in the late battles has been immense; the warlike state of the nations, and the prevalence of the unclean spirits are unequivocal prognostics of the great day of God Almighty. The battle of that great day will doubtless be fought, at the end of this age, after the coming of Christ; the whole world (being the antitype of the valley of Megiddo,) will be the arena of contest and bloodshed, where "the kings of the earth and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men," will be gathered together; not every one, but a gathering of kings, and nobles of the earth, Rev. 10 : 19. "And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies gathered together, to make war against Him that sat on the horse, and against his army."

It is known that the ostensible and avowed cause of the present European war is connected with religious affairs, which seems to mark this conflict as the last struggle that will terminate in the battle of Armageddon.

An article has appeared in print, from the pen of Br. D. T. T. from which I quote the following:—

"Dr. Coke, who makes Armageddon to mean the mountain of destruction, the place where the evil spirits, (not the Lord,) gather the kings and princes for slaughter, says, the spirits are to stir up the princes and potentates to make an united, and last effort in a religious war"; and Dr. Clark makes the work of the spirits to be, "to induce the kings of the earth, by lying miracles, to come forth to the place of general slaughter." The Cottage Bible observes, "they are employed by the old serpent to cajole the anti-christian powers," and so bring them to battle. In a most remarkable manner is this being fulfilled. Demons are being consulted by statesmen and kings. The sin of Saul, for which God slew him (1 Chron. 10 : 13, 14,) is multiplied to infinitude. Members of Congress, Senators and sovereigns, seek counsel of the dead. Spiritualism is rampant throughout the world. The pseudo-spirit of Peter the great through the best mediums of St. Petersburg, bade Czar Nicholas go on with the war; and Napoleon Bonaparte gives the same advice, through the mediums of Paris, to the French Emperor; each spirit assuring its [illegible] of the justness of his cause and promising ultimate success. Especially will these demons operate on kings imperceptibly, as did Satan on the heart of David, and the Angel on king Cyrus. Lord Brougham and D'Israeli are believers in spiritualism. Robert Owen, the philosopher of Lanark, a noted spiritualist, after issuing a circular to all Europe, calling on her to bow to the new God, has, as I perceive, finally fixed on the 14th day of next May as the era of the commencement of the millennium. It may come, but the necromancer will doubtless find himself grievously disappointed in its character.

But some are heeding the voice of warning borne on the four winds. Henry Drummond, Member of Parliament, in a pamphlet recently published, called "The Fate of Christendom," proclaims the end of the world to be immediately at hand. Viscount Manderville, George, Duke of Manchester, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, hold the same views.

Louis Kossuth affirms there exists not a single Christian nation on earth, and we begin to believe it. We would look for Christianity in Great Britain and America, if anywhere; but alas, while in this land of slavery, papal aggression and Spiritualism, there are twenty-five millions of souls, only about four millions profess Protestant Christianity, and the rest are heathen, not from necessity, but by choice. And the nation must just wipe out in tears the odious Fugitive Slave Law from its statutes, and rid itself of the vile sin of human slavery, before it can presume to claim the name of Christ. As for Protestant England, she presents the strange spectacle of an unholy alliance with Roman Catholic France and Austria, for the purpose of upholding infidel, Mohammedan Turkey, whose days God has numbered; and being found in bad company, like "poor Tray" in the fable, she is most severely beaten. Wrath is upon her, her army is rotting, her statesmen and people are paralysed; while every Catholic Journal in the land exults over her distress. Six or eight millions of soldiers are under arms in the east; human society is in a feverish ferment. All Europe is going mad with the demon of war.—Every sign is awfully ominous of what every man admits, viz., the approach of a vast crisis in the affairs of this world.—Armageddon is just upon us. And where are the Protestant Churches of America in this solemn time? Where the 25 or 30 thousand watchmen? Do they discern the crisis? And are they prepared for it, and faithfully warning the perishing world about them of the terrible scenes now so imminent, and clearly pointed out by the finger of God?"

Thus far the article of D. T. T., dated Worcester, March 20, 1855.

The above is a picture of the world extremely dreadful to those who have no interest in any other world but this; but to those who are waiting for the Lord, these things are encouraging; not because they wish to see the wrath of God poured out on the wicked, but that themselves may go home. We have here no continuing city, but "we seek one to come, whose Builder and Maker is God." But while it shall please God to continue us here, it is necessary that we should walk by faith. "The just shall live by his faith." Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. It is the hearty assent of the mind to all that God has revealed, and operates on the heart so as to produce obedience to His commandments. It obtains the victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil, and supports the soul in tribulation; pleads the love of God, and the sufferings of Christ; appeases the wrath of God, plumes its bright pinions for an upward flight, and bears the soul above, that it may behold the untold realities and glories of heaven within the vail. But without it, all is despondency and wretchedness; we cannot please God, nor discern one glimpse of His glory. "Always doubting, always dead." But "a living faith, a living saint."

Let us, dear Brn. and Srs., take hold of the promises, trust God in every emergency, and never suffer the contempt and cruelty of man to obliterate the smiles of a Holy God. We are almost home, glory to God. Amen.

"Oh for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by every foe,
That will not tremble on the brink
Of poverty and woe."

Peace and Safety.

By JAMES CRAWFORD.

BR MERRIAM:—For some 10 to 15 years I have heard much said in reference to the cry of peace and safety, as having reference to a point of time in respect to the coming of the long-looked-for Son of God, and when the time promulgated had all passed by, then it was that the opposers of the coming of the Lord would make the cry spoken of. I have in my own mind objections to the position above named, the principal of which is, that the Apostle's argument is not upon time, and therefore it is not at all reasonable to suppose that he then referred to a chronological period, foreign, or not at all connected with his argument. The idea of peace and safety here presented must, of necessity, be in direct opposition to the point maintained in his argument, in relation to the salvation of the Church of God. The point in question is an event, and not, the time of the event.

It is generally, although I think incorrectly, believed that the Apostle had reference to time. The coming of the Lord is brought in, to prove what?

That the dead are raised in order to salvation; and to this end agrees the testimony of the same fearless advocate of life through Christ at the last trump; "for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised." "If the dead rise not, then those who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." That the dead are to be raised in order to salvation is indubitable; and the cry of peace and safety is salvation independent of the resurrection from the dead, independent of the character, which will ensure eternal life through Christ at His coming through a resurrection of the dead; and the denial of the raising of the dead, is also a denial of the event connected with it. In 1 Thess. 1 : 9, 10, the Church composed of Thessalonians which are in the Father and the Son, spread abroad the fact, that they had "turned away from idols, (and a Church in the Father and Son always do,) to serve the living God, And to wait for His Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, Jesus which hath delivered us from the wrath to come." This deliverance is to be accomplished at His appearing.—The Apostle (ch. 2 : 17–19) being absent from the Brn. had great desire to see them, was hindered once and again (by Satan) from meeting them; but the fact that Christ would come, and that, dead or alive, they would there be present, consoled him, under the deprivations that he then endured; and in ch. 3 : 10–13 he desires to see them, in order to perfect their faith, that they might increase and abound in love to the end, "that ye may be established in holiness before God, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

In the 4th ch. the Apostle goes on to enforce upon the minds of the brethren, the importance of living out the principle of love in all the duties of life; and at the closing up of the 12th v., he stops short, as though some important point now rushed into his mind, to be more fully made known to the Church, a point, which if lost sight of, must subject them to the cry of peace and safety, and consequently to deception and perdition. "I would not (says he,) have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope (of life through Christ, by resurrection of the dead.) For if we believe that Jesus died, and rose again, even so them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him (from the dead.) As certain as our blessed Lord and Master arose from the dead by the power of God, so certain the brethren which are asleep in Christ shall be waked up, and so certain your sorrows shall be healed; (sorrows brought on in consequence of the loss of friends and brethren in Christ, by death.) And in the 15th v. he strengthens his argument by an appeal to the word of the Lord that declares "we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep," and in the 16th v. enlarges on the event and gives in connection with it the coming of the Lord. "For (says he,) the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God, and (the point maintained in the argument,) the dead in Christ shall rise first.

v. 17. Then we which are alive, and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we (forever after) be with the Lord. Wherefore (such being the facts in the case) comfort one another with these words." What words? The bringing the Church to life again at the coming of the Lord.

Ch. 5 : 9. "Not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. Who died for us, that, whether we wake (are alive,) or sleep, (are dead,) we should live together with him, (at his coming.) Wherefore comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, as also ye do."

"But of the times and seasons—(of what? of the waking up of the saints of all ages from their quiet repose,) ye have no need that I write unto you." Why? Because the saints in every period of time have looked forward to the event with the utmost confidence, having the light of life in them. Abraham looked for a city which hath foundations, and expected to enter the same. Job declares, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth; and though, (notwithstanding) after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, (not in spirit only, or by the eye of faith, but) mine eyes shall behold, and not another." David could not be satisfied until he awoke in His likeness; and that Prophet whose prophetic vision was so clear, exclaims, "thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake, and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs; the earth shall cast out her dead. The earth shall disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain." Says Martha:—"I know that he (her brother) shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day."

Then will the prisoners be released, when He reigns before His ancients gloriously, when He cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth. Michael shall stand up, and many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave."

"The day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night."

The suddenness of the event might be to them, as a thief in the night. What is the event? the resurrection of the dead. Who denies the point in question? and that in the absolute sense—on the broadest scale? Not the Universalists; for they in part believe that the dead shall be raised.

Is there any other class, that has come into existence within the space, or half the space of time, that the coming of the Lord has been preached? Yes; alas who has known, as a body of believers in their delusion until within a few years, until within the remembrance of us all, a class who profess to hold communion with heaven, earth and hell? who deny, in the absolute sense of the term, the point of salvation brought to view in Paul's argument for the safety of the entire Church of God—viz. the resurrection of the dead; and more than this, they testify, as they say, from the Father, that the man's body dies, and is no more; and that Angels and all spirits good and bad testify to the old story of Satan, "thou shalt not surely die;" that when the body dies the soul enters upon a state of ETERNAL PROGRESSION. And all this independent of the resurrection of the dead, for there is none; independent of Christ, for there is none; independent of the terms of salvation presented in the Bible. But is their mission without proof? By no means. The dead are not raised to be sure, but the sick, the lame, the halt, the blind, are made to rejoice in the wonderful power of what they esteem God.—There are about three millions of this class in the United States, if I am correctly informed by their own [illegible]

And is it true that sudden destruction cometh upon them? Such is the testimony of the inspired Apostle, and he adds with emphasis, "they shall not escape."

Considerations for the Flock.

By GEORGE L. T[illegible].

Is it our chief delight to be with the saints, especially those that excel in virtue? Ps. 16 : 3.

Is every company burdensome to us that is not desiring our Father's glory, but derogating therefrom? 2 Pet. 2 : 7, 8.

Is the path of the humble so delightful to us that we had rather be with them than dwell in the tents of wickedness? Acts 20 : 19; Ps. 84 : 10.

Is the yoke of self denial, as imposed by Christ, pleasant to us? Matt. 11 : 29, 30; Mark 10 : 28.

Do the thoughts of the coming of the Lord and the judgment of the great day make us answer every call of Christ to do or suffer cheerfully all His righteous will? 2d Cor. 5 : 9, 10; Acts 24 : 15, 16.

Do we have an anxious care to get the power of godliness in the heart, rather than the form of godliness in the head, and from this company that has the form turn away? 2d Tim. 3 : 5.

If we can answer the above questions in the affirmative, we may take courage, and wait for the hope of righteousness by faith. O let us be careful lest we abide not in Christ, but are cast forth as a branch and are withered.

If we are so indifferent in regard to attending divine service that we can attend or not, at our own pleasure, and when there, are not easily suited, but dislike the man, matter, or manner, and do not like the plain, cutting truths of the Bible, then we should repent before God in humility. As Paul says, "Examine yourselves."

Let us consider some of the marks of a declining or luke-warm professor of religion, and then see whether we have the mark or not. If we have, let us "be zealous and repent."

One who is luke-warm will have no great mind to prayer—the searching of the Scriptures will be more burdensome than delightful.

He will come to meeting more through fear of the eyes of the Brn. than Christ's omniscient and all-piercing eye—he will sooner betray the cause of Jesus, and the credit of his Gospel, by his silence, than speak for it to his own suffering and disparagement.

He will love those Christians the least who the most faithfully warn, rebuke and reprove him. Read Ps. 141 : 5; and Prov. 9 : 8.

He is extremely careful about the lesser matters of God's law, but extremely careless about the weightier.

He finds greater satisfaction in the company of the world, than with the people of God.

May the Lord help us in this day when we are to watch and be sober, to regulate our lives by the Gospel rule, lest we be overtaken in the snare, is the prayer of your Br., waiting for Jesus.

A word to Women; cause of disobedient Children.

By L. L[illegible].

How alarming is the present state of Society! Look for a moment at the rising generation. Notice the impudence and disobedience of children. And since there is a cause for every thing, let us inquire for the cause of the present state of things.

Why is it that children treat their superiors with so much irreverence and disrespect, and pay so little regard to parental authority? [illegible]

Prophecy Fulfilled.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

(Concluded.)

Says another:—"You have written largely on the subject, but your arguments have been very illogical; and if you set times, you forfeit your influence over the minds of your fellows, when it passes by; they lose confidence in you as a teacher, and will not be likely to hearken to you again; your power over them is gone."

And by this you can see a fulfilment of prophecy, and prove that the end is near; for "when he shall have accomplished to scatter (or disperse) the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." It matters not how that power is removed, if it is gone; were it not so, how should we know that we belonged to that class here designated as the "holy people?"—As to my arguments, they are before the Church and the world; and I have only to say, (take them as a whole,) I have no desire to recal them; before my Judge I expect very soon to stand, and I long to see the day. I believe we are as near the truth as our opponents, to say the least.

If it were a fault for me to write at all, and ten or twenty articles, and some of them very small, can be called writing "largely," I shall be constrained to plead guilty. We acknowledge that we have been mistaken in the time of the termination of the vision; but alas, how different are the rebukes that we meet with from the Seventy, who returned with joy to their Master, saying, "Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." They were mistaken; they thought it was right for them to rejoice; but did the Lord rebuke them? No, but kindly said, "In this, rejoice not." If any of the children, who have, with the greatest artlessness and singleness of purpose, designed to follow in the footsteps of their Lord and Master, have met with unkind treatment, I hope they will consider Him who endured such contradiction of sinners, lest (they) be weary and faint in their minds; and exercise that faith which overcomes the world. The grace of God is sufficient for you; He will never, no, never, leave nor forsake you.

Dear Brn. and Srs.—We sympathize with you in your tribulation; we would bear your burdens, "and so fulfil the law of Christ." We must put no trust in man, but in the living God, and keep on the armor; for we are on "the enchanted ground." Let us beware of the flatterer, and ever feel that we are the body of Christ, and members in particular. "If we then are members one of another, and even of His body, of His flesh and of His bones, it certainly follows that we shall love one another [illegible] of the natural body do not war against, and destroy each other. Love is the first fruit of the Spirit, and is followed by joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance." We may be joyful, peaceful, gentle, and temperate, and yet not heirs of the grace of life. We may have all faith, so as to remove mountains, and yet be nothing, if it do not work by love.

Probably we shall have no more light on the chronological prophecies; but by "the signs of the times," we find ourselves within soundings of the better country.—Of the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, we have the testimony of Apostles, who were "eye-witnesses of His majesty," and likewise a more sure word of prophecy, on which we may rely till the heavens shall reveal Him. The enemy is still walking about, "seeking whom he may devour," even now, especially, is a time when false teachers will "bring in damnable heresies; even denying the Lord that bought them; and bring upon themselves swift destruction." How important the exhortation, "resist the devil, and he will flee from you." But if we forsake the light of truth, and follow the seducers of these last days, the fruits of our "harvest will be a heap, in the day of grief, and of desperate sorrow." "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: for when they say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape." "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.—For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth."

We learn that there are great commotions in different parts of the world, that the slaughter of human life in the late battles has been immense; the warlike state of the nations, and the prevalence of the unclean spirits are unequivocal prognostics of the great day of God Almighty. Peace and Safety.

BY JAMES CRAWFORD.

Br Merriam:—For some 10 to 15 years I have heard much said in reference to the cry of peace and safety, as having reference to a point of time in respect to the coming of the long-looked-for Son of God, and when the time promulgated had all passed by, then it was that the opposers of the coming of the Lord would make the cry spoken of. In 1 Thess. 1: 9, 10, the Church composed of Thessalonians which are in the Father and the Son, spread abroad the fact, that they had "turned away from idols, (and a Church in the Father and Son always do,) to serve the living God, And to wait for His Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, Jesus which hath delivered us from the wrath to come." This deliverance is to be accomplished at His appearing.—The Apostle (ch. 2: 17–19) being absent from the Brn. had great desire to see them, was hindered once and again (by Satan) from meeting them; but the fact that Christ would come, and that, dead or alive, they would there be present, consoled him, under the deprivations that he then endured; and in ch. 3: 10–13 he desires to see them, in order to perfect their faith, that they might increase and abound in love to the end, "that ye may be established in holiness before God, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

In the 4th ch. the Apostle goes on to enforce upon the minds of the brethren, the importance of living out the principle of love in all the duties of life; and at the closing up of the 12th v., he stops short, as though some important point now rushed into his mind, to be more fully made known to the Church, a point, which if lost sight of, must subject them to the cry of peace and safety, and consequently to deception and perdition. "I would not (says he,) have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope (of life through Christ, by resurrection of the dead.) For if we believe that Jesus died, and rose, again, even so them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him (from the dead.) As certain as our blessed Lord and Master arose from the dead by the power of God, so certain the brethren which are asleep in Christ shall be waked up, and so certain your sorrows shall be healed; (sorrows brought on in consequence of the loss of friends and brethren in Christ, by death.) And in the 15th v. he strengthens his argument by an appeal to the word of the Lord that declares "we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep," and in the 16th v. enlarges on the event, and gives in connection with it the coming of the Lord. "For, (says he,) the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God, and (the point maintained in the argument,) the dead in Christ shall rise first.

v. 17. Then we which are alive, and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we (forever after) be with the Lord. Wherefore (such being the facts in the case) comfort one another with these words." What words? The bringing the Church to life again at the coming of the Lord.

Ch. 5: 9. "Not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. Who died for us, that, whether we wake (are alive,) or sleep, (are dead,) we should live together with him, (at his coming.) Wherefore comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, as also ye do."

"But of the times and seasons—(of what? of the waking up of the saints of all ages from their quiet repose,) ye have no need that I write unto you." Why? Because the saints in every period of time have looked forward to the event with the utmost confidence, having the light of life in them. Abraham looked for a city which hath foundations, and expected to enter the same. Job declares, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth; and though (notwithstanding) after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, (not in spirit only, or by the eye of faith, but) mine eyes shall behold, and not another." David could not be satisfied until he awoke in His likeness; and that Prophet whose prophetic vision was so clear, exclaims, "thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake, and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs; the earth shall cast out her dead. The earth shall disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain." Says Martha:—"I know that he (her brother) shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day."

Then will the prisoners be released, when He reigns before His ancients gloriously, when He cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth. Michael shall stand up, and many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave."

"The day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night."

The suddenness of the event might be to them, as a thief in the night. What is the event? the resurrection of the dead. Who denies the point in question? and that in the absolute sense—on the broadest scale? Not the Universalists; for they in part believe that the dead shall be raised.

Is there any other class, that has come into existence within the space, or half the space of time, that the coming of the Lord has been preached? Yes, alas who has known, as a body of believers in their delusion until within a few years, until within the remembrance of us all, a class who profess to hold communion with heaven, earth and hell? who deny, in the absolute sense of the term, the point of salvation brought to view in Paul's argument for the safety of the entire Church of God—viz. the resurrection of the dead; and more than this, they testify, as they say, from the Father, that the man's body dies, and is no more; and that Angels and all spirits good and bad testify to the old story of Satan, "thou shalt not surely die;" that when the body dies the soul enters upon a state of ETERNAL PROGRESSION. And all this independent of the resurrection of the dead, for there is none; independent of Christ, for there is none; independent of the terms of salvation presented in the Bible. But is their mission without proof? By no means. The dead are not raised to be sure, but the sick, the lame, the halt, the blind, are made to rejoice in the wonderful power of what they esteem God. There are about three millions of this class in the United States, if I am correctly informed by their own [illegible] "Peace and Safety."

And is it true that sudden destruction cometh upon them? Such is the testimony of the inspired Apostle, and he adds with emphasis, "they shall not escape."

For The Crisis.

Considerations for the Flock.

BY GEORGE L. TEEPLE.

Is it our chief delight to be with the saints, especially those that excel in virtue? Ps. 16: 3.

Is every company burdensome to us that is not desiring our Father's glory, but derogating therefrom? 2 Pet. 2: 7, 8.

Is the path of the humble so delightful to us that we had rather be with them than dwell in the tents of wickedness? Acts 20: 19; Ps. 84: 10.

Is the yoke of self denial, as imposed by Christ, pleasant to us? Matt. 11: 29, 30; Mark 10: 28.

Do the thoughts of the coming of the Lord and the judgment of the great day make us answer every call of Christ to do or suffer cheerfully all His righteous will? 2d Cor. 5: 9, 10; Acts 24: 15, 16.

Do we have an anxious care to get the power of godliness in the heart, rather than the form of godliness in the head, and from this company that has the form turn away? 2d Tim. 3: 5.

If we can answer the above questions in the affirmative, we may take courage, and wait for the hope of righteousness by faith. O let us be careful lest we abide not in Christ, but are cast forth as a branch and are withered.

If we are so indifferent in regard to attending divine service that we can attend or not, at our own pleasure, and when there, are not easily suited, but dislike the man, matter, or manner, and do not like the plain, cutting truths of the Bible, then we should repent before God in humility. As Paul says, "Examine yourselves."

Let us consider some of the marks of a declining or luke-warm professor of religion, and then see whether we have the mark or not. If we have, let us "be zealous and repent."

One who is luke-warm will have no great mind to prayer—the searching of the Scriptures will be more burdensome than delightful.

He will come to meeting more through fear of the eyes of the Brn. than Christ's omniscient and all-piercing eye—he will sooner betray the cause of Jesus, and the credit of his Gospel, by his silence, than speak for it to his own suffering and disparagement.

He will love those Christians the least who the most faithfully warn, rebuke and reprove him. Read Ps. 141: 5; and Prov. 9: 8.

He is extremely careful about the lesser matters of God's law, but extremely careless about the weightier.

He finds greater satisfaction in the company of the world, than with the people of God.

May the Lord help us in this day when we are to watch and be sober, to regulate our lives by the Gospel rule, lest we be overtaken in the snare, is the prayer of your Br., waiting for Jesus.

For the Crisis.

A word to Women; cause of disobedient Children.

BY L. [illegible]

How alarming is the present state of Society! Look for a moment at the rising generation. Notice the [illegible] and disobedience of children. And since there is a cause for every thing, let us inquire for the cause of the present state of things.

Why is it that children treat their superiors with so much irreverence and disrespect, and pay so little heed to parental authority? [illegible]

[illegible] the same manner. That would be [illegible] natural. And it would [illegible] the father to obtain that [illegible] and cheerful obedience, that he otherwise [illegible] from his children. There may be minor causes; but this appears to be the GREAT and PRINCIPAL cause of the present disrespect and disobedience of children.

Where are the aged women that "teach the young women to be sober, to love and obey their husbands?" &c. Titus 2: 3-5. There may be some, but if so, they are few, and far between.

Again; I ask, notwithstanding the injunction of Scripture that "as the Church is subject to Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing," (Eph. 5: 24,) where is the wife that thinks of rendering due obedience to her husband? The reason why obedience is thus enjoined upon the wife is, "The husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the Church." Eph. 5: 23. Is the Church under obligation to love, reverence and obey Christ as her Head?—Even so is the wife, her Husband. We are all very apt to imitate the example of those with whom we associate most, and if the wife would render that obedience, &c., to her husband that the Church should to Christ, it would be much easier to obtain that respect and obedience from children which is due from them. Indeed the example of the mother does much towards forming the characters of her children.

I speak not these things to condemn you, but as my beloved sisters, I admonish you, and entreat you to adorn yourselves as the holy women anciently did, with a meek and quiet spirit; who were in subjection to their own husbands. 1st Pet. 3: 4, 5. What benefit can you derive from fretting and scolding at your husband? It makes him no better, does you no good, and it is a very bad example to set before your children. Therefore, as you value your own usefulness, and the usefulness and happiness of your children, I entreat you, heed the admonitions of Scripture, and follow the example of the holy women of old, who trusted in God. Then you will see the blessed results of obedience and good example, God will be honored, and yourselves and your families benefited. Amen.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, AUGUST 25, 1855.

V. 4. "Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the Lord; and be strong, O Josedech the high priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work: for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts:"

What a blessed consolation is embodied in these words! This is encouragement from the right source—a promise of favour from Him who is able to "redeem Israel out of all his troubles"—from Him who sees the end from the beginning, who therefore knew full well the true state of the case. It came from Him whose eye penetrates all hearts, sees the malice and the designs of every foe, and who has power to counteract every hostile effort, and destroy every enemy to His beloved covenant people. How cheering to hear His voice saying, "I am with you," commanding them to "be strong," to summon all their resolution, to concentrate all their energies in the work of building the house of God. The encouragement is given not only to Zerubbabel and Joshua, but also to all the people of the land, to be strong and labor in the work. The Lord respects not only those who are luminaries in the Church; but also all His people, desiring them to make the God of Jacob their refuge, promising them comfort and consolation divine, and strength that shall be as their day.

V. 5. "According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so my spirit remaineth among you: fear ye not."

How comforting to think that God still remembered the covenant which He made with the children of Israel when He delivered them from Egyptian bondage, and adopted them as His people, gave them statutes and ordinances to be observed, [illegible] from all the nations [illegible] by signs and wonders [illegible] all-powerful [illegible] thousand years [illegible] [illegible] the promise of God! The word that goes forth of the mouth is more immovable than the pillars of heaven; it [illegible] as it were, an embodiment of divinity, and will no sooner fall than the throne of God.

It is a long time since the promise was made with Noah and "every living creature for perpetual generations."

The condition of the covenant was, that there should not "any more be a flood to destroy the earth:" or, as He had previously expressed it, "while the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease."

Age after age rolls away, and God still remembers His promise; century after century, and still He does not forget; one thousand years after another, and still the promise stands. No universal deluge has again visited the world. The earth rolls round in its annual orbit, and revolves on its axis, bringing the vicissitudes of day and night, summer and winter, and all the varieties of the seasons. With Him is "no variableness, neither shadow of turning;" Jesus Christ is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." How weighty this consideration! All things around us are full of change. All the elements of the natural world are in a sort of transition state. Every thing in the animal, vegetable and mineral kingdom is undergoing a series of constant changes; passing through formations and decomposition, reproduction and decay again, so that there is nothing substantial and permanent upon which we can plant our feet, feeling this is something real and unchanging as the throne of God. How blessed therefore is the thought of an everlasting rock—an immovable foundation—to think of a being who, above the jargon and commotions of all things earthly, peacefully "rolls on His undisturbed affairs;" and to realize that though all creatures may forget, and all things else change, He will never forget, nor cease to remember His covenant with His children!! How blessed to think that although we have so long been agitated by an ocean of perplexity and unrest, although we have been tossed by the heaving billows of adversity and change, yet there is a tranquil and peaceful ocean of God's love where commotion never comes.

> "There shall I bathe my weary soul
> In seas of heavenly rest,
> And not a wave of trouble roll
> Across my peaceful breast."

"My Spirit remaineth among you."—God's Spirit was manifest among the children of Israel at this time by the messages brought by the Prophets Haggai and Zechariah. It was also a divine influence that stirred up the people to labor, and the kings of Persia to favor them; and if God's power was on their side that was the help they needed for it was a power that controlled all other powers and dominions. His arm was to be relied upon; for it was an arm of "everlasting strength," and consequently could not fail; and the whole enterprise depended not on the might or power of man, but the Spirit of the living God.

How unspeakably consoling it is to the child of God, to feel in his very soul that God is with him. How reanimating to poor, fainting, trembling mortals, to hear the voice of the mighty God, "lo, I am with you." How cheering it must have been to the hearts of Christ's disciples when they were alarmed and agitated by the tossing of the billows and the fury of the tempest, to hear the voice of their divine Master, "it is I; be not afraid."—That voice that could command the winds and waves said to them, "be not afraid;" therefore what cause of fear? He could control the elements and direct the storm; therefore all was well. Just so when the child of God is harrassed by the enemy, tossed on the billows of commotion, however dark the clouds, however threatening the storm, and tumultuous the waves, when Jesus whispers, "peace," and the soul feels a calm, confiding trust in sinking into the arms of His tender mercy, how safe from fear of evil! how secure from the assaults of every foe! O there is something so unspeakably blessed in feeling the Savior's immediate presence, in resting on the bosom of His infinite love; there is such a sweet assurance of divine protection and perfect safety, that the heart reposes in quietude, rests in placid serenity under the shadow of the Almighty, under the banner of Jesus' love.

V. 6, 7. "For thus saith the Lord of hosts; Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts."

This passage is, to my mind, involved in no inconsiderable difficulty, so that to give a perfectly clear and satisfactory exposition, would not be in my power; but some clue may be found to its divine instruction, and some rays of light may be elicited; enough, at least, to cheer the heart of the despondent, and send a thrill of joy through the believer's soul, as he contemplates the glory and beauty shining out through the consolations communicated to the disheartened laborers in the work of God.

Two questions at once present themselves for solution.

1. What is meant by the shaking of the nations?

2. In what respect was the Temple then in building, more glorious than the Temple of Solomon?

Turning to Heb. 12th, we find the Apostle treating of the giving of the law from Sinai amid blackness and darkness and tempest; and comparing this scene with the dispensation of the New Covenant. Referring to the giving of the law, he says: "whose voice then shook the earth;" i. e. at the time of receiving the law from Sinai, when "the voice of the trumpet was exceeding loud," "the whole mount quaked greatly." Thus, then, it appears that when the voice of God shook the earth, it was at a scene preparatory to a new dispensation: the sound of the trumpet was like a herald to usher in the economy of the law. The Apostle then adds: "but now he hath promised, YET ONCE MORE, I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." The former shaking was only partial, this is to be universal. The Greek term here rendered, once more, is very emphatic, and might have been rendered, once for all, implying that it would be a final shaking, the last shaking. V. 27; "And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain." The word rendered "signifieth" means to make clear, or to prove a thing.

"As of things that are made."—The Greek word rendered "are made" is pepoieemenoon. I find in the Greek margin the word peponeemenoon substituted; and the two words are so nearly alike, that it is conjectured so slight an alteration might have been made by the transcribers. If so, it may be rendered, "as of things that are WORN OUT." "Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away," says the Apostle. Both Tyndale and Cranmer render this clause thus, "as of things that have ended their course," which gives nearly the same idea as above quoted.

The word rendered, "the removing," is in the Rheims version, and by Wickliff rendered, "the translation," and by Murdoch, "the mutation." The Greek word Metathesin properly means transposition, alteration, or change; and the idea seems analogous to that presented in Heb. 1: 10-12. "And Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thine hands; They shall perish; but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail."

V. 28. "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear."

In this verse the idea is distinctly presented, that those things which cannot be shaken constitute the KINGDOM OF GOD, and as this is placed in contrast with those things which may be shaken, we naturally infer that those things which can be shaken are the kingdoms of this world. To make this more evident, turn to Haggai 2: 20-22. "And again the word of the Lord came unto Haggai in the four and twentieth day of the month, saying, Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth; And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother."

We have shown from Heb. 12: 28, that those things which CANNOT be shaken are the Kingdom of God; we now show from the passage last quoted, that the things which ARE to be shaken are the kingdoms of men. The result of their being shaken is, that God "will OVERTHROW THE THRONE of kingdoms, and will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen;" and the manner of their destruction is, that they shall come down every one by the SWORD of his brother. [illegible] accomplish the removing, translation, or transferring of the kingdoms, when, as predicted under the seventh trumpet, "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever."

Thus far all is plain; but a difficulty now presents itself, viz. if the shaking of heaven and earth symbolizes the overthrow of the kingdoms, how could this shaking be said to take place at the first Advent, as represented in the prophecy of Haggai 2: 6-9? for history shows that at the period of our Lord's birth, it was a time of universal peace, and not a time of commotion and destruction of earthly kingdoms.

It may be said, that the Scriptures of the Prophets often refer to the two Advents of Christ as if there were but one. Thus Mal. 3: 1, 2. "And the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' sope:"

Here the two Advents appear to be blended together.

Again: Is. 11: 1, "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots:"

V. 4. "And he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked."

Here the two Advents appear to be blended. Again: vs. 10, 11, "And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea."

Here again the two Advents appear blended together.

But this does not remove the difficulty; for it is plainly represented by Haggai, that in consequence of the universal shaking, or overthrow of nations, the desire of all nations would come, and the house which they were then building would be filled with glory. Adam Clark shews from the original, that the expression, "the desire of all nations shall come," should be translated, "the desirable things of all nations shall come," i. e. offerings or gifts shall be brought in from all nations.

The most satisfactory solution of the difficulty, to my mind, is, that the Scriptures sometimes refer directly to a person or object, and in the same connection refer to some other person or object of which the former was a type; so that in such cases there is a partial fulfilment of the prophecy in the type, but a more perfect fulfilment in the antitype.

Thus in the 69th Ps. David says, (v. 5,) "O God, thou knowest my foolishness; and my sins are not hid from thee." This, it is evident, must apply to David personally; but when he says (v. 21,) "they gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink," the reference is to Christ—the antitype of David.

Again Ps. 89th has reference to the kingdom of David, and the covenant which God made with him in relation to it, vs. 30-32. "If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments; If they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; Then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes." This must refer directly to David himself; but in v. 36 we read: "His seed shall endure forever, and his throne AS THE SUN before me." This could not have been fulfilled literally in relation to the throne of David, but must allude to the Kingdom of Christ.

Thus in Is. 34, the Prophet in speaking of the punishment of Idumea connects with it other nations in such a manner that the destruction of the whole world is involved. I think therefore it would be no departure from Scripture usage, if we consider a portion of this prophecy as having reference to the literal Temple which was then being built, and another portion as referring to that which was typified by that Temple; thus the prophecy would have a partial fulfilment in the type, and a more perfect and glorious fulfilment in the antitype.

The partial fulfilment was the abolition of the Jewish ritual, and the introduction of the Gospel economy, in the same manner as by the sound of the trumpet on Sinai the patriarchal dispensation ceased and the Mosaic economy began. The ceremonies of the law were not intended as a permanent establishment, but only as types and shadows of good things to come; they had ended their course, or waxed old, and were ready to vanish away; but the New Covenant was designed to be perpetual. The modes and forms of the ritual were to pass away; but the law which superceded them was a law of love, prompting to the discharge of every duty to God and man. The former was local and temporary, the latter designed to be universal and permanent. The former consisted in the performance of external ceremonies, the latter in having the law of God and the image of His Son enstamped on the heart. In the former case, they were nominally the people of God; in the latter, they were received into His family by special adoption, made heirs by grace, and are entitled to all the privileges of the sons of God. Under the former their priests did not "continue by reason of death;" under the latter, the High Priest "continueth ever," being constituted after "the power of an endless life." Under the former, their kings were but transient monarchs, their sceptre being broken by death; under the latter, the King is the PRINCE OF LIFE, and having conquered death, He exclaims, "I am He that was dead, but am alive forevermore." Under the former, sacrifices and offerings were renewed continually; under the latter, he hath by one offering "perfected forever them that are sanctified." Under the former the requisitions "stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation; under the latter, the pure and holy elements of the Kingdom are introduced, which consist not of "meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Thus the laws, maxims and principles of the Jewish economy being transient in their character, and designed only as preparatory to a higher and more perfect dispensation to come, while the laws, maxims and principles of the Christian economy being permanent as the throne of God, there was a partial introduction of the things that cannot be shaken—the elements of the Kingdom of God, while the Temple of Zerubbabel was yet standing. The fulfilment seems however to have been principally in a moral sense, and not in the physical and perfect sense in which, in the antitype, it will eventually be accomplished.

The Temple was a type of the spiritual house of God. Its precious stones represent the lively stones of the christian Temple of which He who is emphatically the "living stone," is the foundation, or chief corner stone. Preparatory to the erection of this Temple in all its beauty and glory, the kingdoms of this world will be shaken down by the great earthquake of God's wrath, "broken in pieces like a potter's vessel," ground to powder by the mighty stone, and "blown away like the chaff of the summer's threshing floor."

After the overthrow of those wicked powers and dominions which may be shaken, the empire of the Prince of peace will be erected on a broad, permanent foundation which can never be shaken.—It is not destined to undergo a transposition or transferring into other hands; either in relation to its Monarch, or its subjects; for Daniel says in relation to the Sovereign, "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed," ch. 7: 14; and in relation to the subjects, "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." ch. 2: 44.

V. 8. "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts."

All the gold of Ophir is but my treasure; could you accumulate all the golden ore of earth, you would but dig them from my store house. You could neither add to my riches nor glory by the precious metals which were so profusely lavished on the former house. It is not material beauty, nor splendor, that is to be desired; you can glorify me by the offering of such things as ye have, provided the heart is right with God.

V. 9. "The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of hosts: and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts."

You mourn over the inferiority of this house, but be assured the glory of this house shall be greater than that of the former. "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart." The outward and visible signs of prosperity on the part of Zion, do not always indicate, like a true thermometer, the state of the spiritual atmosphere. A Church may possess material wealth, and not be rich toward God; they may present an exhibition of outward prosperity, and yet their souls not be in health and prosper; they may exhibit the splendor of Church architecture, but the moral beauty of lively stones in the Temple be wanting. I had rather see a Church that is like a city set on a hill, shining forth as the light of the world, than a Church edifice illuminated with the most brilliant gas lights from a costly chandelier; I would rather see Church members whose conversation is in heaven, whose whole life points the community upward to where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God, than a Church edifice whose tower reaches to heaven.—Nay, the desire manifested to decorate houses of worship by furniture of the richest style, and to add every architectural adornment possible, is an alarming indication of the decay of vital piety, of the tendency in the professed Church to be satisfied with outward forms, and delighted with material splendor rather than the inward, spiritual enjoyment of the divine life, the beauty of holiness, the garments of praise, and the ornament of a pure and holy life. These last adornments are in the sight of God of great price. "Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly, but the proud he knoweth afar off." If we offer to him praise and adoration in a grove, or some humble cot, He condescends to lend a listening ear, and to recognize the worshipper, as His beloved offspring, with whose service He will be pleased, and by whose adoration He will be glorified.

But in what sense was the glory of the latter house greater than that of the former? It could not have been in material splendor, it must therefore have been so in a moral sense. They were now about restoring the Temple and city of Jerusalem, and from the commencement of that work a chronological period began which reached to the coming of the Messiah. "Know, therefore, and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks." O, it seems to me, the hearts of the good old men would leap for joy to think that the time was limited that reached to the period when the Redeemer was to "stand upon the earth." The Temple which they were then building, was to remain until the fulfilment of the 62 weeks; then the Son of David was to appear, and that house would be graced with the glory of His personal presence. They were erecting a Temple for the observance of the Mosaic ritual, but ultimately it would become a Church for the Savior of the world to preach the Gospel in. It would be but "a little while" before the bursting glories of the Messianic dispensation would, as it were, fill the house with divine illumination. They despised the day of small things, but the work in which they were engaged, had attached to it an infinite importance, inasmuch as it was identified with the divine economy, which would result in the salvation of His people. That house would stand, therefore, a memorial of God's promise, a continual remembrancer that the time was near for the coming of Christ, and those identical walls would be standing when the Lord of life should come "to make an end of sins," and "to bring in everlasting righteousness."

There was a gleam of light divine that burst upon them through the medium of the Sanctuary. It seemed like a stream of glory from the upper world that came down upon the inelegant materials of the building, and covered them with a halo of light—adorned them with a moral beauty and excellence and glory of which they had had no previous conception.

They little thought amid all their trials and despondency, that they were erecting a house for the Messiah to preach in; they little thought, as they stood mourning with a loud voice over the foundations of the Temple, that it was to be the place where the Gospel dispensation would be ushered in.

"In this place will I give peace." The Prince of peace entered that house—the proclamation of peace on earth and good will to men was made in that house by the preaching of the Gospel. After the ascension of Christ, the Apostles were commanded to preach in the Temple "all the words of this life." Acts 5: 20; and this command they fulfilled when "daily in the Temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ."

The Prophetic Periods Not Ended.

By Br. R. Morrill.

In an article published in the Crisis of June 16, I endeavored to show that according to the plain reading of the Scriptures, the 1335 days of Daniel could not have ended till after the 19th of May, '55. I will now endeavor, by the aid of God's Spirit, to show that neither the 1335, nor the 2300 days have ended yet, and will not end till the resurrection of the just.

If it can be shown that those periods will not end till the resurrection, then it follows as a matter of course, that they have not ended yet; for the resurrection has not yet taken place, and will not till the Lord comes." Proof, 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17. Dan. 12: 1-3.

Let us first examine the 2300 days.

Dan. 8: 13, 14 reads thus:—"Then I heard one saint speaking: and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

One thing we will notice here, and that is, the time here given is as long as is the treading of the sanctuary and host under foot. So long then, as the sanctuary and host are trodden under foot, so long the 2300 days have not ended.

The host here referred to is the Church of God, (see v. 10,) the sanctuary therefore cannot mean the Church, but something else. It is generally understood to refer either to the land of Palestine, or the earth. Be this as it may, the host can mean nothing else but the people of God. So long, then, as the people of God are trodden under foot, so long the 2300 days have not ended. And are not God's people trodden under foot now? If so, the days have not yet ended. If not, when were they delivered? or when did this treading under foot cease?

It is certain they were not delivered last fall, or last spring, or this summer, at the Pentecost. It is also certain that they are not yet delivered. See Dan. 7; 21, 22. But when will they be delivered?

Answer. When Michael the great prince stands up; Dan. 12: 1; and as Michael is no other than our Lord, and as His standing up is His commencing to reign, therefore it will not be till our Lord comes to reign; and, according to Dan. 12: 2, it will be at the resurrection.—Therefore the 2300 days will not end till the coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead.

Again. There is no proof that the 2300 days commenced in the year 446 B. C. According to Usher, Bliss and other chronologers, the decree to build Jerusalem went forth in the spring 445 B. C.—If this be correct, and the vulgar era correct, then the 2300 days will not end till next spring.

I know it has been preached with great positiveness, that the 2300 days would end in '54, or the spring of '55; and it has been as positively believed; and the reason was we believed that the 1335 days would run out then: (for we believe those periods will end together;) and our miss-application of the darkening of the sun was the cause of our positiveness on the termination of the 1335 days.

I will now examine the 1335 days.

This period is given as the final answer to the question contained in the 6th verse of the 12 chap. of Dan. which is this:—"How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?"

If we read the 11th chap. and the first part of the 12 chap., we shall learn what these wonders are; and more, the time here given includes them all; therefore if we fix upon a time when we think this period will end, and our time runs out before we see the last wonders, we are forced to the conclusion that our time is not correct.

The last of the wonders given here are the standing up of Michael, the time of trouble, the deliverance of God's people, the resurrection of the dead, the shining of the wise, &c.

But have all of these things taken place yet? Most certainly they have not.

Then this period has not run out yet, our time was not correct, the periods did not commence in 519, the 1260 days did not end in 1779, and the 1290 did not end in 1809.

These are conclusions we are forced to arrive at, for they are in accordance with Scripture and our best judgment.

But let us not Brn. be disheartened in consequence of our times passing, but let [illegible] us be patient amid all our trials; for the trial of our faith is much more precious than gold that perisheth. I know we have met with a sad disappointment; but if we love God, it will work for our good; for all things work for good to them that love God. If we endure to the end, we shall be saved; then all will be happiness, joy and peace.

Your Br. looking for deliverance at the end of the days. R. Morrill.

Letter from Sr. V. A. L. B.

Sandwich, N. H.

We have been grievously disappointed in the passing of specific points of time, at which we expected our Redeemer to come to Zion and deliver His people; but the signs of the times, show that the great event for which we are looking is not far distant in the future. When was the world ever in such commotion as at present? Do not those scenes which are passing before our eyes portend that the great revolution in human affairs is soon to come? I believe so; and such has long been my faith. I was identified with the believers in '43, and have never been sorry for my faith.

In early life I sought my Savior, at the age of 12 years, and I have ever since valued the religion of Jesus Christ, and by the grace of God I expect to hold out to the end.

The first lectures I ever heard on the Advent doctrines were delivered by Br. Miller; the influence of which on my mind I trust will never be lost. I often wish I were possessed of the talent which some enjoy of communicating my views of Scripture truth as it unfolds itself to my mind.

Oft-times after listening to Brn. Berick, Couch, Adrian and others, I have felt my soul filled to overflowing with the sublime and glorious truths connected with the Advent faith. I often think it would do my soul good to write for the Crisis, but feel my inability. I hope however that those who have the faculty will improve their talent to the glory of God.

Hope none of my Brn. or Srs. will fall asleep because the time is passed, lest the woe fall upon them; there is the more need of awaking to new engagedness, and doubling our diligence that no man take our crown in that day. Whatever others may do, I, for one, am determined by the assistance of God's grace, and the prayers of the Brn., to hold on to the faith once delivered to the saints, and to persevere onward to the end of the Christian journey.

That many more souls may be brought into the fold of Christ, is the prayer of your unworthy Sr. V. A. L. B.

☞ A highly interesting letter from Syria has been recently published in the Evening Traveler, having reference to the worship of Mohammedans. We give the following extracts:—

"The Mohammedan temple is called a mosque, and its construction very much resembles a Christian church. Indeed, it is a painful fact that some of the most elegant and spacious mosques were once Christian churches; but wrested from their rightful owners, and perverted from their original uses, when the Crescent triumphed, for a season only, we are sure, over the Cross, they have from that day to this subserved the cause of the false Prophet. The magnificent mosque of St Sophia at Constantinople once resounded with the voice of Christian instruction, praise, and prayer; the mosque of Omar at Jerusalem occupies the very site of the ancient temple, and is held by the worshippers to be equally holy, and in this city the largest mosque of the four within the walls, besides others without, was the church of St. John, built in the time of the Crusaders, spacious, elegant, and in the best preservation.—They are built of stone, and of course are less liable to decay and defacement.

* * * * *

"Instead of the steeple of the Christian Church, the Moslem mosque has its minaret, usually square, but sometimes round, and whose elevation corresponds with the dimensions of the edifice above which it rises. It is never carried up to a point, but is surmounted by a cap like a dome, whose eaves, projecting beyond the walls of the minaret, cover the balcony carried around the minaret some feet below, around which the muezzin, or public crier walks at the proper hours, by day and by night, to announce the time of prayer. In the court in front of the mosque, is a reservoir supplied with water from an aqueduct or living fountain, at which, at all times nearly, the worshippers may be seen performing their ablutions. The inside of the mosque is perfectly naked. There are no pews, no benches, no slips, or even a chair or stool in the whole edifice. On one side there is a pulpit carried out some distance from the wall, and seeming to be hung out in the air, which is of so narrow dimensions as barely to hold the occupant. There are no pictures to adorn the walls, or images and statues meeting the eye wherever it turns, as in the oriental Christian churches; nor orchestra, organ, or musical instruments of any kind, or even a human voice to aid the worshipper by its sweet and sacred strains.

* * * * *

"Ablution, or the cleansing of the body makes an important part of Moslem worship, or rather is preparatory to it, their Prophet pronouncing it the key to prayer, without which prayer cannot be acceptable.

* * * * *

"Prayer makes an essential part of the Moslem's religion. As ablution was declared by Mohammed to be the key to prayer, so prayer he pronounced to be the key to heaven. There are five seasons of prayer prescribed by the Koran, viz., in the morning before sunrise, at noon, in the afternoon, in the evening after sunset, while twilight remains; and at midnight. At these stated seasons of devotion [illegible] is summoned to perform the duty by the voice of the public criers from the minarets.

* * * * *

"I have [illegible] that there are five stated seasons of daily prayer, on the recurrence of each of which, the muezzin, or public crier, who is an attache of the mosque, and supported from its endowments, ascends the minaret, and walking three or four times round it in the balcony built near the top and directly under the dome, cries out as he goes:

"Allah akbar! Allah akbar! La Allah il-Allah! Mohammed Resoul Allah!"

"God is great! God is great! There is no God but God! Mahomet is God's Prophet!" Come to Prayer! Come to prayer!

To the morning call he adds:—"Prayer is sweeter than sleep. Come to prayer!"

"Some of these criers have acquired wonderful power and compass of voice by the long continued use of their lungs in this service, and may easily be heard half a mile; while the plaintive and tremulous tone in which they sing every word, prolonging it to the time of a sentence, and thus pour out their solemn messages to mortals below from their aerial habitations, sends a wave of deep emotion over every heart which feels and reflects. For my part, I should like to have a muezzin attached to every Christian steeple, provided in his ministrations he would leave out the part of the Prophet."

A New Shell. We see it stated that Professor Homer Anderson, late professor of natural science at Clinton, this State, has invented a new bomb shell of terrible power. Professor Anderson claims that Sebastopol would fall before it, that it will wrap in flames any fortification of wood or stone, or indeed any city, however strongly fortified. A recent trial appears to have been very successful. One of the shells was thrown from a six-pounder, by way of experiment, and falling upon some rocks, coruscations of light arose some fifty feet in the air emanating from materials under the most intense ignition. It rained very hard, but notwithstanding the rain it burned on the rocks twenty-five minutes, and in various places on the grass, which was exceeding wet. Cheers upon cheers burst forth from the gazers when they saw the flames bursting forth on the rocks, covering an area of twenty square feet, before the sound of the cannon reached their ears, and that, too, with a miniature ball, whose weight when charged did not exceed nine pounds.—Professor Anderson intends to take his invention to Europe and sell it to the Allies, if he can.—[Albany Argus.

Advices at Havanna from Porto Rico state that the vomito was making sad havoc among the troops—1500 had died.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE AMERICA.

Blessing the Troops.—A letter in the Ost. Deutsche Post states that the Archbishop of Cherson has arrived in Sebastopol, having been sent for by Prince Gortschakoff to give his blessing to the army. On the 26th ult., the troops were drawn up upon the Place St Catherine, and the Archbishop made an address, which is shortly to be published in the Gazette Russe d'Odessa. Turning to Gen Osten-Sacken, he said, "My son, the last time we met (after the bombardment of Odessa), it was a divine inspiration which led me to say to you, 'Go and fight,—and the Lord our God will give you victory.' The words of my prophecy are accomplished. By the defence of the fortress committed to your care you have gained immortal laurels for yourself and your soldiers. And now I say to you once more—'Fight and triumph, for you are the elect of the Lord, destined to become the scourge of his enemies.'" The writer adds—"It is indeed suprising that General Osten-Sacken, whose military career extends over 48 years, who has assisted at more than 100 battles and combats, in which he has usually been found in the first ranks, has never received even the slightest wound."

Preparations for Winter.—The preparations made by the allies for wintering in the Crimea are of truly astonishing proportions. Kamiesch, Balaklava, Eupatoria, Yenikale, have become military establishments of immense importance. The works at the two first named places more particularly are of a character to retain their importance even if the siege of Sebastopol were abandoned. The possession of these positions will compel the Russians to keep a large army in the Crimea. It is believed that the arrangements for the campaign of 1856 include the concentration of an army at Varna, Burgos, and on the Bosphorus, while the field artillery, cavalry, and means of transport, will be stronger than that in the Crimea, and to which detachments of the army now in the Crimea would be added preparatory to operations in a new field.—Whether the Karabelnaia suburb be taken and the Russian fleet destroyed, or the next assault be repulsed, the siege will equally be raised, and the only four points above named be occupied.—Vienna Military Gazette.

A Priest Militant.—The Emperor of Russia has conferred on a priest of the name of Jeromonach Johann Sawinoff the military order of St. George, 4th class, for the following conduct. On the night of the 22d to 23d March, in this year, the said Sawinoff encouraged and led on his countrymen at the moment when they were wavering under the attack of the enemy before the Kamtschatka Lunette. He appeared among them in his robes, with the crucifix in his hand; raising the latter, he cried with a loud voice, "Lord, save the people! Give our Orthodox Monarch the victory over his enemies!" Under the effect of this inspiration, the troops rushed forward again and took the first and second lines of the trenches. He had further been active in conveying to the troops in the trenches the orders addressed to them by their commanding officer; whilst so doing, the lower part of the crucifix in his hand was shot away, and a hostile bayonet passed through his gown.

Victoria's Visit to Paris.—Preparations have been commenced at Paris, St. Cloud, and Versailles, for the fetes to be given in honor of the Queen of England. At the Hotel de Ville measures are being taken for extensive illuminations in gas, and the courtyard of Louis XIV. is receiving new decorations. The apartments of the Tuileries are filled with workmen, who are engaged in fitting them up most splendidly. The Palace of St. Cloud is already prepared for the reception of its illustrious guest. In the Palace of Versailles, the theatre, which is decorated in the style of Louis XIV, is being provided with chandeliers, carpets, &c. In the Champ de Mars a grand review is to take place.

Thunder Storms in St. Petersburg. Considerable damage has been done in St. Petersburg by violent storms of thunder and lightning; in addition to a number of persons killed or injured many houses have been damaged; outside of the Schlusselburger-gate six hay and straw magazines, containing 150,000 poods, and two magazines with [illegible] have been burned down. On the 15th inst. the warehouse of the merchant Palkin, in third quarter of the Moscow division of the town, took fire, which soon spread to his lofty sugar-baking house, the building, as well as many others near it, [illegible].

A congress of all the members of the Bourbon family, including [illegible] is to take place shortly [illegible] in Germany. To that project is ascribed the arrival of the Duke [illegible].

[illegible] state that the viceroy of Egypt was conducting negotiations with the Bedouins, to induce them to serve in the Crimea.

A letter from Constantinople of July 19th, says: "The Sultan has ordered magnificent necklaces in brilliants to be made as presents for Queen Victoria and the Empress Eugenie, and saddles, also embroidered in brilliants, for the Emperor, the King of Sardinia, and Prince Albert. The value of these presents will be about 2,000,000f."

A new war projectile, invented by Capt. Disney, was tried on Monday in the grounds near Chelsea Hospital. The invention consists in filling shells with a bursting charge of powder, contained in a metal cylinder, and filling the rest of the space with a highly combustible fluid, which, upon exposure to the air, ignites everything with which it comes in contact.

The trustees of the British Museum, as we are informed, have decided on applying to the Treasury for a special grant, in order to enable them to publish all the most valuable Cuneiform inscriptions which have been discovered during the course of the recent Assyrian excavations.

A return, just published at Rome, shows that the Order of Jesuits at present consists of 5,510 members—1,515 of whom are in Italy, 1,697 in France, 463 in Belgium, 355 in Spain, 177 in Germany, and 1,294 in England, America, and other countries. In 1797, when the order was at the height of its glory, it possessed not fewer than 19,016 members.

A private letter from Athens announces that the currants appear to have escaped this year the fatal malady of the vines, which devastated them for three years consecutively.

According to a private letter from Balaklava, General Pelissier has made arrangements for the next storming. The first right column will be commanded by General Pelissier himself.

At Barcelona, 3000 mules have been purchased for the Crimea, and 300 of them have been sent off.

Large quantities of shell, of all sizes, and mortars to match, are being made at two of the principal Liverpool foundries.

Excursion trains will run from Brussels to Paris on the occasion of Queen Victoria's stay in the latter city.

Owing to the distressed state of trade at Cambridge, no less than 1500 houses are now closed.

Italy. The condition of Italy is extremely unsatisfactory. Rumors of plots and conspiracies pervade the whole peninsula. Cholera is virulent in Lombardy and the Roman States. In Naples numerous arrests of officers of the army have been made, and the government is at present suspiciously kind to the lazzaroni,—an evil omen.

A good deal has lately been said of a manifesto of Mazzini, intended to excite the Italians to revolt. According to a letter from Genoa, this document concludes as follows:

The hour is come! Austria, by breaking the treaty of the 2nd December, by reducing her army in order to render service to the Czar, and to enable him to concentrate his forces to the prejudice of the allies, has lost all right to the support of France and England. She is alone. If the Italians do not rise, they will be admitting to Europe—"We are not able to rise against an enemy whom we are not certain of being able to conquer; we have no faith in our right; in order to awaken us, and to be like men, we must have a Pope and a King who will murmur words of liberty in our ears in order to betray us."

Switzerland. The town of Chamouni has been again almost destroyed by fire. Half the village is in ruins. Subscriptions are solicited in England to aid the sufferers.

The Black Sea Fleet. The maritime forces of England in the Black Sea at the present moment are as follows: Seven sail of the line—that is, two 120 gun ships, three 90, one 84, and one 78; three frigates of 18 guns, three of 27, three of 60, and one of 8 guns. The ships with steam power attached are—four with 90 guns, and two carrying 101 and 121. The screw frigates are five in number, carrying guns from 6 to 23. In addition to which there are seven other steam frigates, carrying various weights of metal up to 22 guns. There are also thirteen small screw steamers—forming in all 48 vessels of the royal navy. There are no fewer than 300 hired steam transports and sailing vessels constantly employed.

Immediately before Sebastopol there are eight screw steamers, eight steam frigates, two corvettes, and five sailing ships, with six cannoniers. The French have also stationed with us two steam frigates and six corvettes—in all 37 ships before the fortress.

The remaining ships of the allied squadrons are at Kamiesch and Balaklava. It is calculated that the allied maritime forces employed at the present moment in the Black Sea, including transports, amounts to 1000 ships.

Raising of the Siege.—The Paris Constitutionnel has an article on Kamiesch and the important fortifications in progress there, in the course of which there are some very important suggestions thrown out, looking towards the possible abandonment of the siege. The writer says:

"In every possible contingency the possession of Kamiesch, fortified as it now is, will aid in the accomplishment of the object with which the war in the Crimea was undertaken. Sebastopol, commanded by Kamiesch, which holds it, so to speak, by the throat, can never henceforth be of any use to the Czar. On the supposition that events should call the army to fresh points of the Russian territory, who does not see that the presence of a few French and English ships at Kamiesch would suffice to nullify the entire offensive power of Sebastopol?—Therefore, the possibility of the mobilisation of the allied army and of the nullification of Sebastopol are the two grand results of the transformation of Kamiesch into a place of war. It is now the sentinel—the keeper of the Russian citadel. * * France now knows that without abandoning its conquest it may at will send an army of 100,000 men to any point where the glorious cause for which it is fighting by the side of England may call for their services."

The War in Asia. It will be remembered, that the telegraphic summary of the foreign news, contained a reference to a rumor about Schamyl, and the Russians near Kars. It is a very important rumor. It is thus given in the London Times of the 4th, in a despatch from Trieste the 2d inst:

"Accounts from Constantinople, of the 23d ult., announce that Schamyl, having made a diversion in Georgia that brought him near Tiflis, the majority of the Russian troops in Asia, under Gen. Mouravieff, were obliged to renounce the attack on Kars, and make a movement to protect Tiflis.

Despatches from Trebizond of the 20th also state that the Russians had suspended their operations, and confined themselves to naming governors in the villages they occupy in the province of Kars.

Ten pieces of heavy artillery have been sent from Trebizond to the garrison of Erzeroum, the defensive works of which have been completed by [illegible] of the inhabitants.

The communication between Kars and Erzeroum was re-established.

[illegible] notwithstanding a circular from the bishop [illegible] ing them to resist. The nuns, on the contrary, made a great deal of resistance, and in several instances the doors had to be forced open. At the convent of Santa Chiara [illegible] obey the summons, but [illegible] in a secluded form, was [illegible] to go within, and two voices were at last distinctly heard to advocate obedience to the law, but without success; so that the authorities had to use force to effect their object. When at last they were enabled to begin the inventory, they found so few articles of value that it became evident a good many must have been removed. No popular agitation or disturbance occurred in any case during these proceedings.

Extraordinary Occurrence.—On Friday evening, the 27th ult., at Birmingham, some fifty workmen engaged on a new building rushed to avoid a very heavy shower. While there, an electric flash was seen, and the fifty men were instantaneously prostrated. None were killed. The majority of them recovered the shock within five minutes; but, in one case, fifteen minutes elapsed before recovery. The most extraordinary feature in this occurrence is that several of them were covered over with large black blisters, varying in size from one-and-a-half to four inches.

The Sardinian ministers and members of Parliament who voted for the suppression of the monkish orders, have been pronounced excommunicated and cut off from the sacraments. But as the church is the chief loser by the operation, it is thought the Pope will modify the bull.

Important from Mexico.—Several Fighting.—New Orleans, Aug. 13. We have advices from Brownsville to August 10th.

The Delta's correspondence contains the official account of the capture of Saltillo by Col. Vidauri, after a battle which lasted two days. The Government force was 1200 strong, with five pieces of artillery; of this force two-thirds were killed. The Revolutionists lost 38, killed, wounded and prisoners. At last accounts, the Revolutionists were in pursuit of the retreating army.

Gen. Woll had reinforced Matamoras by troops from Tampico.

The force of the insurgents consists of 3000 troops, and eleven pieces of cannon, the latter under the command of Col. Duncan, late of the U. S. army.

Gen. Woll had demolished the suburb of Matamoras, and many citizens left for Brownsville.

Advices of the 29th, from the Crimea, announce continued preparations for a grand expedition. All the lighter vessels of the fleet are assembled at Kamiesch. Destination unknown. It was reported in Paris on the 3d, that the French government had official notifications that the bombardment of the Malakoff and the Redan is resumed, preparatory to an assault.

July 30.—Gortschakoff telegraphs:—"A partial cannonade on both sides; nothing of importance."

It was telegraphed from Constantinople on the 26th, that the Bashi Bazouks had murdered Gen. Beatson, but Lord Panmure, in Parliament, contradicted the report.

Camp correspondence says Omar Pasha's visit to Constantinople was not, as asserted, to resign, but to consult with reference to accepting the command of the army in Asia.

The Viceroy of Egypt is negotiating with the Bedouins to serve in the Crimea.

Kamiesch and Balaklava are crowded with vessels, recently arrived for the secret expedition.

The French government has chartered 97 small steamers for river navigation, each to convey 500 men. The boats belong to companies of the Rhone and Saone.

From the London Press, weekly newspaper Saturday noon.—"We learn that the siege of Sebastopol is about to be raised. Also that a communication has just been received from Germany by the Western Powers which may lead to startling results."

From the sea of Azof letters are to the 16th. Magazines along the coast were being destroyed, and small steamers were surveying. The allied fortifications were progressing.

Accounts from Asia Minor are contradictory. The Russians are asserted to have suspended operations against Kars and Erzeroum, and to be retiring, but this is considered very doubtful.

Constantinople accounts of the 23d, state that Schamyl had descended from the mountains and threatened Teflis, since the retrograde movement of the Russians.

Italy. The statement that the king of Naples has begged for the presence of Austrian troops is contradicted. Our Liverpool correspondent has private accounts from Lombardy, and especially Venice, indicating important events, nearly ripe.

France. The official report of the French loan shows 306,000,000 francs, six times the amount asked for. The Minister of Finance's report describes it as the most surprising financial operation ever effected in any country. The number of subscribers 310,000.

Obituary.

Died in North Sandwich, N. H., July 16, 1855, Sr. Sally D. Browne, wife of Gordon P. Browne, aged 61 years.

Her illness, occasioned by a disease of the heart, was of seven months duration. Her funeral obsequies were attended by a large circle of deeply afflicted and sympathising friends.—Sermon by Eld. John Sinclair, from 1 Thess. 4; 14.

The deceased endured her severe sufferings with Christian patience, without a murmur or complaint. Although it was heart-rending to have the ties of nature dissolved, she felt a willingness to resign all into the hands of her heavenly Father. During her last illness, she was often heard to say that she was happy in Jesus.

She experienced religion and was baptized at the age of 14 years, by Eld. Joseph Quimby, after which she united with the First Freewill Baptist Church in Sandwich. Since that time she has been a living Christian, and particularly devoted to the reading of the Bible, which she said was her guide; and it was her dying request that her friends should study the Bible, and follow the good instructions which it contains. May God help us all to heed the admonitions.

After having the privilege of reading the Crisis, she became much attached to the paper. A few days previous to her death, she desired to take the paper, although she had scarcely strength to hold it; but she said she wanted to look in it once more before she died. Being unable to read, she requested me to read to her. I complied, and she remarked that the warnings given ought to be remembered.

Although she never was favored with an opportunity to hear much preaching on the Advent [illegible] a number of years, and [illegible] she was acquainted [illegible] in warning them to make preparation for that great day when the scenes of earth shall close.

The week-day meetings will be held in the evening, at the hour fixed upon by the brethren. Letters will be directed [illegible] Sturbridge, Mass., for the present. If any of the above appointments clash with previous arrangements, will brethren please give me seasonable notice? W. [illegible]

GROVE MEETING.

There will be a Grove Meeting held on the town line which separates Camden from Reading, some six miles South-West of Hillsdale, (Michigan), near the plank Road leading from Hillsdale to Bamwood Corners, to commence Saturday, September 1st, and continue as long as thought best. All are invited to attend.

Vernon, Aug. 1[illegible], 1855.

Providence permitting, there will be a Camp Meeting in Vernon, Vt., on the old ground, to commence on Monday, Sept. 17, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn. and Srs. from the East and West, North and South, prepare for this gathering, and let your prayers be continually ascending to our heavenly Father for the prosperity of this meeting, that every thing may be conducted with an eye to His glory.

There will be a boarding tent on the ground, and horse keeping near by.

In behalf of the church, J. [illegible]

GENERAL CAMP MEETING.

Providence permitting, there will be a general Camp Meeting in Cheshire, one half mile from the depot, commencing Monday, Sept. 10, to continue over the following Sabbath. We hope all, far and near, will take an interest in this gathering, and make it a special subject of prayer. Hope they will come on Monday morning, and pitch their tents in good faith, with a full expectation, that with the divine blessing, it will be a meeting that will tell on saint and sinner, not for party, but for God and truth.

Provision made for horse keeping, and a boarding tent will be kept on the ground at which board can be obtained at a fair price.

Preachers invited to attend, Brn M. Bachelder, J. Hemenway, J. Couch, H. Pratt, and others. Alonzo Cummings, For the Brethren.

Cheshire, Aug. 4, 1855.

GENERAL CAMP MEETING.

By divine permission, there will be a general Camp Meeting for all that love the appearing of our Lord, at North Wilbraham, to commence August 20th, and continue over the Sabbath.—It will be located on the old ground, 10 miles east of Springfield, on the Western Railroad.—We hope all the different Churches will be represented, and that as many as can will bring Tents, and especially bedding, which is an essential article. Come, brethren, and bring as many impenitent with you as possible; and let us all labor together for their salvation, and show our faith by our works.

Some twelve to fifteen of our good ministering brethren, are all agreed in this arrangement, and mean to have an old fashioned Camp Meeting, such as God used to own and bless. There will be a Boarding Tent on the ground, and horse keeping near by—all on reasonable terms. Also, provision will be made for the Lord's Poor.—Those that wish to board in the tents by companies or as individuals, will be able to procure all the necessaries on or near the ground.

Hiram Munger, for the brethren.

They tell fondly hope of the better land
Is [illegible]
That 't will fade like a footprint on the sand,
Or a dew drop in the morn;
That the world is fair, and its honors bright,
And summer [illegible]
Are beyond for those whose sunny hearts
Its [illegible]

My heart has throbbed with a hope like this,
And I've lov'd the proud and gay,
And sung and trifled in thoughtless bliss
My golden moments away;
But by the Savior's tender care
The curtain was drawn aside,
And with rapture I gazed on the better land
Till the charms of earth had died.

But they tell me my heart has colder grown,
Like the frost of a wintry [illegible],
That the sweetest tones from my soul have flown,
And its gladness withered and gone;
That I've [illegible] my harmless mind,
And [illegible] all harmless mirth,
Until there seemeth no charm to bind
My soul to this pleasant earth.

'Tis true that my heart is oft sad and lone,
With none to respond a sigh;
No spirit, in tone well filled and strung,
To echo its sympathy;
Yet that with a feeble and trembling hand
Hope grasps the promised delight
Of a glorious home in the better land
That will sparkle in beauty bright.

But my heart's not cold, as they vainly deem,
Nor withered is friendship's power,
It is lighted by many a sunny beam,
And many a peaceful hour;
And kindness and sympathy ever thrill
The chords of my trusting heart,
And gratitude's gush like a summer's rill,
Bids love's lowly flowers to start.

But they tell me again, I wildly dream,
That I never shall Jesus behold,
That Bethlehem's Star will nevermore beam
On this [illegible] world;
But to immortal souls in spirit He'll come
And reign, even where death's arrows blight,
While we soar away to the far spirit home,
On our heavenly wings of light.

But watchmen were waking on Zion's walls,
And they lifted their voices high;
"See the sword! it is coming! oh heed our loud calls!"
I was rescued, though danger was nigh.
Then I pressed to my bosom the dear blessed Book,
And said, for Christ's coming I'll pray,
For His glorious Advent I'll earnestly look,
And will patiently wait His delay.

O its doctrines are dear to my grateful heart,
Its truths, like a gem, ever shine;
With the world and its honors I freely part,
But let the truth ever be mine.
And the dear blessed band that patiently wait
With me for the Savior's return,
Shall enter with rapture the fair, golden Gate
That opens their glorified home.

Trust in God.

While our youthful hearts are light,
And around us all is bright,
While our souls from care are free,
Father! we will trust in thee.

While our earthly friends are here,
Blessing us with words of cheer,
While from every sorrow free,
Father! we will trust in Thee.

Trust in thee! Oh, where else trust,
When trials come, as come they must?
Oh then may our motto be,
Father! we will trust in Thee.

Though severest trials come,
May we say, "Thy will be done,"
"As our day our strength shall be,"
Father! we'll still trust in Thee.

Letter from Br. S. G. Brastow.

NOVA SCOTIA, July 8th, 1855.

No. 2.

Having retired early to rest on the evening of the 27th, I awoke about 12 o'clock and went on deck, where I commenced conversing with the man at the wheel.— The wind was blowing fresh from the southwest, a clever sea rolling, and our vessel making headway at the rate of five or six knots per hour. We were soon shut in by a fog which became more and more dense, in a little while we had to [illegible] to give warning [illegible] happen. The [illegible] on deck and took the helm. [illegible] in deep thought and listening [illegible] [illegible] we heard the distant croaking and discordant jargon of the sea gulls. The soundings varied from 8 to 14 fathoms, and a dark cloud hung over the surface of the water.

When the alarm was given, "put the helm about and wear away," we had just time to obey the summons. Never shall I forget my feelings, as I looked over the gunwale and beheld the white-crested surf rolling up to the shore, and the sea birds leaving the rocks just under the bow of our vessel. I stood astonished as the bark swung round, and seemingly the stern escaped the beach only about a half length of the vessel. We now stood off the north west for some distance. When the Capt. had about concluded to cast anchor, the fog commenced to disappear in a measure, when we discovered close under our bow, a little to the north east, a fishing craft, all sails set, bearing away for the fishing grounds. We found by hailing her we were in the Grand Passage in the Bay of Fundy, on the right track. And we had just escaped a place called Gull Rock on the extreme point of Nova Scotia.

Of what a burden was my anxious heart relieved, on the reception of this information; and in addition, the sun came forth from the chambers of the east darting his beams through the clouds of fog, and we could see the land close beside us.

We were enabled to partake of some nourishment, after which we read a portion of Scripture; and never did the blessed privilege of bowing in the presence of our heavenly Father seem more precious to my heart than upon this occasion, as we returned Him our feeble thanks for preservation in the past, and in sincere devotion besought the aid of His blessed Spirit to guide us by His word amid the dangers of the present.

As I recount the mercies of my Heavenly Father in all the past, I am constrained to renew my covenant daily with Him; and my prayer is, O Lord, help me to pay my vows unto thee, O thou Most High.

In surveying my experience in the great Advent movement for this last thirteen years, especially at this present time, I am led to conclude we are on the right track; and though seemingly a cloud shuts us in for the present moment, we are in the Grand Passage, near the highland heights of the everlasting Kingdom; and soon will the Sun break through the clouds and dispel forever our cares, fears, adversities and afflictions; and give the poor pilgrim that is found with clean hands and a pure heart, a life of pure and unalloyed bliss. "O Lord, hasten the time." Amen.

We are drawing near the shore, there are shoals, rocks and perils on every hand. The billows are foaming and dashing in angry surges around us, and now our eternal weal depends on being and keeping ready.

About noon we came into the bight of Digby Gut. It is a narrow passage with precipitous hills, and in some places perpendicular and craggy rocks rising up irregularly from 50 to 70 feet, more or less. Here we dropped anchor and went on shore, as it was impossible to enter, the breeze not favoring us, and the tide running very rapidly and powerfully against us. As soon as the tide turned, we weighed anchor, made sail, and passed under the lofty hill of Granville, where it was reported sometime since that a volcano had burst forth, to the terror of those living in its vicinity. I could perceive a fissure of very small dimensions in the bank, around which the surface of the earth exhibited a yellowish appearance, not however caused by lava. We soon reached Digby, and had to heave to, and subject ourselves to a visit from the Custom House Officers. Soon, however, we were on our way, and bore off southerly to Bear river, up which we could not proceed far before we left the vessel, as the tide had fallen; we therefore took to the boat, and reached Hillsburgh Bridge at 10 o'clock at night. [illegible]

[illegible] of redeeming love, and ever since I embraced the Advent doctrine. Curiosity prompted me to go and hear for myself, and I rejoice that I went. Yes, I feel like rejoicing to-day, that I ever heard an Advent sermon; that my name is identified with the sect every where spoken against. Since that time the Bible has been a new book to me; I can see harmony where I never could before; praise the Lord, I am no longer blinded by the traditions of men; but stand in the liberty of the Gospel.— Let others ridicule our faith, and point the finger of scorn at us, I regard it not. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" "We have not followed cunningly devised fables," but have a hope founded on the word of God, a glorious hope, and I long for its consummation.

"Fly swift around, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

The evidence has looked strong to my mind that ere this time we should have gazed upon the King of kings in all His beauty, singing the song of deliverance, safe in the Kingdom of God; but we are still here in a world of sin and sorrow, exposed to all the trials and temptations of life. I am however by no means discouraged, or shaken in my faith; for I know our Savior is coming again. We have abundant evidence to prove that His coming is near, even at the door. Iniquity is abounding, the love of many is waxing cold; but I am determined, God being my helper, to face the storm. It is my earnest prayer that earth may lose all its charms for me; and that I may live so that the world may know there is reality in the religion which I profess.

O, to hear from the lips of my Father, "Well done;" to gaze, for once, upon the new earth restored to its Edenlike beauty, how delightful the thought!

Dear Brn. and Srs., there is a reality about this, which looks cheering to the wayworn pilgrim; let us not be discouraged, but "hold fast our confidence which hath great recompence of reward;" remembering "our light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

I do thank the Lord that this world is not our home, that we have heard of a brighter and better land where all tears will be wiped away.

Pray for me, that I may be accounted worthy to enter in at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb.

Should these few lines chance to meet the eye of any who are without God, and without hope in the world, let me raise my warning voice to you; for I am solicitous for your salvation in the day of His coming.

"O, come, give us your hand, and the Savior your heart."

If you seek for happiness in the present world, you will be disappointed; but in Christ there is fulness of joy. Will you not give up all for Him? methinks I see Him standing with outstretched arms bidding you come for all things are now ready. Do not delay until it be too late. Pause for one moment, and think of the scenes of the coming judgment. Perhaps some of you may have near and dear friends that will be found on the right hand of God; can you bear the thoughts of being separated from them for ever? Remember that God has said in terms too plain to be misunderstood, "Prepare to meet thy God."

I would say to my dear Brn. and Srs. farewell till we meet in the Kingdom of God. "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Your Sr. in Christ hoping for immortality when Jesus comes.

Letter from Elder Wm. Roworth.

NEW YORK, July 15th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I feel that we are living in perilous times, at the ending of the prophetic periods; for to my mind it is clear the 2300 days, which are the length of the vision, the time for the treading down the sanctuary, are ended.— Hence, the times of the Gentiles must have run out; and now we must look for the cleansing of the sanctuary; for if the [illegible]

[illegible] their rounds, since first I tasted the sweets [illegible] time very [illegible] where He says:—

"Let your loins be girded about with truth, and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord."— Truly, we are in the watching and waiting time; and as we cannot tell when He will come, in the first, second, or third watch, it is important we should now keep awake; for if we do not watch, He will come upon us as a thief, and we shall not know what hour (or period) He will come. I cannot but see that our position is correct, and the Judge, as the Apostle James says, stands before the door. Be patient, then, Brn., for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Cast not away your confidence, or faith in God, for His promise will never fail. Yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and no more tarry. It does appear to me that this is the year of the Lord's redeemed; and the day of the vengeance of our God.

I would say to my Brn. and Srs., "hold fast whereunto ye have attained, that no man take your crown."

Our Brn. in this city are holding on, and looking for the speedy revelation of the Lord from heaven. Their faith is strong that this year their troubles will end—their sorrows cease—that they shall see the King in His beauty, and behold the land that is not very far off. Amen, my soul says, and come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Take to thyself thy great power, and reign.

Yours, looking for immortality at the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ this year.

ELDER WM. ROWORTH.

*If we would comprehend clearly the process in any mathematical calculation, the best method is to solve the problem on a small scale, so that the mind can easily grasp the subject. Br. Roworth takes a point in the year 445 B. C., and reckons to the same point in 1855, A. D. to make 2300 full years. Thus 445 + 1855= 2300. Or, in other words, the question to be decided is, whether if we add two chronological periods one of which is marked B. C. and the other A. D., it will give the correct number of years from the commencement of one to the termination of the other, provided we reckon to the same point in the year at which we began.

Now let us simplify the subject. Be it remembered, the year which commenced the Christian Era is marked by Chronologists A. D. 1; and the year which preceded the Christian Era is marked B. C. 1. Now all must see, at once, that from Jan. 1 B. C. to Jan. 1 of the next year, i. e., Jan. 1 A. D. is just 1 year. In this case, we close the reckoning at the same point in the year at which we began. We will now add the years B. C. and A. D. thus: 1 and 1 make 2. Thus by adding them together we obtain the sum of 2 years, which is just 1 year too much; and the same is true of all other calculations where we reckon the years before and after the Christian Era. So that if we start from any given point in 445 B. C. and reckon to the same point in 1855 A. D., adding the two numbers together, we have the same error in the result as in reckoning from B. C. 1 to A. D. 1, i. e. we have just 1 year too much.

If however the 2300 years commenced in B. C. 446, then the 2300 years will terminate in 1855, and at the same point at which they commenced. ED.

Letter from Br. B. P. Manning.

GOFFSTOWN, N. H, July 9, 1855.

Br Merriam:—I esteem it a great privilege that the children of God enjoy, in being permitted to address each other through the medium of the Crisis.

Permit me to say to the saints scattered abroad, that now, in this hour of disappointment and trial, is the time for the just to live by his faith. I praise God that there are some who can live and serve God without reference to a point of time. Such may be assured the Lord is good, and His promise will not fail. Let us give heed to the admonition of the Apostle to "hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for He is faithful that promised." And let us "consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Dear Bro., we do see and know that the day is approaching; and that rapidly; for Jesus told us that we might know when He is nigh, even at the doors.

I do believe we have been right in the main, in proclaiming the coming of the Lord in '54, and before May 19, '55.— Let us, therefore, be careful that we do not confess more than the truth demands of us. I am willing to confess the Lord did not come agreeably to my expectations, but I do know that if God was with His children in '44, He was in '55; although not in everything that has been said and done by Adventists.

Many people cry out against the preaching of definite time; but, praise God, it has been made a blessing to my soul. I believe it was just such food as God intended should be administered to the flock as meat in due season.

An invitation is now extended to Adventists to give up their faith; but what shall we give up? If we give up the idea that Christ's coming is near, even at the door, it seems to me it would be manifesting an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God: for the signs are all past, with one exception, and that is the sign of himself; and the state of the world is just such as is described in the word, at the close of this dispensation.

The Church is, I think, in many places in the Laodicean state, at this time; but O, Brn., let us wake up anew to the work of God. Now is the time to comfort one another with those precious words that relate to the coming of Jesus, and to exhort one another daily, &c. I do not expect another cry can be made that will move the world, till the voice of the Archangel shall awake the slumbering dead. Then will Daniel stand up for his inheritance with all the Prophets, Apostles, and saints of every age and land.

What a happy meeting will that be to those of us who have been long waiting and earnestly longing for that day!

"Wherefore comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do. And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; And to esteem them very highly in love, for their work's sake. And be at peace among yourselves. Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men. Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing," &c.

Brn., pray for me, that my faith fail not.

Yours looking for the Lord,

B. P. MANNING.

Letter from S. T. B.

For the Crisis.

Dear Bro.:—We prize the Crisis as an organ of communication to the "Saints scattered abroad" who are still—"looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."

Although we have not realized our hope, as we had joyfully anticipated; yet, I feel it never was more blessed, or more sure. O, is there an hour between this and the time when the opening heavens shall reveal our Savior that we have authority to cease looking for Him? For myself I can find none, either in his Word or Providences. But "every fresh alarming token more confirms the faithful word"—that tells us that "He will come, and will not tarry," and that His own Church will be "looking for, and hasting unto His coming;" and in the last words of the Beloved Apostle, while Jesus is saying "surely I come quickly," with longing hearts will respond, "Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus."

O, I believe this is the position of every true child of God, and blessed be his name, my heart is with them, (though the most unworthy) wherever they may be found. And this "little flock" is to be in a waiting position, which implies readiness in the present tense. And O, if there were not a rich and ample provision made for us all in the Gospel, we might have some excuse for not having on the "wedding garment;" but Glory be to Jesus, through simple, appropriating faith in His name, we are "made every whit whole," "clothed" and ready to stand the grand review! Blessed name! Ah, here is our hiding place—our covert from the storm—our strength in this last hour of conflict with Satan and all his hosts.

O, I have proved it more than ever in my own experience for a few months last past. Praise God for delivering grace! I can truly say with the Psalmist, my "heart is not turned back, neither have my steps declined from thy way; though thou hast sore broken me in the place of dragons, and covered me with the shadow of death." I know all things work together for good to them that love God. With a sense of His love, and leaning alone on His arm, I trust He will keep me from casting my influence in any measure with those whose light only "leads to bewilder, and dazzles to blind." Jesus says, "Then, if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; or He is in the secret chambers, believe it not [illegible] (as some say he has) it must be "in the secret chambers." Jesus says, "believe it not," for some have seen Him. And He has not come again spiritually, for He has ever been with his disciples by His Spirit, and promised to be with them to the end. Blessed Comforter! lead us still into truth—and take of the things of God and show them unto us. It is my daily prayer that God would deliver this people out of the snare of the devil, and every yoke of bondage, into the true liberty of the sons of God.

O, let us fight the good fight of faith: for "the days of faith" will not be past till Jesus gives us eternal life in the everlasting kingdom. Then, and not till then, faith is lost in sight, hope in full fruition, and the love of eternity flows on forever. God grant we may "cease from man," and "be not carried about by divers and strange doctrines." For "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." "And the fruit of his spirit is love, joy, peace, &c.—against such there is no law."

May we be found in Him, "without spot or wrinkle," at his appearing.

Letter from Br. E. M. H.

WHITESTOWN, N. Y., July 17, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I have noticed with regret the falling off in the receipts of the Crisis. There is evidently a want of information on the subject of the Lord's coming and the time of that event; and as attention has been awakened in various quarters, the Crisis, it seems, is necessary to communicate the information desired. The Brn. do not reflect, and it is, perhaps, not known so generally as it should be, how important papers and tracts are which disseminate the sentiments and feelings of Adventists. Widely separated as they are, and deprived of social intercourse with those who sympathize with them in their faith, how much such a paper is needed. Without it there cannot be the interchange of thought and feeling that serves to bring out ideas, and awaken emotions of delight.

By a few in this place, the Crisis is read, and often with serious attention, and where there are no opportunities of obtaining information from the lips of Preachers, I do not see how it can be dispensed with. I hope and trust that the Brn. will, according to their ability, furnish the means of its continuance. I go for a free press that publishes the truth, which is always safe, and important to be read. Let the Crisis go forth to every city, village, and hamlet, bearing the joyful news that the Lord is soon coming.

This is a subject of eternal importance. The Lord who is to call us into judgment will soon appear. We must shortly live in heaven, or, with abandoned sinners be "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." 2d Thess., 1: 7, 8, 9.

We all have to labor for the meat that perishes; but a man who has set himself seriously to prepare for the coming of the Lord, will have his powers and faculties employed about better things, and pursue nobler objects than the riches, honors and pleasures of this life, that are soon to pass away.

Yours for truth, E. M. H.

Letter from Br. C. Richardson.

AUBURN, N. H. July 18, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—Although much has been written in relation to the Parable of the ten Virgins, I would say, that I believe the Midnight Cry has been given, and that we are now fulfilling the last items of the Parable.

Says Jesus:—"Then shall the Kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten Virgins, &c. vs. 1–4.

It is clear that this portion of the Parable began to be fulfilled about the year 1840, under the labors of Br. Miller and others. "The believers in the immediate coming of Christ went forth" to "meet the Bridegroom;" and "while the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept."

V. 6. "And at Midnight there was a cry made, behold, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet Him," which began to be fulfilled about the year 1852, and ceased on the 19th of May, 1855.

If the going forth in '43–4 was right, then we have the going out of lamps, the inquiry for oil, and going to buy. "And while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came."

If the movement in '43–4 was not right, then we cannot consistently look for the Lord at hand; for the Parable must have its fulfilment before the coming of the Lord. The Lord will appear during the accomplishment of the last item, viz. while they are going to buy.

Your Br. waiting.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS,

PUBLISHED BY BELIEVERS IN THE SPEEDY COMING OF JESUS CHRIST.

S. J. VARNEY, Printer, . . 27 Central St.

TERMS of Subscription to be PAID in ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months,	$1,00
For a single copy 3 months,	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months,	4,50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months,	8,00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	14,00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	18,00

By the above arrangement a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn. they may, by combining together, receive a large number, at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

For the Crisis.

The Flesh and Spirit.

By F. H. B.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

The terms flesh and spirit, are distinguishing characteristics. The former, refers to the man in his natural condition, "having no hope, and without God in the world;" the latter, to the person whose heart has been regenerated, his sins forgiven, and whose life has been entirely changed. These two conditions are often distinguished by other terms, as, the "inward and outward man;" "life and death;" "good and evil;" all of which set forth the same great truth.

The condition, circumstances and acts of men, are, in the Scriptures of divine truth, often illustrated by supposed facts, e. g. the parable of the prodigal son; the king that made a marriage for his son; the parable of the supper, &c., each, and all of which bring to view some principle of truth illustrative of, and applicable to men either in an individual or associated capacity.

In the figure before us, i. e. of a man sowing seed, we have a complete illustration of the above principle. The figure is borrowed from agriculture. As the man who sows his field, reaps a harvest of the same, i. e. if he sow wheat will reap wheat; if he sow oats will reap oats; if he plant corn, corn will be the product.—So with men in this world; he who is righteous will have a righteous man's reward; and he who is a sinner will reap everlasting death—the reward of sinful and ungodly men.

The Apostle informs us that "they which are in the flesh cannot please God." The lusts of the natural heart are so different from the fruit of the Spirit, that they can be easily detected when scrutinized in the light of divine truth. As the mirror serves to discover every defect and blemish of our person, so do the precepts of the law, and the requisitions of the Gospel disclose all of the moral deformity and imperfections connected with our fallen and degraded natures. There is no chance to escape the all-searching rays of Gospel truth. Though "darkness cover the earth, and gross darkness the people;" yea, though it be "darkness that may be felt," yet the rays of divine truth will pierce the gloom, dispel the obscurity, penetrate the darkness, and spread light and glory all around. The Bible is the great luminary to the moral world; it is the source from which all true light springs.

It emits its darting rays, and sends its beaming brightness to enlighten every grade and condition of suffering humanity. How applicable the sentiment contained in the following verses:—

"What glory gilds the sacred page,
Majestic like the sun!
It gives a light to every age;
It gives—but borrows none.

The power that gave it still supplies
The gracious light and heat;
It makes the simple truly wise,
It gives the hungry meat.

Let everlasting thanks be thine
For such a bright display,
As makes a world of darkness shine
With beams of heavenly day."

We now return to the subject and remark, that the result of sowing to the flesh is clearly set forth in the previous chap. Here the Apostle gives us a catalogue of the works of the flesh; which in fact is nothing more or less than the crop produced by the sowing of the seed. Let us briefly examine the connection.

Commencing with the twentieth verse the first specification is idolatry, i. e. "the worship of idols, images, or anything made by hands, or which is not the true God." The primitive Church were surrounded by idol-worshipers. We are told that while Paul waited at Athens "his spirit was stirred within him, when he saw the whole city given to idolatry." But the worshiping of idol gods is not the only idolatry that is condemned in the Bible.—The spirit of covetousness is idolatry "because the covetous man places that delight and confidence in riches which are due to God alone." A man who worships money is no better than were the ancients who, as the Apostle says, had "lords many and gods many." The principle of worship is the same whether ascribed to Jupiter or to mammon. The man who adores this mammon god, cannot be prepared for the Kingdom of heaven: he might as well with the Finlanders worship stones; or with the Scythians, iron; with Egyptians, leeks and onions; with the Druids, the oak; with the Mexicans, the lapwing, &c. The Lord hates covetousness; or, as David says, "For the wicked boasteth of his hearts desire, and blesseth the covetous, whom the LORD ABHORRETH." Men of this stamp are often cruel and oppressive.—The prophet, in speaking of them, says, "Woe to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds! when the morning is light, they practise it, because it is in the power of their hand. And they covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away; so they oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage." The Apostle has rightly said, "the love of money is the root of all evil;" "which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness."

Witchcraft is the next in order. "The Apostle does not vouch for the actual existence of witchcraft; but he says that what was known as such was a proof of the corrupt nature of man, and was one of the fruits of it. No one can doubt it. It was a system of imposition and falsehood throughout; and nothing is a better demonstration of the depravity of the human heart than an extended and systemized attempt to impose on mankind. The word which is here used (pharmakeia, whence our word pharmacy, from pharmakon, a medicine, poison, magic potion) means, properly, the preparing and giving of medicine. Then it means also poisoning, and also magic art, or enchantment; because in savage nations pharmacy or medicine consisted much in magical incantations. Hence it means sorcery or enchantment, and it is so used uniformly in the New Testament. It is used only in Gal. 5: 20; Rev. 9: 21; 18: 23; 21: 8. Some have supposed that it means here poisoning, a crime often practised; but the most correct interpretation is, to refer it to the black art, or to pretensions to witchcraft, and the numerous delusions which have grown out of it, as a striking illustration of the corrupt and depraved nature of man."

Hatred. Great dislike or aversion.—That one man should hate another when he receives an injury is not so strange, although it is contrary to the spirit of the Gospel; but when men—especially those who profess to love Christ—hate each other, and the cause of that hatred is an envious or jealous disposition, it is altogether inexcusable. "He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now." Again:—"But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes." Once more:—"Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Again:—"If any man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" The Apostle teaches us that if we have the spirit of the Gospel, we shall be willing to sacrifice even our lives for the brethren. It will drive all selfishness from our hearts, and make us feel like children of one family. If, on the other hand, we are envious at another's prosperity, and jealous on account of another man's successes, and manifest a disposition to speak slightly of him, or to expose his errors for the sake of lowering him in the estimation of others, or to raise ourselves in the scale of public opinion, or, if when the motives of an absent brother are assailed, we fail to do him justice by boldly defending his character, even to incurring the displeasure of pretended friends, we are by the law of God convicted, if not of murder, as being accessory to the crime.—"Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart: thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him.—Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people; but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; I am the Lord." Hatred in all of its forms is of the flesh, and wherever or whenever it prevails, it is a sure evidence that the heart is unsubdued; for it gives our professions the lie. "He that saith, I love God, and hateth his brother is a liar." "And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also." "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth."

Variance is another of the works of the flesh, and signifies disagreement, dissension, or discord; the cause of which is the absence of a spirit of condescension. It is generally brought about by a feeling often evinced in favor of some one or more individuals. This was the case at Corinth, as is evident from the language of Paul. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment.—For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" How contrary is this spirit of variance to the Gospel of Christ. The exhortation of the Apostle Peter is, if obeyed, calculated to banish it forever from the heart. "Finally, be ye of one mind, having compassion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous, Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise, blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called; that ye should inherit a blessing."

Again; this spirit of variance is often enhanced by a disposition to judge or test those who may differ from us. In the ancient Church this same spirit prevailed, as we learn from the 15th ch. of Acts.—"And certain men which came down from Judea taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved. When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them," &c. The above is perfectly illustrative of many in our day; you must believe as they do or be lost. Not because what they believe is so demonstrative, but because they say it is so. It is easy for people to say what they believe is the truth, that it is God's truth," they know it is truth."&c. Many persons act as the man in the parable, who, after the Lord had forgiven him the debt, went out immediately and found one of his fellows who owed him a certain sum, and instead of waiting for him to pay the debt, caught him by the throat, and said, "pay me what thou owest." O let us be merciful even as our Father in heaven is merciful.

Emulations, i. e. a zeal for rivalry or imitation. Sometimes the term is used in in a good sense, as in Rom. 11: 14. "If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save some of them." When we try to rival each other in holiness, patience, meekness, humility, and devotion to God; it is a quality worth having, one that is commendable in the sight of God.

But when our emulation is of such a character as to produce "heart-burning, or, a jealousy; or, perhaps inordinate ambition;" it leads to bad results, and is sinful in the sight of God. It is often the case that persons who have this spirit of rivalry, speak disparagingly of others for the sake of raising themselves in the scale of public opinion; thus evincing a jealousy of heart, which in itself is sufficient to unchristianize any person who possesses it.

Connected with emulation is the spirit of strife, which is nearly of the same import, denoting an "exertion or contention for superiority." In Luke 22: 24, we have a complete illustration of it. The Evangelist in speaking of the disciples says, "And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest." This spirit met with a sharp rebuke from the Savior when He remarked, "he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve." Whereever the spirit of strife is at work, there we see one of the works of the flesh. Destruction is always sure to attend its developement. James remarks: "But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not; and lie not against the truth.—This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." Paul's instructions to Timothy were as follows:—charge "them before the Lord that they strive not about words to no profit." May the Lord help all to avoid this spirit of strife; for "it is an honor for a man to cease from strife; but every fool will be meddling." Prov. 20: 3.

Seditions, i. e. factions, or tumults. A man may be guilty of "seditious words." The Apostle, in writing to the Church at Rome, exhorted them to "mark those which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good works and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple." The Church has always been troubled more or less with this class of persons. The Aopstle was awake to these things, as is evident from his address to the Elders at Ephesus, Acts 20: 29, 30.—"For I know this that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." How fully this prediction has been realized, may be known by the history of the Church since the Apostles' day. Instead of following the exhortations of the Apostles, not to be carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the slight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; all restraint was cast off; the Church became careless; devotion to God was lost sight of; faith became weak; its votaries became sickly; self-denial fainted; a loose rein was given to the passions; and hence, darkness and death; desolation and destruction ensued, not only of a moral but also of a mental and spiritual character. O that we might give heed to the exhortation of the Apostle and "let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-speaking, be put away from you with all malice: And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

For The Crisis.

Letter from Sr. A. Mussey.

METHUEN, Mass., Aug. 21, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—After so long silence I resume my correspondence for the Crisis, not because I feel capable of doing any great good, but because I regard it both as a duty and privilege.—There has been some inquiry ere this, to know what has become of Sr. Mussey, as I have written some for the paper, and have been a believer in time, and am numbered with the outcasts of whom there is but little hope that they will ever be anything in this world again. Has she given up the ship, gone overboard, or sunk down in despondency, or turned traitor to the cause, denied her Lord and united with the world and a proud Church, trying to be somebody again among old acquaintance and friends. Nay, verily, I am alive, thank God, and expect to live forevermore; and still the Lord my shepherd is, He can my wants supply. The only apology I have for not writing a word of cheer to my dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, is poor health. I have not enjoyed a well day since last May; but my trust has been in Him who hears the ravens cry, and the hope of the good time to come has cheered me on my pilgrim journey to a land where "the inhabitant shall no more say, I am sick." O how blessed it will be to be like our Lord immortal, and never be subject to sickness, pain or death.

"Fly swiftly round ye wheels of time
And bring the welcome day."

I sigh for it, I pray for it, I groan with a groaning creation, waiting the adoption, to wit, the redemption of this body, blessed Jesus, quickly come.

My dear Brn. and Srs., I have journeyed with you through the whole Advent campaign, until the present time, and rejoice to say I am with you still. I have been with you in joy and in sorrow, in disappointment and in trial, in persecution and in tribulation; with you I have tried to keep the narrow way, with you have followed the despised Nazarene, (although imperfect have been my steps), and with you I am resolved to follow on in the pathway of life until I greet you on the other shore; and although we have been a disappointed people, we know the best of the land is yet ahead, and will soon be realized.

Our hope has been deferred, and the heart sick, but "when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life," blessed be the Lord—cheer up then, dear Pilgrim Br. and Sr., what our God hath promised us He will surely give us; what we have looked for, we shall surely see; what we have anticipated, we surely shall enjoy. Then let our motto be ONWARD, ONWARD, and UPWARD TO VICTORY, AND THE CROWN. "We have not followed cunningly devised fables," no, no; we have followed God's blessed word, and it has been a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path; and although our calculations on time have failed, yet the blessed old Book is true; it still gives us light, and will lighten our footsteps through this wilderness world, and land us safely in the harbor of eternal blessedness. I am not sorry I looked for my Lord to come, and got ready to meet Him. Better, a thousand times, get ready to meet Him, and be disappointed, than to have Him come in an unexpected moment and we unprepared. I have no idea of giving over the struggle, and joining with the world and the proud, seeking a good name, and saying in my heart, "my Lord delayeth His coming," and every vision faileth; oh no, never. I am spoiled for this world, and the world is spoiled for me; for I have beheld such glory of the world to come, and have had such a foretaste of its joy that all the glory of this world has receded from my view; and it has no power to charm me or win my soul away; so then with the despised of earth, but jewels of the Lord, I will journey on until faith is lost in sight, and hope in glad fruition. We have enjoyed much of the presence of the Lord while we have been looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Yes, the grace of God that has brought salvation we have enjoyed; and though we may not yet understand why we have been led as we have, a gazing stock to the world, and despised by the proud, yet we believe the wise will understand; and what we know not now we shall understand in God's own time, if we patiently wait for his Son from heaven; and if we listen attentively, we shall know His voice from that of a stranger. O then, dear Brn., we'll patiently wait for the Lord.

Br. Merriam, with joy we hail the Crisis again, and with it comes good news from our Brn. and Srs. Thank the blessed Lord for this medium through which we can communicate to each other our thoughts and [illegible] and views, and tell of our trials and perils and dangers, and comfort one another with these words, that Jesus is coming to raise the dead and give us rest; and exhort one another so much the more as we see the day approaching. O may all who write for its pages be imbued with the spirit of Jesus, that the lonely Pilgrims may be cheered with its weekly visits.

And may you be cheered, my Br., with the glorious prospect before you that you will soon be rewarded for your work of faith and labor of love. O glory to God—the thought of the Pilgrims' sweet home melts my heart into praise and thanksgiving to God, and I weep for joy while I write. Oh, it is sure—IT IS OURS—Brn., if we hold fast till He comes. "Go on, I'll meet you there."

We have recently exchanged our place of residence, Sugar Hill, N. H., and have removed to Methuen, Mass.; and although there are no Adventists in this place, yet we find a good little company of our Father's family at Lawrence, worshiping at the Chapel. I have attended meeting there, and found kindred spirits journeying with us to the same blessed Country, looking for the same City our forefathers looked for, and we could truly say it was good to meet a company of Brn. free in Christ Jesus. Heard Br. Couch one Sabbath. His subject, the perils of the last days. Surely, Brn., we are there. Let us watch the way, and look out for the dangers to which we are exposed.

A word to my Dear Brn. and Srs. with whom we have formerly associated, and have taken sweet counsel together. Although mountains and valleys now separate us, yet you are not forgotten by us. We remember the many seasons of prayer we have spent together, and the comfort we have taken together in looking for the blessed Jesus to come; and although we are not permitted to meet together now, as formerly, let us bow around the throne of grace, and there pour out our souls to God, in humble prayer that we may be kept from the evils that are in the world, and be preserved blameless unto His heavenly Kingdom. And if on earth we no more meet, that we may greet each other on the immortal shore, where we shall no more take the parting hand. And may grace, mercy and peace be and abide with us all until Jesus appears; then may we appear with Him in Glory. I remain, as ever, your sister in tribulation, looking for the blessed one, even Jesus,

ABIGAIL MUSSEY.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. S. Titus.

NORTHFIELD FARMS, July 7, '55.

To the saints scattered abroad:—Brn., thank God and take courage (as Paul did when he saw the Brn. at the three taverns) that we are not destroyed, although we have been tested to see if we will believe God's truth, even if we are disappointed. I believe we have had two truths to one error, after all. We must be right in relation to the ending of the tribulation days before the darkening of the sun in 1780, or we have not had the first sign of Christ's coming; for Jesus says immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun shall be darkened. [illegible] than this? If we have not had the sun darkened in fulfillment of this prediction, we have not been authorized to preach the near coming of Christ. We must be right in the ending of the abomination, or

The Flesh and Spirit.

BY F. H. B.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked: fot whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

The terms flesh and spirit, are distinguishing characteristics. The Apostle teaches us that if we have the spirit of the Gospel, we shall be willing to sacrifice even our lives for the brethren. It will drive all selfishness from our hearts, and make us feel like children of one family. If, on the other hand, we are envious at another's prosperity, and jealous on account of another man's successes, and manifest a disposition to speak slightly of him, or to expose his errors for the sake of lowering him in the estimation of others, or to raise ourselves in the scale of public opinion, or, if when the motives of an absent brother are assailed, we fail to do him justice by boldly defending his character, even to incurring the displeasure of pretended friends, we are by the law of God convicted, if not of murder, as being accessory to the crime.—"Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart: thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him.—Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people; but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; I am the Lord." Hatred in all of its forms is of the flesh, and wherever or whenever it prevails, it is a sure evidence that the heart is unsubdued; for it gives our professions the lie. "He that saith, I love God, and hateth his brother is a liar." "And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also." "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth."

Variance is another of the works of the flesh, and signifies disagreement, dissension, or discord; the cause of which is the absence of a spirit of condescension. It is generally brought about by a feeling often evinced in favor of some one or more individuals. This was the case at Corinth, as is evident from the language of Paul. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment.—For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" How contrary is this spirit of variance to the Gospel of Christ. The exhortation of the Apostle Peter is, if obeyed, calculated to banish it forever from the heart. "Finally, be ye of one mind, having compassion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous, Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise, blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called; that ye should inherit a blessing."

Again; this spirit of variance is often enhanced by a disposition to judge or test those who may differ from us. In the ancient Church this same spirit prevailed, as we learn from the 15th ch. of Acts.—"And certain men which came down from Judea taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved. When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them," &c. The above is perfectly illustrative of many in our day; you must believe as they do or be lost. Not because what they believe is so demonstrative, but because they say it is so. It is easy for people to say what they believe is the truth, that it is God's truth," they know it is truth." &c. Many persons act as the man in the parable, who, after the Lord had forgiven him the debt, went out immediately and found one of his fellows who owed him a certain sum, and instead of waiting for him to pay the debt, caught him by the throat, and said, "pay me what thou owest." O let us be merciful even as our Father in heaven is merciful.

Emulations, i. e. a zeal for rivalry or imitation. Sometimes the term is used in in a good sense, as in Rom. 11: 14. "If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save some of them." When we try to rival each other in holiness, patience, meekness, humility, and devotion to God; it is a quality worth having, one that is commendable in the sight of God.

But when our emulation is of such a character as to produce "heart-burning, or, a jealousy; or, perhaps inordinate ambition;" it leads to bad results, and is sinful in the sight of God. It is often the case that persons who have this spirit of rivalry, speak disparagingly of others for the sake of raising themselves in the scale of public opinion; thus evincing a jealousy of heart, which in itself is sufficient to unchristianize any person who possesses it.

Connected with emulation is the spirit of strife, which is nearly of the same import, denoting an "exertion or contention for superiority." In Luke 22: 24, we have a complete illustration of it. The Evangelist in speaking of the disciples says, "And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest." This spirit met with a sharp rebuke from the Savior when He remarked, "he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve." Whereever the spirit of strife is at work, there we see one of the works of the flesh. Destruction is always sure to attend its developement. James remarks: "But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not; and lie not against the truth.—This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." Paul's instructions to Timothy were as follows:—charge "them before the Lord that they strive not about words to no profit." May the Lord help all to avoid this spirit of strife; for "it is an honor for a man to cease from strife; but every fool will be meddling." Prov. 20: 3.

Seditions, i. e. factions, or tumults. A man may be guilty of "seditious words." The Apostle, in writing to the Church at Rome, exhorted them to "mark those which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good works and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple." The Church has always been troubled more or less with this class of persons. The Apostle was awake to these things, as is evident from his address to the Elders at Ephesus, Acts 20: 29, 30.—"For I know this that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." How fully this prediction has been realized, may be known by the history of the Church since the Apostles' day. Instead of following the exhortations of the Apostles, not to be carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the slight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; all restraint was cast off; the Church became careless; devotion to God was lost sight of; faith became weak; its votaries became sickly; self-denial fainted; a loose rein was given to the passions; and hence, darkness and death; desolation and destruction ensued; not only of a moral but also of a mental and spiritual character. O that we might give heed to the exhortation of the Apostle and "let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-speaking, be put away from you with all malice: And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

For The Crisis.

Letter from Sr. A. Mussey.

METHUEN, Mass., Aug. 21, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—After so long silence I resume my correspondence for the Crisis, not because I feel capable of doing any great good, but because I regard it both as a duty and privilege.—There has been some inquiry ere this, to know what has become of Sr. Mussey, as I have written some for the paper, and have been a believer in time, and am numbered with the outcasts of whom there is but little hope that they will ever be anything in this world again. Has she given up the ship, gone overboard, or sunk down in despondency, or turned traitor to the cause, denied her Lord and united with the world and a proud Church, trying to be somebody again among old acquaintance and friends. Nay, verily, I am alive, thank God, and expect to live forevermore; and still the Lord my shepherd is, He can my wants supply. The only apology I have for not writing a word of cheer to my dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, is poor health. I have not enjoyed a well day since last May; but my trust has been in Him who hears the ravens cry, and the hope of the good time to come has cheered me on my pilgrim journey to a land where "the inhabitant shall no more say, I am sick." O how blessed it will be to be like our Lord immortal, and never be subject to sickness, pain or death.

"Fly swiftly round ye wheels of time
And bring the welcome day."

I sigh for it, I pray for it, I groan with a groaning creation, waiting the adoption, to wit, the redemption of this body, blessed Jesus, quickly come.

My dear Brn. and Srs., I have journeyed with you through the whole Advent campaign, until the present time, and rejoice to say I am with you still. I have been with you in joy and in sorrow, in disappointment and in trial, in persecution and in tribulation; with you I have tried to keep the narrow way, with you have followed the despised Nazarene, (although imperfect have been my steps), and with you I am resolved to follow on in the pathway of life until I greet you on the other shore; and although we have been a disappointed people, we know the best of the land is yet ahead, and will soon be realized.

Our hope has been deferred, and the heart sick, but "when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life," blessed be the Lord—cheer up then, dear Pilgrim Br. and Sr., what our God hath promised us He will surely give us; what we have looked for, we shall surely see; what we have anticipated, we surely shall enjoy. Then let our motto be ONWARD, ONWARD, and UPWARD TO VICTORY, AND THE CROWN. "We have not followed cunningly devised fables," no, no; we have followed God's blessed word, and it has been a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path; and although our calculations on time have failed, yet the blessed old Book is true; it still gives us light, and will lighten our footsteps through this wilderness world, and land us safely in the harbor of eternal blessedness. I am not sorry I looked for my Lord to come, and got ready to meet Him. Better, a thousand times, get ready to meet Him, and be disappointed, than to have Him come in an unexpected moment and we unprepared. I have no idea of giving over the struggle, and joining with the world and the proud, seeking a good name, and saying in my heart, "my Lord delayeth His coming," and every vision faileth; oh no, never. I am spoiled for this world, and the world is spoiled for me; for I have beheld such glory of the world to come, and have had such a foretaste of its joy that all the glory of this world has receded from my view; and it has no power to charm me or win my soul away; so then with the despised of earth, but jewels of the Lord, I will journey on until faith is lost in sight, and hope in glad fruition. We have enjoyed much of the presence of the Lord while we have been looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Yes, the grace of God that has brought salvation we have enjoyed; and though we may not yet understand why we have been led as we have, a gazing stock to the world, and despised by the proud, yet we believe the wise will understand; and what we know not now we shall understand in God's own time, if we patiently wait for his Son from heaven; and if we listen attentively, we shall know His voice from that of a stranger. O then, dear Brn., we'll patiently wait for the Lord.

Br. Merriam, with joy we hail the Crisis again, and with it comes good news from our Brn. and Srs. Thank the blessed Lord for this medium through which we can communicate to each other our thoughts and [illegible] and views, and tell of our trials and perils and dangers; and comfort one another with these words, that Jesus is coming to raise the dead and give us rest; and exhort one another so much the more as we see the day approaching. O may all who write for its pages be imbued with the spirit of Jesus, that the lonely Pilgrims may be cheered with its weekly visits.

And may you be cheered, my Br., with the glorious prospect before you that you will soon be rewarded for your work of faith and labor of love. O glory to God—the thought of the Pilgrims' sweet home melts my heart into praise and thanksgiving to God, and I weep for joy while I write. Oh, it is sure—IT IS OURS—Brn., if we hold fast till He comes. "Go on, I'll meet you there."

We have recently exchanged our place of residence, Sugar Hill, N. H., and have removed to Methuen, Mass.; and although there are no Adventists in this place, yet we find a good little company of our Father's family at Lawrence, worshiping at the Chapel. I have attended meeting there, and found kindred spirits journeying with us to the same blessed Country, looking for the same City our forefathers looked for, and we could truly say it was good to meet a company of Brn. free in Christ Jesus. Heard Br. Couch one Sabbath. His subject, the perils of the last days. Surely, Brn., we are there. Let us watch the way, and look out for the dangers to which we are exposed.

A word to my Dear Brn. and Srs. with whom we have formerly associated, and have taken sweet counsel together. Although mountains and valleys now separate us, yet you are not forgotten by us. We remember the many seasons of prayer we have spent together, and the comfort we have taken together in looking for the blessed Jesus to come; and although we are not permitted to meet together now, as formerly, let us bow around the throne of grace, and there pour out our souls to God, in humble prayer that we may be kept from the evils that are in the world, and be preserved blameless unto His heavenly Kingdom. And if on earth we no more meet, that we may greet each other on the immortal shore, where we shall no more take the parting hand. And may grace, mercy and peace be and abide with us all until Jesus appears; then may we appear with Him in Glory. I remain, as ever, your sister in tribulation, looking for the blessed one, even Jesus.

ABIGAIL MUSSEY.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. S. [illegible]

NORTHFIELD FARMS, July 7, '55.

To the saints scattered abroad:—Brn., thank God and take courage (as Paul did when he saw the Brn. at the three taverns) that we are not destroyed, although we have been tested to see if we will believe God's truth, even if we are disappointed. I believe we have had two [illegible] error, after all. We must be right in relation to the ending of the tribulation days before the darkening of the sun in 1780, or we have not had the first sign of Christ's coming; for Jesus says immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun shall be darkened. [illegible] Christ. We must be right in the ending of the abomination [illegible] else we must look for it in the future, there is no such power now.

I do not wonder that God blessed the preaching of time; there was truth connected with it. Convince me there was not, and I am no longer an immediate Advent Believer.

But my belief is that Jesus Christ will soon be seated on David's throne, when He will commence ruling the nations with a rod of iron, and eventually, will dash them to pieces like a potter's vessel.

Now is the time for Satan to take all the ground, if you do not contest it. Suffer not the enemy to get the advantage of you now, just as the prize is to be won.—Let us hold fast till Jesus comes.

Yours in the blessed hope,

SUMNER TITUS.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, SEPT. 1, 1855.

To Correspondents.

Let those whose hearts burn with love to God, and desire the edification of His Church, pray with an unwavering faith for the grace of God to enlighten their minds and pour streams of salvation upon their souls through which the church may be watered, and the hearts of God's children be strengthened and encouraged to pursue the heavenly pathway that leads to glory.

Having the soul glowing with heavenly emotions and set on fire of the electric spark from heaven, let Correspondents write for the paper just as much and no more than the Spirit of God together with the dictates of their best judgment seem to direct. We would not relinquish any truth, but perhaps theorizing on the Scriptures much before our views are well matured would not be so profitable as that which is more experimental and calculated to increase confidence in God and His truth, obedience to His authority, and love to His name. I fear that with all our soul-stirring and heaven born truths, (and many such we have had although disappointed in relation to time,) I fear we have too much neglected some at least of the weighty matters of the law; that while we have been tenacious on points of faith, we have thought, and conversed, and preached, and written less on the duties enjoined in the Gospel, than the Scriptures require.

It is to be hoped that Correspondents will take all due care in preparing their communications so that they may be read by the printers. In some cases letters and communications have been written in too small hand to be legible, in some cases the lines have been to near together, and in some cases interlined to a considerable extent. Correspondents do not perhaps realize how important it is to have their letters and communications as perfect and as legible as they can conveniently be made. They would generally be much improved if carefully revised and re-written. Let all quotations from the Bible be written as they are found in Scripture.

Ch. 2: 10–12. "In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying,—Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying,—If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priest answered and said, No."

The question here propounded is, whether a priest in the holy service of God, would communicate holiness to bread, &c. which he might touch with his holy garment; and the answer is given in the negative.

V. 13. "Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean."

The question is asked in this verse whether if one that is ceremonially unclean by a dead body, should touch bread, &c. the object which he touched would be contaminated by the touch. The answer is given in the affirmative.

V. 14. "Then answered Haggai, and said, So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the Lord; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean."

We learn from the above questions and answers, and from v. 14, that the application is intended to be made to the Jewish nation in relation to their offerings and services in the work of God. Ceremonial pollution might be communicated by the touch; but not so ceremonial holiness.

The offerings and sacrifices of the Hebrews were not acceptable in the sight of God because of their neglect in respect to the restoration of the Temple, and the regular ordinances of the Temple worship. As the priest might bear in his garment holy flesh, and yet the holiness of his garment could not sanctify whatever objects he might touch, so the people of Israel might render service to God in part; they might observe some of His statutes and ordinances; but while the one great work of building His house was neglected, there was an uncleanness, an impurity about them that could not be cleansed away by contact, as it were, with the good deeds which they might perform. Nay, the offerings they brought, the sacrifices they presented, were all so contaminated by contact with their evil deeds that they could not be accepted of God.

V. 15–19. "And now, I pray you, consider from this day and upward, from before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the Lord: Since those days were, when one came to an heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the pressfat for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty: I smote you with blasting and with mildew and with hail in all the labors of your hands; yet ye turned not to me, saith the Lord. Consider now from this day and upward, from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, even from the day that the foundation of the Lord's temple was laid, consider it. Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as yet the vine, and the figtree, and the pomegranate, and the olive tree, hath not brought forth; from this day will I bless you."

From the time the foundation of the Temple was laid, some 14 years previously, the curse of God had rested upon the nation. Their hearts were not right with Him; they had not probably sacrificed all to His glory, nor forsaken all their ways of depravity and pollution; therefore a blight and mildew had blasted all the labors of their hands; and instead of the abundant harvests which they anticipated, the actual increase was found to be small. Where they expected to obtain twenty measures of corn, there were actually but ten; and where they anticipated forty measures of wine, there were actually but twenty. Thus the chastising hand of the Lord was upon them for good; but they heeded not the admonitions of His providence, still pursuing onward in the way of sin and rebellion against the paternal government of God. But now, it is evident, the people labored cordially in the work; they builded the house of God with a willing mind, and a devoted heart. Therefore from that time God would begin to pour His blessings upon them. Neither the earth nor the vineyards, oliveyards nor any of the trees of the field had yielded their productions preparatory to another harvest, but still from that day the promise was that they should receive a blessing from the hand of God. The earth would once more yield her increase abundantly, and the trees of the field their fruit; and they were required to observe the time, to mark the dealings of God's hand, and see whether the promise was fulfilled.

The Lord loves to have His children notice the operation of His hand both in relation to the chastisements and bounties of His providence. Both are to be carefully observed by His children; and in view of the one, they are to humble themselves under the mighty hand of God; and in view of the other, to take encouragement to render Him the service of all their faculties and powers, to be truly grateful for His unmerited favor, and to trust in His goodness for time to come.—And especially ought His children to recognize the movements of His Spirit and operations of His grace in the moral vineyard. When the seed sown prospers and brings forth fruit abundantly, we may be assured that the Lord is with us, and that we are moving in a direction to please Him; but when no increase is brought forth, when everything seems blighted and withered as with a curse from God, then we should deliberate on our ways, and inquire wherein we have erred and come short of the glory of God, and why it is that God has a controversy with us.

From this passage we may learn the willingness of God to forgive the errors and sins of our past lives, and to pour out richly the blessings of His grace upon those who sincerely and with a perfect heart do all His will. He will not cast away His people; He will not forget Zion; but if they forsake His law, they will be visited with stripes. "Though I make a full end, (says the Lord,) of all the nations whither I have driven thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished."

How many precious promises there are left on record in relation to God's remembrance of His people and His tenderness and compassion toward them. "Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the orninances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves roar; The Lord of hosts is his name: If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever. Thus saith the Lord, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath I will also cast off all the seed of Israel, for all that they have done, saith the Lord." Jer. 31: 35–37.

Such are the expressions of infinite love—everlasting love!

"For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee. For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." Is. 54: 7–10.

What overflowing fulness of divine compassion for the frail erring children of men! How boundless His love for His chosen people! How sacred the promise, and solemn the assurance that under no circumstances will they be forgotten. O that we all might be encouraged to put our trust and confidence in the living God, having respect unto the recompence of reward which will ultimately be given to all that love His name and look for His glorious appearing.

Vs. 20–22 having come under consideration, I pass to v. 23. "In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the Lord, and will make thee as a signet: for I have chosen thee, saith the Lord of hosts."

Zerubbabel being Governor over the land of Judah at the time the second Temple was built, was a striking type of Christ. I say a type, because it is evident that He who is to be honored as the Lord's signet, and that too subsequently to the shaking down of all earthly powers and dominions, was not the literal Zerubbabel, but a more glorious personage, even the Messiah. There is a beauty in this emblem that is almost unparalleled.—A signet was a seal worn on the person of a monarch; either a ring upon the finger, or a bracelet on the wrist. It was this that gave authority to the laws and decrees of the Sovereign. Thus Jezebel "wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal," 1 Kings 21: 8. Thus when Haman, the enemy of the Jews, obtained from king Ahasuerus an edict for the destruction of the Jews, the king took his ring from his hand and gave it unto Haman, Esth. 3: 10; and when Esther the queen and Mordicai gained the ascendency over the king's mind, he said to them, "write ye also for the Jews, as it liketh you, in the king's name, and seal it with the king's ring: for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, may no man reverse." Esth. 8: 8.

Consequently the seal of the king was one of the most precious and important articles belonging to the royal treasure.—It was, of course, kept sacred and inviolate, else the subjects of the realm might give authority to such laws as they pleased to make.

Here we have the idea set forth that in the great day, when the kingdoms of the world shall be shaken down, to prepare for the organization of God's everlasting Kingdom, that then, when the true Temple of God shall rise in its glory and beauty, the last stone of the edifice being reared "with shoutings, grace, grace unto it," Zerubbabel will be distinguished as the signet of God—the seal of His authority, a precious jewel to adorn the person, as it were, of the King of kings. A most striking and beautiful emblem surely of the union between the Father and the Son, showing the preciousness of Christ and the exaltation of that personage that gives validity to the laws of God. The Jews of old could not be delivered from their enemies without the impression of the king's seal; spiritual Israel will not ultimately be delivered without the agency of the Messiah, who is to be the great instrumentality of their redemption. The decree of the Father for the destruction of His enemies will receive the sanction of Christ the Judge, and the execution of the law will be effected by the Son of God. The final salvation of God's people will also be accomplished by the grace that shall be brought unto them at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

Review of the subjects presented in this Prophecy.

At the time Haggai commenced his prophetic instructions to the Jews, they had been overpowered by their enemies probably in consequence of not having a perfect heart before God; and being crushed down, they would naturally become despondent, and consequently inactive in the work of God; so that whatever service they might perform could not meet the divine approbation. If the fire of love had burned on the altar of their hearts, and zeal for God's house had been at all kindled on their return from Babylon, those feelings had become extinguished by the floods of affliction through which they had passed. They needed to be electrified, as it were, by fire from heaven—they needed new admonitions and comforting assurances from God that His favor and blessing would attend them in a renewed attempt to build the sacred Temple. No sooner had they received such messages through the medium of Haggai and Zechariah the Prophets, than they addressed themselves to the work with due enthusiasm and zeal for the honor of God. But on commencing the all-important enterprize, they could but be sensible of the vast contrast between the then present materials of the Temple, and those of which it was constituted in the days of Solomon.

Now come the heavenly consolations of God's promise—the blessed encouragement derived from the prospect of future glory. They were given to understand there was a moral sublimity about the enterprize in which they were engaged which far surpassed the grandeur of a material Temple. There was something in the consideration of a coming Messiah, and the ultimate deliverance of which the rising Temple was a type, that was of richer value than plates of solid gold.—There was something more beautiful in the Messianic economy, the light of which would fill that second edifice with glory, than the splendor of snow-white marble.

But the most glorious consideration of the whole, was, the idea of the final result to which all the economy of God, with which they were identified in that work, tended. There seemed to be a sort of avenue opened through the literal Sanctuary to the glories of the promised land—to the splendors of everlasting day. Amid all their privations and disabilities, they were comforted with the thought that the same God who covenanted with their fathers when He redeemed them from their abject bondage, still remained among them by His Spirit; and the same God that brought literal Israel out of Egypt, would finally bring spiritual Israel out of all bondage at the great day; the same God that conducted Israel into Canaan, would conduct the true seed of Abraham into the heavenly country; and that when this great deliverance should come, no further annoyance would be experienced from the opposing governments of earth. The last glorious Temple to be brought together without the sound of axe or hammer would not be erected amid the clangor of arms, or the contempt and ridicule of the enemies of God's people. Prior to the accomplishment of that glorious work, the enemies of God would perish—their empires would be overthrown—their power annulled—and naught would remain but the rightful heirs of the Kingdom in peaceful possession of the territory under the whole heaven. The best of all was, that God was with them, and His power pledged to support and protect them in their humble services, and to consummate the enterprise, not only of the literal Temple, but to crown all the true seed with a glory in the world to come. Then the great Master Builder who was faithful over his own house, would become the Head of universal Empire, and the Beloved of the Father full of grace and truth would be adored by all the happy subjects of His eternal reign. Such were the charms thrown around the comparatively humble Temple they were erecting, investing the materials with a moral sublimity and glory. On all things connected with the building there was emblazoned the doctrine of the cross and the glory that should follow.

I have thought the condition of the Advent body at present somewhat resembled the condition of the Jews at that time.—Their expectations were doubtless raised to a great height as they returned to the land of promise, and they doubtless believed glorious times were before them; but, were defeated by their enemies and sadly disappointed. Thus we have been expecting to return to the heavenly Jerusalem with songs and everlasting joy upon our heads, we expected to have dwelt amid the glories of Canaan, ere this, but our enemies seem to have obtained a victory over us, and our hearts have been made sad with bitter grief. But as the Jews were comforted by an assurance of God's presence and favor, so may we also believe that God will not forget His people. As surely as He remembered His covenant with the Hebrew nation, so surely will He remember all that make a covenant with Him by sacrifice.

It may, perhaps, be thought that circumstances respecting us are discouraging; but if we have the assurance that God is with us, all will be well. Let us gird ourselves anew for the conflict, putting on the whole armor of righteousness, and fighting manfully the good fight of faith. The Temple which we are erecting will not be consumed by the fires of the last day; but when completed, will shine forth in richer beauty than the Temple of Solomon; and will be filled with a brighter glory than the Temple even of Zerubbabel. We are laborers together with God; and our work is identified with His glorious coming; and at the final consummation, although we may not expect to be as the signet of the King, yet, if faithful, we shall be the jewels of the Lord, to shine amid the glories of heaven's resplendent day.

Chronological Discrepancies.

BY BR. F. H. B.

Some of our Brn., in endeavoring to show that the world is six-thousand years old, or, that the six-thousand years are complete this year, have referred to Josephus, if not as absolute authority, as an additional and important authority, to demonstrate its truthfulness.

Our object in this article is not to disprove that the world is about six-thousand years old; but simply to show that we cannot rely upon the dates given by the Jewish historian with any degree of certainty. To justify this remark, we wish to present the result of a brief investigation.

1st. Josephus tells us that the flood occurred in the year of the world 2656.

2d. In footing up the number of years (given in the connection) between Adam and Noah, it stands thus:—

From Adam to Seth,	230
" Seth to Enos	205
" Enos to Cainan	190
" Cainan to Mahalaleel	170
" Mahalaleel to Jared	165
" Jared to Enoch	162
" Enoch to Methuselah	165
" Methuselah to Lamech	187
" Lamech to Noah	182
" Noah to the flood	600
Age of world at the flood	2256

It will be seen that there is a difference of 400 years between the above dates. (See B 1 chap. 3 sec. 3.

Again: in B. 8 chap. 3 we are informed, that from the Creation to the building of the Temple there were 3102 years; and from the deluge 1440 years.

Now if we deduct 1440—the number of years from the Deluge to the building of the Temple—from 3102—the number of years from Adam, it gives the age of the world at the deluge as follows:—

Age of the world at the foundation of the Temple	3102
Number of years from the Deluge to the Temple to be deducted	1440
Year of the world at the Deluge	1662

This result shows a difference—when compared with the first date, of nearly one thousand years.

Again in B. 10 chap. 9 Josephus says, that the Temple was burned 3513 years 6 ms. and 10 days from creation; and from the Deluge 1957 ys. 6ms. and 10d, which when deducted shows the following result.

Age of the world at the burning of the Temple	3513
Number of years from the Deluge	1957
Year of the world at the Deluge	1556

In the foregoing, we have no less than four dates given for the Deluge. They are as follows;—

1st. In the year of the world	2656
2d. " " " " " "	2256
3d. " " " " " "	1662
4th. " " " " " "	1556

Here we have eleven hundred years difference between the first and last date. Who can have any faith in the correctness of the dates given by a historian who differs with himself to the extent shown above?

In addition to the above we may remark, that in comparing two of the statements made by Josephus in relation to the time that expired between the building and burning of the Temple, there is a discrepancy of 106 years.

Now admitting that Josephus, in one of his dates, favors the idea of the world's being about six-thousand years old, it certainly cannot strengthen an argument to appeal to him as an author; especially in relation to the question of chronology.—If he has made four mistakes on this subject, why not five, and so on? The facts in the case are such that there is no reliance to be placed on the dates given in Josephus history. The probability is his history has been interpolated, at least so far as the dates are concerned; hence we must look further for something that is reliable.

For The Crisis.

"Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired," &c.

BY BR. ISAAC ADRIAN.

If we would stand in the liberty of the Gospel, if we would hold communion with God, our motives must be honest in all we undertake to accomplish. A right position with wrong motives is worse than a wrong position with right motives. A man may take a wrong position and maintain it with great zeal, if he is governed by honest motives, and not destroy his communion with God: yet if by any means he can be brought to see that his position is erroneous, that the arguments made use of are sophistical, he will abandon it without delay. But should his associates in their attempt to enlighten him approach him with savage ferocity—hurling at him a merciless shower of epithets, such as liar, fool, schemer, dishonest, ignorant, not respectable, &c., he will be far less likely to discover his error.—Should A, B, C and D disagree in their councils, he will feel less confidence in their wisdom, especially if he suspects them of trying to regain a reputation lost by their identity with a like position.

If we would convince men of their errors, they must first be made to feel that we have no selfish object in view, because the most powerful influence that can be brought to bear upon the human mind is disinterested kindness. It is a very easy matter to question the motive of others, this is no new practice under the sun; every instrumentality which God has made use of to reform or awaken the world, has met the same clandestine, nullifying and open calumniating opposition. Every wild fancy, every development of fanaticism, and every exhibition of moral delinquency, have been magnified and thrown at their heads. In every age men have not been wanting who would raise the hue and cry, and pursue the phantom of their own creation until bewildered by their own corruption, henceforth to receive the curses of posterity. A man may destroy himself by the rod he takes to chastise his neighbor. Simon would have done so, if the Master had not told him to put up his sword. There is a spirit that seeks to build itself up upon the downfall of others—let us beware.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. Wm. Shepherd.

ELIZABETH CITY, N. J., Aug. 2d, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I am glad to see the Crisis come forth again, and trust that it may meet with that continued support which it duly merits. May its column's consecrated to the service of Christ and His Church, ever glow with, and radiate the light of the glorious Gospel of th ever blessed God, illuminating the minds of many who may not fully understand the hope of their calling; and the riches of God's grace concerning them—and finding its way to the humble cot of the pilgrim, may it prove a source of joy and consolation to him in these perilous and trying hours. We cherish the hope that it may often fall under the eye of some thoughtless, careless one, sounding the note of warning in his ears, exhorting to "prepare himself for the battle," so that when Jesus shall appear, he may also appear with Him in glory. That God will render the Crisis such by His Providence and the power of His Spirit, I confidently believe.

Then let the Crisis wing its way,
Far and near, through earth's domain
Heralding the brighter day,
Till Jesus comes, and comes to reign.

And now my dear Brn., may the good Lord enable you to walk worthy of the high vocation wherewith you are called, making full proof of your ministry.—May He help you to approve things that are excellent, that ye may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ, being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ unto the glory and praise of God. Amen.

Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God and into the patient waiting for Christ. And may the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing; that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

Your Br. in Christ looking for Christ speedily to appear, invested with heavenly majesty, having taken to himself his great power to reign gloriously in the fifth universal and unending monarchy. May it soon come. Amen.

William Shepherd.

For The Crisis.

Question.

Dear Br. Merriam:—Permit me to ask a question to call the attention of the Brn. to the 2300 and 1335 days.

If the 2300 commence in 446 B. C. will it not take as many months in 1855 to make out the whole number as there were months passed in 446 when they commenced? or does it not take the whole of 446 and 1854 to make the 2300? And if they commence in 445, will it not take the whole of 445 and 1855 to make out the full number of years?

If so, then all must see that if the days commenced in the spring of 446 they will reach to the spring of 1855, if in the fall of 445, then they will reach to the fall of 1855: and as the 1335 is a part of the 2300 they must end at the same point.

Yours, George L. Teeple.

The above questions must be answered in the affirmative. Ed.

☞ We are glad to learn that Br. P. B. Morgan, has obtained a tent in which he designs holding meetings in the West.

The Brn. and friends living in Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri, who wish to avail themselves of his labors, can address him at Moline, Illinois.

Serious Riot. A very serious riot occurred at one of the stations of the North Pennsylvania Railroad, on Thursday last. It seems that a couple of Irish laborers, who are engaged in cutting the tunnel above Gwynedd, came down to the terminus of the line, and passing through the cars, they insulted a number of ladies therein. They subsequently went into a tavern in the vicinity, when one of the number boasted that he could whip any American in the country.

A Philadelphian who was present denied the assertion, when a general melee ensued, during which decanters, iron bars, knives, &c., were used. About 100 Americans were soon on the ground, and the Irishmen were put to flight, not, however, before they had been severely handled. The Philadelphian was arrested and placed in the jail at Doylestown, but the citizens of that borough bailed him out as soon as the facts of the case became known. [Phila. Inquirer.

The Bible in Turkey. In the monthly paper of the British and Foreign Bible Society, we find the following interesting statement:

"It is a remarkable fact that years ago our Society possessed only a small, obscure depot in Galata, which was opened only twice a week, where the Turks never put their foot in, and the Christians entered it rarely and by stealth. Now, besides the great depot, which is kept open all day long in a most frequented street in Constantinople, leading to the principal bazaars, the Society's books are exposed for sale in the grand street of Pera, at the Scripture Readers' Depository and Reading Room at Galata, at the London Jews' Society's stores at Constantinople; and last, not least, they are hawked about the streets of this vast capital by colporteurs, and may be met with on the great floating bridge, and other parts of the city, taken there by the venders of books."

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE PACIFIC.

Progress of the War. Gen. Canrobert had embarked for France.

General Vivian has gone to the Black Sea, to choose a landing-place for troops somewhere near Batoum.

The Patrie contains a brief and vague notice of a successful attack upon Revel by the Allies. It appears to rest, however, on very doubtful authority; but it was thought, from the disposition of the fleet, that an attack was contemplated on Sweaborg or Helsingfors.

The Malakhoff Tower. A letter from Kamiesch, in the Moniteur de la Flotte says:—Malakhoff commands all the lower part of Sebastopol, and dominates the passage of the Bay of Inkerman, by which the town obtains its supplies from the North side. When this tower falls into our hands we shall be able to sweep the bay, burn the Russian fleet, bombard the lower town, and almost immediately after instal ourselves in the latter, for it can then be no longer held by the Russians. From the Malakoff Tower, beside, we can silence the Fort Constantine, destroy the stockage, and open the port to our vessels.

The Russians know that well—as well as we do; and hence the terrible en[illegible]ich is displayed on both sides in forming approaches, and in the partial combats which are renewed almost every night. Our newly constructed batteries are really most form[illegible]ble—especially those of Quarantine Bay, and [illegible] what we call the Bay des Calfats, which are armed with guns of the largest calibre, and which are destined to force the Russian fleet to seek a refuge behind Fort Catherine, the sole place where they will be unable to injure us.

A Russian Order of the Day. General Prince Gortschakoff has issued an order of the day presenting the most whimsically grotesque mixture of fighting and theology. No description could do justice to a document which must be allowed to speak for itself:

"In the time of the earliest wars of the Russians, the archpriests and other ecclesiastics of the orthodox Church have given their benedictions to the troops who were armed for the defence of the country. This benediction, which called for the presence of sacred images in the midst of our regiments, was the source of all our successes against the enemy of the country.

Thus the sacred and miraculous image of the Holy Virgin, the Mother of God, from Smolensko, gave by its presence in the army a series of victories to our arms, and led our soldiers from Moscow to Paris. Now that all our countrymen pray with fervor for us, his Eminence, the Metropolite Philarete de Kijeff after the example of ancient times, has just blessed the troops confided to my command, by taking from the catacombs of Kijeff the sacred and miraculous image which represents the ascension of the Mother of God, our celestial intercessor, and which in by-gone time was conferred by the Mother of God on the temple as a pledge of the eternal protection which is granted to orthodox Russia. By a particular dispensation of God, the arrival of the sacred image took place simultaneously with that of his High Eminence Innokenti, Archbishop of Kerson and Taurida, whom the dangers of war have not prevented from visiting his flock, and giving his benediction to the troops who defend Sebastopol, with so much heroism.

On the 8th of this month his eminence, in the besieged city, while the enemy's cannon were roaring, blessed the troops of the garrison, and of the forts; he blessed them with the sacred image of St. Mitophan, and in eloquent words, wished them fresh success and victories. In the firm conviction that the present made to the City of Sebastopol reproduces the sacred and miraculous picture of the ascension of the Mother of God, which is in the catacombs of Kijeff, and that the benedictions of our archpriest will be for us the pledge of fresh triumphs, let us add to our strength valiant comrades, by the idea that our cause is just, and that the Emperor and the country found on your heroism and your inflexibility a well justified hope.

Prince Gortschakoff II."

The above orders of the day was read on the 22d ult., to the garrison of the Northern Fort, and afterward to all the troops who occupy the south of Sebastopol.

The Baltic. There is every indication of a coup de main to be attempted against one or more of the Baltic fortresses. All the ships of both fleets are being collected at Nargen, and letters mention a general anticipation that Sweaborg and Helsingfors will be immediately attacked.

Despatches received from Capt. Yelverton, relate that on 26th July, he took possession of the island of Kotka, without resistance, and destroyed the fortifications and stores,—the garrison having evacuated.

The Times Paris correspondent writes—"I am assured that letters have been received from a French Consul at one of the Baltic ports, announcing that the allied squadrons had attacked Revel, that the attack was successful, and that considerable damage was done to the place."

The White Sea. Russian accounts of the movements of the Allied squadron in the White Sea are published. On the 9th of July an English steamer approached the village of Liamtsa in the Onega district, and sent ashore four boats with a "white and red flag," but the inhabitants fired upon the boats, and caused them to return to the steamer, which then fired for three hours upon the place. Two boats again attempted to land, but were again compelled to return. Next morning, the steamer put to sea. Most of the English shells fell without bursting, and the peasants picked up above fifty. The village was not much damaged.

Journal of the Siege. We continue the Diary of the Siege from the Times and Daily News' Correspondents.

July 23 and 24.—Our new batteries are completed and armed. The principal battery, occupying a very advanced position on the right, and in front of Frenchman's Hill, is fitted with a most powerful armament, a considerable proportion of which consists of land and sea-service 13 inch mortars.

July 25.—There was a heavy fire all night from the batteries, and about midnight the enemy made a sortie against the ambuscades and advanced trenches of the French on the Malakhoff Hill.

A very heavy fire of musketry followed, and all the batteries opened with terrific effect.

The Russian steamers were very active in throwing shells over into the French works. It is said that the new French battery near Careening Bay did not open fire against the steamers, reserving it for a simultaneous operation with other works on the left, which is to be carried into effect against the enemy's fleet in a few days.

The French sap, which is now fast approaching the ditch of the Malakhoff, was not injured. Our allies have also some rifle pits, close to the edge of the ditch, the fire from which causes great annoyance to the enemy, and they are so completely under the parapets of the works above, that the larger guns cannot be sufficiently depressed to reach them. The enemy, it is supposed, sought particularly the destruction of these abuscades, but the alertness of the French prevented them from achieving this object.

July 26.—The fire from the batteries on both sides was very incessant during the whole night. The Russians not only threw a vast amount of shells into various parts of the works, but kept up a constant discharge of grape and "boquets," against the advanced trenches. These boquets consist of a number of small shells or grenades, they are thrown from a mortar, about ten or twelve at one discharge; they burst closely together, and their fragments are scattered in all directions. A constant fire of this kind is going on against the French works on the Malakhoff Hill, and in addition the sharpshooters maintain an unceasing fusilade. The loss of our allies, from casualties of this kind, is said now to be equal in numbers to a regiment per month, or nearly one hundred men per diem.

July 28.—Several days have been named for the commencement of the new bombardment and attack. The approaches towards the Malakhoff, close as they are, will have to be extended still further, before the assault can be made with full security, nay conduce to a successful end. It is asserted that the disposition of the batteries is so made, and their power is so terrible, and the arrangements of the commanders so matured, that on the next occasion the assault will be undertaken without leaving room for the slightest apprehension respecting the ultimate result.

England. Parliament.—In the Commons the bill for creation of £7,000,000 sterling Exchequer Bills, was read a third time. On the order for the third reading of the Consolidated Fund Bill, Lord John Russell, pursuant to intimation he had given to advert to the state of Italy, proceeded to review the conduct of the war, and then adverted to the condition of the Italian kingdoms. In Naples, he said, the best men were pining in imprisonment. In Tuscany, the old system of religious toleration had been exchanged for a system of persecution which is a disgrace to the country. And what aggravated the matter was, that these evils were mainly in consequence of one of the principal States of Italy,—the Estates of the Church—being in occupation of Austrian and French troops, causing the Pope to be dependent on one or other of those foreign powers.

If this occupation continued indefinitely, the Pope must cease to be an independent prince, and there would be a disturbance of the balance of power in Europe. Was it not possible for the English Government, in concert with France and Austria, to devise some system of government for the Roman States, consonant with the interests of the people and with the elements of justice? He called the attention of the government to this subject, and he could not but think that the Emperor of the French would be happy to concert, with England, some system of government, which would admit of the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome.

Lord Palmerston replied to Lord John Russell, and threw out some stinging allusions to Lord John's recent course of conduct. With reference to his (Russell's) remarks on the management of the war, and the terms on which peace should be secured, he (Palmerston) reminded him, that the objects of the war were wider than the mere protection of Turkey, and therefore Turkey could not decide as to the terms of peace. The protection of Turkey was means to an end; but behind that protection was the greater question of repressing the grasping ambition of Russia. And he was glad to say, that a perfect unanimity on these points exists between the cabinets of France and England; it might be said that the two nations had but one cabinet, of which half the members sat in Paris and half in London.

As regarded the condition of Italy, it was a subject difficult to deal with; the number of Austrian troops in Italy had not been increased, and there is no indication that the policy of Austria has changed towards the Allies. Whether Austria will, at a future time, take the field with the Allies, may depend on circumstances, but he (Palmerston) was satisfied she would never take the field against them. The occupation of Rome by the French, has, at least, produced order, and supposing the foreign troops to be withdrawn, the transition from bad government to good is by no means easy. No opportunity would be lost to consider the subject on the part of England, and he thought he might say the same of France.

The subject then dropped. Most of the English papers consider Lord John Russell's remarks inopportune.

Miscellaneous. On the 9th the Queen reviewed the Foreign Legion at Shorncliffe, and immediately afterwards 1,000 men of the German regiment were ordered to the seat of war. Parliament was expected to close on Monday the 13th; the Queen would not prorogue the houses, in person. Nothing of much interest had occurred in Parliament during the week.

Fifteen thousand men, supplied by 40 regiments quartered in the north and east, will pass through Paris, during the month of August, on their way to join the army in the Crimea. The detachments furnished by the other regiments, will proceed directly to the ports of embarkation.

Spain. It is confidently stated from Madrid, that, on the 4th inst., the Spanish Government decided to give formal adhesion to the Western Powers, and to send to the Crimea 25,000 men, to be paid and outfitted by France and England. The official Gazette totally denies this statement, while the Epoca, and other journals, as firmly maintain its truth, and that the project will encounter great opposition in the Cortes. In return for this accession, Napoleon promises to put down all attempts against the throne of Isabella.

The present visit of the King of Portugal to London, is said to be with the view of including Portugal in the Alliance.

Portugal. Advices from Madeira give an unsatisfactory account of the condition of the island. The vines are completely withered, and there is no other culture on which to rely for the means of subsistence.

Italy. Turin, Aug. 9.—General Gulliaume Pepe is dead. General Percy, who is appointed by the British Government to organize the Italian Legion, has arrived.

A telegraphic despatch states that the Emperor Napoleon has made an energetic demand that the Pope shall reform and secularize his government, with the view of remedying the present state of disorganization in the territories of the church.

Asia. The Siege of Kars.—Letters from Kars are to July 14th. There was no truth in the report of the expedition of Schamyl against Tiflis. Between the 7th and 14th frequent engagements took place between the advanced posts near Kars. On the 10th the Russians made a strong reconnoissance, and an unsuccessful attack against Kara Dagh, and, on the 11th, made an equally unsuccessful reconnoissance upon Tchakmak. On the 12th they proceeded in the direction of Erzeroum, leaving but an advanced guard within view of Kars, but, on the 13th, again approached the city with all their forces, divided into three columns, one of which formed the reserve. After vainly attempting to draw the Ottoman troops out of their entrenchments, by keeping just beyond the range of their guns, the Russians returned in the evening to their camp. Sherif Pasha had abandoned his stores to the Russians, between Kars and Erzeroum.

The Invalide Russee publishes reports from General Mouravieff dated July 11th, respecting the operations in Asia. The main body of the Russian army commanded the Erzeroum road, and the patrols examined single individuals. On the 10th a reconnoissance was made of Kars. During the two hours occupied in taking plans of the localities, the garrison was in the greatest agitation. Seven battalions of infantry and two regiments of regular cavalry left the entrenchments but remained under cover of the guns, and did not even attempt to harrass the Russian retreat. On the 5th, a detachment of Turkish cavalry, engaged in driving back the Russian outposts and collecting grain and forage, was encountered and defeated. The Turks lost 70 men killed, 100 men wounded, and 14 taken prisoners, in this affair.

Earthquake in Switzerland. A letter from Valais gives an account of melancholy disasters sustained in that district of Switzerland, by a series of earthquake shocks on the 25th and 26th of July. The writer says:—

"At 10 o'clock I was at Grachen, sitting on a rock and talking with two peasants, when, all at once, our seat was violently agitated; we were thrown to the earth, and at the same moment thirteen barns fell in, the spire of the church was completely demolished, and an enormous rock—known in the district by the name of Kalchenzug—bounding from the top of the mountain, precipitated itself with a horrible crash into Viege, surrounded by a crowd of pebbly dust which rolled onwards with the impetuosity of an avalanche."

At St. Nicholas only two houses are left standing, that of a priest and of a notary. All the rest is one heap of ruins, and the wretched inhabitants of this village, collected together in a large field near the river, are encamped in the open air. The writer went from Viege to Stalden, and says the road was entirely covered with crevices, crumbled walls, enormous blocks of stone, and at every instant the noise of something cracking was renewed. On arriving at Stelden he found the village forsaken; every body had fled. Almost all the stone houses had been shaken down. The wooden structures had resisted better.

Re-establishment of Poland. A meeting in favor of the re establishment of the kingdom of Poland, was held in St. Martin's Hall, London, on the 8th, the Earl of Harrington presiding. The meeting was extremely uproarious, and a Mr. Collett moved as an amendment that—"cordially desiring the restoration of Poland this meeting cannot forget that the destruction of that nationality was mainly owing to the perfidious conduct of Lord Palmerston from 1831 to 1846, and that so long as Palmerston remains in office, no proposition for the restoration of Poland can be any thing but a delusion and a snare."

In the disturbance that ensued, the chairman left the meeting. George Thompson put the amendment, which was declared carried.

Sir Robert Peel spoke in favor of the original motion.

Extracts from a letter from an American in Hungary.

Seelin, July 1, 1855.

The Magyar, of Spanish gravity and an oriental love of splendor, with an unmistakable inclination to the dolce far niente of the Italian, seems born to rule and enjoy. The nobleness stamped upon his nature makes him, at present, a miserable slave, and hence the tenfold pain with which I look upon the degradation of a people so gallant and chivalric.

Below Presburg the Danube stretches across an immense plain which reaches to Gran, the residence of the Archbishop of Hungary, whose income formerly amounted to more than $300,000 annually. The Catholic Clergy have always had too much influence in the government of the country. At the present time they have immense power, which is employed to persecute the Protestant sects rather than ameliorate the condition of the people. The old law, "Lutherans shall be burned!" still stands on the statute book, though of course not put into execution. Unhappy is the person whose cause cannot be plead before the Government by a Catholic Priest! There is a pretence of freedom on religious subjects, but an intelligent lady of the Protestant faith informed me that the walls of her house had frequently served as a receptacle for liberal books, and that not long ago she had been compelled to cross the Austrian frontier with her garments stitched full of heretical tracts. This is the Nineteenth Century, and there are 2,000,000 Protestants in Hungary!

Comorn, the seat of a fortress never yet taken by an enemy, is situated about 50 miles below Presburg. It has by no means recovered from the injuries suffered in 1849. Whole streets were demolished and have not since been rebuilt. Gorgey defeated the Austrians there, and having liberated the city, marched back to Buda-Pesth to give the enemy a severer blow, before his treachery at Vilagos. Haynau was routed at Acs, on the right bank of the Danube, a short distance above Comorn. A large and flourishing village formerly stood directly opposite the city, but a few tottering walls and ruins are now the only evidences of its existence. The Austrians, who have a genuine talent for destroying peaceful towns, and building engines of war, have 1,000 men engaged in constructing an immense fort on the right bank of the river. The region below Gran becomes picturesque in the extreme. The arms of the Danube unite in a single stream, and the vine-clad hills rise into Porphyry Mountains, whose slopes, when not too steep, produce excellent wines, and whose summits are crowned with ruins of a Romanesque character.

Vissegrad, the capital of Ancient Hungary, and once so magnificent that a Papal Envoy termed it "a paradise on earth," now contains scarcely an inhabitant. The castle by the river-side is in a tolerable state of preservation, while that which once crowned the mountain in the rear is in ruins. The latter is said to have contained 350 chambers, and the two were connected by means of a subterranean passage. Gorgey crossed the Danube at Waitzen, a short distance below Vissegrad, with a large army in 1849. The lofty fortress of Buda rises up plainly visible from the latter place, the fleets of clacking water-mills become more numerous, the shores begin to be lined with rafts and boats, and the steamer, after darting under the magnificent chain bridge which unites the opposite shores, 1,260 feet apart, lands at the busy quay of Pesth. Buda, on the right bank, so named from a brother of Attila, boasts of a historical past, while Pesth, an exclusively commercial city, which has sprung like a phœnix out of the waves of the Danube, awaits its greatness in the future. The latter is the pride, and before the sorrowful events of '49 was the hope of the Hungarians. It contains a population of about 75,000 souls, 25,000 less than in 1848. Though a busy city, its present activity and enterprise bear no comparison to what they were in former times. The reason is obvious. The best blood of the country has been shed or expelled. The land has been drained of its money to build forts and keep immense armies in the field. Even the magnates have almost forgotten the color of gold ducats; and when they come up to the city of their pride they scarcely recognize it. Innumerable obstacles are put in the way of its progress. The spindles which were busy a few years ago have been stopped, in order that Vienna may become the first manufacturing city of the empire, and Hungary be entirely dependent upon her Austrian neighbors.

Next to the mothers and daughters of America I admire the Hungarian ladies—those magnificent embodiments of the cultivated, the natural and the spirituelle, set off by the fine flesh and liquid eye of the Orient. They avoid those unhappy nuances of refined taste and pedantry, of cultivation and blue-stockingism. They are politicians in head and patriots at heart. In the matter of patriotism, indeed, they do not fall behind the Magyar lords. Nor do I consider it an excess of hero-worship that the Hungarian mothers name three-fourths of their male offspring Louis Kossuth. I may remark en passant, that during a considerable stay in Hungary I have never heard the great Hungarian patriot spoken of (by Magyars) excepting in terms of the greatest respect and affection. Though unfortunate in war and exiled, Kossuth is first in the hearts of his countrymen.

The Hungarian ladies are passionate admirers of American institutions and Americans—in the abstract. "We revere your Washington as a demi-god," said one of them to me one day. "You Americans ought to build a monument to his memory that would kiss the very sky. You should then say your prayers at its base, and I would like to repeat mine there for my bleeding country." I replied to the demoiselle that I would be but too happy to accompany her on an expedition of that nature. "No," said she, blushing at my simplicity, "we Hungarian women have resolved never to leave our country. We wept at her fall—we share her humiliation, and will remain here, hopeful and ever confident that we shall one day enjoy her triumph."

The Hungarian, like the American, loves Liberty as he loves his wife. What are his views respecting the great contest now going on in Eastern Europe? What are his hopes respecting the oppressed but patient millions of the continent? While England sought to whiten every sea with ships and clothe the world with cotton, while all the schemes floating in the limbo of French politics had for their sole object the glory and aggrandizement of France, while the German Princes were eagerly contending for the honor of being Russian satraps, the Hungarians were quietly engaged in developing their national system. In that work, which promised so much for Eastern Europe, they were cut short by the events of '49. But the Magyars, like the Liberals in other parts of Europe, do not forget how Russia has enslaved her patient millions; how, during the forty years of peace which preceded the Eastern war, all the conservative hands of Europe were engaged in building up the Northern Colossus; and how England and France have assisted that power in the futile task of enslaving the European world. It is the political crime of omission and commission, relative to Poland, Hungary and Italy, that Western Europe is now expiating with seas of blood.

"Were all the streams that wind their mazy progress to the main,
To cleanse these odious stains in one combined,
The streams combined would flow in vain."

The Hungarians see in Russian despotism the Upas tree destined to poison his own happiness and perhaps that of his children. At the breaking out of the Eastern War there was even a wish on his part that Austria would embrace the cause of England and France, so that Russia might be more effectually humbled. But a change has gradually come over the liberal mind of Europe, in Hungary as elsewhere. It is becoming more and more evident that an alliance of English Aristocracy and French Despotism cannot overwhelm the more firmly organized and consolidated Despotism of Russia. Moreover the Magyars would prefer Russian Supremacy to that of France, and Russian Despotism to that of Austria, which condemns forever." Since Palmerston destroyed the cause of European Liberty in '48 there has been no sympathy with England [illegible] me one day, "We once looked to Englishmen as the regenerators of the world. Now, however, the English lion [illegible] with the black eagle of the Hapsburghs to keep us in the dust forever. We look to England no longer, but our eyes are now directed to your noble countrymen beyond the Atlantic." It is for these reasons that the Hungarians, as well as the Liberals throughout Europe, bide patiently their time. Though crushed to the earth, they hope. They understand that other elements must be called into action before an end can be put to Russian aggression, and Despotism, whether it be Russian, Austrian, French or English, can be overwhelmed.—[Correspondence of The N. Y. Tribune.

The War.

The renewal of the bombardment of Sebastopol commenced on the 10th.

Omar Pacha has been appointed to the chief command in Asia.

The state of the siege of Kars was unchanged.

Toganrog and Berdiansk had been again partially bombarded.

It was stated at Paris on Thursday evening that the government had received intelligence by telegraph of the successful bombardment of Revel.

The Allies were demolishing the fortifications of Anapa, contrary to the desire of the Circassians.

The report that Russia was willing to accept the four points as interpreted by the Allies, is unfounded.

The despatch announcing the successful bombardment of Revel is looked upon as premature.

Advices from Cracow state that the new levy in Poland was proceeding with great vigor.

The Moniteur states officially, that the sum total of the subscriptions to the French loan is 3,652,591,985 francs.

Gen. Markham is spoken of in the Crimea as likely to succeed to the command, but the statement is doubtful.

The Queen is desirous to nominate the Duke of Cambridge, but he declined the honor, offering, however, to go out as second in command; meantime Gen. Simpson continues with the army.

Some operations of no great moment have been executed by the Allies in the Sea of Azoff.

The Black Sea fleet is still concentrated for some great movement. A coup de main is confidently expected in the Baltic. Ninety ships are assembled at Nargan, and the opinions on board are divided as to whether their destination be Revel or Sveaborg. Most probably the latter.

The well informed Paris correspondent of the London Times states that Austria had just made spontaneous advances of more friendly relations towards the Western Powers.

Lord Palmerston conveyed a similar meaning, but the public are slow to believe in Austrian friendship.

The Russian capture of French prisoners must have been large of late, for the exchange agreed upon draws from France not only the Russians taken in the Crimea, but all those who fell into French hands last year at Bomarsund.

Obituary.

Died in Salem, Mass., July 5th, Br. George Ramsdell, aged 60 years.

Br. Ramsdell formerly lived in Marblehead, Mass., and was converted some eight years since. He joined the Orthodox Congregational Church, of which he was a member until the late Advent movement, when he became interested, and was baptized by Br. Hook.

On the morning of his death he was in his usual state of health. About 10 o'clock he was taken with a turn of the heart disorder to which he was subject, and expired in a few minutes. He leaves a wife, two sons and three daughters to mourn his loss.

Br. R. was a very benevolent man, and the poor will deeply feel the loss they sustain.—He was expecting the event of his death for sometime before it transpired, and therefore kept himself in readiness for the summons.

George Waugh.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I must record for your paper the death of Br. Jasper Birch.

He died at his father's residence in Hartford, Vt. His sickness was long and painful, yet he endured with great patience and fortitude to the last. When he saw that he must die, and felt death creeping on, he exclaimed, "I know what it is," and calmly fell asleep in Jesus to awake in the morning to life eternal.

He was a well known Br., and it needs no apology from me to sound his praises. In him the Church has lost a devoted member. May it be sanctified to the good of all the remaining family.

Isaac Adrian.

West Hawley, Aug. 22, 1855.

NOTICE.

A Camp meeting will be held upon Caldwell's Manor, C. E., one mile west of the village of Clarenceville, upon the road leading to Ash Island Ferry, on land owned by Cole Row, to commence Wednesday Sept. 12th, and continue over the Lord's day, and as much longer as the good of the cause may seem to require at the time.

As this is designed to be a general meeting of Adventists in all this section, it is hoped that all who can, will come up to this "feast of tabernacles" with provisions and tents, prepared to stay and labor through the meeting for themselves and others. This meeting has been appointed for the single purpose of glorifying God, by being a means of preparing subjects for His everlasting Kingdom soon to be set up. Let those in the vicinity, who may see this notice, circulate the appointment as widely as possible; and let each one remember the responsibility that God has laid upon them in this matter, and act in view of a solemn and speedily approaching Judgment, that shall decide the eternal destiny of each, according to their deeds.

Elders S. W. Thurber and B. Reynolds are expected to preach the word; also any other of God's ministers who may feel it duty to attend will be cordially received.

Deacons H. Colton, S. Young and L. Spear have been appointed to act as a committee of arrangements.

In behalf of the Church, C. P. Dow, Pastor.

East Chazy, Aug. 10, 1855.

GROVE MEETING.

There will be a Grove Meeting held on the town line which separates Cambria from Reading, some six miles South-West of Hillsdale, (Michigan), near the plank Road leading from Hillsdale to Basswood Corners, to commence Saturday, September 1st, and continue as long as thought best. All are invited to attend.

F. H. Berick, for the Brethren.

Vernon, Aug. 12, 1855.

Providence permitting, there will be a Camp Meeting in Vernon, Vt., on the old ground, to commence on Monday, Sept. 17, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn. and Srs. from the East and West, North and South, prepare for this gathering, and let your prayers be continually ascending to our heavenly Father for the prosperity of this meeting, that every thing may be conducted with an eye to His glory.

There will be a boarding tent on the ground, and horse keeping near by.

In behalf of the church, J. Frost.

GENERAL CAMP MEETING.

Providence permiting, there will be a general Camp Meeting in Cheshire, one half mile from the depot, commencing Monday, Sept. 10, to continue over the following Sabbath. We hope all, far and near, will take an interest in this gathering, and make it a special subject of prayer. Hope they will come on Monday morning, and pitch their tents in good faith, with a full expectation, that with the divine blessing, it will be a meeting that will tell on saint and sinner, not for party, but for God and truth.

Provision made for horse keeping, and a boarding tent will be kept on the ground at which board can be obtained at a fair price.

Preachers invited to attend, Brn M. Bachelder, J. Hemenway, J. Couch, H. Pratt, and others.

Suffering.

My God, my God, remember me,
And lend a helping hand;
Thy waves are going over me,
I cannot, cannot stand.

Cruel reproach my heart hath broke,
I've felt the world's dark frown;
Disease my mortal frame hath shook,
And crushed the spirit down.

Sorrow and grief I feel each day,
From unbelieving men,
"Where is thy God?" they ever say—
"His promised coming, when?"

Without the camp, reproach I bear,
But rest within thy word
The Savior truly doth declare
I'm not above my Lord.

Through suffering He was perfect made;
Shall I not suffer, too?
Courage, my soul! be not afraid,
But bravely face the foe!

The Resurrection.

By William Shepherd.

"Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Oh sorrow not, ye stricken ones!
As those who have no hope in God;
For those beloved—who have gone
To rest, beneath the quiet sod.

If we believe the sacred word,
That Jesus for our sins has died—
If we believe He rose again,
Then we in Him are justified.

And all who sleep in "blessed hope,"
Shall be restored when He appears;
They shall arise to die no more,
And God shall wipe away their tears.

For this we say now unto you,
The dead in Christ will first arise,
In glorious bodies, when He comes,
To meet Him in the dazzling skies.

Then we who still remain alive,
In waiting for that blessed day,
Shall, in a moment, all be changed,
And clothed with immortality.

From heaven the Lord shall swift descend,
With a great shout—Archangel's voice,
And the last trump, the trump of God,
Shall bid the sleeping ones rejoice.

Then all united we shall rise,
A Church redeemed through Jesus' blood,
Glorious, pure and sanctified,
And be forever with the Lord.

Then fling away your doubts and fears,
Cling to the promise of the word;
Believe—for Jesus soon will come,
When Paradise shall be restored.

The Ten Commandments.

The following, by Richard Christian, has often been printed, but cannot be presented too often:—

Have thou no other gods but me:
Unto no image bow thy knee:
Take not the name of God in vain:
Do not thy Sabbath day profane:
Honor thy father and mother too,
And see that thou no murder do,
From vile adultery keep thee clean;
And steal not, tho' thy state be mean.
Bear no false witness,—shun that blot;
What is thy neighbor's covet not.
Write these thy laws, Lord, in my heart
And let me not from them depart.

The Ordinances of God's house.

By Sr. M. H. Morrison.

Br. Merriam:—With thy permission, I would lay before the household a few remarks on the necessity of the strict compliance with the commands of Christ to His Church, and the organization which He himself instituted for it.

My mind has been much impressed within the last few weeks, on this important, but much neglected subject.

A short time since, while conversnig on these things with a much beloved Br. of Danville, he remarked that to attend to the ordinance of the Supper every first day of the week, separated the world too much from us. But I would just say, if the world separate themselves from us because we keep our Master's commandments, Amen. Christ, in no sense of the word, has given his commands to please the world, but for the nourishment of the body of which He is the Head. Paul declares Christ to be the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, Rom. 10: 4. And obeying His commands is the fulfilling of all righteousness. Matt. 3: 15.

As children of God, we must diligently examine whether we are fashioned after the ancient models dictated by the Holy Spirit, and fully carried out in the organization of the first Churches by the Apostles. This is no light matter, and God has not treated it lightly. "For see (saith He,) that thou make all things according to the pattern," &c. Heb. 8: 5. Of all that the Temple contained, there was nothing left to the discretion of man in reference to the quality, capacity, and [illegible] of every vessel, the place each vessel should occupy, &c. Under the old [illegible] there was nothing left to the [illegible] [illegible] the New Testament [illegible] the principle is relaxed, or that the [illegible] [illegible] the Christian Church are left to be a matter of taste, and to be fashioned according to the ever changing opinions of professed Christians carried about with every wind of doctrine.

Before God, I now ask all, who are looking for so great and glorious things, prayerfully and critically to examine our position on these important points, lest we find by bitter experience, that the friends of this world are the enemies of God.

And however conscientiously we may differ on these points, there must necessarily be wrong; for it is impossible that both can be right, except we throw down the barrier between right and wrong, and presume to make God himself the author of confusion. Now then, wherever wrong is found, it cannot be of God.

Paul was not perfect, he was pressing towards perfection with the prize of his high calling constantly in view; we also must aim at perfection, and at nothing else. We must not measure ourselves by other Churches. The Bible, and that alone, must be our standard. And indeed nothing can be more certain, than that we shall all incur the hatred of the world, just in proportion as we shake off its chains. If then we are prepared to do our duty, and in doing it, be privileged to rise to greater perfection in holiness, let us take God's word into our hands, having this for our motto, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

The Churches of the Apostles are to us, what the pattern showed in the Mount was to Moses. Implicit obedience is the rule in both cases. And just in propotion as His rule is set aside, do men, or Churches cease to be His. They become friends of this world, and therefore enemies of God. Let us therefore hear the voice of our Heavenly Teacher in all things, discarding the unscriptural cant of essentials and non-essentials in all matters of christian faith and practice.

"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you," John 15: 14.—(Now mark this comprehensive word, whatsoever. It cannot imply a part. No, no, they all claim our obedience alike; not because they are great or small, but because they are His.) These words of our Heavenly Master point out an unerring path to christian unity! they define the extent of christian obedience, and leave neither choice nor discretion to man. They effectually disclaim the generalizing spirit, so boastfully avowed, and falsely called—liberality. I readily admit that this liberal spirit has done much to make religion tasteful to the world, and greatly to swell the number of its professors; but to the mind of every Christian who trembles at God's word, and dares not either take away or add to the words of the prophecy of this Book, it must be evident, that the cause of Christ gains nothing by the unholy compromise; but is made to concede every thing; that the Church of Christ cannot be edified by it, but that, on the contrary the Holy Spirit is grieved, the authority of Christ weakened, and principle trodden under foot.

Now, my dear Brn. and Srs., having put our hand to the plough, we must not look back; nor become alarmed. If our profession leads us into direct conflict with the world, we cannot complain that we have been deceived by Him under whose banner we have enlisted. No. The great Captain has fully warned us what we have to expect; for saith he, "I have given unto them thy word, and the world hath hated them because they are not of the world," &c. Thus we see the effect of obeying the word is to raise the affections from earthly things, and to expose us to the hatred of the world.

Now dear Brn and Srs., permit me to refer to these commands of Christ to His Church—that are to be observed as a Church.

First of all—upon believing the Gospel the command is, to be baptized, buried with Him in water, (as our Great Head gave us the example in the river of Jordan,) unto death, (to be dead to the world) and to walk in newness of life. And there is one point worthy of particular notice, viz., the assurance of being resurrected like Christ, if we have been "planted together in the likeness of His death."—Rom. 6: 5.

Then the command to the Apostles was:—"Teaching them (the believing, baptized persons,) to observe all things all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

This language implies—that God's blessing will ever accompany us, if faithful in obeying His word.

I now invite you to consider, whether we as the Church of Christ, fulfil our duty to our Master, and to one another, in the important matter of mutual exhortation and edification. This is the duty of every member of the Church, according to the gift bestowed on them, when they come together on the first day of the week, which is in no case to be set aside in order to be attended to in a prayer or Conference meeting. We have no such example.

Heb. 10: 25. "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together; but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching."

Acts 20: 9. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread," &c.

These two passages, though there were no others, plainly show the example of these two commands—exhortation and the Lord's Supper—every Lord's day. See Eph. 4: 15, 16; 1. Thess. 5: 11; Col. 3: 16; 1. Cor. 14; Acts 2: 41: 42.

Obedience to this ordinance every Lord's day, is very plainly taught by Paul, 1. Cor. 16. "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye, upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him," &c. Now for any to say that that ordinance was only intended for the Churches of those days, is as much as to say that the poor have ceased to exist. There were seven Deacons appointed for that office in the Church, to whom was assigned the care of widows and others, who being members, required maintainance from the Church, in consequence of their inability. The qualification for that office is also given, 1. Tim. 3. And it is not consistent to suppose that all this instruction was for that age alone. The expression, "take us for an example," teaches that it was designed for the Church in every age.

Now let us hear the voice of our Heavenly Teacher on the office of Pastor.

From Titus 1: 5, we learn that the Church in Crete had not been fully organized when they received the Gospel at the first; hence Titus is left to finish what had been already begun. An important part of his work was to "ordain Elders in every city." So it appears that in every city a plurality of Elders (Bishops) were ordained. Can we then doubt that there is something wanting, or left undone among those who have not a plurality of Elders. Do we presume to say that this duty, so definitely enjoined on Titus, was not essential, and that one Elder would have answered the purpose quite as well? Could it be possible that Paul was ignorant of the will of his Master in this matter? and that this thing has been written without any reference to the future state of the Church of Christ? Or shall we say of this particular portion of God's word, hat it is not given by inspiration of God? tand that it is not profitable? &c. Well my dear Brn., this is just what we do say when we refuse to recognize and practise it. But in respect to the question of Eldership, the concurrent testimony of Scripture abundantly proves the divine institution; and that Paul planted the Churches which were organized by himself strictly after the mode enjoined on Titus, is evident from Acts 14: 23; "And when they had ordained their Elders in every Church," &c.

This text, I conceive, is decisive of the question. The Church at Ephesus had its plurality of Elders. Acts 20: 19. And the Church at Philippe is addressed by Paul and Timotheus, in all the essential branches of its organization, viz. saints, Bishops, (plural) and deacons.

Peter's ideas, are in accordance with the above, both as regards a plurality of Elders, (or Bishops,) and the nature of their duties. "The Elders (plural) who are among you, I exhort," &c. "Feed the flock of God that is among you," &c.—"Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock."—1 Pet. 5.

Now, my dear Brn., what shall we say to these things. Shall we cleave to one and all of them, knowing that they are the appointment of our Great Head?—Let each of us endeavour, by the light of His word, to be what we profess, (Christians) cultivating the spirit of love, "holding fast unto Him from whom the whole body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God; thus obeying the commands of our Master," our wills wholly obedient to the will of God; and our conversation (our whole deportment) such as becometh the Gospel of Jesus Christ. By doing thus, we shall be enabled to live on without murmuring at our lot, in this time of trial while the pillar of cloud tarries, or is resting down.

May we all remember duty as regards aiding Br. Merriam to send forth his sheet of refreshing to the lovers of truth, which we would not like to do without, the few days or weeks, we may have to spend here.

Your Sr. in the Lord, looking day by day, for life and immortality.

Parable of the ten Virgins.

By Br. I. Damman.

Throughout the entire Church an anxious inquiry is made in reference to the fulfilment of this Parable.

1. We have the going forth to meet the Bridegroom, a movement made on the prophetic periods.

2. The Church meet a disappointment, and consequently a tarry.

How long was the tarrying of the Bridegroom to continue?

Until He comes.

What is to be accomplished in the tarrying time?

Mark—1. "While the Bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept; and at midnight there was an outcry made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet Him. Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came," &c.

2. The Midnight Cry.
3. The rising, and trimming of lamps.
4. Conversation about oil.
5. The foolish go to buy.

All these movements take place during the tarry. Taking this view of the subject, we perceive there will be an opportunity to rise first for the going forth, and secondly for the Midnight Cry, and still we have but one tarry in the Parable.

Question. Have we not had the going forth, the slumbering time and the Cry?

As the light shines upon my mind, it appears that we have. Amen.

Yours in love, until Jesus comes,

Israel Damman.

Corinna, Me., July 16, 1855.

P. S. Let all possess the spirit of Christ, and not speak hard things. Amen. I. D.

For The Crisis

"Follow after Charity; keeping the heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life!"

By Br. E. J. R.

Dear Brn. and Sisters;—Whilst taking our voyage through the perils and quicksands of these latter days, when wickedness and infidelity are stalking through the land, when iniquity abounds and the love of many is waxing cold, let us take the more earnest heed to keep our hearts with all diligence in the love of God, and the patience of Christ; for out of them are the issues of life. Knowledge has been increased, and many prominent and weighty truths have been brought to light in these latter days. Theories have been built up, in sustaining which we are in danger of neglecting the keeping of our hearts. Let us grow in grace as well as in knowledge. I do not mean to insinuate that we must not search after the truth, certainly not: we are to be sanctified through the truth; and the truth is what will make us free. I mean to say we must have heart-work, as well as head work. For a state of heart that will enable us to stand in that day of rewards, consists not merely in a belief of this or that; we are to work out our salvation with fear and trembling. A mere belief in the definite time of our Lord's Advent will not fit us for the Kingdom; for many who seemingly run well in the Christian race before the 19th of May, have gone back since to the beggarly elements of the world. Now there was not charity in those cases: for charity never faileth. It is not at one time filled with the spirit from above, and at another with the spirit of the world. There are times when the Christian warfare seems to be beset with greater trials than at other times. At such times we ought more earnestly to watch our hearts, to keep them with all diligence, lest we speak or act in an unguarded manner that will bring us into condemnation: for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh; and if our treasure be in heaven, our hearts will be there also; and if our hearts are there, our conversation will be in heaven and will be seasoned with grace.

Now in order to possess that purity and holiness of heart that will fit us for the Kingdom, we must be found having on the robe of charity which is the bond of perfection. The Apostle Paul gives a full definition of charity, the attributes of which are these: viz. "Charity suffereth long and is kind, envieth not, as not itself, (Mar.) is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, (contained in the word of God), hopeth all things, endureth all things." Charity NEVER faileth.

Now if we abide in this "more excellent way," (as Paul terms it,) we shall be found having the Spirit of Christ, without which we are none of his. We are too apt to judge that such and such a Br. or Sr. has vital godliness, if they manifest great talent in their prayers, preaching, exhortations, knowledge of the divine word, &c. But these gifts are no true index to vital godliness. I do not mean to say that those that speak and pray thus are void of godliness. Nay verily. I want to come to the true essence of the matter, although I cannot, in my feeble way, begin to do justice. Paul says that although we have these gifts and even sacrifice our bodies to be burned, and have not charity, it will avail us nothing in the day of Judgment. So let us judge not by appearances, but judge righteous judgment, that is, by the fruits; for the fruits of the Spirit, are the fruits of charity.

Now the Scriptures do not command us to do anything without giving us instruction how it must be done. Says the Apostle:—"All Scripture is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

For an example, we are commanded to reprove, rebuke, and exhort; but how? with all long suffering and doctrine; that the unity of the Spirit may be kept in the bonds of peace. Says the Master:—"If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him: and if he repent, forgive him;" not judge him; for vengeance belongeth to God, and He will repay.

But how must we rebuke? With a mild and Christ-like spirit; for whatever is contrary to this, cometh of evil.

Says the Psalmist:—"Let the righteous smite me kindly, and reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil which shall not break my head." Again; Gal. 6: 1. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such as one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted." In all things, and under all circumstances, we have need to "keep our hearts with all diligence: for out of them are the issues of life."

Finally: "Be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous, not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing, but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called that ye should inherit a blessing. For he that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile: Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous:—but his face is against them that do evil."

There is a kingdom in reserve,
For saints of God to share,
Who while on earth each other loved,
And felt each other's care.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. H. Pratt.

Springfield, July 7th, '55.

I do feel like praising the Lord for the way in which He has been leading the little flock along to certain victory.—Though the enemy has been trying to spring mines beneath their feet, no harm has befallen them.

If any of us have been lifted up, by supposing that we had made the world to tremble as it has by the mighty cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," we have now an opportunity of learning that all the glory belongs to God; and we have great reason to be thankful that He has permitted us to bear this message of His glorious appearing to a perishing world.

My present tour through many of the places in which I have labored for the last two years, has been one of deep interest and satisfaction.

In Bondsville, I found the Brn. strong in the faith of speedy redemption, and believing that the past movement has been of the Lord.

In Greenfield, I found those that were remaining in the place, (for many had moved away,) very confident that the "cry" has been made, and were much disheartened at the position some take relative to the parable.

At Northfield Farms, I found Br. Gage, Titus and others strong in faith, giving glory to God.

In Brattleboro, there was an effort to hinder me from preaching, because I believed the Devil was a liar; but it all worked for good, praise the Lord. Counsel against the Lord is bad business.—There is no power but of God.

However there are some in Brattleboro who have not defiled their garments, who will walk with Him in white.

The Brn. in Vernon, received me cordially, and like those of Northfield and Brattleboro, remembered me after a godly sort. I was reminded of lines I used to read in former days, running thus:—

"Man, like a vine, supported, lives,
The strength he gains is from the embrace he gives."

Here is a goodly band, that are striving for the crown.

In Ashfield I found a few pressing forward for the prize. The Lord bless them, is my prayer.

Charlemont is not left without a witness. There is a little group, who still gather together at Br. Cudworths, whose names are in the book of life, praise the Lord.—Frowns cannot drive them, nor smiles allure them from the pathway of the Just. Their labor of love will be remembered by some weary pilgrims till Jesus comes.

In Hawley, there is a band that have stood the storm, many of them from the beginning. Their disappointment in no way discourages them, and like the most of the waiting ones where I have been, they believe the "cry" in the parable has been made.

At Savoy, there is no giving up, and they think they have left nothing worth going back after. May the Lord increase their faith.

At North Adams, the enemy had been at work; but I trust in the mercy of the Lord, nothing will separate them from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

This little band of my Heavenly Father's own planting, with others on the mountains, are very near and dear to me, and I trust I shall share with them in the mercies of God at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

The few in Cheshire that remain there, are holding on, nothing terrified, and though cast down, yet not destroyed. If their trials work for them, they will have help enough on their journey to ensure the prize.

At Chester Factories, I fear many have forsaken their first love. I hope they will discover their real position before it is too late. Still, there are some there of sterling worth, whom the Lord loves.

At Westfield Farms there are some that are interested in the promises of God, that I trust will endure to the end. Too many have possessed the spirit of contention with each other. Nevertheless, there are some in Westfield who have not denied His name, and I trust, will be found worthy. O that a healing balm may be found, and all the fiery serpents be destroyed at once. The tongue is a deadly evil, no man can tame it; "therewith bless we God, and therewith curse we men," whom God hath made. "My brethren, these things ought not to be so."

In Springfield, I find a goodly number who like Caleb and Joshua, have "another spirit," feeling, if it please the Lord, they are well able to go up and possess the land. A few, however, are advocating the cause of the Jews, who, I think, if they would go among them, might comfort them. O for wisdom in this hour of trial.

Br. Merriam, your position on the parable is believed fully by most of the devoted Brn. where I have been, and nothing will shake them from it but good evidence. Your article will and does comfort them, because they believe it to be the truth.

May the Lord help you to feed the flock, and while you water others, may your own soul be refreshed, is the prayer of thy Br. in Christ.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. J. Brown.

South Buttler, N. Y., July 29th, 1855.

To the Brn. in the Ministry:—We feel that we are living in perilous times, in the last end of Gentile rule, when men's hearts are "failing them, for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

And we feel a strong desire that some of the preaching Brn, would come this way and give us the word, present truth, or meat in due season.

Will Br. Couch, Berick, Smith, Munger, or others, "come over and help us." I think they would be sustained.

Let the Brn. stop at Savanah station, about 30 miles west of Syracuse. The stage passes to this place every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Inquire for John Brown, five miles north from the station.

Yours waiting, and expecting redemption through Christ,

John Brown.

The Dawn of Day.

Extracts from "Voices of the Day," by John Cummig, London.

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Rom. 13: 12.

Amid much that is painful to the Christian heart, and perplexing to every mind, it is delightful to know that the night to which such perplexities and pains are confined is far spent, and that the day that dissipates them all is close at hand. Scripture and the signs of the times so teach us.

What is meant by the night? and what by the day? and what are the presumptive proofs that the one is far spent, and that the other, as the Apostle proclaimed it to be then, and as we may with greater emphasis proclaim it to be now, is close at hand?

The night is justly associated as a symbol, in every language, owing to its characteristic darkness, with the greater or lesser ignorance of the human mind.—The dispensation under which we now are is called by the Apostle, from this circumstance, with others, the night.—There is much around us that the most enlightened are unable to penetrate.—There are obscurities lying on the commonest things that the most gifted minds are incompetent to remove. There are bright truths of which we can now see only the shadow. There are grand sounds of which we can now hear the echoes only. There is a brightening glory beyond the horizon of our present view, occasional sparks of which are all we can now catch; by which, however, we may form some conception of the distant magnificence and the splendor on which the sun never sets. "We see (says the Apostle,) as through a glass, darkly." And those things about which Christians quarrel, are generally these very things which we cannot see, because of the night now far spent; but which we shall see, and fully comprehend when the day itself comes.

The night, too, may fairly be regarded as the symbol of the prevalence, more or less, of error. The night that now is, too plainly characterized by the growth and progress of multitudinous heresies, misconceptions and delusions. How many creeds are still popular among mankind, pervaded, every one of them, with the most deadly heresy! How much alloy of error is there in the faith of many a Church, true and Christian in the main, notwithstanding! In the great western apostasy there is evidence of night, deep, dark, impenetrable, lying on head and heart, and overshadowing both with baleful delusion. A system is there in which truth is neutralized by error; in which the light is admitted only to be extinguished by darkness, or to be divided and distorted; in which Jesus is recognized in order to be betrayed, as of old, with a kiss; a system where the minister of the Gospel is perverted into the priest, where one sacrament is made a god, and the other an exorcism; in which worship is pantomime, the church a sepulchre, and Christianity a gigantic parody. This apostacy exists, and will exist in the night, and so long as the night shall last, for it will be destroyed only by the brightness of the Redeemer's coming. The first ray of the rising of that Sun who is now beneath the horizon, but who will then emerge above the horizon, will utterly blast and break up that system which has destroyed the souls that he came to save, and dishonored him that came to save them. It is because that conspiracy, through all its heads, is conscious that the night is far spent, and that its despotism is almost gone, that it is now beating about in every country and capital of Europe, in order to gain a foothold, if it should only be for one hour, before the night departs, and the bright light comes, in which its hierarchy and all its dependent systems of darkness can neither live nor prosper.

But the night is not only associated with ignorance and error; it is also identified in Scripture with sorrow, tribulation and affliction. "The night of trial," "the night of weeping," "the night of sorrow," "the night of affliction," are frequent Scriptural expressions. And who does not know that, in this dispensation, through not a little but much tribulation, we must enter into the kingdom of God? How often are the loved and the cherished snatched away without notice, through the interposition of a mysterious Hand, accompanied by no indication of the why or the wherefore it was so! How often does a storm descend upon us, that we neither see nor know whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth; which we can feel was present by the chasm it has left, whilst it swept away all our industry had accumulated, and left the bare earth with no inscription or solution of the interposition! Not a year ends that has not been to many a night of tribulation. How much trial, how much sorrow, how much conflict, do we feel in keeping right a heart that ever tries to snap its leading strings within, and to hold at bay a foe ever watchful, and ever going about seeking whom he may destroy! How much tribulation must there be endured by every one who knows what the Savior hath said of the most sainted, "Satan hath desired to have thee, (which is the characteristic of the night,) that he may sift thee as wheat!" Yet how consolatory is the holy guarantee, that night shall end in bright day! "I have prayed for thee, (not that thy affliction may cease,—but) that thy faith fail not."

The night is also associated in Scripture with toil and labor. The Church is now militant, not glorified. Men object very frequently, as I have heard them say, to controversy for the purity, and the safety, and the spread of the Gospel. Surely, the very law of our condition is controversy. We now constitute the church militant. Who and what is a soldier? A man armed for the defence of what he loves, and for repelling those that would filch him of that which he loves. Even so the Church of Christ, as now represented in every passage of Scripture, is striving, laboring, working, fighting. The Church is militant, and while the night lasts she must continue so—each sentinel must be at his post, each soldier in his rank, each sword ready in its sheath, each laborer on the building—every man feeling that he is here to fight while the night continues, and that only when the coming day dawns shall he reap the promised reward, the crown of glory, the incorruptible inheritance that fadeth not away.

The night, too, is associated in Scripture with death. Now we die. But when the day predicted in that beautiful chapter of Revelation shall arrive, there shall be no death nor night there. But, while the night lasts, that is, while this dispensation continues, death will visit every man.—This is an inseparable characteristic of the night.

But the Apostle tells us that this night is far spent. I believe that it is so, and that from Scripture, not from my own fancy. Some of the twilight beams seem to indicate that the Sun of Righteousness, if below the horizon, already tips it with his outer rim, and will soon emerge and shed down the splendor of millennial day.—But it is when the sun is just below the horizon—that is, when the day is nearest—that the clouds seem to struggle most for ascendency, and that the contest becomes, or seems, the most intense, whether the day or night shall have the victory. Thus we may expect that, just because the night is far spent, and the day is at hand, the conflict will become hotter, the evil for a season intenser, and trials multiplied a thousand-fold. Who can look back to the last five years, and not see that we have scarcely passed a year without a special chastisement or judgment of God? In one year was the failure of the crops, in another year that of our commercial prosperity, in another the pestilence that swept away 18,000 of this metropolis alone, and in this year the irruption of a moral pestilence from the Tiber. I use this expression, not to offend those Roman Catholics who, of course, repudiate the epithet, but because a time is come for us to tell them more emphatically than we ever did, what the Bible enunciates about their system; and because the judgments denounced on it are soon about to descend—judgments from which I conjure them to escape as Lot from Sodom, lest they receive its plagues. All these things indicate that the day is at hand. Ancient prophecies are nearly all fulfilled. The Apocalyptic vials are nearly poured out. The seventh is pouring out, and its effects are felt in every land, and acknowledged by almost every interpreter of prophecy. The seventh trumpet has sounded, and its echoes are reverberating over all the earth. The seals have all been broken, and their mysterious contents are made known. The eve of the last conflict has come. Well drilled forces are mustering to the battle. Our own country is stirred, at this moment, to its depths, as if there were in its very conscience—in the national conscience—an instinctive premonition of what is speedily coming on the earth, and yet a high moral sensibility which makes me think more highly of this great country than I ever thought in my life. It has a perception, clear and fixed, that the dismantler of the holy, the enslaver of the free, the shutter of God's word, is come amongst us, to make his last, and I know it will not be his successful, stand for the night, in opposition to the breaking day; for darkness, in opposition to light; for slavery, in opposition to freedom; for Antichrist, in opposition to Christ.

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand;" and the day that settles all conflicts, ends all quarrels, scatters all clouds, and brings within our glorious horizon the unsetting Sun of Righteousness, is close—closer than many of us imagine—at hand.

This leads me, next, to notice what are some of the chacteristics of the day that is also mentioned in the Epistle to the Romans.

I have described the night, and have tried to show what it is the symbol of; let us now investigate for a little the nature of the day, and seek to ascertain what it represents.

The day of perfect knowledge is at hand. The clouds that lie upon many a truth will soon be dissipated. That curtain that screens from us the Holy of Holies will ere long be rent from the top to the bottom. Hieroglyphic signs, that are inscrutable to us, because the key of the Son of David that unlocks them has not yet been applied, will be explained and rendered luminous in the splendor in which they were written. The unction of the Spirit will descend from the skirts of the high Priest's robe upon all his people, and they shall no more teach every man his neighbor, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know him, from the least even to the greatest. The effulgence of that risen Sun shall shine into all depths, and ascend to all heights, and cover the wide world with an unending glory. Controversy shall shut its mouth, and contention sheathe its sword; and brethren who now meet only to quarrel, shall meet and mingle to praise God together; and many that had not a taper on earth, nor saw a star in the firmament, in that light shall see all things clearly. This day is at hand. Fact and Scripture say so.

The day of truth is at hand. Error shall flee away like a mist before the morning sun. Hindooism, Mahometanism, the Mishna, the Shaster, the Koran, the Talmud, the Breviary, shall all be annihilated, as earthly exhalations, forever. In that bright light, Popery, with its creeds, its [illegible], its amulets, its rosaries, its crucifixes, its images, its awful blasphemies, its deceptions, its deadly superstitions, shall be utterly burned up.—Its cardinals, priests and monks, shall either be—which God grant!—snatched from the blazing volcano in which it sinks, or they shall perish in it and with it; for strong, we are told, is the Lord God that judgeth her.

That day, so near at hand, is the day of joy. There shall be a song of joy at that dawn that will rise in deepening sounds from the plains to the mountain tops, and from the mountain tops to the far and high heavens, raising the strain as it was never raised before:—"Salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God; and He shall reign forever and ever." "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." Now, streamlets of joy enter into us; but then we shall enter into an ocean of joy—joy at the downfall of Babylon; at the crushing of Satan; at the extinction of sin; at the flight of disease, and sorrow, and death, and tears; joy at the return of Paradise to earth, and the admission of man into Paradise; and the Angel's song, which began when Christ was born, shall be actualized in fact when Christ shall come, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men!"—The very universe will become a revelation, a complement to the Bible that now is; and the very stars shall be the words in which God's mind will be written; and man, the priest of nature, shall present her willing and pure offering of thanksgiving and praise.

It will be a day, too, of admiring thanksgiving and gratitude. That beautiful psalm which was sung when the pestilence was removed, will be sung when sin and superstition and error are annihilated, with an emphasis with which it was never sung before; "Bless the Lord, O our souls!—All that is within us be stirred up to bless and magnify His holy Name:" it shall be sung in the past—"He hath pardoned our sins, He hath healed our diseases, He hath redeemed our life from destruction, He hath renewed our age like the eagle's, He hath crowned us with loving kindness, and with tender mercies."

It will be a day of lasting rest. When the night that is far spent is completely exhausted, and the day that shall be is fully come, then there shall be perfect rest. The earth shall have its Sabbath, which it lost by our sin. Man shall have his, in its integrity, and purity, and beauty.—God rested on the seventh day from all His work, and hallowed the Sabbath, and blessed it. I believe there is not a beast in the field, nor a fish in the sea, nor a fowl in the air, that has not a right to the Sabbath, and that shall not yet have a Sabbath of rest. There is not a laborer in the work-shop, nor a toiling man in the post-office, nor a clerk in the counting-house, that may not claim the Sabbath.—Next to God's word, God's Sabbath is the right and the privilege of man. Popery saps and practically subtracts both; infidelity impugns and denounces both; by God's grace we will part with neither.—And when that last Sabbath comes, the Sabbath of all creation, the heart, wearied with its tumultuous beatings, shall have rest; the soul, fevered with its anxieties, shall enjoy peace. The sun of that Sabbath will never set, or veil his splendors in a cloud. The flowers that grow in his light will never fade. Our earthly Sabbaths are but faint reflections of the heavenly Sabbath, cast down upon the earth, dimmed by the transit of their rays from so great a height and so distant a world. The fairest landscapes, or combinations of scenery upon earth, are but the outskirts of the paradise of God, fore-casts and intimations of that which lies beyond them; and the happiest Sabbath heart, whose every pulse is a Sabbath bell, hears but a very inadequate echo of the chimes and harmonies of that Sabbath, that rest, where we "rest not day and night," in which the song is ever new, and yet ever sung.

> "O long expected day, begin;
> Dawn on this world of woe and sin;"

It will be, in the next and last place, the day of reunion of all regenerate hearts, long severed and separated on earth.—Those we parted with here, we thought in our folly, forever, and whose images are written on our memories as in bright picture-galleries, ever full of light, we shall find to have been only borrowed for a season, not finally taken away. Those flowers that faded around us, and sickened in the air which we now breathe, we shall then discover not to have been blasted, or trodden under foot, but only transplanted to a better soil, and to a balmier air. Those bitter partings which we wept over upon earth we shall see to have been only God's own way of colonizing that distant and scarcely foreign land, towards which we are journeying, and over which shall cease entirely the night now far spent, and shall shine the day that is now close at hand.

Such is our explanation of the night, as far as its symbolism is concerned; and such is the exposition of the day, as the representative of those bright and better things that are beyond. I may state, as a grand encouragement to us, that the facts recorded in the past, in the pages of prophecy, are in every instance records of the evil one's apparent or momentary victory, but, in reality, of his destruction and eternal doom. If we read the Apocalypse, whatever be our theory of its interpretation, we shall find there the two witnesses slain; but it is only that they may rise again, and stand upon their feet, and testify to the nations. Do we read that the great dragon drew after him the stars, and stood ready to devour the man-child? It is only that he may be cast down from heaven, and utterly destroyed. Does a great "beast," or "living creature," as it might be rendered, rise from the sea and make war with the saints, while the false prophet does miracles before him? It is only that he may be cast into the lake of fire, there to be burned forever. Is great Babylon rampant on its throne, drunken with the blood of saints? It is only that it may be cast down like a great millstone into the depths of the sea. Does Satan go forth to deceive the nations in the four quarters of the globe? It is only that fire may come down upon him, and utterly destroy him. And thus the very darkness of the night that now is, is illuminated by the twilight splendor of the victories that will be; for the triumphs of the past are not dead facts simply, recorded in a dead history or in an old almanac, but are the auguries and earnests of that last victory of the true and good, which will be when the night is spent, and the day that is near at hand is completely come. Let us draw encouragement from the past to hope for bright things for the future; when one begins to be depressed by the momentary prevalence of sin, Satan or superstition, let us fall back upon God's word, and we shall see that, however strong, rampant and threatening, may be the victory of a present evil, it is only that the evil may be ultimately, utterly, and signally destroyed. How accumulating, too, are the signs that the Gospel is preached as a witness to all nations, as predicted in that passage, "This Gospel shall be preached," not, it is said, for the conversion of all nations, but "as a witness for all nations, and then shall the end come." Many things seem to me to hasten the fulfilment of this prophecy, as if the hour of its approaching magnificent results were already come. What facilities are there now for the discussion of every dogma—for the play and the interplay of thought, of argument, of feeling! What opening avenues and pathways for the advancement of the truth, and for the destruction of error, even in its van!—France has penetrated Africa with her victorious legions; and, if she has not introduced real religion, she has at least awakened the elements of discussion, against which Mahomedanism cannot long and successfully stand. England, too, for whom great destinies are prepared, has established her colonies over the whole western coast of Africa, and the prospects of penetrating the interior more completely are increasing every day. Civilized dwellings are emerging from Kaffir huts. Temple spires are sparkling, in suns in which they never shone before. Our steamers are on the Nile; our rails are on the desert; our paddle-wheels are disturbing the silence of the remotest and the most sequestered seas, and all things, like the Baptist of old, seem to be going forth to prepare the way of the Lord.—The Euphrates, the Tigris, the Ganges, the Indus, are becoming the high roads along which our freedom, our faith, our literature, are carried, and make progress every day more rapidly. The minarets of Constantinople are falling. The crescent of Mahometanism is waning. The great river Euphrates, as predicted under the sixth vial, is drying up. In the language of Chateaubriand, "Turkey is perishing for want of Turks." Pagodas are crumbling in India. Its superstition is waning. The Bible is translated into every tongue. The missionary is in every capital; recently he has penetrated the walls of Pekin, and now speaks to the bigoted and hitherto impenetrable Chinese. Is all this preparatory of nothing?

But it is asked, How do these things prove that the day is at hand, and that the night is far spent? Partly by analogy, and partly from prophecy. There is running through the whole of the past a parallelism with all that runs through the future. At the birth of Jesus, learning had reached its height. Literature had culminated in its greatest grandeur. Military roads ran from Rome, the capital, to the most distant provinces of the earth.—There were but two languages when Christ was born, which were, together, the key to all the population of the civilized and habitable globe. Civilization, literature, science, had attained their greatest spread just when Christ was born. There was no period in the world's history when there was such facility for the messengers of the cross to go out to spread the gospel, or so deep a stillness for the sound "Christ is born" to be heard in every tongue, and in the most distant and sequestered valleys of the earth.

Do we not see in the present state of the world something like the counterpart of this? The literature and empire of our country are all but universal. Two languages are at this moment the keys of intercourse with the whole world. The man that knows French and English may go everywhere, and converse in every capital. English, especially, is becoming more and more the language of the world. It is to me a great and glorious fact, that the language of the two Protestant nations of the earth—England and America—is rapidly becoming the language of the globe; and if these two nations can only feel in their souls the power of their common blood, they will yet be the grand retreats of freedom and of truth. What is meant by those iron roads that are laid down, stretching from every capital and every village, covering the earth with their wonderful network? And what is meant by the mysterious, wonder-working wire? While these are laid down by man, as he thinks, for his own ends, there is no doubt he is acting under the pressure of God's hand. It is literature, civilization, Baptist-like, crying in the wilderness of the world, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord"—"the night is far spent, and the day star is at hand."

There are other lesser evidences that lead one to suppose that the night is far spent, and that the day is at hand. We know that when the night is about to depart, and the day about to shine, all the birds of the night, and the beasts of the earth make their most desperate efforts to get their last morsel of prey, before the possibility of their preying any longer is utterly taken away. So now we may expect that every unclean bird and every evil creature will make, as I have already indicated, its last and most desperate effort to secure a place, and hold a little longer its victims. Satan, knowing that he hath but a little time, will be [illegible]

Scepticism will try to sap and undermine the foundations of all real religion, and every bird of night will hoot like the owl at that rising Sun, thinking vainly to extinguish it, and all that are associated with its splendor.

But let us rejoice that the people of God, as the night dies, and the day comes, are growing more earnest, more spiritually minded, more true to their principles.—There never was a greater body of real Christians in the world than there is in our country at this moment. While I am not blind to its many apostasies, to its sins, to its awful short-comings, I still believe there never was a larger number of Christians, nor greater efforts made to raise the poor, to teach the ignorant, to instruct the sinful, to reclaim the wanderer and the erring.

The Church of England is getting rid of its Tractarian contamination, and other Christians of their quarrels, and all the people of God are becoming more and more clustered into one group. The distinction between them that are Christ's and them that are not, is becoming more apparent. Inward reality is becoming more sharply defined. There are appearing only two great centres: Christ, the centre of the faithful, with them that are his; Antichrist, the centre of the apostates, with them that are his. At the last conflict, these two shall be parted forever; and then the light will be revealed, and the day of glory, of blessedness and joy, will shine over all the earth.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, SEPT. 8, 1855.

Remarks on Zechariah.

God is often pleased, for the confirmation of His truth, and the clearer illustration of His word, to give line upon line, and precept upon precept; here a little, and there a little.

He even condescended to establish the truthfulness of His promise to the seed of Abraham, by adding to the word a sacred oath, "that by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us" of an inheritance promised in the world to come. Acting on this principle, the Lord sends Haggai with a message of admonition, consolation and encouragement to the Jews who had returned from Babylon; and to add force to His expostulations, and deepen the impression His message had made on their hearts, he sends Zechariah with tidings similar to those of Haggai.

Ch. 1: 1, 2. "In the eighth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord unto Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying, The Lord hath been sore displeased with your fathers."

The occasion of God's displeasure we find recorded in 2d Chron. 36: 11-21.

"Zedekiah was one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord his God, and humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet speaking from the mouth of the Lord. And he also rebelled against king Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him swear by God: but he stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning unto the Lord God of Israel. Moreover all the chief of the priests, and the people, transgressed very much after all the abominations of the heathen; and polluted the house of the Lord which he had hallowed in Jerusalem. And the Lord God of their fathers sent to them by his messengers, rising up betimes, and sending; because he had compassion on his people, and on his dwelling place:—But they mocked the messengers of God and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy. Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age: he gave them all into his hand. And all the vessels of the house of God great and small, and the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king, and of his princes; all these he brought to Babylon. And they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof. And them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon; where they were servants to him and his sons until the reign of the kingdom of Persia: To fulfil the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her sabbaths: for as long as she lay desolate she kept sabbath, to fulfil threescore and ten years."

V. 3. "Therefore say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Turn ye unto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will turn unto you, saith the Lord of hosts."

This is the language of infinite goodness, of tender expostulation to the erring children of wicked parents—the degenerate plants of a strange vine. God having chastised their fathers for their gross abuse of His mercies, and flagrant violations of His commands, now despatches His faithful messengers to present terms of conciliation by which His anger may be turned away, and they enjoy peace with God. The conditions are, "turn ye unto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will turn unto you." What could be more reasonable than that they should turn again unto Him from whom they had revolted, and whose distinguishing favors they had ungratefully abused? And how ready is their heavenly Father to forgive—to become reconciled to the guilty nation, and bestow upon them the light of His countenance, the bounties of His providence, and the tokens of His love!

V. 4. "Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, saying, Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the Lord."

How striking this call to repentance and a return to the ways of God! He seems to impart unto His servant the spirit of special pleading—an earnest, importunate appeal is made for their attention to those things that concern their own peace. He solicits them not to turn a deaf ear to the warnings and invitations of God's Spirit by the mouth of His Prophet, as did their unbelieving and rebellious ancestors.

V. 5. "Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever?"

How emphatic this language of Jehovah! "Your Fathers, where are they?" They rebelled against the authority of God, rejected His counsel and resisted His Spirit: where are they now? Alas! they were as a rolling thing, or thistle down before the whirlwind. I rebuked them in mine anger, I scattered them among the heathen, and those frail, though stout-hearted mortals repose in the silent dust. Nay, the Prophets, even the special ministers of God do not live to reiterate their messages of rebuke; their voices are hushed, and themselves paralysed in the embraces of death.

V. 6. "But my words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not take hold of your fathers? and they returned and said, Like as the Lord of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us."

Notwithstanding the frailty of man, the word of God will stand immutable.—"For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: But the word of the Lord endureth forever."

Did not the threatenings of my law overtake and destroy your Fathers? Did not my counsel stand? and did I not execute all my holy pleasure? In replying to such questions they could but acknowledge that the threatenings of divine wrath had been faithfully executed upon them as a nation, for their departure from His ways, and for the multitude of their iniquities.

Vs. 7-11. "Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord unto Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying, I saw by night, and behold a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom; and behind him were there red horses, speckled, and white. Then said I, O my lord, what are these? And the Angel that talked with me said unto me, I will shew thee what these be. And the man that stood among the myrtle trees answered and said, These are they whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth. And they answered the angel of the Lord that stood among the myrtle treers, and said, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest."

It is consonant with the nature of things, and with the wisdom of Deity, to address men in their own language. At that age of the world metaphors and symbols were more frequently used than in our day. The language of oriental nations partook somewhat of the nature of the language used by the Aborigines of our own land: it was highly symbolical, abounding in parables and figurative representations of the ideas presented; and not unfrequently some outward visible sign was given—some hieroglyphical symbol was resorted to for the more full and perfect conveyance of instruction.—Their written language being much of it in hieroglyphics, their oral language partook of the same nature. When the Lord would address the astrologers, or Magi of the East, He spoke to them through the medium of a star; and thus His Spirit operates in harmony with the nature of things, and addresses itself to the capacity of men agreeably to their modes of thought and in such manner as to make on their minds the deepest impression.

In this prophetical book various scenic representations are presented to which the one contained in vs. 8-11 is an introduction.

"I saw by night"—The Lord chooses the most favorable circumstances for divine communication. Jesus directed His disciples to retire to their closets, and close the door against all worldly scenes when engaged in communion with God.

It is fitting that the Poet should say,

"Be earth with all her scenes withdrawn,
Let noise and vanity be gone;
In secret silence of the mind
My God, and there my heaven I find."

If we would enjoy God, and receive the communications of His grace, we must be willing to withdraw our affections from the vanities of earth, and let our thoughts centre and our "conversation be in heaven where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God." It is a maxim in human philosophy, that "two bodies cannot occupy the same space, at the same time," and Jesus says, "ye cannot serve God and mammon;" and says James, "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

The horses in this vision represent certain instrumentalities employed in the government of God to watch over and guard the interests of His Church. The myrtle is one of the most celebrated shrubs that grew in that region. It is usually under ten feet in height. The deep verdure and beauty of its foliage—the delicacy and fragrance of its flowers, were proverbial among the nations of antiquity. Its medicinal properties were far famed—its fruit yielded both wine and oil, and in various respects it is one of the most remarkable productions of the vegetable kingdom. Now God always attaches infinite value to the subjects of redeeming grace, and as the subjects of the Old Covenant stood as representatives of the people of God, and as they were of all people on the earth specially favored of heaven, they are uniformly represented by some significant emblem of preciousness and glory. In ch. 4 they are presented under the emblem of a candlestick, or more properly candelabrum, ALL OF GOLD, the most beautiful and precious of metals; here they are represented by the MYRTLE of lowly form but of surpassing fragrance and beauty. The position of these myrtle trees might be indicative of the humble condition of the Jews who had been oppressed by their adversaries and reduced to poverty and degradation; the walking to and fro of the horses through the earth, may denote the agency which they had in guarding the interests of the Church. They were such instrumentalities as God saw fit to employ, whether of a celestial or terrestrial nature. They are represented as having been despatched on a sort of reconnoitering expedition through the earth; and they return to the people of God with the report that the nations of the earth are in a state of quietude and rest. The wars of the Assyrians had broken up the kingdom of Israel, and the Babylonian army had destroyed Jerusalem, laid waste her Temple and palaces, and carried captive the nation to a hostile and heathen land; but now the spirit of war was assuaged—peace and quietude reigned—the enemies of God's people were "at rest." All this was matter of consolation and rejoicing to the Jewish nation. The way was now opened in providence for the completion of the Temple which had been begun some 14 years before. The arm of Jehovah had been stretched out, and the billows of wrath were hushed—the winds of war ceased, as was the case subsequently, when the Christian Temple began to be erected at the birth of our Savior. Says the Psalmist, "Come behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire. Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth. The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah."

For the Crisis.

Wilbraham Camp Meeting.

Being myself necessarily detained at the Office of the Crisis, I was late on the ground and therefore requested Br. J. D. Merriam to give some account of the series of meetings, which continued one week from Aug. 20 to Aug. 27. This request he has complied with, and sent me the following.

REPORT OF THE CAMP MEETING AT NORTH WILBRAHAM.

CHICOPEE FALLS, Aug. 28th, 1855.

Br Merriam:—I arrived on the ground, Wednesday morn, before the commencement of the services. The Brn. and friends were coming from different parts of the country, but few having arrived.

Br. Wm. Sheldon preached a very good practical sermon, from 2 Thess. 3: 5.—"The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." After he finished, Br. H. L. Hastings made some excellent remarks on the same text.

P. M. Br. J. Turner gave his views of the day of the Lord, from 2 Pet. 3: 10. "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night."

Some ideas presented were new to me. He took the position that there were two days of the Lord.

The Day of Christ he referred to the Gospel day, in which he was saving men; the Day of God, to commence at the end of the Gospel day, in which he is to put all enemies under the feet of Christ. The discourse was one of deep interest.

Eve. Br. W. S. Campbell preached from Rev. 22: 20. "Even so come, Lord Jesus."

Thoughts presented in this discourse were well worthy to be remembered and practised in our lives.

Aug. 23. Prayer meetings were held in the tents during the intermission between the public services.

A. M. Br. H. L. Hastings preached from Jer. 6: 16. "Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the way and see, and ask for the old paths: where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."

This discourse was well calculated to show thinking men of all religious denominations, that the profesed Church had departed from the faith once delivered to the saints, in reference to the coming of Christ, and His reign.

P. M. Br. J. V. Himes preached from Matt. 16: 3. "But can ye not discern the signs of the times?"

He argued from the history of the Papal power, and its present state, that the day of the Lord was at hand. He also gave a sketch of the rise and progress and present position of the Mohammedan power, as a sign plain to be understood, of the approaching end. He also referred to the past movements in connection with the proclamation of the coming of Christ at specific times, and the disappointment caused by the passing of the time without bringing the event expected. He also thought that the movement now going on in England, and in other countries produced by the preaching of such distinguished men as Cumming and Elliot, and by the circulation of their works, was a sign worthy of note, in the present history of the world.

Ev. Br Crowell, of Holden, preached from Ezek. 1: 28. "This is the appearance of the glory of the Lord."

Aug 24. Br. Himes again preached from Dan. 12: 8-10. As his discourse is to appear in print, I will not attempt a report of it.

Before the commencement of the discourse, Br. E. Burnham took an affecting leave of the Brn. and friends, promising to bury differences forever, and labor for the unity and prosperity of the Church until Jesus comes.

P. M. Br. D. T. Taylor preached from Heb. 2: 10. "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings."

A soul thrilling discourse: hope it may appear in print.

After he got through, Br. Bachelder made some excellent remarks on the subject of prayer.

Ev. Sermon by Br. Daniels. (The subject has slipped my mind, and I have no report of it.)

Aug. 25, A. M. Br. Morgan preached. I was absent.

P. M. Br. H. L. H. again preached from Rev. 11: 14. The signs of the coming of the Lord were presented from a consideration of the three woe trumpets.

Ev. Br. Walter Pratt preached from Matt. 19: 28; in connection with 2 Tim. 2: 15, and 4: 2.

Subject, the Gospel, its importance and results.

Sunday morning it was rainy, and meetings were held in several of the tents. A lovefeast was commenced at the stand, but in consequence of the rain was finished in Winsted tent.

This was truly a feast of love in which the Brn. spoke the feelings of their hearts, a report of which may appear at a future time. I will not say anything farther about the circumstances of the meeting, but just glance at its spirit.

Many of the friends came to the meeting fearing that something was in contemplation to lead the flock from their true position at the present time.

I think also many came praying that the Spirit of Christ might fill the hearts of all present, and that love might characterize all that was said and done.

So far as I was able to judge, there was a predominance of love over every other emotion; or at least, over a design to push peculiar views to an undue extent, and make them a test of Christian fellowship.

It cannot be supposed that any one body of professed Adventists has a knowledge of the whole truth; all have some, and hence should agree to walk together in so far as they see alike, and exercise christian forbearance where there is a difference of opinion.

The following Brn. in the ministry were present at the meeting:—Edwin Burnham, D. T. Taylor, Grant, Mathewson, Hastings, Himes, Turner, W. S. Campbell, Sheldon, Berick, Hemenway, Bachelder, Sutherland, H. Munger, C. C. Munger, Boutel, Crowell, Higgins, Gibson, Newton, J. D. Merriam, Barker, Goodrich, J. Morgan, Daniels, Munn, Powell, Starks, Hancock, Robinson, W. Pratt, H. Pratt, P. B. Morgan, Z. Campbell, Moulton, Lyon, Ludington, Mears, Dillabaugh, Morse, Pease, Ladd, Matthias.

The prayer meetings during the time, were of interest and profit. The saints seemed edified and encouraged by their meeting together and exhorting each other. It was good to see Brn. side by side, in friendship and love, who have in times past been separated from each other.—May that union continue forever. On the whole, this meeting was one of the best I ever attended. May all the meetings of the saints until Christ comes, be characterized by the same blessed spirit.

There are many things of interest which might be written concerning this meeting, but I forbear for the present time.

Yours in the Gospel hope,

J. D. MERRIAM.

In addition to the above, I have received a note from Br. Sheldon, which, as it has in part been anticipated by the report of Br. J. D. M., I shall not give entire.

Br. S. states that the whole number of sermons preached on the ground was twenty-three, and closes with the following remarks:—

"We truly enjoyed a 'sitting together in heavenly places, in Christ Jesus.'—Three were baptized.

May we soon meet with all the sighing pilgrims in the land of endless felicity.

Yours waiting for Christ.

STURBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 28, 1855."

CHICOPEE FALLS, Aug. 29th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—At our late Campmeeting at North Wilbraham, the expenditures exceeded the receipts by some 28 to 30 dollars. As there was a heavy rainstorm during the Sabbath, the contributions were not as large as was expected.

I engaged to publish a statement of the facts as early as possible, that Brn. may have an opportunity to supply the deficiency. They can send in what they please; and if there be any excess, it will be spent in the service of the Lord.

HIRAM MUNGER.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Sr. M. J. Hoffman.

WATERBURY, Conn., Aug. 1, '55.

To the household of Faith:—Search the Scriptures much, as you may have already learned there is present truth to be obtained, that you may understand the import of the movements in the world and be prepared for every great event to transpire. Be jealous over your own selves, remembering that the heart, unless governed by the spirit of Christ, is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. Bear the cross of Christ daily—watch continually, and pray much in secret. This is one of the best tests whereby we may ascertain the state of our hearts. Do we love to commune with God in secret? and are the fruits of these exercises exhibited by our holiness in all manner of conversation? Have we a realizing sense that we are not our own, but bought with a price? and are we therefore glorifying God in our bodies and spirits which are his? If thus we are in deed and in truth, we shall work for God, and not for ourselves. The farmer will sow and plant and cultivate his soil while God gives the opportunity; but he will sow as though he would not reap; he will labor his six days, but not to increase his store; he will provide for his household, but his wealth will be devoted to God; he will employ it as one who must give an account of his stewardship. The merchant will carry on business, but he will provide things honest in the sight of all men, and not extol his goods higher than their true quality.—Promptly fulfilling his engagements, and abiding by the word, his silver and gold will be at the service of his divine Master, laying up in store for himself a good foundation against the time to come, that he may lay hold on eternal life. Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Many that are first will be last, and the last first. Take heed, my Brn., take heed, my Srs., that thy crown be not wrested from thee. Hold fast this glorious hope, the earnest of the inheritance until you are called to enter upon its eternal possession. Let your watchward be onward through trouble, onward through persecutions, onward through death, if need be, onward and onward until Christ your life appear, and you appear with Him in glory.

MARY JANE HOFFMAN.

For The Crisis.

Question.

Br. Merriam:—Will you, or some Br. please to harmonize the 1st verse of the 1st chap. of Neh. with the 1st verse of the 2nd chap?

The question is: If the 1st chap. of Neh. records what occurred in the month Chisleu, in the 20th year of Artaxerxes reign, does not the 2nd chap. record events of the 21st year of his reign?

In an old Bible published half a century ago, the marginal chronology given at the introduction of the book of Neh. is B. C. 446: but at the beginning of the 2nd ch., it is B. C. 445.

I still regard the Scriptures as "a sure WORD OF PTOPHECY, whereunto we do well that we take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place; until the day-dawn"—for, said the Master, "When the Spirit of Truth is come, He will guide you into all truth and will show you things to come." Therefore, said He, "Whoso readeth, let him understand."

P. MILLER, Jr.

LAONA, N. Y. June 11, '55.

REPLY.

It is plain that if the reign of Artaxerxes commenced in autumn, before Chisleu, the month Nisan in the succeeding spring would fall within the same year of his reign; but not within the same year of our era. I observe in the Comprehensive Commentary, a work of high authority, the chronology of Neh. 1, is set down at B. C. 446; and the chronology at the commencement of Neh. 2, is set down B. C. 445.

ED.

For The Crisis.

Question.

Dear Br. Merriam:—Does our common English version convey, CRITICALLY, the same ideas that the original GREEK does in the last verse of the 23 chapter of Matthew?

Yours seeking for truth,

S. E. SPAULDING.

CAVENDISH, VT.

REPLY.

There is no dispute among critics, so far as I know, respecting the meaning of the Greek in this passage. The literal signification of the original appears to be conveyed in our English Translation.—The import of the passage probably is, that inasmuch as they had rejected the true Messiah, their condemnation, as a people, was from that hour sealed—that the vindictive judgments of heaven would fall upon them, and their sufferings would continue until they would cry out for deliverance, and long for the Redeemer to come to Zion, which is, in a great measure, the case at the present time with the Jews in different parts of the world.

To Laborers in the West.

We have received a loud call from Brn. in Fairhaven Mass. for information respecting laborers who have gone to the far west. I would heartily join in the inquiry respecting their labors of love in that interesting and extensive field, and indulge the hope that they will report their doings for the edification and comfort of the household, who feel, or ought to feel, an equal interest for the work of God in every section of the vineyard. I was gratified with the missionary spirit that pervaded the meeting at Wilbraham; and my anxious prayer is that God would accompany those who go forth, having the everlasting Gospel to preach, with the power of His Spirit, and clothe them with salvation that saints may shout aloud for joy. I hope and trust God will revive His work powerfully in that section, and that light and truth may spread abroad, and the work be carried on unto the day of Jesus Christ.

Some further remarks on this subject next week.

For The Crisis.

Meeting of the Paper Committee.

At a general Conference held at the Wilbraham Camp-meeting, Aug. 24th, for the purpose of enquiring into the best means of advancing the interests of the Church of God, looking for the return of our Savior; it was unanimously voted; that—

Edwin Burnham,
J. G. Hamlin,
D. T. Taylor,
John Megguire,
H. V. Davis,
Dr. Buxton,
W. Pratt,
F. H. Berick,
L. Tiffany,
H. Holkins,
W. Ruggles,
M. Grant,

be appointed an executive committee for the purpose of uniting the interests of the Christian Reformer, Prophetic Messenger, and World's Crisis into one paper, to be under the direction of the aforesaid committee.

This Committee is requested to meet in Boston, Sept. 12th, at 2 o'clock P. M. at Leyden Hall, corner of Lowell and Causeway Sts, for the transaction of such business as is connected with the above object.

It is hoped all will be present, if possible.

M. Grant.

☞ The Readers of the Crisis may not agree in every point with the ideas contained in the extract from John Cumming on our first page; but as we had so few communications on hand, I thought it might be gratifying to our Patrons, to read an extract from that truly great and good man, who is regarded as "the lion of the pulpit" in London, and whose general views harmonize so well with our own.

Railroad Accident. A most distressing accident occurred on the Camden and Amboy Railroad, near Burlington, on the 29th ult., by which 24 persons lost their lives, and 80 were wounded.

☞ At the request of Br. Himes, we cheerfully give place to the following prospectus.

A New Work in Press.

"The Time of the End.

This is the title of a new and important work which we now have in process of being stereotyped, and will be completed at an early day.—The object of it is to give the Church and the world all the light that is in our possession respecting the termination of the prophetic periods, and the position we occupy in the Great Calendar of Prophecy. J. V. Himes, 46 1-2, Kneeland St., Boston, Mass.

☞ We have received the first number of "The Cross and Crown," a monthly publication, which, we trust, will be a valuable accession to our Advent periodicals. For the advancement of the enterprise, we publish the prospectus of the work.

Prospectus.

"THE CROSS AND CROWN."

In view of the importance of our present position, the nearness of the Kingdom of God, the startling character of the times in which we live, we deem it duty to issue a monthly periodical devoted to the promulgation of truth, and the promotion of practical piety.

Our Title is, "The Cross and Crown."

Our Object, to induce men to bear the cross, that they may wear the Crown.

Our Course, to disseminate truth, and advance pure religion and undefiled.

Our Capital, Faith in God.

Our Resources, Exceeding great and precious promises.

Our Available Means, Effectual, fervent prayer.

Our Supporter, He who feeds the ravens, and watches the sparrows.

Our Anticipations, incessant labor and sacrifice, peace and poverty.

Our Reward, A Crown of Glory when the Chief Shepherd shall appear.

Each No. will contain, 1st, A carefully prepared Tract or, article suitable for preservation and circulation, which will combine instruction with earnest practical admonition and exhortation.

2d. Other shorter articles truthful in their sentiment and practical in their tendency;

3d. Brief dialogues on various Scriptural topics of interest to children and others.

4th. Original poetry.

5th. A corner for the little folks, containing articles which children love to read, and will be benefitted by reading.

Our Terms.

Sent to all who desire it, with or without price, as they please.

Our Expectations—that those who like the paper will some of them take copies for distribution.

Our Request—that all will pay just what they please for the paper and no more.

Our Determination—not to spend our time or money in begging, or dunning our subscribers, when there is a shorter way of getting help by praying to God.

To those who would like to know the amount that would pay the expense of issuing it for a year, we would say, 50 cents will pay for one copy, and $5,00 for 12 copies sent to one address.

Address immediately, J. Lenfest, Machiasport, Me., or H. L. Hastings, Peace Dale, R. I.

The Yellow Fever. We regret to record that there has as yet been no abatement in the ravages of the fever at either Portsmouth or Norfolk. The number of deaths in Norfolk averages seventeen daily, and in Portsmouth (whose population is diminished to 2,000) about twenty. The Mayor of Norfolk is among the dead, and the panic was increasing at last accounts. The contributions for the relief of the two cities now amount to over $50,000. The premonitory symptoms of the disease are simply a sharp acute pain, like rheumatic pain, sometimes a paralytic shock in some part of the body.

A medical man writing from Norfolk says, as he went his rounds in an evening, not a person was to be met in the streets. "Our footsteps sounded and resounded ominously upon the pavement. Not a single light could be seen in the houses by which we passed; indeed, it only needed a glimpse in the moonlight of a jackall or vulture to realise the picture of an Eastern plague-stricken city. Should the disease hold out much longer, there will scarcely be a white man left to tell the tale of wo."

Important from Mexico—Abdication and Flight of Santa Anna. A telegraphic despatch from New Orleans, dated the 25th of August, brings the important intelligence received from Vera Cruz of the 22d, per steamer Orizaba, that Santa Anna left the city of Mexico on the 9th inst., with an escort of 2,500 men, and signed his abdication at Perote. He embarked on the 17th at Vera Cruz for Havana.

Six Days Later News from Europe.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA.

The Affair at Sweaborg. The Canada brings further details, which modify first accounts. The French Admiral telegraphed per Hermann, namely:

"On board the Lourville, Aug 11. The bombardment of Sweaborg by the allied squadron has been attended with complete success. Immense conflagration for forty-five hours has destroyed nearly all the storehouses and magazines of the arsenal, which is a complete ruin. Various powder magazines and stores of the enemy were blown up. The enemy has received a terrible blow, and suffers an enormous loss. Our loss is insignificant in men, and nothing whatever in material. The crews are enthusiastic. (Signed) Penaul."

Admiral Dundas's despatch is less highly colored:

"Sweaborg was attacked by the mortar and gun boat of the allied squadron on morning of the 9th. The firing ceased early this morning. Heavy explosions and very destructive fires were produced in a few hours. Nearly all the principal buildings on Vargoe, and many more on Swartoe, including those of the dock yard and arsenal, are burned. Few casualties have occurred and no lives lost in the allied fleet. (Signed) Dundas."

It will be observed that there is no mention in the above despatches respecting the Russian ships. A Russian despatch from St. Petersburg, dated 11th, says, "The allied fleet opened a bombardment against Sweaborg on the 9th, and have kept it up with energy until now."

Latest. Dantzic, August 16. The allied squadron returned to Nargen from Sweaborg, on the 13th. Nine of the allied ships were seriously damaged. The British casualties were—killed, none; wounded, two officers and thirty men. The French loss has been equally trifling.

Advices from Konigsberg state that when the attack on Sweaborg began, the Grand Duke Constantine asked permission from the Emperor to attack the diminished allied fleet before Cronstradt, but the Emperor refused.

Sweaborg does not seem to be in the possession of the allies, and as it is not a key to any important position, its destruction must be regarded as a detached enterprise, not as part of any comprehensive operation. Its desruction, however, has revived the spirit of the fleet, and satisfied expectations at home.

The Crimea. Important News from the Crimea—Great Battle fought on the Tchernaya.—The British Government has received the following despatches:

Varna, Aug 16. The Russians attacked the position of Tchernaya this morning at daybreak in great force. The action lasted about three hours, and they were completely repulsed by the French and Sardinians.

Second Despatch—1 o'clock. The Russian attack this morning was under the command of General Liprandi, with a force of from 50,000 to 60,000 men. Their loss is estimated at 4000 to 5000 men. About 400 prisoners are taken. The loss on the side of the allies is very small.

General Pelissier telegraphs on the 16th—"For some days past rumors of an intended attack on the part of the Russians had excited our attention, and this morning at daybreak they realized their intentions against our lines on the Tchernaya, but in spite of the movement of imposing masses which had been collected during the night the enemy was repulsed with great vigor by the troops, forming the divisions of Generals Herbillon, Canava, Fancheux and Morris. The Sardinians, placed on our right, fought bravely. The Russians left a large number of dead on the field, and we made many prisoners. The Russians were in complete retreat on Mackenzie's Hill, when our reserve came up, and with that of our brave allies, particularly the English cavalry, the enemy received a severe blow. Our losses, although much less numerous than those of the enemy, are not yet known. (Signed) Pelissier."

Sebastopol. Affairs are unchanged. Omer Pacha received a hasty order to return to the Crimea, instead of going to Asia.

Gen Simpson telegraphs on the 16th:—"Gen. Pelissier and I have decided to open fire from the English and French batteries to-morrow morning, at daybreak."

St. Petersburg letters say that Gortschakoff has orders to sink the Russian fleet if the Malakoff falls.

The London Morning Post, a Ministerial paper, says editorially:—"we have reason to believe that stirring and hitherto unexpected intelligence may be looked for from the Crimea within the next few days." It is supposed to refer to the secret expedition, or to some field movements.

From Africa. We learn the continuance of the revolt in Tripoli; also that the Bedowins are still troublesome, and that the Abyssinians have gained in skirmishes with the Egyptians.

From Asia. Travellers report that the Turkomans were committing ravages along the Caspian Sea and Volga.

Asia Minor. The latest news from Kars says the city was surrounded, and a first parallel opened. Communication with Erzeroum was stopped. Provisions were abundant, but forage was scarce. Turkey is rapidly sending on reinforcements to Erzeroum.

War Summary. General Canrobert is recalled, and has arrived in France.

General Espinasse obtains General Canrobert's division.

General Zamoisky is to organize deserters and Poles against the Russians.

Turkey. Another ministerial crisis threatens at Constantinople. Ritoat Pacha is appointed President of the council of the Seraskierats.

Great Britain. Queen Victoria, escorted by six ships of war, crossed the Bologne on the 17th, and intended remaining in France six days.

France. Wednesday, Aug. 15, being the Fete Napoleon, was a holiday on the Bourse. The fete was shorn of its full proportion, but was celebrated by free theatres, illuminations, distribution of charity, and the commutation of the sentence of 2000 prisoners.

Immense festive preparations were being made to honor Queen Victoria.

The Emperor Napoleon meets her to-day (the 18th) at Bologne, and escorts her to Paris.

Italy. Something is said of a Congress of statesmen at Vienna, to settle the affairs of Italy, but it is not likely to be carried into effect at present.

The Austrian Gazette contradicts the statement of a concordat between Austria and the Holy See.

The Roman government interposes every obstacle to recruiting for the British Italian Legion.

Austria remonstrates against the selection of Novarra as a recruiting depot.

It is stated that France and England have sent an energetic notice to the King of Naples that they are dissatisfied with his Russian tendencies.

Denmark. Letters from Hamburg state that the subject of the sound dues causes much anxiety to Denmark, and that Admiral Maurier of the Danish Navy has gone to Paris to ask the advice and assistance of France. No middle course appears possible to Denmark, and serious complications are apprehended. Denmark much fears that the United States would commence hostilities by taking possession of the Danish West India Islands.

An extra meeting of the Danish Chambers is in session, constructing a uniform constitution for the whole kingdom.

Russia. A Russian paper says—We may now look for great events and terrifying recitals.

English correspondence says—"The commissariat of Southern Russia has declared it impossible to provision more men than are now in the Crimea, consequently no further reinforcements will be sent. This, however, is doubtful."

One hundred and fifty four bales of cotton were seized at Aix in transitu from Antwerp to St Petersburg, and were found each to contain several revolvers, so it is said.

India. The overland mail from Calcutta, July 4th, mentions a rumor that the British government intends to collect a reserve force from India at Cairo, for the Crimea.

There is also another rumor that a British force from India will be sent to the Persian Gulf. The Indian government, however, professes to have advices from England on the subject.

Opinions are divided as to the effect of the destruction of Sweaborg. We observe that some papers speak of it as a detached enterprise, intended mainly to get up the spirit of the fleet; but when it is remembered that it was the seat of a powerful arsenal and the main defence of Helsingfors, which is itself only about 180 miles from St. Petersburg, the event cannot fail to have produced a considerable sensation and panic in the capital. Helsingfors, (to copy a Gazetteer description,) is situated on a tongue of land in the Gulf of Finland, with about 16,000 inhabitants, and the strong fortress of Sweaborg protecting the entrance of the harbor.

"At the present moment it numbers 16,000, exclusive of the garrison. The Russians have greatly augmented and improved Helsingfors since it came into their possession, more particularly since the year 1819, when it became the capital of Finland; the removal to it of the University of Abo, and the Senate, after the conflagration of that town in 1827, also materially increased its importance. The streets are long, large, and laid out at right angles, as in most other Russian towns. The remains of the library saved from the fire of Abo is at present preserved in this building. It consists of about 80,000 volumes, chiefly editions of the classics taken by Charles the Twelfth from the monasteries during the Seven Years' War. The harbor is capacious, and ranks as one of the best in the Baltic, and an important trade is carried on in timber, corn and fish. Helsingfors is the residence of the Governor General, and the seat of important courts and public offices—it contains the Senate House, several churches, and has manufactures of linen, sailcloth, and tobacco.—The approach to Helsingfors by water is exceedingly striking. The harbor is well protected by the works and fortress of Sweaborg, which are built upon seven islands. The fortifications are said to mount 800 cannon, with barracks and casements for a garrison of 12,000 men. The strength of this fortress is such that it has been termed the Gibraltar of the North."

The bombardment of Sebastopol was to be recommenced on the 17th of August, and we suppose we may then look for the grand assault.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE CANADA.

Jerusalem. A letter from Jerusalem of the 23d ult., confirms the intelligence that the disturbances in the mountains of Sichem, which at one time menaced all Palestine, had been put down by the energy and tact of of Kiamil Pacha, the governor of the province. The Christian communities of the Holy City were so grateful for this functionary's good government, that they had signed an address to the Sultan, thanking him for having nominated him. The Pacha, when the letter left, was about to march from Jerusalem with the troops which he had collected, to repress the disturbances in the province of Hebron, got up by Abd-er-Rhaman. Sir Moses Montefiore had arrived in Jerusalem, with, it was supposed, firmans authorizing the foundation of several religious establishments, and even a synagogue for the Jews.

Storms in the East. We learn from Odessa that great devastation has been caused in the neighborhood of Nickolaieff by a terific storm, which took place on the 2d inst. The banks of the Bug were overflowed, and a great number of houses torn down, the Nickolaieff and Constantine batteries destroyed, and the trenches filled with water. All communication with the Crimea had been temporarily stopped. The Crimea had been visited with a storm of the same violent character which had caused the Belbek and the Salghir to overflow their banks, and spread destruction far and wide.

Locusts in Piedmont. A letter from Ponalba published in the Corriere Mercantile of Genoa, state that the whole of that district has been suddenly invaded by locusts, which besides committing their usual ravages, have poisoned the waters of the springs and cisterns, where millions of them have been drowned.—The water has become so deleterious that sixty-three persons have already died from the effects of it. The people, struck with terror, at this calamitous invasion, are leaving the district by hundreds.

Life in Constantinople. From Constantinople we hear the most bitter complaints respecting the murder, robbery and pillage, which are of such daily occurrence there as to have rendered life almost insupportable. The conduct of the French gendarmes also, who exercise the police administration, has given rise to great dissatisfaction, on account of their frequent entrance into the harems, to the annoyance of the civil and religious feelings of the Turks.

Fire in Hungary. A fire recently broke out in a large barn at Dobscha, in the Comitate of Gomore, in Hungary, and, being fanned with a high wind, extended with extraordinary rapidity to the adjacent buildings, and could not be extinguished until two-thirds of the town were entirely destroyed. The destruction comprised two churches, one Catholic and the other Protestant, the Town Hall, and the Children's Asylum, both of which had been newly built, most of the public edifices, and several hundreds of private houses. The number of inhabitants deprived of shelter amounted to some thousands.

The War. The most important item in the news from Turkey is that a strong Russian division is marching on Erzeroum, and that all the disposable Turkish forces in Anatolia are hastening towards the same place.

A private letter from the French Camp, dated 4th of August, says:—"It is expected that a general bombardment will be kept up for six days before storming. The whole of our tremendous batteries will open at once."

It is said that a contract has just been made by the Minister of War, for clothing for 600,000 men, besides the ordinary supplies for the year.

Within the last fourteen days a hydraulic packet in Liverpool packed over 120,000 bags, to be sent to the United States for the conveyance of corn and grain to this country. These bags, it may be worth stating, were brought hither with rice and linseed, and they are produced at so small a cost in India, that they can be here repaired, packed, and sent out at a much less cost than they can be made for in the States.

On occasion of the Emperor's fete, his Majesty has again extended his clemency to convicted prisoners in a most remarkable manner. Out of 878 soldiers condemned to punishment, 577 receive full pardon, and 301 have a mitigation of punishment; 178 military prisoners have also been the objects either of pardon or reduction of punishment; and 37 individuals sentenced by councils of war have likewise received remission of punishment.

A pony and an ass, belonging to Mr Ledson, miller, Flyingdales, near Whitby, Yorkshire, were recently severely stung by bees from hives in a garden beside which the two animals had been left fastened by their owner. The ass died on the following morning, but the pony survived the injuries inflicted upon it by the insect assailants.

It is stated in the Brussels journals that the intention of the English Government to raise an Italian Legion has caused a painful sensation at Vienna.

The telegraph between Constantinople and Shumla is complete, and in a few days will be in working order, when news from Constantinople may reach London in 18 hours.

Accounts received from Odessa inform us that in Great Russia the crops have been almost completely destroyed by drought and hail.

Preparations for the Attack on Sweaborg.—Despatches from the fleet off Sweaborg, from the 1st to the 7th of August, give the progress of the preparations made and the expectation cherished in regard to this strong fortress. The English force employed consisted of six line-of-battle ships, ten steamers, fifteen gun-boats, and sixteen mortar vessels; total, 47 vessels of all kinds. The French had two line-of-battle ships, six gun-boats, and five mortar vessels; total 13 vessels, making a total of 60 vessels, exclusive of tenders, hospital ships and store vessels. On the 6th boats were sent in at midnight to sweep for infernal machines. The French proposed to erect a mortar battery on one of the islands, and provided themselves with facines sand bags, &c., &c. The mortar vessels were all supplied with extra artillerymen as reliefs, so that when the bombardment began it need not cease for lack of gunners, an extra ammunition ship was attached to the squadron. The rocket boats were all got ready for service. The French were very desirous to attack the town of Helsingfors.

Erzroom. Dates from this Turkish city are to June 18th. This is the only station of the American Board in Turkey which seems to be directly endangered by the war. The Russians were then around Kars, 30,000 strong; while the Turks numbered but about 12,000 men,—and though they were well supplied with food and ammunition, the odds were greatly against them. Should Kars be taken, Erzroom would be the next point of attack. The missionaries had no intention of fleeing. Trusting to their country's flag and passport, and their holy calling, they had resolved to stay by till the last.

Appointments.

CAMP MEETING.

The Lord willing, there will be a Camp Meeting in Carmel, Me, near Carmel village, to commence on the 18th day of Sept., in the evening, and continue over the Sabbath.

We request the Brn. to make arrangements to be on the ground early on the 18th, in order to erect tents for the accommodation of the Brn and others who may attend.

As there will be no boarding tent on the camp ground, we especially request all to bring what bedding, tents and provisions they can conveniently. Provision will be made in the tents for the Brn who may come from a distance. There will be teams at the Depot to convey all who may need such help to the ground.

We earnestly invite all who differ from us in faith, to attend and give us a candid hearing.

We desire all to come, as we entertain no sectarian opinions; and we hope our ministering Brn from the west will not neglect to attend, should an opportunity offer. We desire that whatsoever we may do or say may be for the glory of God and the salvation of mankind. "Come over and help us" in the name of the Lord. Amen.

In behalf of the Brn.,

John Billings,
George W. Brown,
Samuel Bragg,
Henry Perkins.

August 29th, 1855.

Br. I. Turner will preach at Salem on Sunday, Sept. 9.

Br. Edwin Burnham will preach at Salem on Sunday, Sept. 16.

By Divine permission I will preach at
New Bedford, Sept. 7,
Head of the River, Sept. 8,
Lowell, (Kirk St.), Sunday, Sept. 9,
Boston, Sept. 10,
Lowell, Sept. 12,
Nashua, N. H., Sept 13,
Manchester, N. H., Sept 14,
Concord, N. H., Sept. 15,
Croydon, N. H., Sunday, Sept. 16.

In relation to the above appointments on Sundays, there was a mistake as previously arranged in the Crisis.

W. Sheldon.

Providence permitting, I will meet with the Brn. at Saxon Tannery, Sept. 7.
North Adams, Sabbath, Sept. 9.

H. Pratt.

GROVE MEETING, IN SOUTH HAWLEY.

There will be a Grove Meeting in South Hawley in a beautiful grove, (directly opposite the tavern of Levi Holden,) to commence Thursday, Sept. 20th, and continue over the Sabbath. Should the weather be unfavorable for meeting in the grove, a large and convenient Hall will be furnished free of expense. Brn. coming from a distance, can find board, lodging and horse-keeping at much reduced prices at the tavern, and a free table spread for the worthy poor.

Brn. R. V. Lyon and Wm. Sheldon are expected to attend the meeting; and other preaching Brn. are invited to attend, as the Lord may direct, who can preach to us the Gospel as preached by Abraham—and the kingdom as preached by Prophets, Apostles, and Jesus, and the things noted in the Scriptures of truth relative to these subjects.

G. W. Hicks, for the Brn.

West Hawley, Aug. 23, 1855.

I will preach, if the Lord will, at Kenduskeag, the 1st Sabbath in Sept.

J. Couch.

Br. Couch will preach in Charlestown, Friday evening, Sept. 7.

West Hawley, Sabbath, Sept. [illegible]

NOTICE.

There will be, if the Lord permit, a Grove Meeting held at Canon, Me., to commence Friday, Sept. 14th, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

For the Brn.,

Jesse Partridge.

Brn. R. B. Y[illegible], J. L. Howard and J. Partridge will be present.

N. B. It is the request of the friends at Canon, that Br. F. H. Berick, or J. Couch would be present.

NOTICE.

A Camp-meeting will be held upon Caldwell's Manor, C. E., one mile west of the village of Clarenceville, near the road leading to Ash Island Ferry, or four miles north of Rouses Point, to commence Wednesday, Sept. 12th, and continue over the Lord's day, and as much longer as the good of the cause may seem to require at the time.

As this is designed to be a general meeting of Adventists in all this section, it is hoped that all who can, will come up to this "feast of tabernacles" with provisions and tents, prepared to stay and labor through the meeting for themselves and others. This meeting has been appointed for the single purpose of glorifying God, by being a means of preparing subjects for His everlasting Kingdom soon to be set up. Let those in the vicinity, who may see this notice, circulate the appointment as widely as possible; and let each one remember the responsibility that God has laid upon them in this matter, and act in view of a solemn and speedily approaching Judgment, that shall decide the eternal destiny of each, according to their deeds.

Elders S. W. Thurber, and B. Reynolds are expected to preach the word; also any other of God's ministers who may feel it duty to attend will be cordially received.

Deacons H. Cohon, S. Young and I. Spear have been appointed to act as a committee of arrangements.

In behalf of the Church,

C. P. Dow, Pastor.

East Chazy, Aug. 10, 1852.

Vernon, Aug. 12, 1855.

Providence permitting, there will be a Camp Meeting in Vernon, Vt., on the old ground, to commence on Monday, Sept. 17, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn. and Srs. from the East and West, North and South, prepare for this gathering, and let your prayers be continually ascending to our heavenly Father for the prosperity of this meeting, that every thing may be conducted with an eye to His glory.

There will be a boarding tent on the ground, and horse keeping near by.

In behalf of the church,

J. Frost.

GENERAL CAMP MEETING.

Providence permitting, there will be a general Camp Meeting in Cheshire, one half mile from the depot, commencing Monday, Sept. 10, to continue over the following Sabbath. We hope all, far and near, will take an interest in this gathering, and make it a special subject of prayer. Hope they will come on Monday morning, and pitch their tents in good faith, with a full expectation, that with the divine blessing, it will be a meeting that will tell on saint and sinner, not for party, but for God and truth.

Provision made for horse keeping, and a boarding tent will be kept on the ground at which board can be obtained at a fair price.

Preachers invited to attend, Brn M. Bachelder, J. Hemenway, J. Couch, H. Pratt, and others.

Alonzo Cummings,

For The Crisis.

The Overcomer.

What is a Christian? Is it one that acts
A little while on life's important stage,
While loud applause from multitudes is ringing?
Holding aloft his sword in fierce defiance,
While yonder sleeps the foe, and all is peace,
And "distance" with its magic pencil "lends
Enchantment to the view?"
Ah! hear him boast
Of his great valor, and his warlike spirit,
The while his path lies o'er a flowery plain,
Where there [illegible] to o'ercome,
Dangers to meet, or sorrows to dishearten.
But is this butterfly adventurer
A Christian soldier? See the coward flee
The first approach of danger, murmuring at
The least delay; and soon he groweth weary,
And listeth back to servitude and pillage;
[illegible] to kiss the soil and hug the yoke
Of slavery; foregoes a kingdom, rich
With future blessings, for his present ease.
He asks his good things now; his portion here;
And risks the future.
But is not this a Christian? No, 'tis but
A [illegible] hypocrite; a loathsome name;
A blot upon the precious cause of truth;
A whited sepulchre of bones, and blood,
And all uncleanness.

But echo still repeats, "what is a Christian?"
From Inspiration's volume I will answer.
It is an Overcomer. Aye, 'tis one
Who counteth well the cost; digs deep to place
His trembling feet upon a firm foundation;
Nor leaves the rock, when tempests rage around,
For false and fickle sand bars. See! he bares
His ever faithful bosom to the storm,
And meekly bows his will to the commands
Of God. Still, step by step he overcomes,
Till he is master of each wayward passion.
Cold, infamy, and hunger, only make
Him more importunate; he loves to trust
His Father; pleads to be remembered with
The lilies of His care. His energy
Is not from impulse, but whene'er he views
In prospect, scenes of grief and danger great,
All tremblingly he flies to Jesus; fears
To trust himself amid temptation strong,
Yet, when to closest combat brought, he's firm,
Would rather spill the last remaining drop
Of his heart's blood, than yield to Satan's power.
At pleasure's altar he is never found,
Nor 'mid the proud and gay who scorn the poor,
Thanking their God they're "not as other men!"
But in the wretched hovel, where the weak,
The sin-sick sufferer and the penitent
Mingle their tears and groans, the Christian is!
He hears the mourner's cry—the orphan's wail,
And with a ready sympathy imparts
His aid to all; feeling within his soul
The blest assurance of the Holy Book—
"One is your Father, even God; and ye
Are brethren!"

And he has searched the Book of books with care;
And while his fellow men have slumbered on,
The page of inspiration to his eye
Has lighter grown, as by his nightly lamp
He conned it o'er and o'er, and patiently
Studied and toiled as for a hidden treasure.
Neither has he relied upon himself
For wisdom to dissect the mighty fabric.
For wisdom he has prayed and wept, until
He has obtained it; till the light has shone
On the dark page prophetic, and like some Mild silvery star, it sheds its welcome light
Upon his pathway.

Once having bought the truth, he sells it not,
Though all the world in solid phalanx joined,
Advance to give him battle, undismayed
By force, or numbers, manfully he wields
The sword of truth, and though, perchance, cast down,
Is not disheartened, but unyielding stands,
As long as God and truth stand by his side.

And so he overcomes The God of love
Stands ever by the Christian soldier's side,
Giving him strength to battle in the strife.
And when at last the deadly conflict 's o'er,
His God will bid him enter into rest,
For he hath fought, and struggled, and endured,
And is an Overcomer!

For the Crisis.

Hymn,

For the Cheshire Campmeeting.

Once more let us meet in the green wild-wood bower,
Once more pitch our tents 'neath the old forest trees;
Inured, like good soldiers, to sunshine or shower,
We'll bare our wan brows to the health-giving breeze;
The heart's richest tribute, though humble we'll offer,
On truth's sacred Altar with incense of love,
All broken and contrite, to wait and to suffer,
Till called to rejoice in the Eden of love.

May peace crown our Altars where trusting hearts gather,
And fragrant the incense of prayers that ascend;
May heartfelt devotion guide loving ones thither,
And [illegible] all the [illegible]
[illegible] should [illegible] dim [illegible]
Though oft disappointed, with unyielding [illegible]
[illegible] the [illegible] that sorrows [illegible]
And bear the redeemed ones to glory at last.
[illegible] bright visions unfolding,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] the Home Land, [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] by [illegible], we roam;
But [illegible] points [illegible] Kingdom,
And but a few waves roll between us and Home.
Let earth's shadows dim not the meek spirit's lustre,
Though marred is the visage, and care-worn the brow,
Let kindness and patience around the heart cluster,
And guide us through suffering, ever as now.
We may ne'er meet again, till we hear the last trumpet,
And meet the loved ones from the dark prison tomb—
Then come to the meeting, and share the last conflict,
And soon we will rest in our blest Eden Home.

Vesta N. Cudworth.

Charlemont.

One by One.

One by one the sands are flowing,
One by one the moments fall;
Some are coming, some are going,
Do not seek to grasp them all.

One by one thy duties wait thee,
Let thy whole strength go to each,
Let no future dreams elate thee,
Learn thou first what these can teach.

One by one (bright gifts from heaven,)
Joys are sent thee here below;
Take them readily when given,
Ready, too, to let them go.

One by one thy griefs shall meet thee,
Do not fear an armed band;
One will fade as others greet thee,
Shadows passing through the land.

Do not look at life's long sorrow;
See how small each moment's pain;
God will help thee for to-morrow,
Every day begin again.

Every hour that fleets so slowly,
Has its task to do or bear;
Luminous the crown, and holy,
If thou set each gem with care.

Do not linger with regretting,
Or for passion hours despond;
Nor, the daily toil forgetting,
Look too eagerly beyond.

Hours are golden links, God's token,
Reaching heaven; but one by one
Take them, lest the chain be broken,
Ere the pilgrimage be done.

"The Kingdom of God."

Extracts from a work entitled "The Kingdom of God;" a Discourse preached before the Synod of New Jersey, Oct. 17, 1849, by C. K. Imbrie.

1. The second point of difference respects the nature and the accompaniments of the coming "kingdom of God."

We all pray, "Thy kingdom come; thy will de done on earth as as it is in heaven." We all look with certain hope for the establishment of that kingdom.—We are all agreed that there is but one such kingdom; when the "earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." But a glance at the Church will satisfy any one, that as to the nature and accompaniments of that kingdom we are not all agreed.

What, then, do we mean by the king dom to come? Do we of the present day stand on the same ground with the disciples of old? Is the great object to which the prayer, and faith, and hope of the church now reach forward, the same with that for which all the children of faith, "who died in faith, not having received the promises," looked, and longed, and waited? What is this kingdom for which we pray?

Some of us reply, that it is only a spiritual kingdom. The glory of "the latter day" when the "kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given unto the people of the saints of the Most High," is a state which is to be seen and enjoyed on this side of the coming of our Lord.—If it is to last for a thousand years, then by so much, at least, is the advent of Christ postponed:—and hence, as they reason, to look for the appearance of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven now is little short of absurd.

To confirm this view, almost every Scriptural expression concerning that kingdom is interpreted as figurative. Jesus is a prophet in person upon earth, and a priest in person upon earth, but never a king. The "sufferings" are literal, but "the glory" is not. He is really "led as a lamb to the slaughter," but He is never literally to reign "in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously," Isaiah 24: 33. From the wonderfully arranged birth in Bethlehem, Micah 5: 2; Matt. 2: 4–6; Luke 2., down to the riding upon an ass's colt, Matt. 21: 4, 5, and thence onward to the closing scene of "making his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death," Is. 53: 9–12; Mark 15: 28, all is literal, all is real; but after that all is elusive figure.

"Thy kingdom come"—a kingdom, in which no departed saint has any share—in which the Jewish people inherit no peculiar privileges—in which God's dwelling with man means only His spiritual presence with them—just as now—a time of "joy in the whole earth," which is yet a time when the days of "fasting and mourning" because the Bridegroom remains "taken away from us," are continued—while to look for anything else—to expect the return and personal presence of Jesus, is esteemed a carnal view.

This is the kingdom for which we pray, and labor, and wait; a kingdom, perhaps near indeed, but which, if it come at all, comes far on this side of the Advent of our Lord, and leaves the Church under the assurance that the appearance of the "Son of Man in the clouds of heaven" need not be anticipated for certainly a thousand years.

Such, brethren, is the prayer on one side; and I need not add, that whether right or wrong, it is practically the meaning of that prayer in this age of the church, with two thirds of Christendom, and in our own country with even a larger proportion.

Now turn to the other view. Here you have the kingdom and the second coming of Christ strictly associated together.—This is insisted upon as indispensable to a right understanding of the subject. The coming of the King ("who has gone to receive for Himself a kingdom and to return," Luke 19: 11, 12) and the setting up of the kingdom. are contemporaneous. To pray for the kingdom is really to pray also for the coming of our Lord. It is contended that the Scriptures present this as the object of the church's faith and hope. We are to "wait for God's Son from heaven," 1 Thess. 1: 10; and it is to those who "look for Him, that He shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 28. To dissociate the "coming" from the "kingdom," it is said, is to reduce you unavoidably to a single alternative. You either destroy the predicted kingdom, or you practically expel from the church the prominent gospel motive, of patient "looking for and hasting unto that day of God."

Again, these men consider that as the words respecting Christ's humiliation are literal, so they see not why the words respecting the glory are not literal. If "God manifest in the flesh" must be born in Bethlehem, because thus it is written by the prophet, "And thou, Bethlehem, art not the least among the princes of Judah, for out of thee shall He come who is to be the Ruler of Israel," Micah 5: 2; why is not God manifest in the flesh, even the Lord of hosts, to reign in Mount Zion and dwell in Jerusalem, because thus it is written by the same prophet: "And I wi l make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation; and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth even forever?" Micah 4: 6–8. As the "man Christ Jesus" was literally "despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," they see not why the Lord God shall not literally give unto Him the "throne of his Father David, and his kingdom, to order it and to establish it with judgment and justice, from henceforth even for ever?" Is. 9: 7.

They give hints also thus:—The Jew says, "We have heard out of the law, that Christ abideth for ever, and how sayest thou, the Son of Man must be lifted up? (signifying, of course, what death he has died.) Who is this Son of Man?"—John 12; 33, 34. But the Jew was wrong. He stumbled at a crucified Christ by metaphorizing away the sufferings.—The Gentile answers: "We have heard out of the gospel that Christ having suffered hath ascended into the heavens, and sitteth on the right hand of God." Seeing then that "He ever liveth to make intercession," Rom. 8: 34; Heb. 7: 25, how sayest thou that "the Son of Man shall return, having received for himself a kingdom, and shall appoint unto one servent ten cities and to another five? shall we have this man to reign over us? Luke 19: 11–28. But may not the Gentile be wrong, and stumble by metaphorizing away the glory?

In fine, these men associate the coming of Christ and the kingdom, thus:—

"I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and dead, at his appearing and kingdom," 1 Tim. 5: 21.

And again:—

"I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession, that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: which in his times He shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, King of kings and Lord of lords." 1 Tim. 6: 13–15.

And they speak of the time of the kingdom and its concomitants thus:—"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, Thy kingdoms of this world, are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever." What is this? We reply, "The latter-day" glory. "Are we all agreed upon this?" "Yes, all: we all preach it." "very well, read on." "And the four-and-twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces and worshiped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power and hast reigned. And the nations were angry and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them that destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 15–18.

Now here, say they. are the coming kingdom (as universally admitted,) the first resurrection with its adjudged rewards, and the "gathering out of the kingdom all things that offend and them that do iniquity," put closely together.

Such, then, is the difference. Brethren! certainly in an age of missions these things may not be thrust into a corner.—Consider a moment. Do we need to be told, whatever be our theory of the millennium, that it is a clear doctrine of the word of God, that the church is to look, and long, and wait for the real, visible second coming of the Lord, and that we are to take heed, watch and pray; for we know not when the time is?" Mark 13: 33.

See, how the exulting faith and hope of the faithful minister postponed his rejoicing in his converts to Christ, until the joy of that hour, "For what is our hope, or joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" 1 Thess. 2: 19. See the yearnings of an apostle that his hearers may "be accounted worthy to escape all the evils which shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."—"To the end that he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints."—1 Thess. 3: 13. Is it the hour of the believer's death, and his peace and hope in that hour, upon which the apostle's prayer terminates? Nay, but, "I pray God that your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Thess. 5: 23. What is the object to which the apostles directed the diligence and hope of the people of God? "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober and hope to the end for the grace which is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 1: 13. What is it, in a word to which the longing eye of the child of God has been directed, at every time, when he has commemorated the sacrifice of his Lord? Does he not 'show forth the Lord's death till he come?" 1 Cor. 11: 26. Faith, at the same moment, turns to "the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ," and then "blesses God who hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for those who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time; wherein she greatly rejoices too, though under manifold temptations, that her trial may be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 1: 2–7.

We all consider this point as settled.—Indeed, the only wonder is that it need be repeated. Now, brethren, if it be true, as is stated, that any received view of the kingdom is practically driving out of the church "that blessed hope, even the glorious appearing of the great God our Saviour," who will affirm that this in no important matter?

The Scriptures, throughout, inform us that when Christ does come, he shall come as a "thief in the night." When they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction overtakes them and they shall not escape." 1 Thess. 5: 2, 3.—This solemn question then, is proposed to us. Suppose that Christ were to come now, where would you find an age of the world where both the world and the church were lulled into a deeper security on this subject than just at this moment? Is a man to be regarded as a troubler in Israel, then, if he cry to the secure church, "Be ye, therefore, ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh?" Matt. 24: 44.

But it is replied:—We do not admit the doctrine. We expect a kingdom to be set up before the Advent; but do we not admit also Christ's speedy coming as a thing possible? Let us understand this. Do you mean that it is possible that there may be no "filling of the earth with the knowledge of the Lord"—that there may be no universal kingdom? Is it possible, that the church may, after all, be mistaken; and that she may have been under a perpetual illusion concerning all that the prophets have spoken?" None of us will allow this. Or, perhaps, you mean to take the other ground, and associate the advent with the kingdom. If so, then we are so far agreed. But we earnestly ask, is there no other alternative?

Is it true, however, that the present theory of the coming kingdom is exerting no baneful influence? Let us feel the pulse of the church a little to determine.

Says one, in commenting on the closing words of the Apocalypse; "It ought to be noticed that the prayer, 'Come, Lord Jesus,' in its full and complete sense, as calling upon the Lord to come in the 'clouds of Heaven,' and wind up sublunary affairs, and enter on His overlasting kingdom, is not to be offered, until the prophets are fulfilled, the morning of the Resurrection about to dawn, and the Son of man visibly to reappear." Now, what is this but to state that the church is not now to expect or to long for the coming of her Lord? Brethren! was Peter wrong in urging us to "look for and haste unto the coming of the day of God?" 2 Pet. 3: 12. Was James wrong when he sustains the suffering saints by the assurance, "be patient, brethren, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh?" James v. 8.—Was Paul wrong when he gave vent to the laborious eagerness of the whole suffering church of God? "We groan within ourselves, waiting for"—what? any time of relief on this side of the advent? No—but waiting for "the adoption, to wit, the resurrection of the body," Rom. 8: 23. Paul's ardent longing overleaps every intervening event as unworthy of a thought, and hastens with fond hope to the time of the resurrection of the dead.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. S. H. Waldron.

Portland, June 3d, 1855.

Our disappointment in respect to the time of our Lord's coming, I understand to have been in consequence of believing that the darkening of the sun marked the end of the 1260 years.

Matthew says, "immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened;" not after those days, but after the tribulation of those days.

Mark says, "but in those days after that tribulation the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." &c.—Here we have it again in those days, and not after them. After that tribulation the sun was darkened to show us where it ended in those days. I would just say that Matthew and Mark speaking of those days being shortened for the elect's sake, have reference to the 1290; but after they are shortened, those days have special reference to the 1260, or the time that the saints were in the hands of that cruel power spoken of in Daniel. From this and parallel scriptures in Daniel and John we naturally supposed that the tribulation ended with the "time, times and a half." But God saw fit to put a stop to this bloody persecution a little before the 1260 days ended, and signified it by the darkening of the sun, From May 19th, 1780, the Church found no more trouble from Papacy, although she was still under its dominion, or in his hands.

We have great reason to thank God and take new courage that we still have light and can rejoice in it. Truly the vision never looked plainer to me than now. Through all my trials and disappointments I never came so near saying that the days were ended, as I did when the 19th of May passed; but the Lord has been pleased to show me the truth, and save me from spiritualism. So I still remain a literal Adventist, waiting and looking for a literal Jesus and a literal resurrection at the end of the days. What greater blessing can we expect at the end of the 1335 days, then that which is promised at the end of the 2300, when the Church is to be cleansed from all sin, and the earth from the curse, which constitutes the cleansing of the sanctuary? Then God's people will have a blessed time on high and holy ground in the Kingdom of God. All Bible numbers are profitable in their place; but if one is more important than another, it is the 2300, especially at this present time; for by it we can find where the 1260, 1290 and 1235 days end. If we can prove that the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem went forth in the fall of 446 B. C., we cannot begin to count our 2300 until a year from 446, which would be in the fall of 445, when we can reckon one year past, and so on down to the fall of 1855, where we can truly say the days are ended.

If we get the first number right, the vision will come together like clock work, and at the proper hour it will speak and not lie.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. A. F. Porter.

Philadelphia, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—How careful ought we to be to make our calling and election sure; that so an abundant entrance may be ministered to us into the everlasting Kingdom. How careful to keep our garments unspotted from the world. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering: for he is faithful that has promised. And let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and good works; for "we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold fast the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end."—But, dear Brn., what a sober thought! To whom sware He that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not? So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief. Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of us should come short of it through the same unbelief or want of faith in God's word and promises. For all these things happene unto them for examples to us upon whom the ends of the world are come.

Let our faith then no longer stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of the living God. Let the word of God beget faith; MIGHTY, POWERFUL, VICTORIOUS, PURIFYING FAITH. Let us seek deep, intelligent and powerful convictions. Let the conviction of things hoped for allure and attract us. Let us have faith in the truth, and in Him who has uttered it.—This is the faith we need now at this trying moment, when the whole world is saying every vision faileth. See Ezek. 12: 21–28 verses. But God's word will be vindicated, for at the end it shall speak and not lie; it will surely come it will not tarry. Let us therefore spend the few remaining days in communion with God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ our elder Brother.

Let us come before God to be filled with Christ, to be absorbed in Him, His life, His perfections, His person. Let the confession of our failure and nothingness in ourselves be made the plea that we may be filled with Him.

And now may the God of peace who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that Great Shepherd of the sheep, make us perfect in every good work to do His will, and preserve us unto eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. D. A. Jones.

West Killinyly, Ct. Aug 23, '55.

"And the King shall answer and say unto them, verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me." Matt. 25: 40.

It seems by this, that Christ plainly teaches, that by our acts of kindness and benevolence toward the Lord's poor we are to be judged; for He says in the same ch. v. 45 "Inasmuch as ye did it NOT to one of the least of these, ye did it NOT to me."

I therefore hope all of the readers of the Crisis that are able to labor, and are in comfortable circumstances, will remember the Lord's poor (that want the paper and are not able to pay for it,) as they wish the Lord to remember them when He comes into His Kingdom.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br G. W. Waterhouse.

Topsfield, Aug. 12th, 1855.

I have been sorely disappointed in not meeting the Lord, at the time when I did believe the prophetic periods would end; but, bless the Lord, I do not feel discouraged, I do believe that the Lord has been with all His true children in this movement, and I can praise God for this good cross-bearing way in which we have come. I call it good; for it enables me to cut loose from this wicked world, and to love God and his holy word more, and to serve Him better.

O may the Lord bless you, Br. Merriam, and finally save you in His Kingdom with all His faithful children, is my prayer.

From your Br. in Christ,

George W. Waterhouse.

For The Crisis.

A few more thoughts on the subject of Sacrifice.

BY SR. B. MATHEWSON.

Within the precints of Judea, resides a rich young Ruler of the professed people of God; affable, chaste, truthful, honest; and though in authority, he renders implicit obedience to his parents; benevolent even to the golden requisition of the Messiah—loving his neighbor as himself!

Though very rich, and occupying a post of national honor, he appears humble!—He hastens to render honor where it is due. Yes, he so far forgets the dignity of his station, as actually to run, and kneel before the Messiah as He journeys that way; and not only kneels, but makes inquiry in this humble posture of the "Good Master" to know what more is requisite to secure him an inheritance in the Kingdom of God? Important question! who would not listen with the most profound attention to hear the answer of the Judge of all the earth to a character like the above mentioned? Surely, what more can the Good Master demand? Let us open our ears wide, with our attention fixed close on the subject, and we shall soon hear—ah what? The Good Master calls for a SACRIFICE!!! Not the sacrifice of goats or calves to burn on Jewish altars—but a sacrifice that imparts vastly more sorrow to the young Ruler's heart.

Yes, the Good Master requires a disposal of his vast possesions for the benefit of his poor fellow beings! and a life of itineracy—the cross of all reformers.—Yes, in this case, that pleasant home must be abandoned for, it may be, hardship.—Temporal goods the Master has none—no home—not even "where to lay His head!" The Good Master himself begins this work of sacrifice for the benefit of the human family. He would have his followers do the same. He voluntarily laid by His own glory and honor enjoyed among a higher order of beings that delighted to do Him reverence, and condescended to come among a degraded race, in order to raise them from degradation to the high estate of Kings and Priests unto God! and to an heirship with himself!! Whoever therefore would be His disciple, should count the cost and understand it is self-sacrifice to commence with, and it is self-sacrifice all the way through. The Good Master affirms, unless we deny self, and become cross-bearers, we cannot become His disciples, of course cannot remain His disciples when we cease to do this.

As God has always required a spirit of sacrifice, under the old as well as the new Covenant, let us, for a moment, look at the motive that actuated this demand. God never makes a demand unless it be for the good of those of whom it is required. Surely, the Maker of all things, has enough at His disposal, without calling upon us poor worms—unless He sees a necessity in our case for such demand.

After the fall of man, selfishness became a trait so apparent in his character, it would appear God saw it necessary to impose ordinances on His people that cost a sacrifice, as the most effectual antidote for this sinful and ever disagreeable propensity, when not under the controlling influence of the more noble moral orga s.

A command to give to each other at the period when sacrifices were instituted, would have seemed superfluous, because there were but few people, and a great, rich world before them, each could take what they pleased. But God must have a sacrifice dedicated to himself that costs something. He no doubt saw the liability of slight value being set on that which costs little or nothing, and so vice versa. It is said, "Abel brought of the firstlings of his flock." Maimonides says this expression signifies the fattest and best of them. Yes, God demands the best! and why? unless it be to modify or conterbalance the principle of selfishness, which is strikingly developed in all nations of the earth?

It is true some of those sacrifices point us to the great Sacrifice offered on Mount Moriah for the expiation of human guilt; and it was no doubt one great design of the Lord to keep this great Sacrifice before the mind. But if this had been all, would not the ordinances have been less imposing and expensive? The two Christian ordinances now left for our observance are equally significant; but attended with little inconvenience or expense.

If God saw sacrifice to be an indispensable necessity for our benefit, shall we as much as even desire to thwart His wisdom? If so, we may rest assured of a failure in accomplishing so base a design. Under the old Covenant, where existed less glory than under the new, (2 Cor. 3, 10,) the Lord was particular, as to what was offered to Him—it must be perfect in its nature. Says God, "whatsoever hath a blemish ye shall not offer; it shall not be acceptable for you: for any thing that hath any evil favoredness is an abomination unto the Lord." If one should read this who ever tried to ease his conscience towards the poor by giving a few old tattered garments, which it was rather a convenience to become dispossesed of than otherwise, let him read this Scripture again, and a hundred others with an exact corresponding sentiment, and ask himself whether he has obeyed God in lending Him the very worst, instead of the very best!! God saith, "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."

The Lord save me from the pay of such evilfavored sacrifices. Mal. 1: 19 tells what may be expected as a remuneration in such a case. "But cursed be the deceiver, which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing: for I am a great King, saith the Lord." Obey God first, and risk consequences.

Do you sometimes fear future consequences when there is a call for one of your two coats? (Luke 3: 11.) Do you begin to feel it necessary to make a little investment for the future? Allow me to advise you to make sure of a purse or bag that will never wax old—a bank that will never fail—where moth will not corrupt, or thieves approach, or fire destroy. The Master forbids our laying up treasures here, and gives as a reason that "where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The Sacred Oracles afford us many patterns of liberality, relative to sacrifice, when indeed their own supply was quite limited. One or two will now serve our purpose.

That good man who obtained such favor in the eyes of the Lord, that He preserved him a year on the surging billows of the great deep, amid the dissolution of the entire race—as soon as he is permitted to set his foot on terra firma, attends immediately to the erection of an altar for the Lord. Though winter was fast approaching, it being about the middle of our November, he makes no provision for himself or family until he has sacrificed one of every clean beast, and of every clean bird, of the few now left on the earth.—Some might have thought him imprudent in sacrificing thus liberally; for, be it remembered, this was of his own free will, God had not yet stipulated the amount to be sacrificed, but it pleased the Lord.—The record says He "smelled a sweet savor," and then made the gracious promises of preserving the seasons, &c., while the earth remained.

Next, we will notice the widow of Sarepta—her obedience to God in first sacrificing the little she had, and risking future consequences. God manifested His pleasure in her case by a miraculous supply of the provi ion she had so nobly sacrificed in behalf of His Prophet!

By this time I think we shall see the necessity and safety of sacrificing the most valuable things we possess unto the Lord; though it be as near as our right hand, or eye, let it go.

Are we the children of Abraham?

Ans. If we are Christ's. (Gal. 3: 29.) How can we claim this personal relationship, unless there is a strong affinity in point of sacrifice? This spirit of sacrifice secured the promise of God to Abraham, Gen. 22: 16. "By myself have I sworn saith the Lord: for thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son." Then follow a list of gracious promises, Gen. 22: 17, 18.

Having thus far considered the necessity of sacrifice, it may now be well to guard against another evil to which poor, weak, human nature is liable; for so miserably weak is man, he cannot stand erect without the application of the plumbline of truth on both sides. Apply the truth on one side, he is almost sure to lean on the other, so that he fails of being an upright walker. He will profess to obey some commands, at the expense of a plain violation of others. Thus Saul, 1st Sam. 15, did not wholly disregard the commandment of the Lord, but laboriously performed a part of the work God assigned him, and justified himself with this.—Though in the very act of disobedience, yet he could meet God's Prophet with a confidential air, saying, "I have performed the commandment of the Lord."—Whether he had made himself actually believe that commencing right would meet the demands of high heaven, we cannot determine; bnt certain it is, there now exist many instances of this kind—performing what is agreeable to themselves, then confidently affirming they have performed the commandment of the Lord, without so much as touching the cross.—This case (though not an exact parallel) brings to mind the unwarrantable means employed by many in these last days to obtain the treasures of this world, with the idea of giving them to the Lord!!—For instance, look at the different species of gambling so extensively practised in the houses dedicated to God, in order to obtain costly trappings and ornaments for the same!! What, think you, would be the language and conduct towards such, of Him that was born in a manger, and ever found in poverty's vale? Think you, it would be less severe than that employed on a similar occasion mentioned in John 2: 15, 16? If they deserved the scourge for just using the house of God as a mere place of merchandise, what shall be the reward of those who gamble and cheat to the utmost of their ability, for the professed purpose of furnishing and decorating the house of God? "Behold, to obey is better than" such "sacrifice." Would God, such sickly, hollow-hearted religionists could be made to feel the rottenness of their profession ere it be too late. It would be well for them to stop and inquire with David, Ps. 15, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" and listen attentively to the ans. "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart." Is it working righteousness and speaking truth in the heart to be the abettor of those miserable, gambling parties? Would you like to go from one of these scenes to the judgment?—Let such consider on their ways, and burn incense to vanity no longer, Jer. 18: 15. But I fear my article is transcending profitable limits, and will close after a word of improvement by a brief recapitulation.

1st. The short history of that young man teaches us we may possess great moral worth, and, being destitute of the principle of sacrificing for God, come short of the Kingdom of heaven.

2d. That Jesus Christ sacrificed His riches and honor for the good of others, and that His disciples must imitate Him as their great exemplar.

3d. Since the fall, man's selfish propensities have been so prominent, that God instituted sacrifice as an antidote, which has ever been essential, in order to keep the Spirit of God. And here allow me to digress far enough to ask the readers whether their own experience does not attest the truth of this fact. After making a real sacrifice for God, do you not experience a holy elevation—a fitness for the society of God and Angels you did not realize before?

4th. God demands the best and most perfect as a sacrifice.

5th. God had the good of man in view in demanding a sacrifice.

6th. Our treasure must be laid up in a more secure position than in the present evil world for safe keeping.

7th. The sacred oracles afford patterns of great liberality in sacrificing to God, and prove the safety of thus doing.

8th. Man is weak—needs all the truth to keep him from leaning.

9th. There is danger in trying to ease our conscience by performing part of God's requirements, and then professing to have performed the commandment of the Lord.

10th. We should never use unlawful means to possess property with the siren delusion of appropriating it to the service of God.

Lastly, we should never consider any thing wasted that is sacrificed to God.—This I endeavored to prove in a recent article.

I must now leave you until you have time to read and digest, hoping I may share an interest meantime in your prayers.

Yours in the love of the truth,

B. MATHEWSON.

Truth and Love.

Br. Merriam, beloved in the Lord:—My heart is deeply moved with the emotions of love and desire for the entire household, that they may be preserved blameless, unto the coming and Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.—"God is love;" and the greatest manifestation of His love is the gift of His Son to save the lost children of men, and reinstate them in His love and favor: and that love being shed abroad in our hearts, our heaven is begun even in this mortal state, by loving God, His word, His will, His providences, and one another even as Christ has loved us. I am glad love abideth forever. "Great peace have they who love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." If others curse, love will bless; resists not when smitten; thinketh no evil.

As the ministers have taken different courses since last fall, I have been led to repeat the words of Christ with great solicitude; "who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall make ruler over his household to give them their portion of meat in due season?" which I think is not always someting new, but to have their pure minds stirred up by way of remembrance, that they may be mindful of the words which were spoken by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of the Apostles of the Lord our Savior. Those truths that sustain the faith and direct the heart into the love of God, and the patient waiting for His Son from heaven, I think are meat in due season. The very fact that there are scoffers, and the holy Apostle said there should be, in the last days, whose language was to be, "where is the promise of his coming," sustains our faith; although lately they have changed their mode of expression, and confess they believe in the second Advent, but He is coming as a thief.—Can't know anything about the time, and there is nothing in the Bible to give us an understanding of time. Indeed they have got quite out of patience with us because we believe if we watch we shall know something more about the time.—And I pray that the same spirit which led us to acquaint ourselves with the words spoken by the holy prophets, who prophesied of the grace that should be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ, who searched what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow," will also lead us to be mindful of those words, and take the prophets themselves, according to the commandment of the Apostle James, for an example of suffering affliction and of patience; remembering that the Lord is not slack concerning his promise.

How glad I am that we can rely on the the words of God whether spoken by prophets, Jesus Christ, or His apostles.—Blessed be His name forever. I love Daniel still—his selfdenial in refusing to eat of the portion of the king's meat—his example in desiring mercies of the God of heaven, when sought to be slain—his humility in confessing to the king, that the secret was not revealed to him for any wisdom that he had, more than any living—his fidelity in declaring plainly to Nebuchadnezzar, "The tree that thou sawest which grew and was strong, it is thou, O king, that is grown and become strong, and they shall drive thee from men," &c., his faithfulness in counseling him to break off his sins by righteousness and his iniquities by showing mercy to the poor—his faith in God to shut the lion's mouths—his sympathy for his people that lead him to examine the prophecy of Jeremiah where he learned about the seventy years that were to be accomplished in the desolutions of Jerusalem—his confessions of sin and the sin of his people Israel—his supplication for the holy mountain of his God—his minuteness in recording the wonders which he saw, and his anxiety to understand when they should be finished. And I think our adorable Redeemer did not lightly esteem the communications made to him by Gabriel, inasmuch as he quotes from him in answering the disciples questions about His coming and the end of the world—or Gentile rule. "When ye shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet stand in the holy place, (let him that readeth understand.)

When I read these words after I was awakened by the '54 argument, and led to give more earnest heed to the sure word of prophecy, the last sentence, "Let him that readeth understand," was truly weighty, not only because of the Author, but it was clearly evident that vast consequences rested upon understanding the subject which had days connected with it. The effect of these convictions led me to set my face to seek the Lord by prayer and supplication, confessing my sin, and the sin of my people in departing from the plain, simple word, which, if it had remained unadulterated by the traditions of men, would have shone brilliantly in this dark age of the world. Hence the need of the admonition, "Let him," &c. Do not hinder him, let the word speak for itself. And as I turned to Daniel to read respecting the abomination, I found I had no wisdom of my own, but as I was in the habit of seeking wisdom of God, I knew where to go, and found it good to remember His manner of dealing with His children in all past time. Many years was He communicating to Daniel, therefore I could not expect to understand all at once; but the work of humbling ourselves, and inclining our ear unto wisdom, and applying our hearts to understanding, crying after knowledge, and lifting up the voice for understanding, seeking her as silver, and searching for her as for hid treasure, that we may understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God's plans and purposes concerning the children of men, as revealed in the Holy Scriptures, is the work of one's lifetime. The inquiry has often come up in my mind, shall we wait till we get all the light before we let it shine, lest we advance what we afterward may find we did not exactly understand? I think all experience will answer, no. For while we are learners, we shall find ourselves liable to mistakes; hence the importance of being converted and becoming as little children, and keeping childlike and teachable. God has not made us independent of each other, neither are we to look altogether on our own views, lest we get narrow and sectarian principles directly opposite to the spirit of Christ. Moreover God has ordained means for the perfecting of the saints, whose path is that that shines more and more unto the perfect day. Paul says, "blindness in part hath happened unto Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in."

It is a matter of rejoicing that truth is mighty and will prevail. How important that we keep ourselves right in the sight of God, amid the variety of opinions that have been and still are coming up among us. If we have all gifts, and have not charity, it profiteth nothing. I should not wonder, if when the unction is given, all would find it necessary to yield some of their views. God will not have one class magnifying themselves against another.—As it says in Zech. 12: 7; "The Lord also shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah." From Ps. 78: 68 we learn that Judah is Zion; and Isa. 51 describes Zion as afflicted, as having laid herself as the ground, and as the street to them that went over. This is her condition when a voice calls, "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion." This voice once shook the earth, and has promised to shake not only the earth, but the heavens also, which shaking will produce the sign of the Son of Man, which will cause the rich men and Captains to call on the rocks to fall on them and hide them from the Lamb; and it will produce the likeness of Christ in that class of His people who shall be saved.

The Lord's Prayer.

A friend, says one of our cotemporaries, tells us an anecdote of Booth, the great tragedian, which we do not recollect having seen in print. It occurred in the palmy days of his fame, before the sparkle of his great black eye had been dimmed by that bane of genius, strong drink.

Booth and several friends had been invited to dine with an old gentleman in Baltimore, of distinguished kindness, urbanity and piety. The host, though disapproving of theatres and theatre going, had heard so much of Booth's remarkable powers, that curiosity to see the man had overcome all scruples and prejudices.—After the entertainment was over, lamps lighted, and the company seated in the drawing room, some one requested Booth, as a particular favor, and one which all present would doubtless appreciate, to read aloud the Lord's Prayer.

Booth expressed his willingness to afford them this gratification, and all eyes were turned expectantly on him. Booth rose slowly and reverently from his chair. It was wonderful to watch the play of emotions that convulsed his countenance. He became deathly pale, and his eyes, turned tremblingly upward, were wet with tears. As yet, he had not spoken. The silence could be felt. It had become absolutely painful, until at last the spell was broken as if by an electric shock, as his rich-toned voice, from white lips, syllabled forth, "Our Father who art in Heaven," &c., with a pathos and fervent solemnity that thrilled all hearts. Not a voice was heard, or muscle moved in his rapt audience, until from a remote corner of the room a subdued sob was heard, and the old gentleman, (their host,) stepped forward with streaming eyes and tottering frame, and seized Booth by the hand.—"Sir, (said he in broken accents,) you have afforded me a pleasure for which my whole life will feel grateful. I am an old man, and every day from boyhood to the present time, I thought I had repeated the Lord's Prayer, but I have never heard it before, never!"

"You are right," replied Booth: "to read that prayer as it should be read, has caused me the severest study and labor for thirty years, and I am far from being yet satisfied with my rendering of that [illegible]

ful production. Hardly one person in ten thousand comprehends how much beauty, tenderness, and grandeur can be condensed in a space so small, and in words so simple. That prayer of itself sufficiently illustrates the truth of the Bible, and stamps upon it the seal of divinity."

So great was the effect produced, says our informant, who was present, that conversation was sustained but a short time longer in subdued monosyllables, and almost ceased; and soon after, at an early hour, the company broke up, and retired to their several homes, with sad faces and full hearts.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, SEPT. 15, 1855.

Remarks on Zechariah. Continued.

V. 12. "Then the angel of the Lord answered and said, O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?"

On hearing the tidings that "all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest," the Angel burst forth into an exclamation of prayer for the peace of Jerusalem. Like the Prophet Daniel when he "understood by books the number of the years that the Lord would accomplish in the desolations of Babylon," he entreated the favor of God in behalf of that city which was a point of interest—a centre of attraction for the people of God. The way being now prepared, and the set time to favor Zion come, he lifts his cry to heaven for the removal of the curse resting on that hallowed ground, and the oppression under which the children of Israel had groaned. The threescore and ten years of divine indignation against the Hebrews were now about fulfilled, and the glorious time of deliverance had come; and will not God graciously and faithfully redeem His promises to His covenant people?

V. 13. "And the Lord answered the that angel talked with me with good words and comfortable words."

The prayer of the Angel was heard, and the Lord sent an answer of peace, affording ground for consolation to Israel, and encouragement to hope for the prosperity of Zion. "And the Lord answered the Angel with good words, and comfortable words;" or as Coverdale renders it, "So the Lord gave a loving and comfortable answer."

V. 14. "So the angel that communed with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy."

The Douay version of the latter clause in this verse reads thus:—"I am zealous for Jerusalem and Sion with a great zeal." This verse expresses the vigilant care exercised over Jerusalem by the Lord, and His anxious solicitude that her cause should be vindicated, and her enemies receive a righteous retribution for all their acts of oppression.

V. 15. "And I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are at ease; for I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward the affliction."

"I am sore displeased," &c. This language portrays the righteous indignation of God against the enemies of the Jews. The latter clause of this verse, according to Coverdale, reads thus:—"for when I was but a little angry, they did their best that I might destroy them."—The Sept. ver. of this verse reads thus: "And I am very angry with the heathen that combined to attack her; forasmuch as I was indeed a little angry, but they combined to attack her FOR EVIL."

This passage indicates that while God chastens His people for their good, wicked nations are permitted to be instruments in accomplishing the work of chastisement, and yet render themselves obnoxious to the divine displeasure in the very fulfilment of His providential designs.—The reason for this is obvious, viz, that while God afflicts from motives of purest benevolence, they are actuated by malignant and hateful passions; while God designs it for good, they design it for evil—The same principle is brought out in Isa. 10: 5-7. "O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation. I will send him against a hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets. Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so; but it is in his heart, to destroy and cut off nations not a few."

In this case, God designed the chastisement of His people; but the Assyrian monarch designed the overthrow of other governments for the aggrandizement of his own.

V. 16. "Therefore thus saith the Lord; I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies: my house shall be built in it, saith the Lord of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem."

The Lord, having seen the affliction of His people, would now cause His face to shine upon them once more—deliver them from the power of their enemies—pour His temporal and spiritual blessings upon them, and enable them to erect the sanctuary for His sacred abode, for the honor of His name, and the solemn acts of His worship.

"And a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem." This implies a preparatory step to the rebuilding of the city in beauty, regularity and order.

V. 17: "Cry yet, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and the Lord shall yet choose Jerusalem."

This verse teaches that other cities in the land of Palestine, beside Jerusalem, would experience the blessings of heaven, and become populous and flourishing; but the Lord would especially comfort Zion, and choose Jerusalem as the honored place of His residence, and the seat of His worship.

V. 17-21. "Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and behold four horns.—And I said unto the angel that talked with me, What be these? And he answered one, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem. And the Lord shewed me four carpenters.—Then said I, What come these to do? And he spake, saying, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, so that no man did lift up his head: but these are come to fray them, to cast out the horns of the Gentiles, which lifted up their horn over the land of Judah to scatter it."

The Prophets often speak of the future as present, or past, in their prophetic declarations, and hence these horns may have reference to those persecuting powers that were afterward to arise; but as they are from fear of evil, whoever would avoid the wrath to come, let them clear the track; for God's car of salvation is coming—the judgment scenes are impending—the vials explained to be the horns which HAVE scattered Judah, Israel and Jerusalem, it would appear that primary reference is had to those Gentile governments that had broken down the Hebrew nation—scattered their power—and carried away captive, not only the inhabitants of their Metropolis, but also of their whole land.

The four persecuting powers suggested by Clark, as most probably intended, are the Egyptians, Assyrians, Chaldeans and Persians.

The Lord, having shewn Zechariah the mighty organizations of government that were hostile to the interests of Zion, now comforts his heart by imagery that represented the instrumentalities God would employ for the destruction of those powers. The carpenters, or artificers, represent the instrumentalities employed in the providence of God for the overthrow of the kingdoms that persecute and destroy the people of God. Whenever any agencies are presented in prophecy for the accomplishment of some specific work, we may determine the character of the agencies, by the character of the work to be accomplished. If the work, or mission, be of a spiritual nature, as was that of the Angel "having the everlasting Gospel to preach," we infer that that the actors, or agencies represented by the Angel, are of a spiritual class, and that the preaching of the everlasting Gospel was to be fulfilled by appropriate agents, viz. Preachers of the Gospel. If the work be of a military character, such as slaying the third part of men by fire, smoke and brimstone, (Rev. 9,) we infer that the agencies employed would be organizations of government. In the case before us, as the work to be done is the demolition of the four great persecuting powers, the agencies to effect this work must be appropriate to their office.

In reference to these agencies, Clark remarks:—"The first was Nabopolassar, father of Nebuchadnezzar, who overturned the empire of the Assyrians. The second was Cyrus who destroyed the empire of the Chaldeans. The third was Alexander the Great, who destroyed the empire of the Persians. And the fourth was Ptolemy, who rendered himself master of Egypt."

In the delineations of prophetic history, we often find intermingled hints of other, and higher, and more glorious scenes to come. The historical events presented are typical of events to be consummated in the future. In the narration of the scenes occurring in this world, events far more sublime and glorious shine out from the scenes described, of which the latter are but types and shadows. Thus in the 72d Ps. when David describes the prosperity of Solomon, saying that "in his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth;" "he shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth;" and again, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him," it is evident a kingdom more extensive and glorious than that of Solomon is implied, even the empire of the Prince of peace, whose dominion will be co-extensive with the earth, and who will be the Prince of the kings of the earth, the King of kings and Lord of lords. When Zerubbabel, the builder of the second temple is spoken of in Haggai, ch. 2d, as about to be made a signet, in the day when God would overthrow all the kingdoms of the earth, it is plain that Zerubbabel typified Christ. Again: when it is said of Joshua the high priest," he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne," it is plain that Joshua typified Christ. Thus in many instances when the Prophets spoke of some person or event of their own age, it is quite certain they often alluded also to more exalted personages, or to more sublime events than would appear upon the face of the subject presented. In like manner the four horns, together with the four carpenters, under consideration, may refer to the four universal empires of the world which are all to be finally destroyed when the kingdoms of this world "become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ! and He shall reign forever and ever."

From this chapter we learn that God ever has an eye upon His people for good; and that when outward circumstances appear dark and discouraging, the Lord may at that very point of time be opening the way for their deliverance and salvation; and on the other hand, "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever:" Ps. 92: 7. When God puts forth His mighty hand to move the car of salvation, the wheels will roll in spite of earth and hell; and against His Church the gates of hell shall not ultimately prevail. But whoever stands in bold defiance of God's power, and virulent opposition to His blessed work and truth, will ultimately be crushed beneath the ponderous wheels of the divinely impelled chariot of redemption. Whoever would be safe of the wrath to come are quickly to be poured out! There is no security out of Christ. O flee to the Ark, ye who are destitute of hope, and without God in the world. Supplicate the throne for mercy, and the Lord will answer you, as He did the Angel, "with good words and comfortable words." You will experience the joys of His salvation, escape the deluge of holy indignation that will overwhelm an ungodly world, and obtain deliverance at the coming of the Son of man, and participate in the triumphant songs, the enchanting melodies of those who return to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. O the brightness of that coming glory!! O the anthems—the hallelujahs of the redeemed!! God help us all to choose life, that we may live forever; to chooee righteousness, the effect of which is "quietness and assurance forever."

Union.

As some effort is being made at the present time to promote a union among different branches of the professed Advent Church, it may not be inappropriate that I should make some remarks upon the subject. It has ever been congenial to my feelings to see harmony among men of every class, and more especially among those who profess the religion of love and good will to men, and more especially still among those who are expecting soon to walk with Him in white on the fair plains of that world where the very air is love. Ruptures, factions, alienation among Brn. have ever been abhorrent to my personal feelings except in so far as was essential to the maintenance of Scripture truth and vital godliness. If we might be permitted to enjoy our individual opinions based on the word according to our understanding, and advocate the same, I could see no cause for division; but wherever our views have not only been rejected, but suppressed; wherever there was not only a want ot cordial co-operation, but a decided resistance to our efforts; wherever there was not only a want of union of spirit, but actual opposition of spirit, a separation seemed to be the necessary result; and for this reason, that there could be no cordial co-operation, no harmonious action. While such differences of opinion and feeling existed, a separation in action seemed inevitable; because, from the nature of things, we could not act together. But I have ever maintained that no unkind, hostile or opposing spirit need be indulged. There was still room left for christian courtesy, and kindly affections, whether a perfect harmony of views existed or not.

In respect to the publication of the Crisis, I did not feel that it was designed to be in opposition to any other paper.

I have differed in sentiment from some of my Brn., and have advocated different views in the Crisis from what other papers have advocated; but have felt no alienation that would lead me to unchristianize or anathematize them for their peculiar faith. I have ever adhered to the injunction of Scripture "Judge not that ye be not judged;" and again: "Judge nothing before the time, UNTIL THE LORD COME, who both will bring to light hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and then shall every man have praise of God." 1 Cor. 4: 5. Again: Rom. 14; 4.—"Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up; for God is able to make him stand."

I do not therefore feel, so far as I am concerned, that I have any difficulties to settle. So far as in my judgment they have been in the work of God, I am with them and ever have been.

If therefore an effort be made to blend different Advent papers, and no sacrifice of truth or principle be demanded of us, I can see no objection to such a course.

The question is not whether we will go back from any position we now occupy; but whether we will unite with Brn. who stand ready to unite with us. If it be required to lower the standard, I would at once say no; if not, I see no reason for disunion and division. But let us all pray that God would overrule this subject to His praise and glory. If God can be glorified, and His children comforted, and His truth promoted by such a movement as is in contemplation, Amen; if not, may all such counsels be turned into foolishness. Let Christ be sovereign—His sceptre rule—His grace direct—His honor be supreme in this thing. This is all I desire, and with this I shall be satisfied.

For the Crisis.

The Cause in the West.

We saw at the Wilbraham Campmeeting several Brn. from the West.

Br. Walter Pratt has been making a tour to Illinois out as far as the Missisipi river. He reports that faithful laborers can do ten times the good there, with the same amount of labor, that can be accomplished in the Eastern States. He purposes to start with his family, in a few days, for that field, there to locate permanently, and preach the living word.

Br. P. B. Morgan was also present from Moline, Ill. He has concluded to break away from friends and home, and labor in the same vast field. He starts to-day, (Sept. 3d,) with his family. He gave an encouraging report of the interest there. He issues a semi-montly sheet at Moline, entitled, "The Prophetic Messenger."—On Sunday night, just as the Camp Meeting was concluding, Br. Morgan spoke of the wants of the cause in the West, and the Brn. immediately responded by a generous contribution of some forty dollars; enough to purchase the Winsted tent, and send it out to Illinois. The tent was named, "The New England Mission Tent for the West," and sent forth with many prayers for God's blessing upon the enterprise. God grant that wherever the "Mission Tent" is pitched upon the Western Prairies, men may be prepared for our abiding home when the tabernacle of God is with men.

The season on the Camp ground was one of deep interest. When Br. Ira Morgan, who was present, spoke of the reluctance which he felt to have his son leave him, for the West, and of the sacrifice which he felt that he was making, but which he was willing to make for the cause of God, almost all were bathed in tears; and when the proposal came to purchase a tent, they took hold of it with a zeal which showed that they felt in their pockets as well as in their hearts.

Br. Pratt and Morgan will labor in concert there, and, we trust, good will be done.

Pray for them. They are men who believe in the prayer of faith. O let earnest, fervent suplications ascend to God for His blessing on their efforts, and on all efforts for the advancement of the cause of the living God.

Time speeds us with arrowy swiftness along our perilous course. The shades of coming judgment loom awfully along earth's pathway—soon the crisis will be reached, and the voice of God declare, IT IS DONE. We then must meet the Judge and give up our account. Are we doing what we can to prepare for that day? Men of God, awake! The Lord cometh. The Judge standeth before the door.—But yet the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Who will work for God? Calls for help come borne on every breeze. Sinners perish for lack of knowledge, and many sit idly beneath their gourds when they should be awake and active in the cause of God.

Let us work while the day lasts; the night cometh, and cometh soon.

• • •

P. S. We understand that Br. W. Pratt will leave for the west about the 23d of this month. Till then, his P. O. address will be Windsor, Ct.

Speak Gently.

Ah, yes! speak gently always; for there is nothing like gentle words of kindness. Speak kindly to that poor, hard toiling, careworn woman, whose dark eyes glance wistfully around, as if in search of a friend: and oh, you cannot tell how much she needs one! She was a happy bride once, but the shadow of the death angel's wing darkened her pathway, and the light of her life was quenched in the cold grave! Aid her, if you can, but at least speak kindly to her, speak gently, speak tenderly, even, for her heart is very heavy!

Speak gently to those little ones. Poor things! they look pinched, and hungry, and sorrowful; perhaps sinful! Once their little arms clung caressingly around a fair young mother's neck, and she loved to brush away the sunny curls, and press a kiss on each dear brow, glad to labor hard, so that she might keep her little ones within the shelter of the home-nest. But now, she sleeps quietly where "the weary are at rest," and who is there to love her little orphans. Oh! speak gently to them, for they have no mother!

Speak gently to that young girl, with whose name many-tongued rumor begins to sport. Has she fallen into error? Do not cast her off forever. Do not let your virtuous frown frighten her into ruin.—Are you quite sure thatrumor speaks truly of her? And are you without sin? If so, speak gently, kindly, pityingly to her: perchance you may win her back within those strict bounds of propriety, which you have never overstepped!

Speak gently to that old, white-haired man. He is almost alone in the world, and his earth-pillow is waiting for him with its cold, unwaking rest. Cheer his worn and weary heart, then, with gentle words of kindness, and reverence his white locks, white, perchance, with sorrow, as well as age!

Speak gently to that palefaced lad, toiling wearily by your side through the long day. Help him, encourage him, give him assistance if he needs it; it may cost you but little trouble, but to him, it may be of incalculable benefit.

O, there is much need of kindness in this cold world, and let us remember then, as we go down life's pathway with our fellow-pilgrims, to speak kindly—speak gently to all. L.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. M. Grant.

BOSTON, Sept. 7th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—For the benefit of those who are interested to know the state of things in this city and vicinity, I would say that our meetings are becoming more and more interesting, prayer meetings are more fully attended, several are under conviction, one has risen for prayers, and two were baptized last Lord's day.—Our Brn. are feeling satisfied that nothing is accomplished in these times without untiring effort.

We are convinced that the effort for the salvation of sinners has been too feeble of late, and that if we would be free in the service of the Lord, we must do something to benefit our fellow men.

I am satisfied that nothing will do us more good at the present time, than earnest, selfsacrificing effort to save the people around us from falling into the hands of man's great enemy, who, knowing his time is short, is making every exertion to lead men to perdition. Let me call on my preaching Brn. to make renewed effort to get people to join the praying army that will soon be victorious, and receive the kingdom under the whole heaven, where there will be eternal peace.

If there was ever cause for earnest labor in the vineyard of the Lord, it is at this time when so many feel inclined to go to sleep. May the good and chief Shepherd help us to feed His flock, teaching them to "exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching."

What is done must be done quickly.—No time now for repose, while the enemy is so active.

"Up, Oh! up! thou drowsy soldier,"

Let us show to the world that we consider eternal life of some value.

Break the strong fetters the ice hath bound about thee; arise in the strength of the Lord, put on the christian armor, and once more be valiant for the truth and its Author.

"Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages, tell for God."

Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might. M. GRANT.

Is Sebastopol Armageddon?

THE PLACE SPOKEN OF IN REV. 16: 16.

Sir:—This question has lately been raised. On Prophecy unfulfilled, or only in course of fulfilment, it becomes us to propound our opinions with diffidence; but assuredly this does not preclude the exercise of humble and devout inquiry. In this view, permit me to throw out for consideration the following hints:—

Commentators, writing before the present war, have, I believe, generally drawn their conclusions or explanation of the word from its first syllable. Ar, signifying a mountain, but this has thrown no real light upon the text. There is, however, another Hebrew word having the same sound, (Ar) though formed from a different letter. This Ar signifies a city; joining it to the word Mageddon, which in Hebrew signifies pre-eminent, or illustrious, we get Armageddon, the ILLUSTRIOUS CITY. Now Sebastopol is compounded of two Greek words, which together signify the same thing, the AUGUST or ILLUSTRIOUS CITY. This, as far as I know, is in substance, the discovery suggested by the present extraordinary siege. The co-incidence is at least curious, but the point admits of further elucidation. St. John wrote in Greek, and if he had not in the passage under consideration forsaken the Greek for the Hebrew, that passage would have run thus in our translation:—"And he gathered them together into a place called in the Greek tongue, SEBASTOPOL."

But this would have been too plain for prophecy, which employs enigmatical devices for the purpose of presenting truth, as it were looming in a mist, to the eye of faith, while it conceals the precise event fore-shadowed from certain knowledge until the proper period for its development. In this instance, the enigma consists in substituting the Hebrew word Armageddon, for the plain name of the place Sebastopol. It deserves remark that had St. John used the Greek word Sebastopol, this too might have equally hidden his meaning up to the time when the Russians gained fraudulent possession of the Crimea, but no longer. The Tartar name of the place was Aktiar. Dr. Clark in his travels, published in 1810, alluding to this change in the designation of the city says:—"We reached the great bay of Actiar, upon which place the Russians, in the time of Catherine the II, bestowed the fantastic name of Sebastopol." At that time, this new name was fantastic; but it may enhance our reverence for divine inspiration to reflect, that not only was it foreseen that the place of gathering should ages after be called in human pride, by a fantastic name, but that it should, in a short period, by the course of Providence, vindicate its title to be considered really illustrious. For, what can be better entitled to such a term, than that very place on which the eyes of the world are now fixed? The two greatest nations of Europe putting forth, and as yet vainly, their mightiest resources to take it. And the immense Empire of Russia, so obstinately and beyond all calculation, defending it. It is truly the illustrious city, the Sebastopol, the Armageddon, call it which we will.

Learned interpreters of prophecy, (Mr. Elliot for instance,) some years ago, brought down from totally independent considerations, our present chronological position to the outpouring of the sixth vial, under that vial the Battle of Armageddon takes place; so that we ought NOW to be LOOKING OUT for Armageddon; and if we ask, where it is? SEBASTOPOL, wonderfully answers the question. It is very remarkable that there is a VALLEY in the Crimea, in the neighborhood of Sebastopol, known by the name of the VALLEY OF JEHOSHAPHAT. The prophet Joel, speaking of the restoration of the Jews, an event which the Christian world now looks for as near, describes the GATHERING OF NATIONS TO THE VALLEY OF JEHOSHAPHAT. The whole passage (Joel 3d,) is worthy of deep consideration, and of close comparison with other scriptures. Your readers can refer to it; and some of them may be surprised to learn that Dr. Clark describes a colony of Karite Jews, in that part of the Crimea, about the valley of Jehoshaphat, as remarkable for their purity, integrity, and truth, connect this with the fact that the Lord is to vindicate his people the Jews, at the Valley of Jehoshaphat.

In Rev. 16 chap., the gathering to Armageddon, is to be by THREE unclean spirits like frogs, coming out of the mouth of the Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet. It would corroborate the identity of Sebastopol and Armageddon, if the ful production. Hardly one person in ten thousand comprehends how much beauty, tenderness, and grandeur can be condensed in a space so small, and in words so simple. That prayer of itself sufficiently illustrates the truth of the Bible, and stamps upon it the seal of divinity."

So great was the effect produced, says our informant, who was present, that conversation was sustained but a short time longer in subdued monosyllables, and almost ceased; and soon after, at an early hour, the company broke up, and retired to their several homes, with sad faces and full hearts.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, SEPT. 15, 1855.

V. 12. "Then the angel of the Lord answered and said, O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?"

On hearing the tidings that "all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest," the Angel burst forth into an exclamation of prayer for the peace of Jerusalem. Like the Prophet Daniel when he "understood by books the number of the years that the Lord would accomplish in the desolations of Babylon," he entreated the favor of God in behalf of that city which was a point of interest—a centre of attraction for the people of God. The way being now prepared, and the set time to favor Zion come, he lifts his cry to heaven for the removal of the curse resting on that hallowed ground, and the oppression under which the children of Israel had groaned. The threescore and ten years of divine indignation against the Hebrews were now about fulfilled, and the glorious time of deliverance had come; and will not God graciously and faithfully redeem His promises to His covenant people?

V. 13. "And the Lord answered the that angel talked with me with good words and comfortable words."

The prayer of the Angel was heard, and the Lord sent an answer of peace, affording ground for consolation to Israel, and encouragement to hope for the prosperity of Zion. "And the Lord answered the Angel with good words, and comfortable words;" or as Coverdale renders it, "So the Lord gave a loving and comfortable answer."

V. 14. "So the angel that communed with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy."

The Douay version of the latter clause in this verse reads thus:—"I am zealous for Jerusalem and Sion with a great zeal." This verse expresses the vigilant care exercised over Jerusalem by the Lord, and His anxious solicitude that her cause should be vindicated, and her enemies receive a righteous retribution for all their acts of oppression.

V. 15. "And I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are at ease; for I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward the affliction."

"I am sore displeased," &c. This language portrays the righteous indignation of God against the enemies of the Jews. The latter clause of this verse, according to Coverdale, reads thus:—"for when I was but a little angry, they did their best that I might destroy them."—The Sept. ver. of this verse reads thus: "And I am very angry with the heathen that combined to attack her; forasmuch as I was indeed a little angry, but they combined to attack her FOR EVIL."

This passage indicates that while God chastens His people for their good, wicked nations are permitted to be instruments in accomplishing the work of chastisement, and yet render themselves obnoxious to the divine displeasure in the very fulfilment of His providential designs.—The reason for this is obvious, viz, that while God afflicts from motives of purest benevolence, they are actuated by malignant and hateful passions; while God designs it for good, they design it for evil—The same principle is brought out in Isa. 10: 5–7. "O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation. I will send him against a hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets. Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so; but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations not a few."

In this case, God designed the chastisement of His people; but the Assyrian monarch designed the overthrow of other governments for the aggrandizement of his own.

V. 16. "Therefore thus saith the Lord; I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies: my house shall be built in it, saith the Lord of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem."

The Lord, having seen the affliction of His people, would now cause His face to shine upon them once more—deliver them from the power of their enemies—pour His temporal and spiritual blessings upon them, and enable them to erect the sanctuary for His sacred abode, for the honor of His name, and the solemn acts of His worship.

"And a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem." This implies a preparatory step to the rebuilding of the city in beauty, regularity and order.

V. 17: "Cry yet, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and the Lord shall yet choose Jerusalem."

This verse teaches that other cities in the land of Palestine, beside Jerusalem, would experience the blessings of heaven, and become populous and flourishing; but the Lord would especially comfort Zion, and choose Jerusalem as the honored place of His residence, and the seat of His worship.

V. 17–21. "Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and behold four horns.—And I said unto the angel that talked with me, What be these? And he answered one, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem. And the Lord shewed me four carpenters.—Then said I, What come these to do? And he spake, saying, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, so that no man did lift up his head: but these are come to fray them, to cast out the horns of the Gentiles, which lifted up their horn over the land of Judah to scatter it."

The Prophets often speak of the future as present, or past, in their prophetic declarations, and hence these horns may have reference to those persecuting powers that were afterward to arise; but as they are from fear of evil, whoever would avoid the wrath to come, let them clear the track; for God's car of salvation is coming—the judgment scenes are impending—the vials explained to be the horns which HAVE scattered Judah, Israel and Jerusalem, it would appear that primary reference is had to those Gentile governments that had broken down the Hebrew nation—scattered their power—and carried away captive, not only the inhabitants of their Metropolis, but also of their whole land.

The four persecuting powers suggested by Clark, as most probably intended, are the Egyptians, Assyrians, Chaldeans and Persians.

The Lord, having shewn Zechariah the mighty organizations of government that were hostile to the interests of Zion, now comforts his heart by imagery that represented the instrumentalities God would employ for the destruction of those powers. The carpenters, or artificers, represent the instrumentalities employed in the providence of God for the overthrow of the kingdoms that persecute and destroy the people of God. Whenever any agencies are presented in prophecy for the accomplishment of some specific work, we may determine the character of the agencies, by the character of the work to be accomplished. If the work, or mission, be of a spiritual nature, as was that of the Angel "having the everlasting Gospel to preach," we infer that that the actors, or agencies represented by the Angel, are of a spiritual class, and that the preaching of the everlasting Gospel was to be fulfilled by appropriate agents, viz. Preachers of the Gospel. If the work be of a military character, such as slaying the third part of men by fire, smoke and brimstone, (Rev. 9,) we infer that the agencies employed would be organizations of government. In the case before us, as the work to be done is the demolition of the four great persecuting powers, the agencies to effect this work must be appropriate to their office.

In reference to these agencies, Clark remarks:—"The first was Nabopolassar, father of Nebuchadnezzar, who overturned the empire of the Assyrians. The second was Cyrus who destroyed the empire of the Chaldeans. The third was Alexander the Great, who destroyed the empire of the Persians. And the fourth was Ptolemy, who rendered himself master of Egypt."

In the delineations of prophetic history, we often find intermingled hints of other, and higher, and more glorious scenes to come. The historical events presented are typical of events to be consummated in the future. In the narration of the scenes occurring in this world, events far more sublime and glorious shine out from the scenes described, of which the latter are but types and shadows. Thus in the 72d Ps. when David describes the prosperity of Solomon, saying that "in his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth;" "he shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth;" and again, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him," it is evident a kingdom more extensive and glorious than that of Solomon is implied, even the empire of the Prince of peace, whose dominion will be co-extensive with the earth, and who will be the Prince of the kings of the earth, the King of kings and Lord of lords. When Zerubbabel, the builder of the second temple is spoken of in Haggai, ch 2d, as about to be made a signet, in the day when God would overthrow all the kingdoms of the earth, it is plain that Zerubbabel typified Christ. Again: when it is said of Joshua the high priest," he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne," it is plain that Joshua typified Christ. Thus in many instances when the Prophets spoke of some person or event of their own age, it is quite certain they often alluded also to more exalted personages, or to more sublime events than would appear upon the face of the subject presented. In like manner the four horns, together with the four carpenters, under consideration, may refer to the four universal empires of the world which are all to be finally destroyed when the kingdoms of this world "become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ! and He shall reign forever and ever."

From this chapter we learn that God ever has an eye upon His people for good; and that when outward circumstances appear dark and discouraging, the Lord may at that very point of time be opening the way for their deliverance and salvation; and on the other hand, "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever:" Ps. 92: 7. When God puts forth His mighty hand to move the car of salvation, the wheels will roll in spite of earth and hell; and against His Church the gates of hell shall not ultimately prevail. But whoever stands in bold defiance of God's power, and virulent opposition to His blessed work and truth, will ultimately be crushed beneath the ponderous wheels of the divinely impelled chariot of redemption. Whoever would be safe of the wrath to come are quickly to be poured out! There is no security out of Christ. O flee to the Ark, ye who are destitute of hope, and without God in the world. Supplicate the throne for mercy, and the Lord will answer you, as He did the Angel, "with good words and comfortable words." You will experience the joys of His salvation, escape the deluge of holy indignation that will overwhelm an ungodly world, and obtain deliverance at the coming of the Son of man, and participate in the triumphant songs, the enchanting melodies of those who return to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. O the brightness of that coming glory!! O the anthems—the hallelujahs of the redeemed!! God help us all to choose life, that we may live forever; to choose righteousness, the effect of which is "quietness and assurance forever."

Union.

As some effort is being made at the present time to promote a union among different branches of the professed Advent Church, it may not be inappropriate that I should make some remarks upon the subject. It has ever been congenial to my feelings to see harmony among men of every class, and more especially among those who profess the religion of love and good will to men, and more especially still among those who are expecting soon to walk with Him in white on the fair plains of that world where the very air is love. Ruptures, factions, alienation among Brn. have ever been abhorrent to my personal feelings except in so far as was essential to the maintenance of Scripture truth and vital godliness. If we might be permitted to enjoy our individual opinions based on the word according to our understanding, and advocate the same, I could see no cause for division; but wherever our views have not only been rejected, but suppressed; wherever there was not only a want of cordial co-operation, but a decided resistance to our efforts; wherever there was not only a want of union of spirit, but actual opposition of spirit, a separation seemed to be the necessary result; and for this reason, that there could be no cordial co-operation, no harmonious action. While such differences of opinion and feeling existed, a separation of action seemed inevitable; because, from the nature of things, we could not act together. But I have ever maintained that no unkind, hostile or opposing spirit need be indulged. There was still room left for christian courtesy, and kindly affections, whether a perfect harmony of views existed or not.

In respect to the publication of the Crisis, I did not feel that it was designed to be in opposition to any other paper.

I have differed in sentiment from some of my Brn., and have advocated different views in the Crisis from what other papers have advocated; but have felt no alienation that would lead me to unchristianize or anathematize them for their peculiar faith. I have ever adhered to the injunction of Scripture "Judge not that ye be not judged;" and again: "Judge nothing before the time, UNTIL THE LORD COME, who both will bring to light hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and then shall every man have praise of God." 1 Cor. 4: 5. Again: Rom. 14; 4.—"Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up; for God is able to make him stand."

I do not therefore feel, so far as I am concerned, that I have any difficulties to settle. So far as in my judgment they have been in the work of God, I am with them and ever have been.

If therefore an effort be made to blend different Advent papers, and no sacrifice of truth or principle be demanded of us, I can see no objection to such a course.

The question is not whether we will go back from any position we now occupy; but whether we will unite with Brn. who stand ready to unite with us. If it be required to lower the standard, I would at once say no; if not, I see no reason for disunion and division. But let us all pray that God would overrule this subject to His praise and glory. If God can be glorified, and His children comforted, and His truth promoted by such a movement as is in contemplation, Amen; if not, may all such counsels be turned into foolishness. Let Christ be sovereign—His sceptre rule—His grace direct—His honor be supreme in this thing. This is all I desire, and with this I shall be satisfied.

For the Crisis.

The Cause in the West.

We saw at the Wilbraham Campmeeting several Brn. from the West.

Br. Walter Pratt has been making a tour to Illinois out as far as the Missisipi river. He reports that faithful laborers can do ten times the good there, with the same amount of labor, that can be accomplished in the Eastern States. He purposes to start with his family, in a few days, for that field, there to locate permanently, and preach the living word.

Br. P. B. Morgan was also present from Moline, Ill. He has concluded to break away from friends and home, and labor in the same vast field. He starts to-day, (Sept. 3d,) with his family. He gave an encouraging report of the interest there. He issues a semi-montly sheet at Moline, entitled, "The Prophetic Messenger."—On Sunday night, just as the Camp Meeting was concluding, Br. Morgan spoke of the wants of the cause in the West, and the Brn. immediately responded by a generous contribution of some forty dollars; enough to purchase the Winsted tent, and send it out to Illinois. The tent was named, "The New England Mission Tent for the West," and sent forth with many prayers for God's blessing upon the enterprise. God grant that wherever the "Mission Tent" is pitched upon the Western Prairies, men may be prepared for our abiding home when the tabernacle of God is with men.

The season on the Camp ground was one of deep interest. When Br. Ira Morgan, who was present, spoke of the reluctance which he felt to have his son leave him, for the West, and of the sacrifice which he felt that he was making, but which he was willing to make for the cause of God, almost all were bathed in tears; and when the proposal came to purchase a tent, they took hold of it with a zeal which showed that they felt in their pockets as well as in their hearts.

Br. Pratt and Morgan will labor in concert there, and, we trust, good will be done.

Pray for them. They are men who believe in the prayer of faith. O let earnest, fervent suplications ascend to God for His blessing on their efforts, and on all efforts for the advancement of the cause of the living God.

Time speeds us with arrowy swiftness along our perilous course. The shades of coming judgment loom awfully along earth's pathway—soon the crisis will be reached, and the voice of God declare, IT IS DONE. We then must meet the Judge and give up our account. Are we doing what we can to prepare for that day? Men of God, awake! The Lord cometh. The Judge standeth before the door.—But yet the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Who will work for God? Calls for help come borne on every breeze. Sinners perish for lack of knowledge, and many sit idly beneath their gourds when they should be awake and active in the cause of God.

Let us work while the day lasts; the night cometh, and cometh soon.

* * *

P. S. We understand that Br. W. Pratt will leave for the west about the 23d of this month. Till then, his P. O. address will be Windsor, Ct.

Speak Gently.

Ah, yes! speak gently always; for there is nothing like gentle words of kindness. Speak kindly to that poor, hard-toiling, careworn woman, whose dark eyes glance wistfully around, as if in search of a friend: and oh, you cannot tell how much she needs one! She was a happy bride once, but the shadow of the death angel's wing darkened her pathway, and the light of her life was quenched in the cold grave! Aid her, if you can, but at least speak kindly to her, speak gently, speak tenderly, even, for her heart is very heavy!

Speak gently to those little ones. Poor things! they look pinched, and hungry, and sorrowful; perhaps sinful! Once their little arms clung caressingly around a fair young mother's neck, and she loved to brush away the sunny curls, and press a kiss on each dear brow, glad to labor hard, so that she might keep her little ones within the shelter of the home-nest. But now, she sleeps quietly where "the weary are at rest," and who is there to love her little orphans. Oh! speak gently to them, for they have no mother!

Speak gently to that young girl, with whose name many-tongued rumor begins to sport. Has she fallen into error? Do not cast her off forever. Do not let your virtuous frown frighten her into ruin.—Are you quite sure thatrumor speaks truly of her? And are you without sin? If so, speak gently, kindly, pityingly to her: perchance you may win her back within those strict bounds of propriety, which you have never overstepped!

Speak gently to that old, white-haired man. He is almost alone in the world, and his earth-pillow is waiting for him with its cold, unwaking rest. Cheer his worn and weary heart, then, with gentle words of kindness, and reverence his white locks, white, perchance, with sorrow, as well as age!

Speak gently to that palefaced lad, toiling wearily by your side through the long day. Help him, encourage him, give him assistance if he needs it; it may cost you but little trouble, but to him, it may be of incalculable benefit.

O, there is much need of kindness in this cold world, and let us remember then, as we go down life's pathway with our fellow-pilgrims, to speak kindly—speak gently to all. L.

Is Sebastopol Armageddon?

THE PLACE SPOKEN OF IN REV. 16: 16.

Sir:—This question has lately been raised. On Prophecy unfulfilled, or only in course of fulfilment, it becomes us to propound our opinions with diffidence; but assuredly this does not preclude the exercise of humble and devout inquiry. In this view, permit me to throw out for consideration the following hints:—

Commentators, writing before the present war, have, I believe, generally drawn their conclusions or explanation of the word from its first syllable. Ar, signifying a mountain, but this has thrown no real light upon the text. There is, however, another Hebrew word having the same sound, (Ar) though formed from a different letter. This Ar signifies a city; joining it to the word Mageddon, which in Hebrew signifies pre-eminent, or illustrious, we get Armageddon, the ILLUSTRIOUS CITY. Now Sebastopol is compounded of two Greek words, which together signify the same thing, the AUGUST or ILLUSTRIOUS CITY. This, as far as I know, is in substance, the discovery suggested by the present extraordinary siege. The co-incidence is at least curious, but the point admits of further elucidation. St. John wrote in Greek, and if he had not in the passage under consideration forsaken the Greek for the Hebrew, that passage would have run thus in our translation:—"And he gathered them together into a place called in the Greek tongue, SEBASTOPOL."

But this would have been too plain for prophecy, which employs enigmatical devices for the purpose of presenting truth, as it were looming in a mist, to the eye of faith, while it conceals the precise event fore-shadowed from certain knowledge until the proper period for its development. In this instance, the enigma consists in substituting the Hebrew word Armageddon, for the plain name of the place Sebastopol. It deserves remark that had St. John used the Greek word Sebastopol, this too might have equally hidden his meaning up to the time when the Russians gained fraudulent possession of the Crimea, but no longer. The Tartar name of the place was Aktiar. Dr. Clark in his travels, published in 1810, alluding to this change in the designation of the city says:—"We reached the great bay of Actiar, upon which place the Russians, in the time of Catherine the II, bestowed the fantastic name of Sebastopol." At that time, this new name was fantastic; but it may enhance our reverence for divine inspiration to reflect, that not only was it foreseen that the place of gathering should ages after be called in human pride, by a fantastic name, but that it should, in a short period, by the course of Providence, vindicate its title to be considered really illustrious. For, what can be better entitled to such a term, than that very place on which the eyes of the world are now fixed? The two greatest nations of Europe putting forth, and as yet vainly, their mightiest resources to take it. And the immense Empire of Russia, so obstinately and beyond all calculation, defending it. It is truly the illustrious city, the Sebastopol, the Armageddon, call it which we will.

Learned interpreters of prophecy, (Mr. Elliot for instance,) some years ago, brought down from totally independent considerations, our present chronological position to the outpouring of the sixth vial, under that vial the Battle of Armageddon takes place; so that we ought NOW to be LOOKING OUT for Armageddon; and if we ask, where it is? SEBASTOPOL, wonderfully answers the question. It is very remarkable that there is a VALLEY in the Crimea, in the neighborhood of Sebastopol, known by the name of the VALLEY OF JEHOSHAPHAT. The prophet Joel, speaking of the restoration of the Jews, an event which the Christian world now looks for as near, describes the GATHERING OF NATIONS TO THE VALLEY OF JEHOSHAPHAT. The whole passage (Joel 3d,) is worthy of deep consideration, and of close comparison with other scriptures. Your readers can refer to it; and some of them may be surprised to learn that Dr. Clark describes a colony of Karite Jews, in that part of the Crimea, about the valley of Jehoshaphat, as remarkable for their purity, integrity, and truth, connect this with the fact that the Lord is to vindicate his people the Jews, at the Valley of Jehoshaphat.

In Rev. 16 chap., the gathering to Armageddon, is to be by THREE unclean spirits like frogs, coming out of the mouth of the Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet. It would corroborate the identity of Sebastopol and Armageddon, if the present gathering round Sebastopol can be traced to the sort of instigation thus intimated. The Dragon is unquestionably, as explained in the Apocalypse, "that Old Serpent the Devil." Something characteristic of Satan we ought therefore to find in one of the chief actors in this contest. (Now this is the precise character of him who is now acknowledged by the whole world to be the chief actor in this contest. The Emperor of the French, NAPOLEON THE III, it was his cunning subtlety, that planned the war, and it is by his IRON WILL it is still carried on, and it is not a little remarkable that the ancient armorial bearings of the Franks or French were THREE FROGS. The armorial shield of Clovis, the first Christian King of France, contained three fleur de lis, and THREE FROGS) Although these three gatherers, correspond remarkably, with THREE of the chief actors in the drama, the gathering is not limited to them, but extends to the kings of the earth, which may easily be understood on the well known principle that a contest once begun, commonly implicates and draws in various other parties, besides those interested in the original cause of the quarrel. The plot thickens, and thus, England, though not directly instigated, yet, in some insidious way acted upon, has been early and deeply engaged. Her motives are in themselves high and honorable, but, nevertheless she is actually involved in a struggle which has sprung from the instigation of the Spirit of Evil.

That Austria, Prussia, and other German powers can stand much longer aloof, is highly improbable. Sardinia is already pledged. Attempts are assiduously made to enlist other nations, and ere long we may see the kings of the old Roman earth generally gathered to the battle of Aamageddon. The word gathered, seems to have its own significancy, as if the nations did not voluntarily rush into war, but were by mysterious influences, as though "with a hook in their nose, and a bridle in their lips," FORCED (doubtless, for the punishment of sin,) into the deadly strife. Russia did not wish for war, but sought only through diplomatic craft and intimidation, for aggrandizement. The policy of the Emperor of France was for various reasons, pacific, but he could not help being dragged in. England has been notoriously taunted, with her reluctance to engage. Turkey deprecated war above everything. Austria and Prussia have not yet come in. On all sides, every nerve was strained for peace, but the word was spoken, and gathered they must be to Armageddon.

It is the habit not only of men of the world and of the political press, but even of many serious Christians, to turn away from prophecy, as if it were given by Revelation not for any real use, but only to be regarded as unintelligible mystery. This habit conduces to the Divine purpose of causing prophecy to be fulfilled by unconscious nations, but it does not discharge the sincere believer from the duty of calm investigation. The Prophet Daniel says in speaking of these last scenes, "none of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand." Dan. 12: 10. Singly, each point to which I have adverted, may justly be thought inconclusive. The question is, what weight is due to the accumulation of the whole? I repeat, that I only throw out hints to aid us in feeling our way, but, whatever diffidence should in the present state of things accompany our consideration of the subject, it cannot be otherwise than profitable if, in thinking of the sixth vial we imbibe the lesson emphatically introduced amid the description of its woes:—"Behold, I come as a thief; Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."—"And he gathered them into a place called in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon."

I am, sir, your obd't servant,

In corroboration of the statement contained in the above letter, I extract the following from a work published in London last year, entitled, "Turkey, Russia, The Black Sea, and Circassia," by Capt. Spencer, Author of Travels in Europe, Turkey, &c.:—

"Sebastopol, like Odessa, was a miserable Tartar village little more than 60 years ago. About that time, a Frenchman who happened to be travelling in the Crimea, was struck with the natural advantages of a position which he at once saw, if properly fortified, might be made one of the first naval stations in the world. On his return to St. Petersburg, his observations to that effect happening to reach the ears of the Empress Catherine, engineers were despatched to the Crimea, whose report confirming that of the stranger, works were instantly commenced; but whether through intention or neglect, the name of the author of so valuable a suggestion, never transpired; and from that time, this famous stronghold of the Russians in the Black Sea has continued to increase in strength and importance.—The principle harbor, called the Roads, stretching inland to a length of four miles, is so capacious, and the anchorage so good, that the fleets of nations might ride in it, safe from every wind; and such is the great depth of water, that a man-of-war of the largest size can lie within a cable's length of the shore.

Besides this, there are five other small bays, branching off in various directions, equally commodious; and singular enough, the great harbor, together with the small bays, are all lined by a continuation of capes, strong and easily defended, as if formed by the hand of nature, especially for a naval station.

Perhaps there is no part of the Crimea so interesting for its antiquities, as the neighborhood of Sebastopol. The bay is that described by Strabo as the Ctenus; and the Tartars called the little town they inhabited here previous to the arrival of the Russians Atkiah, (ancient,) when Catherine II., gave it the pompous title of Sebastopol, i. e., (The Illustrious.")

SUDDEN RESTORATION TO SIGHT. A letter from James City Co., Va., says that Mrs. Martha Richardson, several years ago had a paralytic stroke, which caused the total blindness of the left eye. Last summer she was prostrated by lightning, and upon recovering, found her sight entirely restored. The occurrence suggests to the writer the probable efficiency of electricity in cases of blindness.

The Glorious Gift.

The gifts of God with lavish hand
Are poured upon us here,
Rich blessings, too, He kindly gives,
Our drooping hearts to cheer;
But there's a gift laid up in store,
It's for the good and meek,
Who strive their sins to overcome,
And for the blessing seek.

In the great resurrection morn,
To which we stand so near,
When all our sorrows shall be gone,
A glorious robe we'll wear;
Ah! never then, shall earthly shades
Their darkness round us fling,
To shroud in gloom our sacred joy,
While round His throne we sing.

Never, no never, then, shall we
In secret places weep
O'er blighted hopes, and cruel wrongs—
The dupes of foul deceit.
Oh, happy hour! Oh, precious boon!
We ever long for thee;
When shall we feel thy mighty power,
Oh IMMORTALITY?

Awful Ravages of the Fever in Virginia. A despatch received from Baltimore, yesterday, states that the steamer from Norfolk brings awful tidings. There were sixty-four deaths from fever in that city on Monday. The Herald gives the names of 85 who died on Sunday. The boat brought a large number of persons who had fled from the city, many of whom have sought a temporary shelter in the rotunda of the Exchange. A committee of citizens of Norfolk has gone to Washington to ask the President's permission to remove the remainder of the inhabitants to Fort Monroe. The fever is said to be abating at Portsmouth, the deaths averaging ten daily. On Saturday, in Norfolk, there were 50 deaths. Six doctors are sick with the fever. An order has been sent to New Orleans for twenty more nurses for Portsmouth.

The citizens of New Haven have contributed the sum of $1025 for the relief of the sick and destitute in the cities of Norfolk, Portsmouth and Gosport.

At Portsmouth the graves in the cemeteries are so hastily and imperfectly dug, that when the coffin is placed in, the top is sometimes within a foot of the surface of the ground. Several highly respectable citizens have been interred in this careless manner. The evil is said to be owing to the great number of deaths—the short time allowed for digging graves—and the scant force employed for that purpose. High prices are offered for the services of grave diggers, and nurses are wanted at $10 per day.

Some Curious Facts. The undertakers have so many of their workmen down with the fever, and such a great demand for coffins, that they were most reluctantly compelled to turn off orders, and females are seen, going about asking, in God's name, where a coffin was to be obtained. Up to this time six physicians have been carried off by the pestilence.

On Sunday morning, the fly known as the "plague fly," appeared in Norfolk. It is a flat insect, with black back and red belly, and has very large wings. In Portsmouth they were so thick in the streets as to annoy persons walking, and induced them to place a covering over their faces. The appearance of this fly is generally considered a good omen, as it is supposed to devour the malaria.

The City Council of Norfolk have appointed a committee to superintend the digging of trenches at "Potter's Field," in which to bury the dead, as the mortality is becoming too great to admit of burying them in the usual manner.

The Mayor of Norfolk has issued an order for the impressing of all vehicles for the use of physicians. Several stables have been made use of in accordance with the proclamation.

We learn that the epidemic has extended to animals, and dogs and cats are found lying about dead, with unmistakable evidences of the "plague," such as bleeding from the nose and mouth, &c.

From California. An Indian war was raging in Northern California and Southern Oregon.

Seventy-five Americans had been murdered on the Klamath. Thirteen Indians had been caught and hung.

The Indians had also attacked the miners on the Upper Sacramento. Seven Americans were wounded and fifty Indians killed.

At Ranchora, a party of Mexican robbers attacked the settlers, killing eight men and one woman, including a Mr French, robbing the latter of $7000. The woman's name was Diamond. The robbers were pursued by a party under Sheriff Phoenix. A fight ensued, in which the sheriff and three of the robbers were killed.—Nine of the outlaws were afterwards hung by Lynch law.

At Ringold, El Dorado county, Jeremiah V. Crane shot a Miss Newman who had refused to marry him. She was still living, but in a critical state.

Two smart shocks of an earthquake were felt at Santa Barbara on the 1st of August.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE ATLANTIC.

THE WAR. The Bombardment of Sweaborg. Dantzic, Aug. 17. Before entering into the details of the bombardment of Sweaborg it may be advisable to give your readers a brief description of the place itself, in order to render the following explanations fully intelligible. Sweaborg, according to recent authorities, is a very important Russian fortress, in the Gulf of Finland, three miles south-east of Helsingfors.

The fortifications extend over six islands, or rather rocks, called Lango, Lilla Savarto, West Savarto, East Savarto, Targo, and Gustafsvard; the last five are connected by bridges, and occupy a space of about 1,200 by 650 yards. Vargo is the capital, the strongest fortress, and also the central one. The works are of granite, and as massive as the foundations on which they stand, being, for the most part, constructions out of the solid rock. Sweaborg is said to mount 810 cannon; has casements for from 6,000 to 7,000 small arms, and barracks for a garrison of 12,000 men. On the 7th of August at 7.30 A. M. signal was made from the flag-ship, "Outward and lee ward most ships weigh."

The fleet, consisting of nine British line-of-battle ships, thirteen steam frigates and sloops, sixteen mortar vessels, and an equal number of gun-boats, sailed from Nargen, and, after a pleasant run of five hours, anchored at a distance of about 5000 yards from the fortress of Sweaborg. In the course of the same evening, the French joined, and immediately commenced throwing up a mortar battery on the island of Lango, situate some 2000 yards to the north of the cluster of five islands which form the principal part of the fortress of Sweaborg. During the 8th both fleets were busily employed preparing for action, the mortar vessels were towed into position, about 3700 yards from the fortress, with 400 fathoms each of cable to "haul and vere on," as circumstances might require. This arrangement proved of the greatest advantage. The line-of-battle ships remained in the same order they had first anchored in.

The steamers Magicienne, Vulture, and Euryalus, took up a position in rear of the mortar vessels, for the purpose of being ready to give them and the gunboats any assistance they might require. The Lightning and Locust were ordered to hold themselves in readiness to tow out any gun or mortar vessels that might be injured, or otherwise rendered incapable of remaining any longer under fire; in fact, every possible arrangement having been made, which prudence and foresight could suggest, the signal from the flagship at 7.15 on the morning of the 9th, "Gun and mortar vessels open fire with shell." At 7.30 a. m. the first mortar was fired and taken up along the whole line, the gunboats running into within 3000 yards, and getting their range.

The enemy returned our fire very briskly with red-hot shot and shell, but, although their range was good, the damage inflicted was comparatively trifling, owing, principally, to the excellent handling of the gunboats and mortar vessels, the former being continually on the move, and the latter hauling or veering on their 400 fathom cable, as soon as they found the Russian shot falling too close to be pleasant. At 10.20 the first Russian magazine exploded, and a fire broke out in the arsenal. About noon a second magazine exploded; and 12.15 a most terrific explosion took place, followed by a succession of minor ones. The force of this was so immense that a battery of guns en barbette was literally blown to pieces by it. At 12.40 more magazines exploded; at this time the dockyards, arsenals, barracks, all the government buildings, storehouses, &c., were burning furiously. The sight was most grandly imposing.

The yards and poops of the line-of-battle ships were crowded with the excited "tars," who cheered vociferously after every explosion, as only British sailors know how to cheer. To add to this frightful din, the liners Cornwallis and Hastings, and steam frigate Amphion, opened their broadsides at the same moment; and, as if to crown the whole, the Arrogant, Cossack and Cruiser, chimed in with this bloody chorus, by commencing a heavy fire, with good effect, on a large body of troops which they chanced to espy on a small island to the eastward of the fortress.

The cannonade continued, with little abatement, up to eight o'clock, p. m., when the gunboat recall was hoisted. Several of the mortar vessels were also found to be injured from the quick and incessant firing, and had to be brought out to undergo repairs; those, however, which were not damaged, still kept up their fire, in conjunction with the French mortar battery, until 10.30 p. m., at which hour the rocket boats from the fleet went in and kept up their part of the performance until daylight. The scene during the night was grand beyond description; the whole of Sweaborg appeared one mass of flame, the rockets and shells adding not not a little to the awful splendor of the fiery landscape.

At 5.30 A. M. on the 10th the fire again opened from our whole line, and continued throughout the day, at the end of which little appeared left to be done; all the mortars, French and English, were more or less injured. Some idea, however, of the service rendered by these vessels may be gathered from the fact that during the two days' bombardment not less than 1000 tons of iron were thrown into a space of about half a mile in diameter, and that upwards of 100 tons of powder were expended. This, incredible as it may appear, applies only to the English mortar vessels, and does not include the quantity (which was equally large in proportion), used by our gallant allies on that occasion.

On Friday night, the 10th instant, the rocket boats again went in and played with great effect. On Saturday no firing took place, and Sunday was a day of rest. On that day everything was in quiet and repose; even the mighty deep bowed in reverence to a holy influence, and was still. The tolling of the bells at Helsingfors was distinctly to be heard; the dull and plaintive sounds, mingled with the strains of martial music from our men of war, came floating over the calm waters, and offered a strange, but soothing contrast to the noise, turmoil, and excitement of the two preceding days. On Monday morning, the 13th inst., the two fleets got under way, and returned the same day to Nargen.—[Times Correspondent.

Operations against Berdiansk. A despatch from Sir E. Lyons contains the report of Capt. Osborne, of H. M. S. Vesuvius, dated July 25, giving an account of his bombardment of Berdiansk. This is an important and flourishing town at the mouth of the river Berda, on the north shore of the Sea of Azof. It is a modern town, and has grown up in the course of ten years to have a population of 10,000. It is the best roadstead in the Sea of Azof. Capt. Osborne's report is as follows:

"Since my last letter I have fully succeeded in destroying, by means of submarine explosions, the Russian steamers which long ago were sunk in Berdiansk bay; and the gallant officer adds that as the enemy had left the houses of the Western suburbs of Berdiansk, both of which had twice fired upon our people whilst peaceably and unguardedly employed, I considered it right that such a dishonorable course from a town which had been spared under the plea of being defenceless should be severely punished and the more so, as Berdiansk had been treated with leniency on the occasion of our former visit.

I therefore, on the 22d of July, caused to be destroyed the western suburb, which had screened their riflemen; and I succeeded in destroying and setting fire to no less than ten granaries filled with wheat, each granary averaging about 200 tons in quantity; and also several flour mills which have been employed night and day grinding for the use of the Russians.

The Church and the major part of the town I spared, although nearly every house we searched contained grain in large quantities, and the whole place might be considered as little less than a general granary."

The Interior of Sebastopol. A letter from Odessa, dated the 6th instant, and published in the Ost Deutsche Post of Vienna, says: "Accounts from Sebastopol state that the bridge established across the harbor was inaugurated on the 2d, in the presence of Generals Gortschakoff and Osten Sacken, and all the military authorities. It is expected that the construction of this bridge will afford considerable facilities in the defensive operations of the garrison. It is defended at either end by the powerful batteries of Nicholaieff and Michaloff, which not only protect each other, but can bring their guns to bear also on the Careening Bay and the Karabelnaia. Thirty-five thousand men are constantly employed on the fortifications of this important point, which would be the centre of operations in the event of its being found necessary to abandon the Karabelnaia to the allies. General Todleben has completely recovered from his wounds."

A Floating Factory for the Army. Messrs. W. and T. Smith of Newcastle, are fitting up, and will have ready for sea next week, a powerful iron screw steamer, named the Chasseur, to be employed as a floating factory for the army.—She will leave the Tyne for Balaklava, which will be her station. She is two-decked, and her middle deck is a workshop furnished with drilling machines, punching and shearing machines, and shaping and slotting machines. She has also several smiths' forges fitted up, a cupola with fan blasts for metal and brass founding, and two circular saw benches, and has also on board a complete set of mining tools and apparatus for sinking wells. Besides the marine engine, which will drive part of the machinery, she has a 10-horse portable engine. The artisans she takes out with her are engine fitters, shoemakers, coopers, brass finishers, blacksmiths, house-carpenters, and iron and brass founders. A party of miners she takes out will be employed, when necessary, in sinking wells for the army.

The Morning Post says, we have more than ever occasion to believe that the Russian forces in the Crimea are suffering intensely from want of food and necessary supplies; and that this, combined with other causes, assures their speedy expulsion from Sebastopol and the south of the Crimea.

The Invalide Russe reports the proceedings of the allied vessels in the Black Sea. They are said to be employed in cannonading and destroying vessels.

Spain. The sale by public auction of the national property commenced at the Town Hall of Madrid on the 10th. It was attended by a great number of persons, and the competition was so keen that several lots were knocked down for double the upset price. A letter of the 11th, received in advance of the regular mail, says:—"Energetic measures are being taken for seizing the property of the clergy, in spite of the passive resistance of the bishops and other ecclesiastical authorities.

Turkey. Colonel Calandrelli, who distinguished himself in the defence of Rome against the French, was fortifying Erzeroum.

Kars, which was more closely blockaded by the Russian army, required a prompt succour. The Russians, who had crossed the Soghanli mountains, had occupied the valley of Chintchai. The Turks were prepared to make a stout defence at Kars; but regular troops were wanting. The European consuls were preparing to leave Erzeroum. Ten thousand French were assembled in the camp at Maslak, and it was expected that altogether 50,000 French troops would be collected, partly at Maslak and partly at the Sweet Waters, while 16 squadrons of French cavalry would occupy the barracks at Daoud Pacha.

Advices from Trebizond, of the 7th of August, state that the postal communications between Kars and Erzeroum are interrupted. The Russians had advanced as far as Kiuprikoi, on the road to Erzeroum. Ten thousand Bashi-bazouks had arrived to Erzeroum.

Omar Pacha goes to the Crimea, it is said, to select the best troops for an expedition to relieve Kars.

Russia. A letter from St. Petersburg, dated the 26th ult. and published in the Constitutionel, says—"Prince Gortschakoff has received full powers to destroy the remains of the Russian fleet in the bay of Sebastopol, on the day on which the garrison may be forced to retire to the north. It is hoped that before that day shall arrive, all objects belonging to the State and to private persons can be removed to Nicolaieff. This proves that no illusions are entertained as to the fate of the southern part of Sebastopol; that part is indeed already represented in Russian letters to be only a heap of ruins."

An imperial ukase orders the embodiment of the militia in eleven provinces, commencing on the 1st October, and finishing on the 1st November, and in the proportion of 23 to a thousand souls.

Odessa. Letters from Odessa bring news extending up to the 7th of August. Large detachments of troops had been marched from the north to Ismail, in consequence of intelligence which Prince Gortschakoff is said to have received respecting an intention on the part of the allies to land 50,000 men in the neighborhood of that fortress, who, by marching along the coast, under the protection of the fleet, would be enabled to cut off the communication of the Crimea with the main land. In order to avoid this eventuality all disposable troops will be sent to Bessarabia.

Miscellaneous. The Milan Gazette announces, under date of Rome, the 9th, that the elevation of M. Lucien Bonaparte, son of Prince de Canino, to the dignity of Cardinal, at the next Consistory in September, was very probable. His eldest brother, Joseph, had returned from Paris to Rome.

Accounts from Alexandria state that the waters of the Nile have risen two fathoms higher this year than last, and this is considered an augury of an abundant harvest.

Cholera continues to spread in the Lombardo-Venetian provinces.

Following the example of the Neapolitan government, the government of Rome has introduced the bastinado into the penal code.

After three months incessant labor, the Russians have replaced the great bell in the tower of San Juan, on the Kremlin, which our readers perhaps recollect, on being tolled for the late czar, fell and broke through no less than three seperate stories of vaults, killing five persons on the spot. The bell is said to be the largest in the world, weighing no less than 80,000 pounds.

Visit of the Queen of England to France. Extraordinary festivities marked the visit of her Majesty to France.

50,000 French troops were encamped on the heights of Boulogne, and the Emperor Napoleon had come on the previous evening to give a personal reception to the Queen. On landing, the royal party were loudly cheered.

Magnificent preparations had been made for the reception of the Queen in Paris, nearly every house being decorated. Along the route, about 100,000 men, half of the regular army and half of the national guards, lined the way, and the concourse of people assembled is estimated at 800,000. The sun had set and it was nearly dark before the royal party made their appearance; when her Majesty was greeted enthusiastically and bowed her acknowledgments to the multitude.

At a quarter to nine the cortege arrived at St Cloud, announced by salvos of artillery. Her Majesty the Empress stood at the foot of the staircase, to receive the Queen, and after dinner their Majesties retired to rest. That evening St. Cloud, Boulogne, as also the whole of Paris, were splendidly illuminated.

Letter from Syria.

MOUNT LEBANON, July 23, 1855.

The Druses are a peculiar people, warlike and bold in their spirit, and in religion neither Mahommedans nor Christians, though assimilated to the latter more than the former. Of late years they have shown a growing favor to American missionaries, whom they invite to establish Christian schools in their villages, and even desire the missionaries to locate one of their number in Deirnel Kamar, their capital town. Still, they are hot tempered, impulsive, impatient of insult and injury, whether real or imagined, and quick to avenge it. Some weeks since, a terrible illustration of this spirit was given in a village about twenty miles south of Beirut, where an individual indulged his malice towards another by burning one of his olive trees. At once the friends of the respective parties flew to arms, or rather flew themselves, since their iron arms seem as inseparable from their backs as their fleshy; and in the melee following not less than eighteen men on both sides were laid corpses on the ground. Then they made peace, shook hands, and were friends again. This is a sad picture of savage and half-civilized life; but after all, in what respect is war any better, when waged on the most stupendous scale by fleets and armies, and conducted by the most civilized and Christian nations of the earth? How differs the morality of Sebastopol from that of the Druses fighting around the burnt olive?

Being in Smyrna a few days the last winter, a missionary living in the Jewish quarter of the city, which is quite in the outskirts, and in the line of communication with the mountains, asked me to look down from the balcony of his house, where we were seated, into the narrow street below, where I saw half a dozen men well armed, and clothed in embroidered red dresses, with silver ornaments around their ancles, and in single file following their leader. The missionary then remarked they were a notorious band of mountain robbers, which the government had not the force or courage to arrest. They do not murder, however, so much as plunder, though they can give a hand to either, as circumstances may require.

The bandits frequent the city, and learn what citizens are wealthy, and where they go and come, either for business or pleasure; and watching their movements, seize upon them when they are unsuspecting and without guards, and drag them off to the mountains. Having the power of life and death over their victims, they send information to their families of the present condition of their friends, and on what conditions they can see them again; and being known to be utterly desperate and inhuman, they alarm the fears of wretched wives and children the prisoners have left behind, to whom they are obliged by their savage masters to write letters entreating them not to refuse the messengers as they value the prisoners' lives, nor follow them, but give them the sums which their captors compel them to name.—Correspondence of the Traveller.

EUROPEAN RUMORS. New York, Sept. 8.—The Tribune says that Madame Bodisco, the widow of the late Minister to Washington from Russia, who arrived here in the Atlantic, is direct from St. Petersburgh. She says the extent of the damage done by the Allies at Sweaborgh was the burning of a large pile of steamboat wood.

The Times has news from a private source to the effect that Russia having failed to obtain a loan in Europe, she has it in contemplation to raise one in the United States, on a plan similar to the recent loans in France. This rumor, it is said, had reached the English and French Governments.

On the other hand, the Times learns from an American lady direct from St. Petersburgh (Mrs. Bodisco) that there was no financial or commercial crisis in Russia; that money is abundant, and business as brisk as ever; no fears were entertained of the capture of Sebastopol. A large reserve force was awaiting orders at St Petersburgh, and there was no difficulty in obtaining recruits or supplies of provisions and money.

Appointments.

By divine permission, I will preach at Richmond, Me., Sept. 13, eve.; where Br. Umberhind may appoint.
Bowdoinham, Sept. 14, eve.

CAMP MEETING.

The Lord willing, there will be a Camp Meeting in Carmel, Me., near Carmel village, to commence on the 18th day of Sept., in the evening, and continue over the Sabbath.

We request the Brn. to make arrangements to be on the ground early on the 18th, in order to erect tents for the accommodation of the Brn. and others who may attend.

As there will be no boarding tent on the camp ground, we especially request all to bring what bedding, tents and provisions they can conveniently. Provision will be made in the tents for the Brn. who may come from a distance. There will be teams at the Depot to convey all who may need such help, to the ground.

We earnestly invite all who differ from us in faith, to attend and give us a candid hearing.

We desire all to come, as we entertain no sectarian opinions; and we hope our ministering Brn. from the west will not neglect to attend, should an opportunity offer. We desire that whatsoever we may do or say may be for the glory of God and the salvation of mankind. "Come over and help us" in the name of the Lord. Amen.

GROVE MEETING, IN SOUTH HAWLEY.

There will be a Grove Meeting in South Hawley in a beautiful grove, (directly opposite the tavern of Levi Holden,) to commence Thursday, Sept. 20th, and continue over the Sabbath. Should the weather be unfavorable for meeting in the grove, a large and convenient Hall will be furnished free of expense. Brn coming from a distance, can find board, lodging and horse-keeping at much reduced prices at the tavern, and a free table spread for the worthy poor.

Brn. R. V. Lyon and Wm. Sheldon are expected to attend the meeting; and other preaching Brn. are invited to attend, as the Lord may direct, who can preach to us the Gospel as preached by Abraham—and the kingdom as preached by Prophets, Apostles, and Jesus; and the things noted in the Scriptures of truth relative to these subjects.

C. M. RICE, for the Brn.

WEST HAWLEY, Aug. 23, 1855.

NOTICE.

There will be, if the Lord permit, a Grove Meeting held at Casco, Me., to commence Friday, Sept. 14th, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

For the Brn. JESSE PARTRIDGE.

Brn. R. R. York, L. L. Howard, and J. Partridge will be present.

N. B. It is the request of the friends at Casco, that Br. F. H. Berick, or J. Couch would be present.

VERNON, Aug. 12, 1855.

Providence permitting, there will be a Camp Meeting in Vernon, Vt., on the old ground, to commence on Monday, Sept. 17, and continue over the Sabbath. Brn and Srs. from the East and West, North and South, prepare for this gathering, and let your prayers be continually ascending to our heavenly Father for the prosperity of this meeting, that every thing may be conducted with an eye to His glory.

There will be a boarding tent on the ground, and horse keeping near by.

In behalf of the church, J. FROST.

For The Crisis.

Ruth.

Famine was in the land,
Where once smiled peace and plenty graciously,
Now hunger, want, and woe, starvation, death,
With dreadful surety in each other's track
Keep pace, and onward move. Morning, noon, night
Their blessings bring, of light, and warmth, and dew,
But bring no bread to cheer the hearts of men.
Israel, the chosen, and the promised heir
To blessed lands where milk and honey flow,
Is groaning 'neath the chastisements of God.

And now Elimelech his home deserts,
And goes to sojourn with his wife and sons
On Moab's fertile plains; to seek a home
Mid strangers, and with aliens from the love
Of Him who rules the hosts of Israel.
Their cherished Ephrata is left behind—
Cursed, yet loved—God-smitten, yet adored.
But Moab, soon, too soon, alas! becomes
The burying place of all the joys which round
Naomi's heart entwined. Elimelech,
And both her sons, partner and pledges sweet
Of all her care and love—sleep in their graves!
Oh who shall heal that torn and bleeding heart,
Throbbing with grief and pain?

Orpah and Ruth,
The chosen of her cherished ones, remain,
With filial love and sympathy to cheer
The widowed mourner to whose sorrows keen
Their stricken hearts respond so faithfully.
But God once more remembers Israel,
Blessing the land with bread, abundantly;
Naomi hears the joyful tidings, and
With eager haste prepares to trace once more
The way so sadly travelled years before,
When from the land she now would see again,
Starvation led her forth with both her sons,
And him on whose strong arm for strength she leaned.
But now, alas! widowed and childless, she Returns alone! And yet, not all alone—
For Ruth and Orpah to their mother cling
Obediently, and plead to cheer her way
Across the plains, e'en to Judea's hills,
And find with her a peaceful, hallowed home
Among the chosen of the Lord of lords;
But list—the mother speaks. "Go! each return
Her father's house to share. Gently may God
In future deal with you, as ye with me
And with the dead have dealt." But they reply—
"Surely, our mother, we will go with thee,
Nor tarry here, while thou, alone, thy way
In weariness and grief shall trace."

Again,
With earnestness, Naomi seeks to change
Their course. And while the weeping Orpah turns
Away—and gazes on the verdant vales
And silver streams of her own native land,
They lure her back again, and she departs.
But Ruth—fond, loving, sacrificing Ruth,
Her station keeps, and to Naomi's side
More closely clings. "Entreat me not to leave
Thee, O my mother! for, where'er thou goest,
I, too, will go; and where thou lodgest, lodge;
Thy people shall be my people; thy God
My God; and where thou diest, I will die,
And there will I be buried."

Sacred love!
How sweetly didst thou rule in that pure heart,
Distilling comfort for that mother's woe,
E'en when that heart itself was well nigh broke!
O sacred Love! thy springs still flow, to bless
The sad and sorrowing ones of earth's domain,
Who, in thy gushing fulness often find
An earnest of that living stream which flows
From out the Eternal Throne, as crystal, clear!
The love of Ruth has won the mother's heart,
And lovingly discoursing by the way,
They come to Ephrata.

An April sun
Its ripening influence sheds on golden fields
Of waving grain for harvest waiting. Forth
The reapers pass, to gather in the fruits
Of patient industry and cheerful toil.
"Is this Naomi, whom we greet?" they ask,
"O call me not Naomi," she replies,
"But Mara, since the Lord so bitterly
Hath dealt with me, and I return alone
With Ruth, the wife of my dead Chilion.
Then cease to call me more, Naomi, friends,
As God hath laid His hand so heavily
On me, and changed my joys to bitterness?"

And now among the reapers in the field
Pure-hearted Ruth gleaneth the scatt'ring sheaves;
Love animates her fragile form, and aids
To daily bear the precious burthen home.
At morn, or eve, the faithful gleaner goes
From home, from toil, alike with cheerful setp.
Not unrewarded shalt thou go, sweet Ruth!
For God hath chosen thee, and thou shalt dwell
Among the noble of the land. Thy name
Shall last, as each successive age, the tale
Of thine unwavering love and faithfulness
Shall tell.

And in thy "line" that Blessed One
From heaven shall come, to save the lost among
The people of thy choice, e'en Mary's Son;
The long expected heir to David's throne,
Whose Kingdom is eternal, and whose reign
Of peace, on earth ere long begins. Behold!
Then shall thy recompence, eternal joy
And immortality, be given!

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. D. C. Hart.

Williamansett, Mass., July 31, 1855.

To the flock of God, scattered abroad: I can say that I am living in the midst of trials and persecutions. The Scriptures [illegible] that "all who will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution."—But what glorious promises are in reserve for the poor, despised pilgrims! We shall not always suffer thus. Our blessed Master will soon appear in the clouds of heaven; then will he reward every man according to the deeds done in the body, whether they be good, or whether they be evil.

It does my heart good to know we are almost home. Let us, Brs. and Srs., be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless. Let us trust in the word of the Lord. He says, "whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, ye shall receive." And let us not draw back unto perdition, as many have; but let us run with patience the race set before us, and not look back; remembering Lot's wife; and soon, if faithful, we shall "shout our suffering o'er."

From your Br. in affliction,
D. C. Hart.

"The Three Worlds; Or, Earth's Past, Present, and Future."

This is the title of a Tract from the pen of Br. H. L. Hastings, so interesting and instructive, that for the benefit of our Readers we transfer it to the columns of the Crisis.

The past, the present, and the future.—These are the three all-embracing divisions of events and things, through which human imagination and human research pursue their course. The past—dim, shadowy, and obscure; the present—restless, changeful, and inconstant; and the future—vast, portentous, and uncertain; these furnish a field for the widest wanderings of those thoughts that roam throughout eternity—for the farthest stretch of human imaginations.

But whether we inquire concerning the past, the present, or the future, we find ourselves surrounded by numberless perplexities. History is brief in its extent, meagre in its details, and often contradictory in its declarations. Opinion, as it regards the present condition of earthly affairs, is vague, various, and conflicting. And the veil of futurity hangs its gloomy folds over the obscure, the mysterious, the unknown hereafter.

Surrounded then, as we are, by uncertainty and anxiety, longing for a more definite apprehension of human history and of human destiny, we invoke external aids to assist us in pursuing the object of our desires. Navigating this stormy and tempestuous sea, we desire a chart to inform us of our locality, and look forth for some guiding star to direct our course. Groping in a dark and devious pathway, we seek anxiously for some lamp which shall illuminate our footsteps, and conduct us to a peaceful termination of our weary journey.

That chart is granted us! That star we can see! That lamp is placed within our hand! It is the Word of God—the transcript of the divine will and mind—the certified and attested copy of the things "noted in" those awful "Scriptures of Truth" which mortal eye has never gazed upon, and upon which the hand of mortal was never laid. By this, alone, we thread the mazes of the intricate past.—By this we correctly estimate the inconstant present. By this, too, we behold as through a glass the dim and shadowy future, revealed in bold and striking outline, thrilling us by its terror, cheering us by its beauty, or entrancing us with its sublime and resplendent majesty.

The Word of God, in its historical records, its declarations, and its prophetic delineations, brings to our view three worlds, with which human destiny has been, is, and is to be connected. These worlds, existing in successive and consecutive chronological periods, distinctly separated from each other by unmistakable periods and processes of transition, are termed "The World that then was," "The Heavens and Earth that now are," and "The World to come," or "The new Heavens and the new Earth." To sketch briefly, these worlds in their origin, progress and course, is the object of the present writing.

What occurred prior to "the beginning," an account of which we find in the opening pages of Divine revelation, it is neither important or possible for us to ascertain. Beyond that landmark, eternity expands its vast extent. There we may conjecture, but we cannot affirm. The silent depths of the eternal Past are unfathomed and unfathomable.

"In the beginning, God created the heavens and earth." This is the sublime announcement of the world's origin.—"He spake, and it was DONE. He commanded and it stood fast." At His word a flood of light burst in upon the heaving mass, that lay formless and unfurnished beneath the overshadowing wings of night. His mandate gathered the waters together, shut up the sea with doors, made the cloud the garment thereof, and the darkness its swaddling band. He established His decree upon it, saying, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther; and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." His word established the earth in strength, and robed it in verdure and beauty, while trees of God's own planting stood, in all the magnificence of Paradise, on every hand.—Above, the stars and planets were marshalled at his call; by day, a flood of glory, and by night, a still, calm radiance fell softly on the new made world. At His voice, earth teemed with life. The noble forests and the verdant fields were peopled with hosts of living ones. Gay birds, of beauteous wing and melodious note, were waving their sun-lit pinions and trilling their gushing songs; and the blue and silent waters of the mighty deep were swarming with ten thousand things of life and joy, from the mighty leviathan to the smallest creature that played and gamboled amid the ripplings of the sparkling waters.

And when the mighty work was accomplished, and a new province, created for the glory of God's name, was added to His vast dominion—when the seal of perfection was set upon it all, then God created its ruler and lord. Moulded of clay, formed in the image of God, enlivened by the breath of the Almighty, and receiving at His hands the sceptre of universal dominion, he became the ruler over all the world. The gay phantom of universal dominion so often pursued by mad ambition, was here a sober reality. To Adam were committed the reins of government. Earth was his dominion, and all its multitudinous inhabitants were his peaceful and rejoicing subjects.

"And the Lord God saw EVERY THING that was made, and, behold, it was VERY GOOD." Our ideas of good are relative, not absolute. To the savage, his hut is good; it affords him shelter from the storm. To the peasant, his cottage is good; it is his joy-lit home. To the hunted Christian, the cave is good; it is a hiding place from foes. To the warrior, his castle is good; it is a tower of strength. To the king, a palace is good; it is the repository of regal magnificence. To the Hebrew, the temple was good; for a day in its courts was better than a thousand. But what must that be, when the infinite God, dwelling in the heavenly abodes of light and glory, could look with approval upon it, and pronounce it "very good."

How pure such a world must be—how holy, how full of peace and love; how sweet the rich beauty of its landscapes, and how perfect the character of all its inhabitants, ere God, beholding all, could pronounce it "very good." It was very good. The earth was good, as it expanded in firmness and beauty—the abode of the creatures of God. The sea was good as it glittered in the sunbeams, or rippled like a flood of molten gold beneath the breathing of the evening zephyr and the shining of the setting sun. The sun was good, as it declared the glory of the Lord, and went forth in its diurnal splendor to illuminate the world. The moon was good, as it walked in its brightness, mellowing all around with its silver light, and shedding a softened glory through the starlit heavens. The animate creation were good, as they dwelt in peaceful companionship, yielding obedience to their common Lord. Adam was good, as he stood erect in all the majesty of manhood imaging forth in his noble countenance the glory of his Creator. Every thing was good, and at the conclusion of Creation's week, God's Sabbath—earth's first day of solemn rest—sat like a crown of light upon the wondrous week, hallowing, calming, and sanctifying all around.

Thus was earth created, and, as if this was not enough to reveal the fulness of Divine beneficence, away in the eastward, amid the spice-laden trees and flowery fields of Eden, beneath the first beams of the rising sun, God planted a beauteous garden.

We have heard of the royal gardens of antiquity; we have seen the gardens of the rich, where wealth, and art, and taste, and pride united to lavish all their beauties on some little spot of earth. But what are these gardens with their stately trees, with their gorgeous flowers, with their sparkling waters and their verdant banks, compared with that beauteous work of God? On that virgin soil grew "every tree that was pleasant to the sight, and good for food." How stately were the palms of Paradise! How beauteous the orange-laded groves! How rich the pending fruits! How gay and glorious the flowers! How sweet the floating fragrance of the sighing zephyr! How soft the murmur of the passing breeze!—How brilliant the gushing music of the fair-winged birds! How fair the Tree of Life, with its monthly fruits and its healing leaves! How bright the waters of that crystal river, that spread perpetual beauty on its verdant banks, and rolled its divided waters to the far off regions of Havilah, Ethiopia, and Assyria! Ah! those were happy days, when this garden stood like a gem of unfading beauty upon the peaceful bosom of the world that then was.

We have tried to imagine some of the glories of that world. Shall we dwell upon its ruin? Shall we speak of the entrance of sin; of the consequent guilt, and shame, and condemnation; of the sorrow and remorse of those erring ones who go forth in tears from that fair abode; of the dazzling glare of the flaming sword, and of the majestic glory of the guardian cherubim? Shall we mark the disorder that reigned from that fatal hour when Jehovah said, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake?" The fields of Paradise a tangled mass of thorns and thistles—the flowers fading, the leaves drooping, the beauty fleeting, the strength decaying; the beasts howling, and roaming far and near in their thirst for blood; the winds wailing and moaning amid the upturned trees: dark masses of clouds rolling angrily about the sky, and all nature giving signs of commotion and unrest. Shall we follow man through his life of toil, and misery, and anguish, and woe, and guilt, and sin, and fear, and trembling, and infirmity, and sickness, and old age, until finally he sinks into the darkness of a dishonored grave? Alas! the picture is too dreary for our lengthened contemplation, and we cannot forbear a sigh as we behold the fair image of God reduced by sin and death to corruption and to dust. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all."

The subsequent history of "the world that then was" is brief, but sad in the extreme. The first-born of earth was a murderer, and the second was a martyr. Generation succeeded generation, and degeneracy and sin marked the protracted periods of their misspent lives. A few holy men stood forth as lights shining in a dark place, holding forth the truth of God; but they were like the oasis in the desert, the island in the sea, or the faint glimmering of a single star amid the blackening rage of the midnight tempest. Of one of these, it is recorded that he walked with God for many years, and after predicting the Advent of the Lord, with ten thousand of His holy ones, he passed gently away from earth, unharmed and unhindered by the hand of Death, and the simple record of his departure was, "God took him." But the common character and the common lot of mankind were widely different. The prevailing tendency of human character and of human purpose from the beginning, was from good to bad, and from bad to worse.—There were men of might, and honor, and renown, before whom men crouched in terror, or bowed in suppliance, but the penetrating glance of the all-seeing One beheld "that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and every imagination of his heart was only evil every day."—The earth was corrupt—all flesh had corrupted its way, and the earth was filled with violence. This was the result of man's revolt—this the return for the divine indulgence which had lengthened out his hour of probation. Throughout the world sin had spread like some loathsome pestilence, and scarcely an individual had escaped its polluting power.

Amid this world-wide transgression, one person was "found righteous"—one man was "just and perfect in all his ways"—one man walked with God, and notwithstanding the surrounding impiety, found grace in the eyes of the Lord. He alone was found worthy to escape the things that were coming on the earth. He was selected as the only proper medium for the communication of the Divine will and the Divine warnings to mankind. In his ear the mysterious whisperings of the Eternal Spirit could find audience. His obedient heart would heed them and obey them.—Accordingly he was warned of approaching danger. His eye, anointed by the Holy Ghost, foresaw the aproaching deluge; and moved with fear, he not only warned others and preached faithfully to the world, but he prepared an Ark for the saving of himself and house. Thus he he condemned the world. Thus he was justified before God, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

But the same spirit of disobedience which invoked the righteous indignation of God upon that race, closed their ears against the warnings of the Almighty, and sealed their eyes to the denunciations of approaching and impending danger.—Hence the hours that might, well filled with penitence, have averted the dread calamity, were employed in filling up the cup of sins to its brim, and in heaping up iniquity before Jehovah, thus treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God.

Swiftly the appointed day sped on.—Men pursued their ceaseless round of business, sin and pleasure, forgetting that they were wearing out the last brief moments of divine forbearance and of human probation, and thus braving the vengeance of the Almighty.

Let us sit down within the Ark. The family of Noah are there, and the animate creation have their representatives. The door is closed by an invisible hand, and now we wait the departure of the last hours of human probation and impiety.—How solemn that last week! The dying hour of a single sinner, or the execution of one criminal, is enough to chill the stoutest heart. But what emotions swell within us as we mark the solemn march of probation's departing hours, and await the execution of a guilty world! How dread the suspense! how breathless the anxiety!

The world goes on as usual. The farmer is in his field, the merchant in his shop, the drunkard at his cups, the reveler at his revelry, and the sinner at his sin. Violence and strife and iniquity roll on in resistless current, the world is given up to destruction, and yet fears no danger. What a scene! to-night a world's feast, to-morrow a world's funeral! To-night a world's revel, to-morrow a world's ruin! To-night a world's exultation, to-morrow a world's execution! To-night a world's debauch, to morrow a world's destruction!

The last day dawns. The laborer goes to his toil, the tradesman pursues his calling, the murderer marks his victim, the robber watches for the unwary, the harlot gads about in gay attire, the drunkard cracks his maudlin joke about Noah's Ark, little children join in mockery of the man of God, men shake their heads and say, We are safe enough, and Noah will feel different to-morrow. But hark! The swelling echoes of the distant thunder.—See! swift as the eagle's flight, vast inky clouds roll up the sky. Earth rocks like a storm-tossed vessel beneath the blackened heavens, and on every hand the ground swells and yawns beneath our feet. Who can depict the scene? The floodgates of heaven are opened—the foundations of earth are broken up—the deep rolls up its floods—the waves roar—the winds howl—the clouds gather—the rains descend—the lightnings blaze—the thunders bellow—sinners wail—joy perishes—hope expires—and all above, beneath, and around, is one wild scene of confusion, darkness, anguish and dismay.

What a funeral! The funeral of a godless world! The wide earth was their burial place—the rushing wave their winding-sheet—the swelling thunders their funeral knell—the hanging clouds their gloomy pall—and the mourners—who are they? Were they not those eight lonely survivors who surveyed in safety the terrific scene? Were they not the angels who once shouted for joy over that now ruined earth? Aye! and was there not sadness in the very heavens, and did it not repent the Lord that he had made man upon the earth?

What a night succeeded that fearful day! No sun, no moon, no stars; no peace, no joy, no hope; but one dread scene of alternate blackness and brightness, of gleaming lightnings, and of booming thunders, of falling torrents and of rushing waves. How different from the previous night! What a change from the music, mirth and blasphemy which were then wide as the world, to the awful roar of deep calling unto deep and thunder answering thunder. So suddenly were they cut off! so fearfully did the storm break in upon their carnal slumbers! Shall I anticipate? Shall I drop a warning in the careless reader's ear? Hear it:—"As it was in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and destroyed them all, so also shall the coming of the Son of Man be."

That flood closed the history of that dispensation and of that world. This is distinctly affirmed by the Apostle who declares that "The WORLD that then was, being overflowed by water, PERISHED."—2 Pet. 3: 6. The history of that world is a sad one, as we have seen. Good at first, evil at last. Created by God for man's happiness—cursed by God for man's transgression—and destroyed by God for man's ungodliness. Alas, that we should be constrained to say that it furnished but too true an index of human character—always progressive towards ruin, always advancing, but advancing to destruction.

A year passed away, and on the towering summit of Mount Ararat, from the door of a strange and weather-beaten structure, there came forth (with no scoffer to deride or insult them) a solitary family, to stand upon the bosom of a new world. Every thing around was strange. Nothing familiar was visible. Paradise and every thing else which reminded man of the days of human innocence and primeval happiness, had been "pushed by the horned flood" into the watery depths, or buried amid the ruins of some upturned mountain; while the marine remains scattered every where around, gave evidence that the highest summits once lay beneath the level wave, and the whole wide landscape was but a memorial of God's disapprobation of sin and iniquity.

There was a new earth, but not such an one as that whose beauty called forth the anthems of the morning stars and the shouts of the Sons of God. That was a comely structure, this a disordered ruin. That was hallowed by God's blessing, this was stricken by His curse. That was the peaceful home created for the abode of the happy and the blest, this the dilapidated habitation which God's mercy had spared from utter and eternal ruin, and which His love permitted man to inhabit as the scene of new mercies and of a continued probation. That world was good, this evil. That full of bliss, this, alas, destined to be full of woe. But still it was a rest after the tossings on the waves. It was a home for those who deserved no better, and who had no other—it was a place where God could bless man with summer, winter, seed-time, harvest, food, raiment, grace, mercy, peace, and truth; and where man might honor God by faith, hope, love, obedience, self-denial, and unchanging fidelity; and so seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, and eternal life in the world to come. This was the theatre of man's extended probation.

The rainbow had spanned the heavens with its arch of glory, a new covenant had been made with the race, the oath of God was pledged that the waters of Noah should no more cover the earth, and immediately the race commenced anew their course of sin. Let us proceed to sketch the course of empires and events which go to fill up the history of this present world.

For The Crisis

Letter from Br. J. A. Packard.

Brimfield, Mass., July 27th, '55.

"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing; but inwardly they are ravening wolves." Matt. 7: 15.

In comparing small things with great, the Savior compared the false prophets, or teachers, to a wolf in sheep's clothing. "Beware," said he, "of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing; but inwardly they are ravening wolves."—Hypocrisy consists in acting a part, or character, not our own.

There are hypocrites in all professions, and a great deal of hypocrisy in the world. Men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie. Both of them together, laid in the balance of sincerity, would be found wanting.

Of all hypocrites, the false teacher of religion is the most dangerous.

He it is that scatters firebrands, arrows and death. True Christians are honest themselves in their professions of piety, and unsuspecting of others; they do not mistrust. This exposes them to the schemes of hypocrites. Sometimes, also, the true teacher is absent from his charge. Of this circumstance the false teacher will avail himself. Satan is never asleep, or absent. It is his business to sow tares; he selects his time, "when men sleep;" he selects his agents, his own children; he assists them in disguising themselves, and sends them forth to their destructive work. Armed with the whole armor of Satan, the false teacher approaches the children of God. He begins by cant; talks some Gospel truths; insinuates and flatters until he has gained confidence, (made them believe he is a very good man,) then he addresses himself to his task in good earnest. Young converts and the artless old professors are beguiled from the simplicity of the Gospel; the weak in the faith are perplexed and turned out of the way; the rest have their confidence weakened, their peace destroyed, and their souls put in danger. His object is to scatter, tear and destroy, and secure the fleece for a prey. Some are satisfied with the fleece, and suffer the sheep to live; but this enemy of God and His people comes also to tear and devour.—Wolves are now abroad in sheep's clothing. Let the flock of Christ beware.—Let the false teachers also beware; the Chief Shepherd will soon appear, and cut them in sunder, and appoint them their portion with the hypocrites.

Mark: says Christ, "by their fruits ye shall know them."

Fruits are the conduct of a man; his actions are the language of his heart. If the flock would wait awhile before they suffer themselves to act, they would know that "an evil tree cannot bring forth good fruit."

Let the following marks be attended to in passing judgment.

1. The false teacher goes to the flock of Christ, and labors not to convert sinners from their evil ways.

2. The false teacher endeavors to persuade Christians to leave the fold, to give up the great and soul-stirring truths, instead of helping them to grow in grace and in knowledge, and rejoicing in their prosperity as did Barnabas.

3. The false teacher speaks evil against the true teachers of the Gospel, instead of regarding them as co-workers with the Lord.

May the Lord save the little flock in this trying hour, and bring them to His Heavenly Kingdom. Amen.

Yours in hope,
J. A. Packard.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br P. S. W. Dego.

I have often inquired with myself since I became a believer in the power of faith to heal the sick, what could I do without the promises? When I took my pocket Bible to go on foot, and warn the world of a coming judgment, at the same time laboring, as did Paul, with my own hands, often suffering a privation of the ordinary comforts of life, being in little over a year reduced from sound health to sickness and pain, when every other resource failed, there was a great Physician that had power to heal. I have been at the point of death—my limbs cold—no medicine at hand; but the Lord was, and His power healed me instantly.

Although tried, and tempted, and often embarassed, I have no disposition to complain; for I expect soon to be delivered.

O Brn. and Srs., let us be of good cheer; for land is nearing, A few more days will end our conflicts here. Let us search the Scriptures for ourselves—discharge our duty in the fear of God, and hold out to the end.

It is my prayer that these few remarks may comfort and encourage some one; and may God keep us by H's power unto salvation in the Kingdom of God.

Your Br. looking for that blessed hope,
Peter S. W. Dego.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. L. Mills.

Lanesville, Ct., 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I am cheered on my pilgrimage by perusing the columns of the Crisis, which seems full of that spirit of love and meekness which characterized the Son of God.

Some of the beloved Pilgrims are sick at heart through disappointment in not meeting the blessed Savior ere this; but let them remember that "whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth."

It is indeed a trying time to the child of God, but it is cheering to know that He is near in every time of trouble. Yes, indeed He is: He led the children of Israel safe out of Egypt, and He will lead us, if we follow His commands, safe into the promised land.

Yours, hoping for immortality at the coming of Christ.

L. Mills.

For The Crisis.

A Voice of Warning from the Four Winds.

We extract the following from a Tract written by Br. D. T. Taylor, in which our Readers can but feel a deep interest.

"Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21 : 26.

Ever since the great Reformation, three centuries ago, when the light of heaven so glorious flashed upon her pathway, enabling her to discover the huge Antichrist, and to discern for the first time for centuries, her true position in the history of the age, as being far advanced towards its consummation, the Church of God on earth has earnestly sought to penetrate the Divine mind and purposes, as revealed in His Holy Word, with reference to her destiny in time's future, and her approach to the solemn period of the end of the world. And not without manifold success has she pursued her anxious inquiries on this momentous subject, scattering the light among the nations until the great voice that begun its warnings with Wickliff "the morning star of the reformation, and Luther, its rising sun," gathering strength with advancing centuries, and sustained by the sure prophetic word, and countless magnificent signs and unmistakable tokens of the end, has now burst upon the ears of the weary Church and careless, proud world, "as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings," proclaiming the rapid approach of a vast crisis in the destiny of human society—the imminence of the millennial era—aye, the epoch of the establishment of the everlasting Kingdom of God on earth.

John Wickliff, the intrepid Protestant of the fourteenth century, believed that century to be "The last age of the World," and scattered far and wide his faith in a tract bearing such title. Martin Luther at first supposed the end would come ere he had finished his translation of the prophecy of Daniel. A little farther on, he expresses his belief that that day which he so earnestly desired to see, was not over twenty years in the future—then deprecating the interval as being fifty years; and finally, but a little while before his death with a more studied mind brought to the subject, he, fixing his eye upon the middle of the nineteenth century, exclaimed, "I am persuaded that verily the day of judgment is not far off; yea, will not be absent three hundred years longer. The voice will soon be heard, 'behold the Bridegroom cometh!'" (Table Talk, Ch. 1.)

Melancthon, too, observed in connection with the statement of His belief, that the world would stand but six thousand years, the belief also of Luther, Latimer, and nearly all the reformers, that this aged world in his day was "not far from its end." Bishop Latimer, recognizing as past, the grand Pauline obstacle that hindered the Advent, viz., the coming of the Man of Sin, 2d Thess. ch. 2, also said:—"The day is not far off: paradventure it may come in my days, old as I am, or in my children's days." And he testified to the universality of this expectation, in adding that "all the learned men whom without doubt, God has sent into the world in these last days, to give the world warning, do gather out of Sacred Scriptures that the last day cannot be far off." Sermon on the second Sun. in Adv.

So taught Bishop Bale, Fox, the Martyrologist, and more [illegible], Joseph Mede and William Twiss, who with the great body of reformers held that Christ would come at the seventh trumpet's sounding. Flacius, believed that the Papacy would perish by the personal presence of Christ, in the year 1866. Dr. Goodwin, in 1673 wrote, "We are to consider that we now live in the extremity of times, and we are at the verge, and as it were within the whirl of that great mystery of Christ's kingdom, which will as a gulf, swallow up all time; and so the nearer we are unto it, the greater and more sudden changes will Christ make, now hastening to make a full end of all." Dr. Gill, in the middle of the last century, taught that the Lord would come within 150 years, at the very furthest. John Wesley and Albert Bengal, supposed the millennium would commence as early as 1836. Samuel Rutherford, of the seventeenth century, used to say, "the blast of the last trumpet is now hard at hand." John Fletcher, of Madely wrote, "If these things (i. e. the scenes of the judgment,) happen not to us, but to our children—as they most certainly will before the third generation is swept away—is it not our business to prepare ourselves for them?" (Letter on Proph. 1775.)

Lord Napier, in a work on the prophecies, circulated throughout Europe, maintained that the judgment would set and the books be oponed at some time between the years 1688 and 1700. The almost universal reception of his views among Protestants showed how little the Church had yet dreamed of a temporal millennium previous to the time of Dr. Whitby, who first originated that doctrine in the opening of the last century. The Mathers', also Spaulding, lifted their voices in warning, and pronounced the end imminent, the last one observing, "the time has come to look for the final destruction of Antichrist, for the battle of that great day of God Almighty, and for the natural signs and omens of His Second Advent." (Lectures, p. 24.)

William Cowper, Charles Wesley, Dr. Watts, and Robert Pollock, as did the great Milton, all either sweetly or solemnly sung of the approaching epoch of the restitution of the globe. Edward Irving, too, as this century opened, proclaimed throughout all Great Britian, with extraordinary eloquence, the coming catastrophe. Robert Hall, says Dr. Duffield, died regretting he had not preached the doctrine of Christ's personal reign, and Bishop Heber wrote:—

"The world is grown old and her pleasures are past;
The world is grown old and her form may not last;
The world has grown old and trembles for fear;
For sorrows abound, and the judgment is near."

So taught the reformers and elder divines. The honored names of all who sustain such views, time would fail us to mention.

But more especially does it remain for the nineteenth century, the most remarkable century of all, to present its galaxy of noble witnesses to the truth of God now proclaiming so clearly the near approach of the consummation. All hearts are intensely stirred, and every voice utters a cry of alarm. The Protestant, the Romanist, the Republican, the Despot, the man of the world, the man of God, the Pre-millennialist, the Post-millennialist, the religious and secular press, the Spiritualist, the Mahommedan, the Jew, all men everywhere, of every name and rank, vie with each other in heralding the swift advent of the world's grand crisis. What that crisis is—what its results will be—men disagree in relation to; but that it will come, nay, that it is almost here, and will be a momentous one, all readily affirm, and with united voices both Church and world cry aloud, "It hasteth greatly!" We believe that crisis to be the visible coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to judgment, and to His kingdom. We believe, therefore we speak—we write.

The PRESS teems with thrilling testimonies, presented in the most imposing language possible to be used. The Christian Statesman of Washington, says that, "The black clouds of despotism still lower with fearful import over the destinies of Europe, and threaten to break in thunderbolts of war and revolution," while the Hartford Courant uses similar language, and adds, "We cannot predict whether all these flashes of light are to herald in the dawn of a better day—a bright day of sunny liberty, or whether they are a meteoric glare to usher in a long, dark night of loathsome tyranny."

The British Banner, 1853, ominously observes, "The present is a time of darkness and great perplexity, a period in which wars and rumors of wars are agitating and alarming the hearts of more than half of mankind. Since the astounding years of the French Revolution, no events of so significant and momentous a character have occurred in the civilized world, as those that are now passing, like the tempest driven clouds over the heads of the wondering nations."

The New York Evangelist said in 1748, "Had the present state of Europe been prophesied fifty years ago, would any have credited the prophecy? We believe that in this year we have seen the beginning of the end."

The London Times said in 1848, "The foundations of the great political deep seem breaking up. The whole earth is shaken;" and a western paper strikingly observed:—"The world is making huge efforts to die."

The Living Age, says, "We stand at a great starting point in the history of the world. Old things are about to pass away, and we know not what shall be the new. The continent of Europe, startled by the warning trumpet of 1848, has cowered into silence; all faces gather blackness and men's hearts fail them for fear of what is coming on the earth."

The Alliance and Visitor, truly remarks, that, "the events or Europe have followed each other in quick and startling succession. The events of centuries have been crowded into a year. The amazing rapidity has astonished the human race.—The hand of God should be recognized in these remarkable events."

The Reflector, says, "We can hardly begin to measure the results of these great events in Europe. It is indeed startling to pause and consider it. The Almighty appears to be driving assunder the nations, is causing the everlasting hills to bow—they seem to be on the verge of crumbling."

The New York Tribune, affirms, "The eastern sky is red with the portents of a general conflagration. * * The crisis visibly approaches. * * It cannot be doubted that the moment for the war to swell into more gigantic and terrible proportions, and to wrap all Europe in its flames, is now close at hand."

The New York Herald, says, "We are certainly on the threshold of great events." The New York Times supposes those events to be a "free millennial future for the world," while one of the European correspondents of the former journal styles those events' "The great battle of Armageddon," and the Sabbath Recorder, also says, "A moral and political earthquake is maturing, and the heaving of the earth shows the elements are in motion. It is the preparation and commencement of the great battle of Armageddon, the breaking up of absolute powers, and the undermining of Anti christian predominance."

The New Orleans Delta, declares, "That the great fight will be fought, that the world-battle is as inevitable as to-morrow, is no dream of dyspepsia or threat of a lunatic: it is evident to any one who will take the trouble to open his eyes and look around him."

The London Episcopal Recorder, says, "The events of the times do indeed seem to call as if with providential voice, for special effort, and prayer and watchfulness. 'There is,' it has been remarked 'an undefinable impression abroad upon all spirits, of a coming crisis, and a better day.' Thus for instance, if we look to Rome: Rome not to be converted, revives as if with dying energy, and begins to dictate laws, and multiply her hostile positions, only to be destroyed by the brightness of another advent. Her mightiest paroxysms of seemingly recruiting strength will probably be that which immediately precedes her last and dying agonies. If we contemplate the nations; 'the nations are angry' and prepared for war upon a scale of grandeur hitherto unknown: the hearts of men fail them, when they anticipate the results of the next general, and probably conclusive outbreak. All things seem to travel onward to a general crisis and a new era."

The Christian Luminary, candidly says, "This truly is an age of wonders, changes and revolutions. No thinking man can open his eyes upon the great events which are passing before us, without being impressed with the signs of the times, and constrained to admit that important scenes are about to be opened to the view of an astonished world. The seals are opening, the trumpets are sounding, the nations are shaking; signs are seen in the heavens and on earth, which plainly teach us the fact that the coming of the Son of Man draweth nigh."

The Boston Traveler, in an article headed, "The shaking of the nations," says, "These events are a fulfilment of prophecy, uttered many hundred years ago; distinct enough to be understood by all who have lived to see them. They are so astounding as to seem more like the visions of the night, than the sober realities of the day. There is not a throne that has not been shaken. That the work of overturning in the earth, of which the ancient sang, is commenced in very deed, it seems impossible to doubt."

The Scientific Mechanic, of 1847, said that "No man now living has ever witnessed, nor has any historian recorded, so interesting a position of the world and the nations thereof, as is presented at the present time. Some old-fashoned people, who give credence to a certain old fashioned book, have supposed that a time would come when the earth should have become 'old as a garment,' and should be changed. Men are looking upon the present convulsed state of the world as portending great political reforms; but in view of certain facts which cannot be disputed, we think it reasonable that faithful christians should look for something even more important. The world is now just about 6,000 years old, &c. Viewing the fact in connection with the unprecedented tempests, inundations, earthquakes, and famines, which have occurred within the last two years, and the present extraordinary perplexity and commotion among the nations, we cannot avoid the anticipation of events incomparably more important than any that have been prognosticated by the secular press. It is well to be ready for whatever event may occur."

The Christian Review. A writer says, "I am strongly persuaded that the present generation of men stand upon the very eve of the mightiest revolution that the annals of time record. * * A silent, rapid, irresistible preparation has been making—making perhaps for a sudden, subversive, and universal change—What will it be? The battle of Armageddon? The Millennium? The new heavens and earth? Perhaps all of these, preceded by the coming of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven. Nothing in the prophecies withholds His coming, that I have seen. The events we expect to precede that advent, may follow it. The character of the second, as was the first advent, may have been mistaken. Nothing withholds the revelation of this great period, but the long suffering of Messiah, if I have read Peter, and Daniel, and John aright."

The Toronto Christian Observer, solemnly says, Upon the whole we see occasion enough for humiliation, in place of exultation; and instead of the announcement of 'the good time coming,' we hear a solemn voice coming up through all the din and bustle of the age's enterprise, the shriek of its crime and misery, the chaunt of its pompous devotion, and the rant of its philosophy,' 'When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?'"

The Christian Chronicle. Over the signature of 'ZETA," is found the following. "Depend upon it, dear reader, we live in eventful times. Prophecy is now in such a state of fulfilment, that the future history of the world, should it long continue, must be uninspired. There is, perhaps, no important prediction, the accomplishment of which could delay the Savior's Advent for a single hour. The last page of Revelation is now open before us, and we wait with an assured confidence, yet with the most intense anxiety for the accomplishment of what is there written—for the final event of time—for the great and terrible day of the Lord—In the language of Bonar, 'we are living in an age of the world when every hill is passed up which the church had to climb, ere it came in full sight of the plain, along which shall come the Son of Man in His chariot of glory.' Standing upon our watch-tower, we are looking out amid the darkness of night for the first streaks of morn; with ears intent we are waiting to catch the first blast of the trumpet; with eyes uplifted we are gazing upon the gathering brightness; and with impatient longing our hearts cry out; Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. In prospect of this solemn day, gird up your loins, and hold fast the beginning of your confidence steadfast to the end. With a holy impatience listen for the Midnight Cry. By your ceaseless and importunate pleadings, provoke the speedy coming of your Lord. Whatsoever your hands find to do, do it with all your might! Blessed be God, the day of trial, and toil, and suffering, and labor, is almost ended!"

The foregoing is but a specimen of the thrillng testimony with which the entire religious and secular press everywhere abounds.

(To be Continued.)

For The Crisis.

What is Truth? John 18: 38.

By J. W. CRABTREE.

This is a question of Pilate's to our Savior, and a question of great importance to the disappointed ones. You will see by the preceding verses, the great question was, "art thou King of the Jews?" The reply of our Savior was, "to this end was I born,"&c., v. 37. The truth is, there has been war, commotion and misery ever since the fall of Adam. What has brought this turmoil and strife? Nothing but the pride of the human heart, and an ambitious desire to gain the ascendancy—to reaeh the crown and rule of this sin-cursed earth. But mid all this confusion and strife, the promise of God to David stands good. "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David, He will not turn from it; of the fruit of thy body will I sit upon thy throne. Ps. 132, 11. To doubt that Christ will take the throne of His father David, and reign on it personally, would be to doubt His Messiahship, and deny the Lord of glory that bought us with His blood. The Messiah must take the throne of David and reign on it personally; and if Christ the Lord does not take it, He is not the Messiah, and we must look for another.

What is truth? It is truth that the time is at hand when Christ, the rightful heir, will take the throne of David and reign over the earth in righteousness. Then this blood-shed and distress of nations will have an end, and not until then. Therefore let us who believe these things are so, examine our selves, and see if we are in the faith, and see that we are not of those that draw back. It is truth that one of the prominent signs of the end will be coldness on the part of the professed Church—iniquity will abound and the love of many wax cold. And notwithstanding we hear from the press, the pulpit, and the Church at large, the declaration of a good time coming, that we are to have a thousand years millennium before the appearing of Christ and that the conversion of the world is nigh at hand, (and the writer heard this from the lips of one of our city divines, that this good time or thousand years commenced in the fall of 1852,) yet amid all this theorising and delusion, the language of our Br. Paul stands sure, and is "yea and amen" to them that believe. He says, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come;" and were we to live as did he, we should cry aloud through the streets and lanes of our cities, "woe, woe to the rebellious and wicked—woe to the Sabbath breakers—woe to the Bible haters—woe to the Gospel hardened inhabitants of this land. Prepare to meet your God." And if we should do this, we should be called fanatics and maniacs. Indeed all the professed Church tell us that there never was a time when her progress was so great, and her membership was so large; we say a discerner of these times can see their spiritual declension. As for the progress, we doubt not it is truth; but we believe it to be a retrograde progress: and we believe that the language of our Br. Paul never had its application so fully as at the present time. 2 Tim. 3: 5, "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."

Where is that confidence and brotherly love that made all things common? And where has the spirit of self denial and of cross-bearing fled? Where is he that shakes his hands from the holding of bribes? I ask, where are they fled?—Are not these times of peril? Are not these the times that our Br. Paul has cited us to, where men should be "lovers of themselves more than lovers of God?" I think a true child of God can discern the times in which we live. We have seen the time when our chapels, school-houses, halls, &c., would not hold the believers in the immediate coming of the Lord.—But alas! alas! where have they fled?—Time would fail to tell the ways they have gone. Many an one has turned again to his merchandize and become overcharged with worldly cares. One has bought him a piece of ground, another five yoke of oxen, and he must go to prove them; another has married him a wife and she must be pleased with the vanities of this world. But amid all this departing from the faith, and giving heed to seducing spirits, thank the God of heaven, there are some that mean, by the grace of God, to hold fast to the promises; for they are sure; and they are for those that endure to the end. The promise is to the little flock, not to the great mass. I am glad that the sound of the Lord's coming ever saluted my ear, and that I learned that Christ would set up a Kingdom on the earth, that the dead would be raised, and that the saints should possess the Kingdom forever, even forever and ever.

Feeling assured that God has called me to the word, and commanded me to sound the alarm, I feel determined, by His grace, never to cease crying aloud until I see Zion's King come with great glory.

Weeping and waiting children, take courage and lift up your heads, knowing your redemption draweth nigh.

Much love to the scattered saints.

J. W. CRABTREE.

Pass it along.

By ISAAC ADRIAN.

Oft have I heard it said, that this world is full of losses. It may be true with respect to almost every thing with which we have to do, but it is not true with respect to the foul tongue of slander. This car passes along, always gaining while running, and never looses when unloading.—"Pass it along." This car full of poison, set on fire of hell, spreading death and ruin in its course. This scourge, more blasting in its influence than the cholera, yet "pass it along," whether you believe it or not, pass it along.

Hark! that fine, confidential whisper against the character of a virtuous man.—It passes along, still a confidential whisper till another, and another, till the whole community have all got a secret. You say you don't believe it, but you will use our influence to bear up the false report, and pass it down the current. O what strange creatures are mankind! "I don't believe it," yet, with this protestation, there is a significant grin, or a shrug of the shoulders, which carries with it mysteriousness, so it passes along.

How many reputations have been lost by surmises! How many hearts have bled for whisperings! How many chaste bosoms have been wrung with grief by a single myterious hint; yet you will pass it on. The slander flies; you will keep it above the water by a wag of your tongue, when you might sink it forever. Oh destroy the passion for telling a tale, we pray you. Lisp not a word that will injure the character of your brother.

Yours in hope,

ISAAC ADRIAN.

[Selected.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, SEPT. 22, 1855.

CHAPTER 2.

Vs.1,2. "I lifted up mine eyes again, and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof."

This representation of the measurement of Jerusalem doubtless has reference to the fulfilment of the promise contained in the 16th v. of the preceeding ch., "and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem."

Vs. 3, 4. "And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, And said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein."

The Angel with whom the Prophet was conversing was met by another Angel who directed him to bear the joyful tidings to Zechariah, (then in his youth,) that Jerusalem should be inhabited, &c. This shows that the measurement of the city was a prelude to its being rebuilt. "As towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein," i. e. the population would be so numerous that the inhabitants could not all be included within the walls, but would overflow the boundaries of the city, and dwell also in the snburbs. Says Josephus, "as the city grew more prosperous, it gradually crept beyond its old limits," so that there was, at least, a partial fulfilment of this prediction in relation to the city as recorded by the Jewish historian.

V. 5, "For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her."

This verse seems to reach to something beyond the Metropolis of the Jews.—There is doubtless a reference to that heavenly Jerusalem of which it is said, "and the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." Rev. 21: 23.

And again, "Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion: for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee." Is. 12: 6.

And again, "The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory; Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." Is. 60: 19, 20.

The idea conveyed by, "a wall of fire round about," seems to be that although Jerusalem might be inhabited as towns without walls, yet the protection of God's shield would so defend them from all their enemies, that it would be like a wall of consuming fire to devour every invading foe; "for our God, (says the Apostle,) is a consuming fire." No expression could possibly convey a more perfect idea of security from every enemy, than the expression here used. And may not all Christians claim the pomise in a certain sense, that we shall be walled around by the strength of Jehovah's arm? that we shall be protected from every foe by the energy of an omnipotent hand? How infinitely safe to dwell in such a tower of strength, being guarded by infinite power and matchless love!

Vs. 6, 7. "Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the Lord. Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon."

The Prophet having been favored with a view of the prosperity and glory that were to be given to Jerusalem, is led to cry out under the operation of the Spirit, addressing himself to the Jews who were still in a scattered state, "ho, ho!" thus arresting their attention, and then calling on them to return from the land of their captivity; for Jerusalem shall triumph over all her deadly foes. The city shall teem with a population that shall overflow the walls and original boundaries, and dwell securely under the guardian care of Him whose banner over them will be love, and whose presence round about them will be like a wall of consuming fire to every foe.

V. 8. "For thus saith the Lord of hosts; After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you; for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye."

It is somewhat difficult to come to a perfect understanding of this passage; the meaning, however, probably is, that after the exhibition of this glory to the eye of the Prophet, he is shown that whoever dares lay a finger on the people of Jehovah, as it were, touches the apple of His eye, and therefore the Prophet is sent to those nations, with the message contained in the 9th v., implying the destruction of those powers. There is something very striking in the expression, "he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of His eye." The eye is one of the most delicate and sensitive of all the bodily organs; and nothing can be more painful than the infliction of any blow or injury upon the apple of one's eye. It expresses, therefore, the extreme regard, the infinite love of God to His covenant people, even at that age of the world: how much more will the Lord regard the true Israel under the Gospel dispensation. Truly it were better that a millstone were hanged about one's neck, and that he were drowned in the midst of the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones that believe on Christ. Providence permitted the heathen to gain an advantage over the Hebrew nation in consequence of their sins; but in doing it they treasured up to themselves wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God.

V. 9. "For, behold, I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants: and ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me."

The shaking of God's hand implies the putting forth of His power; as when it is said of Jesus, "thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." There may be a primary reference to the partial victories which the Jews subsequently obtained over their enemies, e. g. in the time of Esther: but the perfect fulfilment of this prediction is doubtless reserved for the great day, when a complete, ultimate and everlasting triumph will be obtained by the people of God over all their foes.

V. 10. "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord."

By a figure of speech the term daughter of Zion is made to signify the inhabitants of Zion. They are commanded to rejoice in prospect of enjoying the presence and favor and protection of God.—As the atmosphere imparts health and vigor and animation to the entire physical frame, so does the presence and Spirit of the living God infuse health and moral energy into the soul. The presence of God is the joy, the strength, nay the very life of our spiritual natures. Whenever, therefore, we enjoy the presence of God, we have reason to sing and rejoice, nay, to shout aloud for joy; for we are thereby filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Vs 11-13. "And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord: for he is raised up out of his holy habitation."

It is interesting to trace through all the delineations of the Prophet's, occasional gleams of light that shine out from the events portrayed; and to learn that the prophetic descriptions, in many instances, shadow forth great and sublime events of another and more glorious dispensation.—It is cheering to see how the Lord had His all-penetrating eye on the future, and these, as it were, sudden and unexpected flashes of light dart forth from the scenes presented like the electric spark from the bosom of the cloud. Thus in the writings of Haggai the Temple is made to represent the glories of a future dispensation, and the final demolition of all earthly governments is presented in connection with the building of that Temple, as it was also by our Savior connected with the destruction of the same Temple; so in this case Zechariah connects with the rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem the glories of the heavenly Jerusalem, and opens an avenue to that immortal world in which God will dwell with His people. The time when many nations shall be joined to the Lord could not have been prior to the Gospel dispensation, and the fact that God would dwell in the midst of Zion, reminds one of the expression of John in relation to the New Jerusalem: "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." Rev. 21: 3 "And thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee." The redemption of the promises, the perfect fulfilment of the predictions of God by the mouth of His Prophet would demonstrate the truthfulness of the Prophet's mission. The word of man may fail, the Oracle of the heathen are a lie; but God's word is truth; it "will not return to Him void; but will accomplish that which He pleases, and prosper in the thing whereto He sent it;" and when the accomplishment is perfect, the veracity of God and the commission of those who proclaim it are established.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. E. Burnham.

NEWBURYPORT, Sept. 13th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I have just returned from the sitting of our Committee, which was appointed at Wilbraham to inquire into the best method of promoting christian union among ourselves, by the conduct, and relations of the several papers published within our pale. Well, we had a pleasant time. We that were together looked the matter over in several shades, and at last came with one accord to the conclusion that the "time is not yet" for the fusion of the three papers in one. Perhaps our Father in Heaven will never so order. But we will pray, and wait, and see. It will be very difficult to fix on a location which will satisfy all; and more difficult to fix on some other matters. Perhaps, at present, at least, we can do more good to all the scattered family to remain as we are. One thing, however, I rejoice in; the Brn of all the paper connection, resolve to hereafter pursue our way in peace, and cease striving one with another. Amen. The Lord direct us all.

I intreat the Lord for grace that we may awake to the full importance of our work. We are coming up to a most fearful moment. We shall know at length that God is true! Some things may be unaccountable and strange to us, but we will not cast away, therefore, our confidence in God. We know that He requireth of us holiness of life, and activity in His cause.

We know that as He was so we should be in this world. I adore Him for the grace granted me to become one of His, although most unworthy. I pray for His Spirit to rest upon me in His blessed work, that I may, in humility and meekness, do something toward feeding His sheep and lambs.

I am yet "looking for that blessed hope," and waiting for the consummation. I cannot question that the great and glorious event for which, for several years, we have been endeavoring to prepare ourselves, is impending. I cannot confess a doubt on this point. There have been several points of interest before us since the commencement of the Advent movement, but none to me possessing such sweet and cheering interest as this. I do not object to the investigation and discussion of other subjects connected with Christian truth, but I do contend, and have for more than ten years contended, that this should be made distinctly prominent.—Every age of the world, and every edition of the Church has had its prominent question, and truth of particular interest.—With Adam, it was the tree of knowledge. With Noah, the flood. With Abraham, the land promised. With captive Israel in Egypt, the promised deliverance. With Israel in Palestine, the promised protection of the Lord. With John the Baptist, and his disciples, the manifestation of the Messiah. With the pre-passion Church, the personal sayings and actions of the Redeemer. With the post-passion Church the absence of the Lord. With the Apostolic and primitive edition of the Church, the resurrection of the Savior, and the atonement. With Luther and friends, the importance of ecclesiastical reformation, both in doctrine and manners. With us, I repeat again, and again, it should be, Behold He cometh quickly!

This is most certainly the hour when the solemn and awful announcement is due, both to the anxious people of God, and to the slumbering nations of the earth. This is the period of the apocalyptic Angel's flying message, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come. It must be so. The testimony of Scripture, to this end, is plain, simple, positive. The four universal empires, symbolized by the metallic colossus presented in the 2d ch. of Daniel, that were to fill up the largest portion of human history, have arisen and passed away. The decem-regal division of the fourth empire which was to precede the kingdom of Messiah, has been accomplished. The politico-ecclesiastical organization mentioned in Daniel 7th, which was to oppress the people of God 1260 symbolical days, has wrought its bloody and abominable work. The 2300 symbolical days of Dan. 8th, are drawing very near to their close. The prophetical delineation contained in Dan. 11th, is almost filled out in actual history. The events and signs referred to by our Lord, as recorded by the faithful Evangelists, as occurring to fill up Gentile history, are nearly all past, and passing. The moral and social picture, sketched by the inspired pen of apostolical perception, is now being fully, and strangely justified. And the wonderful, and complete historical illustration of the mixed apocalyptical visions, speaks to the soul of every candid Bible student in startling tones, "Prepare for mighty changes!" So far as I am concerned, as one in the matter, I have to say, I long, I sigh, I pant, I pray for the blessed one "to come quickly." Because I have been disappointed, and mistaken in the evidence upon which I have built my expectations of His coming at particular points of time, my spirit does not faint, nor do I love Him or His appearing less. In relation to the definite time of the event I have to remark, that there is so much uncertainty connected with human chronology, upon which we are dependent, that I am induced to believe we shall be under the necessity of understanding the words of our Master, "Ye know not when the time is" (Mark 13.) in a more extended, and absolute form than we have been, some of us, wont to. I think the Lord made this remark, and its kindred remarks, because He saw that at this late date we should be involved in strange chronological uncertainty. I would not be so presumptuous as to assert that our heavenly Father will never shed more light on the prophetic periods, and chronology; no, He will do what seemeth Him good. Nor does it seem good to me to say, "the phrophetic periods are of no use." Surely when the anxious mariner has been periled on the ocean for more than twenty-five or twenty eight hundred miles, sailing from our coast in a direction for London, he knows he is almost there, although he may not be able to determine the precise number of miles yet to be sailed over. So the Church must know that out of the 2300 days-symbolical—appointed for Gentile history, during which she cannot triumph, she has spent more than 1850 since the new dispensation began, and reckon from what reasonable point she may, for their date, several hundred of them had passed when it did begin; and thus she must conclude her journey almost ended.

I have believed that the end would occur in 1854. It seemed that the argument to that effect was indeed conclusive. And it seemed to me that the arguments brought to prove to the contrary were not only far form being conclusive, or consistent with themselves, but they were put forth in a spirit very unlike the meekness, and gentleness of Christ. I think so still. I am fain to adopt the language of a learned and prominent minister of one of the popular denominations among us, who remarked, "That is the best argument ever produced for Millerism," when speaking of the '54 argument. But "the argument has failed." Yes, it certainly has. We were wrong, mistaken, disappointed, sadly, some of us. '43 has failed, '44 has failed, '47 has failed, '54 has failed, and all other set times have failed up to this hour. And I deeply regret, before God and man, several unhappy manifestations which have attended these failures. But I cannot condemn myself, or my brethren. We did the best we knew, and I think the best we could, under the circumstances in which we were placed. I must believe the general "Advent movement," from the labors of Joseph Wolf in Asia, to our own presnet time, is of God. But many things connected with it are, and have been, human, to say nothing worse. We have all been too dogmatical on time—even the most modest of us, I think. We shall doubtless learn wisdom.

Let us still continue to "search for wisdom as for hidden treasures," "and lift up our voice for understanding as for fine gold;" and in due time the knowledge of "the holy" will be given unto us. I believe God loveth His people, and will not forsake His saints. He knoweth them who are His. And those who are His I choose for my company, in joy and in sorrow. I cannot be circumscribed in my christian sympathy.

My policy is to welcome to my pulpit every man that can preach—who will preach—who sustains a character fit to preach, and who does preach what he believes to be truth, even should he differ in sentiment from me ever so much. Again, my policy is to associate with all who give me evidence that they love God, of every clan, clique, party, sect, or denomination; and yet in a sectarian sense be free from them all. And I beg permission to say, this course I shall positively pursue until the Master comes, or I sink in death. I take this course not out of "will perverse," but under a sense of duty before God. I do believe the people of God are one, wherever they are scattered, and that all sectarianism is evil, and only evil, and that continually.

And yet I believe in the "order of God's house."

I have not changed my mind on that subject for more than eleven years—since 1844. I believe in all the order of the New Testament—that it should exist in the Church of God. That the Church should have her pastors, deacons, elders, &c., as circumstances may require. Nor can a single case be referred to where I, in my labors, have ever infringed such order. I believe every church should regulate its own affairs; and in all my labors I ever conform to the instituted order, present existing, in any given church.—But there may be superfluous order introduced with the best intentions. To err is human.

This is a common, and wide spread error. The wisdom of man is often foolishness with God.

I would seek what is the teaching of "the Word," in this matter, in all particulars.

Is it not high time in all things to cease leaning to our own understanding, and seek more eagerly for the wisdom that is from above? The wisdom that is pure, gentle, easy to be entreated! full of mercy and good fruits! "Shall the sword devour forever?" Have we not all seen enough of war? O my Br., shall we not cease to press those minute points which divide without profit, and consider the more weighty matters of the heavenly law? Your whole soul responds, yes.—This spirit God has enabled you from the beginning to manifest. So may all do, more and more. Amen.

EDWIN BURNHAM.

For the Crisis.

Report of the Paper Committee.

According to appointment, the Committee met in Boston, Sept. 12th, and had a free interchange of conversation relative to the union of the Crisis, Christian Reformer, and Prophetic Messenger.

All of our deliberations were characterized by a remarkably kind and Christian feeling, and a strong desire to do what can be done to cultivate the charity, without which, we are "nothing," as said Paul in his letter to the Corinthian Brn.

We were all satisfied that were it practicable, one paper for the whole Church would be better than many, so far as financial matters are concerned; but when we came to consider the location of the paper, we found a difference of opinion.

We saw that a paper located in the East, would not meet the wants of the far West where the Messenger is now published; because appointments at the West, could not be conveniently inserted in an Eastern paper; and as a large number of our Brn. are in New England, it would not be convenient for them to have a paper published midway between Boston and Moline Ill., where the Prophetic Messenger is now located.

It was also found, that there were local interests connected with the Reformer, and Crisis, that could not well be changed at this time.

Consequently, after a careful and friendly investigation of the whole matter, it was unanimously decided, that it is impracticable to unite the papers at present, if ever. But we were also most heartily agreed, that the most perfect friendship should exist between the different papers, so that appointments may be cheerfully given in all the papers whenever convenient.

We were satisfied that the common principles of christianity absolutely demand that we be at perfect peace among ourselves, doing all in our power to help each other onward in the way to the everlasting Kingdom; which is, as we believe, very soon to be set up, and to stand forever.

While we denounce sectarian feeling in others, we feel conscious, that we should "avoid the very appearance of the evil" among ourselves. We are satisfied that those who are looking for the Savior's return "are subject to like passions as other men," and hence need to set a double watch against all the evils in which others have made shipwreck.

We have never heard of one who was too free from sectarian feeling, or who had too much christian charity: but we have often seen a great want of it among those even who are expecting soon to see "the King in His beauty."

We recollect, that the disciples on a certain occasion found one that was casting out devils in the name of the Lord, and they rebuked him, and forbid him "because," said they, "he followeth not us."

"Jesus said forbid him not." Let us be careful lest we get the disapprobation of our Master in the same way; remembering, that, "In every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

And still farther, let us remember that the tares and wheat are to grow together until the harvest, and we think the harvest has not yet commenced.

Let us then "love as brethren, be pitiful, courteous and kind, for soon we shall reap if we faint not."

The Committee of the Crisis urgently request, that not a single unkind word appear in its columns from the pen of any one; and that we do all in our power to make the paper as good and useful as possible.

We hope that all the readers of the Crisis will do what they can in furnishing good matter for publication, and also aid in scattering the paper in all directions.

We pray the Lord to give us all, the true missionary spirit, so that where we have freely received, we may freely give.

Remember, "If we sow sparingly, we shall reap sparingly; and if we sow bountifully, we shall reap bountifully."

M. GRANT, SEC'Y.

BOSTON, Sept. 14th, 1855.

The following remarks by a Correspondent of the Christian Observer, in relation to the memoir of Leila Ada, a young Jewish convert, will be read with interest.

Dear Br S:—A thousand thanks for sending us the memoir of Lelia Ada.—Our family have felt deeply interested in its perusal. It was just in harvest time when we received it, but one of the girls volunteered to read for the rest of us, while seated around the table at meals; and thus we literally devoured a chapter at a meal, with much mental gusto, and disposed of the whole in little less than a week. Would not ours be a happy world, if all its inhabitants were actuated by the same principles and feelings as Leila, when a Christian? But the appearance on earth of such mortal angels has heretofore been, truly, "few, and far between." She certainly possessed some intellectual and moral traits of character, which rendered her rather superior to the common run of mortals, even among the "good sort of people." One was that noble liberality and strength of mind, which lifted her above the influence of prejudice, while examining the grounds and evidences of the Christian religion.—We all know the great strength of the prejudice of education, how it hoodwinks its victims, and keeps them within the precints of any false system in which they may have been reared; and it is quite as strong in the Jewish system as any other, yet so great was her desire to walk in the light of pure truth, that she resolved to examine the New Testament carefully, in connection with the Old, and thus could not fail to be convinced of the truth of the Christian system.

And then, when she was enabled, by a lively appropriating faith, to receive Jesus as her own Savior, how ardent and supreme was her love to Him! How it entirely governed all her feelings, and all her actions, and filled her whole soul with heavenly light and happiness! She possessed all the qualifications of the most eminent Christian Martyr, and I think we would be presumptuous to deny her the martyr's crown, for the persecutions she suffered were truly severe, and who can say that they did not hasten her early exit from this world of sin and sorrow?

But short as was her shining Christian course, she has not lived in vain. The heavenly spirit she displayed, and the bright Christian example she set, are calculated to be useful. If her Jewish Brn. will read her story, they can see how an and pass it down the current. O what strange creatures are mankind! "I don't believe it," yet, with this protestation, there is a significant grin, or a shrug of the shoulders, which carries with it mysteriousness, so it passes along.

How many reputations have been lost by surmises! How many hearts have bled for whisperings! How many chaste bosoms have been wrung with grief by a single myterious hint; yet you will pass it on. The slander flies; you will keep it above the water by a wag of your tongue, when you might sink it forever. Oh! destroy the passion for telling a tale, we pray you. Lisp not a word that will injure the character of your brother.

Yours in hope,

ISAAC ADRIAN.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, SEPT. 22, 1855.

CHAPTER 2.

Vs. 1, 2. "I lifted up mine eyes again, and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof."

This representation of the measurement of Jerusalem doubtless has reference to the fulfilment of the promise contained in the 16th v. of the preceeding ch., "and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem."

Vs. 3, 4. "And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, And said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein."

The Angel with whom the Prophet was conversing was met by another Angel who directed him to bear the joyful tidings to Zechariah, (then in his youth,) that Jerusalem should be inhabited, &c. This shows that the measurement of the city was a prelude to its being rebuilt. "As towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein," i. e. the population would be so numerous that the inhabitants could not all be included within the walls, but would overflow the boundaries of the city, and dwell also in the suburbs. Says Josephus, "as the city grew more prosperous, it gradually crept beyond its old limits," so that there was, at least, a partial fulfilment of this prediction in relation to the city as recorded by the Jewish historian.

V. 5, "For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her."

This verse seems to reach to something beyond the Metropolis of the Jews.—There is doubtless a reference to that heavenly Jerusalem of which it is said, "and the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." Rev. 21: 23.

And again, "Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion: for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee." Is. 12: 6.

And again, "The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory; Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." Is. 60: 19, 20.

The idea conveyed by, "a wall of fire round about," seems to be that although Jerusalem might be inhabited as towns without walls, yet the protection of God's shield would so defend them from all their enemies, that it would be like a wall of consuming fire to devour every invading foe; "for our God, (says the Apostle,) is a consuming fire." No expression could possibly convey a more perfect idea of security from every enemy, than the expression here used. And may not all Christians claim the promise in a certain sense, that we shall be walled around by the strength of Jehovah's arm? that we shall be protected from every foe by the energy of an omnipotent hand? How infinitely safe to dwell in such a tower of strength, being guarded by infinite power and matchless love!

Vs. 6, 7. "Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the Lord. Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon."

The Prophet having been favored with a view of the prosperity and glory that were to be given to Jerusalem, is led to cry out under the operation of the Spirit, addressing himself to the Jews who were still in a scattered state, "ho, ho!" thus arresting their attention, and then calling on them to return from the land of their captivity; for Jerusalem shall triumph over all her deadly foes. The city shall teem with a population that shall overflow the walls and original boundaries, and dwell securely under the guardian care of Him whose banner over them will be love, and whose presence round about them will be like a wall of consuming fire to every foe.

V. 8. "For thus saith the Lord of hosts; After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you; for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye."

It is somewhat difficult to come to a perfect understanding of this passage; the meaning, however, probably is, that after the exhibition of this glory to the eye of the Prophet, he is shown that whoever dares lay a finger on the people of Jehovah, as it were, touches the apple of His eye, and therefore the Prophet is sent to those nations, with the message contained in the 9th v., implying the destruction of those powers. There is something very striking in the expression, "he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of His eye." The eye is one of the most delicate and sensitive of all the bodily organs; and nothing can be more painful than the infliction of any blow or injury upon the apple of one's eye. It expresses, therefore, the extreme regard, the infinite love of God to His covenant people, even at that age of the world: how much more will the Lord regard the true Israel under the Gospel dispensation. Truly it were better that a millstone were hanged about one's neck, and that he were drowned in the midst of the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones that believe on Christ. Providence permitted the heathen to gain an advantage over the Hebrew nation in consequence of their sins; but in doing it they treasured up to themselves wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God.

V. 9. "For, behold, I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants: and ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me."

The shaking of God's hand implies the putting forth of His power; as when it is said of Jesus, "thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." There may be a primary reference to the partial victories which the Jews subsequently obtained over their enemies, e. g. in the time of Esther: but the perfect fulfilment of this prediction is doubtless reserved for the great day, when a complete, ultimate and everlasting triumph will be obtained by the people of God over all their foes.

V. 10. "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord."

By a figure of speech the term daughter of Zion is made to signify the inhabitants of Zion. They are commanded to rejoice in prospect of enjoying the presence and favor and protection of God.—As the atmosphere imparts health and vigor and animation to the entire physical frame, so does the presence and Spirit of the living God infuse health and moral energy into the soul. The presence of God is the joy, the strength, nay the very life of our spiritual natures. Whenever, therefore, we enjoy the presence of God, we have reason to sing and rejoice, nay, to shout aloud for joy; for we are thereby filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Vs. 11–13. "And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord: for he is raised up out of his holy habitation."

It is interesting to trace through all the delineations of the Prophet's, occasional gleams of light that shine out from the events portrayed; and to learn that the prophetic descriptions, in many instances, shadow forth great and sublime events of another and more glorious dispensation.—It is cheering to see how the Lord had His all-penetrating eye on the future, and these, as it were, sudden and unexpected flashes of light dart forth from the scenes presented like the electric spark from the bosom of the cloud. NEWBURYPORT, Sept. 13th, 1855.

Br. In relation to the definite time of the event I have to remark, that there is so much uncertainty connected with human chronology, upon which we are dependent, that I am induced to believe we shall be under the necessity of understanding the words of our Master, "Ye know not when the time is" (Mark 13.) in a more extended, and absolute form than we have been, some of us, wont to. I think the Lord made this remark, and its kindred remarks, because He saw that at this late date we should be involved in strange chronological uncertainty. I would not be so presumptuous as to assert that our heavenly Father will never shed more light on the prophetic periods, and chronology; no, He will do what seemeth Him good. Nor does it seem good to me to say, "the phrophetic periods are of no use." Surely when the anxious mariner has been periled on the ocean for more than twenty-five or twenty eight hundred miles, sailing from our coast in a direction for London, he knows he is almost there, although he may not be able to determine the precise number of miles yet to be sailed over. So the Church must know that out of the 2300 days-symbolical—appointed for Gentile history, during which she cannot triumph, she has spent more than 1850 since the new dispensation began, and reckon from what reasonable point she may, for their date, several hundred of them had passed when it did begin; and thus she must conclude her journey almost ended.

I have believed that the end would occur in 1854. It seemed that the argument to that effect was indeed conclusive. And it seemed to me that the arguments brought to prove to the contrary were not only far form being conclusive, or consistent with themselves, but they were put forth in a spirit very unlike the meekness, and gentleness of Christ. I think so still. I am fain to adopt the language of a learned and prominent minister of one of the popular denominations among us, who remarked, "That is the best argument ever produced for Millerism," when speaking of the '54 argument. But "the argument has failed." Yes, it certainly has. We were wrong, mistaken, disappointed, sadly, some of us. '43 has failed, '44 has failed, '47 has failed, '54 has failed, and all other set times have failed up to this hour. And I deeply regret, before God and man, several unhappy manifestations which have attended these failures. But I cannot condemn myself, or my brethren. We did the best we knew, and I think the best we could, under the circumstances in which we were placed. I must believe the general "Advent movement," from the labors of Joseph Wolf in Asia, to our own presnet time, is of God. But many things connected with it are, and have been, human, to say nothing worse. We have all been too dogmatical on time—even the most modest of us, I think. We shall doubtless learn wisdom.

Let us still continue to "search for wisdom as for hidden treasures," "and lift up our voice for understanding as for fine gold;" and in due time the knowledge of "the holy" will be given unto us. I believe God loveth His people, and will not forsake His saints. He knoweth them who are His. And those who are His I choose for my company, in joy and in sorrow. I cannot be circumscribed in my christian sympathy.

My policy is to welcome to my pulpit every man that can preach—who will preach—who sustains a character fit to preach, and who does preach what he believes to be truth, even should he differ in sentiment from me ever so much. Again, my policy is to associate with all who give me evidence that they love God, of every clan, clique, party, sect, or denomination; and yet in a sectarian sense be free from them all. And I beg permission to say, this course I shall positively pursue until the Master comes, or I sink in death. I take this course not out of "will perverse," but under a sense of duty before God. I do believe the people of God are one, wherever they are scattered, and that all sectarianism is evil, and only evil, and that continually.

And yet I believe in the "order of God's house."

I have not changed my mind on that subject for more than eleven years—since 1844. I believe in all the order of the New Testament—that it should exist in the Church of God. That the Church should have her pastors, deacons, elders, &c., as circumstances may require. Nor can a single case be referred to where I, in my labors, have ever infringed such order. I believe every church should regulate its own affairs; and in all my labors I ever conform to the instituted order, present existing, in any given church.—But there may be superfluous order introduced with the best intentions. To err is human.

This is a common, and wide spread error. The wisdom of man is often foolishness with God.

I would seek what is the teaching of "the Word," in this matter, in all particulars.

Is it not high time in all things to cease leaning to our own understanding, and seek more eagerly for the wisdom that is from above? The wisdom that is pure, gentle, easy to be entreated! full of mercy and good fruits! "Shall the sword devour forever?" Have we not all seen enough of war? O my Br., shall we not cease to press those minute points which divide without profit, and consider the more weighty matters of the heavenly law? Your whole soul responds, yes.—This spirit God has enabled you from the beginning to manifest. So may all do, more and more. Amen.

For the Crisis.

Report of the Paper Committee.

According to appointment, the Committee met in Boston, Sept. 12th, and had a free interchange of conversation relative to the union of the Crisis, Christian Reformer, and Prophetic Messenger.

All of our deliberations were characterized by a remarkably kind and Christian feeling, and a strong desire to do what can be done to cultivate the charity, without which, we are "nothing," as said Paul in his letter to the Corinthian Brn.

We were all satisfied that were it practicable, one paper for the whole Church would be better than many, so far as financial matters are concerned; but when we came to consider the location of the paper, we found a difference of opinion.

We saw that a paper located in the East, would not meet the wants of the far West where the Messenger is now published; because appointments at the West, could not be conveniently inserted in an Eastern paper; and as a large number of our Brn. are in New England, it would not be convenient for them to have a paper published midway between Boston and Moline Ill., where the Prophetic Messenger is now located.

It was also found, that there were local interests connected with the Reformer, and Crisis, that could not well be changed at this time.

Consequently, after a careful and friendly investigation of the whole matter, it was unanimously decided, that it is impracticable to unite the papers at present, if ever. But we were also most heartily agreed, that the most perfect friendship should exist between the different papers, so that appointments may be cheerfully given in all the papers whenever convenient.

We were satisfied that the common principles of christianity absolutely demand that we be at perfect peace among ourselves, doing all in our power to help each other onward in the way to the everlasting Kingdom; which is, as we believe, very soon to be set up, and to stand forever.

While we denounce sectarian feeling in others, we feel conscious, that we should "avoid the very appearance of the evil" among ourselves. We are satisfied that those who are looking for the Savior's return "are subject to like passions as other men," and hence need to set a double watch against all the evils in which others have made shipwreck.

We have never heard of one who was too free from sectarian feeling, or who had too much christian charity: but we have often seen a great want of it among those even who are expecting soon to see "the King in His beauty."

We recollect, that the disciples on a certain occasion found one that was casting out devils in the name of the Lord, and they rebuked him, and forbid him "because," said they, "he followeth not us."

"Jesus said forbid him not." Let us be careful lest we get the disapprobation of our Master in the same way; remembering, that, "In every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

And still farther, let us remember that the tares and wheat are to grow together until the harvest, and we think the harvest has not yet commenced.

Let us then "love as brethren, be pitiful, courteous and kind, for soon we shall reap if we faint not."

The Committee of the Crisis urgently request, that not a single unkind word appear in its columns from the pen of any one; and that we do all in our power to make the paper as good and useful as possible.

We hope that all the readers of the Crisis will do what they can in furnishing good matter for publication, and also aid in scattering the paper in all directions.

We pray the Lord to give us all, the true missionary spirit, so that where we have freely received, we may freely give.

Remember, "If we sow sparingly, we shall reap sparingly; and if we sow bountifully, we shall reap bountifully."

M. GRANT, SEC'Y.

BOSTON, Sept. 14th, 1855.

The following remarks by a Correspondent of the Christian Observer, in relation to the memoir of Leila Ada, a young Jewish convert, will be read with interest.

Dear Br. S:—A thousand thanks for sending us the memoir of Lelia Ada.—Our family have felt deeply interested in its perusal. It was just in harvest time when we received it, but one of the girls volunteered to read for the rest of us, while seated around the table at meals; and thus we literally devoured a chapter at a meal, with much mental gusto, and disposed of the whole in little less than a week. Would not ours be a happy world, if all its inhabitants were actuated by the same principles and feelings as Leila, when a Christian? But the appearance on earth of such mortal angels has heretofore been, truly, "few, and far between." She certainly possessed some intellectual and moral traits of character, which rendered her rather superior to the common run of mortals, even among the "good sort of people." One was that noble liberality and strength of mind, which lifted her above the influence of prejudice, while examining the grounds and evidences of the Christian religion.—We all know the great strength of the prejudice of education, how it hoodwinks its victims, and keeps them within the precints of any false system in which they may have been reared; and it is quite as strong in the Jewish system as any other, yet so great was her desire to walk in the light of pure truth, that she resolved to examine the New Testament carefully, in connection with the Old, and thus could not fail to be convinced of the truth of the Christian system.

And then, when she was enabled, by a lively appropriating faith, to receive Jesus as her own Savior, how ardent and supreme was her love to Him! How it entirely governed all her feelings, and all her actions, and filled her whole soul with heavenly light and happiness! She possessed all the qualifications of the most eminent Christian Martyr, and I think we would be presumptuous to deny her the martyr's crown, for the persecutions she suffered were truly severe, and who can say that they did not hasten her early exit from this world of sin and sorrow?

But short as was her shining Christian course, she has not lived in vain. The heavenly spirit she displayed, and the bright Christian example she set, are calculated to be useful. If her Jewish Brn. will read her story, they can see how an humble, devoted child of Gospel grace can answer and refute their proud, self-sufficient Rabbis; and show them convincingly that Jesus of Nazareth, in His person, character, and offices, exactly fulfils the types and predictions which their own Scriptures use to point out the true Messiah. And surely her story ought to be highly useful wherever it is read or heard among the professed disciples of the Savior, in awakening a spirit of emulation, inciting them to follow her bright example, and attain her heavenly qualities. Her religion was not an inactive, superstitious principle, leading her to bury herself in unsocial solitude, but an active spirit of practical love for all her fellow creatures. Her supreme love to her God and Savior did not weaken, but purify and strengthen the good affections which form the social bond between relatives and friends. Witness the pure, ardent, and active love she constantly felt for her father, and her eager desires to diffuse light and true comfort into the blinded minds of her brethren and sisters of the Jewish race. And, Oh! may we all be enabled, like her, to follow the Savior's example in feeling the love of active benevolence for all our race, and in doing all the good we can, in the sphere where Providence has placed us, even to those who "revile and persecute us."

I remain yours in the best bonds,

Letter from Sr. A. E. Fox.

AURORA, KANE Co., ILL., Sept. 4, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—Disappointments and persecutions are our lot here, but although cast down, we are not forsaken, bless the Lord, for they that are for us are more than they that are against us. Our blessed Savior, when here on earth, was despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; when He was reviled, He reviled not again, but prayed for His murderers.

O Brn. and Srs., do we try to follow in the footsteps of our Master? Are we dead to the world, and alive to the cause of Christ? Do we contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints?—There is a woe pronounced on all those that are at ease in Zion. When I look around me and realise how awfully blind the world is in regard to the fulfilment of prophecy, I am led to exclaim, how truly the prophet described the last days, when a sleepy Church would buy peace and safety, the days are prolonged, and every vision faileth! But hark! hear what the Lord says: "I will make this proverb to cease." The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision."

In Haggai 2 chap. 6 verse we read:—"I will shake the heavens and the earth, the sea and the dry land" Earthquakes in the land, and the movements of the water, show the near approach of the day of the Lord. Evidences accumulate around us—the earth is convulsed—it trembles to its centre—it is in its last pangs. Soon a nation will be brought forth in a day—the grave will yield up the sleepers—the saints from every clime will be gathered home. O happy day! I long to be there.

"Where peace shall wave her sceptre high,
And love's fair banner greet the eye."

The earth is corrupt, filled with violence, and ripened for destruction. The harvest truly is great, and the fields are white unto the harvest. The Lord has raised up servants that are willing to do the work but they must have bread for their families. Let the faithful servants of God be clothed and fed as God has prospered you, and great will be your reward. But if we let our gold and silver canker on our hands, the Lord will come as a swift witness against us at the judgment. The time is short, and there are many places where they have never heard the word preached. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find him giving meat in due season.

Dear Br. Merriam, I find the Crisis a great comfort to me. May the Lord sustain you in printing it, for we could not do without it. The Lord help us all to be diligent that we may be found blameless at His coming, is the prayer of your unworthy Sr. in Christ. A. E. Fox.

Say your Prayers in Fair Weather.

So spake a sea captain to one of his sailors who was much affrighted in a storm. The poor sailor had never been at sea before; and, feeling himself and all the crew to be in imminent danger, he betook himself to prayer. The captain differed from the sailor in this, that at that particular juncture it was necessary for all hands to be at work. The saying of the captain, and the circumstances surrounding him, made a deep and lasting impression upon the mind and heart of the sailor. The storm without, subsided, but that within his breast, still continued. "Say your prayers in fair weather," was never forgotten by him in his voyage through life. The hurried repetition of the Lord's Prayer was succeeded by repentance towards God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; and from that time forth the sailor prayed in fair as well as foul weather. He became a soldier of the Cross, and a preacher of the Gospel.

It so happened that on one occasion, whilst he was preaching, the captain entered his church. Immediately, the quondam sailor, looking towards him, exclaimed, "Say your prayers in fair weather'"—What a delightful and profitable train of thought was thus started, especially when the cause of the exclamation was explained by the preacher to the wondering audience! How suggestive of pious thought is that saying! The language of the disciples on the ship, in the Sea of Galilee, in the hinder part of which the Savior seemed to sleep, was, "Save Lord! we perish!" It has been and will be the language of thousands when exposed to dangers, by sea or by land, which threaten immediate death. If an epidemic prevails and hundreds or scores are carried off daily, the people are admonished to pray, and they heed the admonition. This is right, and yet it is proper also to say our prayers in fair weather. We are constantly in danger, and know not what a day or an hour may bring forth. The Savior, therefore, directs His disciples to "pray always." When engaged in lawful business we may pray for success. The husband and wife may pray for each other always, and so may parents for children, and brothers and sisters for themselves, the household and the neighborhood.

The Pastor should pray always for his flock, and his people should always pray for him. When we partake of God's bounties, we should pray to Him to feed our souls with the bread of life. When we clothe ourselves or our little ones, what prayer is so proper as this, that the Lord would clothe them and us with the robe of His righteousness? When we go out, or when we come in, what should prevent our prayers ti God, that He would go out and come in with us? We are commanded, in whatsoever we do, to do all to the glory of Him who created us and sustains us. We should be "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," then our prayers will be heard and our alms, like those of the good Cornelius, will be had in rememberance in the sight of God. Let us not pray only in the storm but in fair weather also. And so let us observe the Savior's direction, "pray always," in the exercise of a living faith. [Selected.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE AFRICA.

The Battle of Traktir Bridge. Gen. Pelissier calls the French loss 17 officers killed, 53 wounded; 172 men killed, 150 missing, 1160 wounded. Sardinian loss 350; Russian loss 3000 killed, 5000 wounded, including 1600 wounded prisoners in the hands of the French, and 200 in the hands of the Sardinians. The Turks were not engaged.

The Russian reports admit great losses and three Generals killed, and attribute the loss to the too great impetuosity of the right columns of attack. The Russian troops engaged had just arrived in the Crimea. Gortschakoff commanded in person from McKenzie's Heights.

The Duke Constantine was not present, although so stated.

The condition of the Russian dead showed that they had been subjected to a long march and some hardships, which partly confirms Napoleon's recent statement—that to his knowledge Russian resources are exhausted.

Sebastopol. On the night of the 27th, Marshal Gortschakoff telegraphs:—"Affairs unchanged, but the allied fire occasionally strong."

There is a report in London to-day (Friday) that Gen. Simpson is sick, and that Gen. Bentinck, the senior officer, has taken the command.

Letters say that no decisive operations will be undertaken until the allies have crossed the Tchernaya, occupied the heights of the right hand, and succeeded in separating the Russian forces on the Tchernaya and Belbeck Rivers. The reinforcements are collecting for this purpose. Meantime the allies expect the Russians to offer another battle near the cemetery.

The Russians daily expect the arrival of Gen. Paunutine with 9000 cavalry, 3000 infantry, and 160 guns.

The War in Asia. Omar Pacha definitely takes the command in Asia. He leaves on the 21st for Trebizond.

Osman Pacha is in command of the second division, and troops will be conveyed to Trebizond by English steamers.

There is no reliable news from Kars or Erzeroum.

The Baltic. Letters from Dantzic say that Russians lost 2000 men in Sweaborg.

The Russian paper "Nord" states that the loss was fifty killed, that 1300 guns still remain in position, and that the batteries are uninjured

Negotiations. Austrian papers make complaint that the assistance lent by the Western powers to the Sultan is fast changing into the occupation of Turkey

In reply to Austrian remonstrances, Great Britain is said to have stated that no questions of nationalities will be introduced in the present crisis, and a depot of Italian recruits, now at Novara, will be farther removed from the Austrian frontier.

Great Britain. The Kanzas steamer embarked 500 Highlanders from Liverpool for Malta. The British government are also embarking cavalry.

France. The state of the crops throughout France was satisfactory.

The harvest in Algeria was excellent.

Spain. A Paris rumor says we may expect from day to day to hear of the involuntary abdication of Queen Isabella, and important events in Spain. The Duke de Montpensier is openly agitating Italy. The exportation of breadstuffs is prohibited from the Roman states.

In Naples political ferment continues. Many arrests were made.

India and China. Bombay dates of July 30th are received The intelligence from India is important. A formidable insurrection has broken out in the centre of Bengal. The insurgents are the Santals and other tribes occupying the Rajmahal Hills—a bold and hardy race. They number from 30 to 50,000, acting in five parties; are armed with axes, poisoned arrows, and a few fire-arms. They have spread over the country for an extent of 100 miles, destroying everything European, and pretend they are led by their god in person. The few Europeans have entrenched themselves until assistance shall arrive. The insurrection was so little anticipated that there were not 1000 troops within 150 miles London papers have soothing editorials on the subject

Intelligence confirms the recent collision of the Russians with the Khan of Khiva, and the repulse of the latter.

An enormous butchery was perpetrated at Canton. One thousand persons were executed for sympathizing with the rebels. They were beheaded at the rate of 500 or 600 per day

The insurgents are losing ground in the North.

The Battle of Tchernaya. On the morning of the 16th, the Russians, pouring down the steep sides of their position and favored by the mist, without cry or beat of drum, burst upon the Piedmontese position; driving in the outposts, they reached the Tchernaya, forded the narrow stream, and, notwithstanding a heavy fusilade from the Zouaves, rushed upon the allied camp They attacked two French regiments in front and flank with a desperate bayonet charge, and a hot contest ensued, in which Gen. D'Herbillon, with 10,000 men, had to sustain the attack of the Russians, who probably by this time had brought a much larger force into action.

Reinforcements, however, soon arrived, and a long and formidable combat ensued, in which the Russians were beaten on every point. Their artillery were silenced by the superiority of the allied fire, and they appear to have been on this occasion entirely outdone in the effective management of their favorite arm. Their greatest loss, no doubt, was from the deadly action of the enemy's cannon and rifles against their advancing columns. Descending a slope, they presented the fairest aim for the well-served artillery of an enemy, and the Minie and carabine-a-tige, with which the French are armed, must have done deadly execution upon them before they could reply with their interior weapons, or close, as they appear to have attempted, in hand-to-hand combat.

The superiority of position as well as of military skill to the part of the allies is proved by the great disproportion of loss on the two sides. While the Russians are officially declared to have suffered to the extent of 6,000 men, probably a fifth of those actually engaged, the French and Sardinians together compute their loss at only 1,200 men No less than 900 prisoners had arrived at Constantinople when the packet left.—[London Times, 27th.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, under date of Aug. 30, writes:

The despatch of Admiral Bruat seems to corroborate an opinion expressed in one of my letters, that the affair on the Tchernaya was less a battle, in the usual sense of the word, than an immense sortie; and, indeed, these are the expressions he uses. Another statement, too, is confirmed by him; it is that which relates to the want of supplies, the famine which menaces the enemy.

Disturbances had taken place at Angers, in France, the capital city of the department of Maine-et-Loire. The following account is given of the circumstances:

"The habitual quietude of this town (Angers) has just been disturbed by a wild attempt, which, however, owing to the prudent measures of repression adopted, was confined to only one quarter of the town. On Sunday afternoon the police had been informed that a manifestation would take place in the evening, and in consequence a strict watch was kept up everywhere. Up to midnight nothing took place to indicate that the information was correct, but at that hour three police agents, in making their rounds, learned that some men were assembling on the Mall. The agents proceeded quietly to the spot, and found that about 40 persons were there collected.

The agents, crying out loudly for assistance, at once rushed on the collected crowd, and, being aided by several other agents who happened to be near, the assemblage was put to flight, and seven of them taken prisoners. About the same time two attacks had been made a little way out of Angers, one on two Gendarmes who occupied the post of Traiaze, and the other at a place called Les Plaines, between Angers and the commune of Ardoisiceres In the first case one of the Gendarmes was taken prisoner by the rioters, the other contriving to escape In the second case not less than a thousand men had assembled, armed with muskets, pikes, axes, and sticks. These persons advanced, shouting and singing insurrectionary songs, and forced the peaceable inhabitants to quit their houses and proceed with them.

When they had arrived at the Madeleine they paused to combine their mode of attack, but the authorities had already adopted measures to baffle their designs. About two in the morning the troops and the Gendarmes, directed by the Prefect, and by General d'Angell, in command of the military division, had arrived at the extremity of the Faubourg Bressigny, and there the General gave orders to the troops to charge the crowd and disperse it. That was done with such resolution that a number of the rioters were made prisoners, and the rest fled in every direction. The two ringleaders, Chauvin and Guerin, were among the number of the persons taken into custody.

A cart, filled with ammunition, guns and swords, was seized and taken to the mairie. Some shots were interchanged in this affair, and M. Dubodan, substitute to the Procureur-General, was fired at with a pistol by one of the rioters, almost at arm's length, but missed. The prisoners were immediately taken to a place of security, and the attempt was thus brought completely to a close. It is impossible to conceive what madness could prompt any number of men to hazard their lives in an affair like this, in a town where there are plenty of troops, and where the population only wants to be allowed to live industriously and quietly."

The Courrier de Marseilles of the 29th inst. says:

"The quantity of war material daily conveyed to our port by the railway and the Rhone steamers is truly incredible. The quays of La Joliette are literally covered with mountains of bombs of every size, mortars, and enormous siege guns. Independently of the transports chartered for the purpose, every large steamer leaving with troops carries, on an average, 1000 tons of materiel. Gunpowder for the army in the East is daily received in large quantities. Since the beginning of the war 7,500,000 weight has been shipped in our port."

The British War in Gambia. Detailed accounts had been received in England, of the difficulties between the natives in Gambia, and the British authorities, of which we had a brief account by an arrival here a few days ago. The affair proves to have been a serious and sanguinary one. The following account is from a private letter, dated Gambia, 8th of August:

"On the 16th of last month Governor O'Connor issued, or directed to be issued, a warrant for the apprehension of a Mandingo belonging to the town of Sabagee, for having sold as a slave one of the British subjects (a black) belonging to Gambia, and entrusted the execution of the warrant to Mr. Fenton, Queen's advocate at that settlement. Accordingly that gentleman, accompanied by twelve men of the 2nd West India Regiment, under command of Lieutenant Davis, of that corps, proceeded to Sabagee, a town which has been under British rule only within the last four years, and is about seven miles from Bathurst, the seat of government, and secured the person against whom the warrant had been issued.

Upon this the inhabitants armed themselves and turned out, insisting upon the release of the prisoner. Seeing such a formidable mob, Mr. Fenton deemed it expedient to give up the prisoner and retrace his steps. After marching a quarter of a mile his party was fired on. Lieutenant Davies then retreated a short distance further, when he suddenly wheeled round, and kept the enemy in check until he reached the outpost of Cape St. Mary's He lost two men, and was himself slightly wounded. Lieutenant Armstrong, 3d West India Regiment, who accompanied Mr Fenton, was shot in the arm and four times in the body. The arm (right) has since been amputated, and Mr Armstrong is going on well. Governor O'Connor, having been apprised of these proceedings, immediately (the same day) collected the disposable force under his command, viz, 130 soldiers of the 1st, 2d, and 3d West India Regiments, and about the same number of militia, with one brass 12 pound mortar and some rockets, and marched towards Sabagee. Within about four miles of the place there is a dense jungle, with a road running through the centre.

When Colonel O'Connor reached this pass he ordered a halt, and, suspecting that the rebels might be concealed, directed a few rockets to be thrown in. As he anticipated, they opened a very heavy fire in return. Seeing a very powerful body opposed to him, Colonel O'Connor deemed it expedient to retire. The troops were ordered to retreat, which they did, keeping up a smart fire until they reached Cape St. Mary's, the outstation already mentioned. The loss on this occasion was 23 killed and 53 wounded, of all ranks. Governor O Connor, feeling the insufficiency of his force, sent a request to the Governor of Goree, begging the assistance of some French troops. With their accustomed alacrity our allies immediately embarked on board the French brig-of-war Enteprenant, of 14 guns, Villeneuve commander, and within 12 hours were at the mouth of the river Gambia. On the 3d inst. 100 French soldiers, with a proportion of officers, were disembarked at Cape St. Mary's, and, having been joined by the remainder of Col. O'Connor's force, with 250 native auxiliaries, he marched again towards Sabagee, accompanied by three fieldpieces and one 24 pounder howitzer. The rebels met this force about half way, and were driven back into their town.

Colonel O'Connor ordered the stockade to be carried by assault. Accordingly the French formed the right attacking party, and carried the stockade at the point of the bayonet, ably seconded by the soldiers of the West India Regiments. The town was razed to the ground, and Sabagee no longer exists. The loss of the rebels is computed at 1,500 killed; our loss is 25 killed and 70 wounded.

China. The Pekin Gazette reports that the insurgents are losing ground in the North of China. The Overland Friend of China says:

"The amount of bloodshed at Canton during the last month has been sickening. When Shaou-king, the second city of the province, was vacated without fighting, a short time ago, a number of the inhabitants thought mercy would be shown to them if they gave themselves up. With equal reason might forbearance have been expected from the hungry wolf—they were taken to Canton in droves of five hundred, as many as ten thousand, it is said, being confined in the city at one time. Kept without food for several days, when the hour of examination, so called, arrived, eye-witnesses tell of the utmost callousness being exhibited, the condemned getting into the execution basket with even apparent satisfaction At the rate of seven and eight hundred a day for some time, the whole ten thousand, and thousands more, were soon got rid of. Several were skinned alive, and one higher criminal than the rest, was cut in 24 pieces, lingering dying. From the careless way in which the bodies are interred in heaps at eastward of the city, and the disgusting stench in the vicinity of the execution ground, it will not surprise us to hear of a plague carrying off its victims by thousands.

But with all these executions and their probable terrible consequences, there is no abatement of the rebellion, there is no instance of any of the leaders giving up the cause for promised rewards; in no case have the insurgents retired before, through want of food and amunition, all reasonable prospect of successful opposition had apparently gone. From Shaou-king-foo they marched north-west, with Hoe Alukh's band in company, forty thousand strong."

War News. A despatch from Gen. Simpson, dated August 26, states that the works of the allies were making satisfactory progress.

A telegraphic despatch received by the French Government from Gen. Pelissier, dated August 24, states that on the previous night the French carried a Russian ambuscade on the placis of the Malakoff works. Subsequently 500 Russians made a sortie to rebuke it, but were brilliantly repulsed with a loss of about 300 men. The work had been reversed and was now completely in the hands of the French.

A letter has been addressed by the Emperor of the French to Gen. Pellisier, congratulating the army upon their late success on the Tchernaya, in which he says—"Tell those brave soldiers, who for more than a year have undergone unheard of fatigues, that the termination of their trials is not far distant. Sebastopol, I hope, will soon fall beneath their blows, and even if the event should be delayed, the Russian army, I know, by information which appears, positively cannot again sustain the struggle in the Crimea through the winter.'

The last accounts from Odessa state that the Russians had launched several vessels which had been on the stocks at Nicolayoff An attack by Gen. Mourourcoff on Erzeroum appeared inevitable. The fortifications of the place are incomplete.

The allies have placed 150 new mortars in position before Sebastopol. The Russians have doubled the garrison of that place, and are preparing for a desperate defence. The allies expect the most favorable result from the bombardment A Belgian brig, the Rubis, has been pillaged at Salina.

The newspapers report an engagement which took place off Riga on the 10th ult. 17 Russian gunboats, as is said, came out of Riga and fought for two hours with Her Majesty's screw blockship Hawke, 60, and the screw corvette Desperate, 8. The result is said to have been indecisive.

Advices from Constantinople, of the 20th ult., announce that Omar Pacha, and Hassein Pacha were to leave on the following day for Batoum, where the Sultan had given orders for the landing of 25 battalions, selected from the Turkish troops in the Crimea and on the Danube.

Miscellaneous. The summer in Austria has on the whole been unusually cold, but during the last few days the inhabitants of Vienna have suffered greatly from the heat. The thermometer has been as high as 117.50 Fahrenheit in the sun, and 97.25 Fahrenheit in the shade. The weather is the more oppressive as the nights are nearly as hot as the days.

The cholera is still ravaging the Algarves, in Portugal where it has made great havoc, particularly in Taviva and the neighboring townships.

Letters recently received from the Cape de Verde, Archipelago, state that the Islands of Fogo and Brave are almost decimated by the scourges of famine and cholera, the disease having been communicated by a Sardinian emigrant ship.

A Muratist proclamation is said to be extensively circulating in Sicily. It is added that one phrase used in it by Prince Murat is, "The hour is come for the people to rise. I will not impose myself upon them, but I declare myself ready to answer their call."

Extract from an English Correspondent of the Traveler.

"A few days since it was rumored that the Allies would withdraw from before Sebastopol, and commence operations elsewhere, but the actual preparations, making both here and in France, show that another winter on the Crimean hills, and in the trenches, is contemplated. A Russian authority writes with great clearness and force on the question—'Will Sebastopol be taken?' and determines positively in the negative. The possibility of taking has passed away. It might have been taken at first; "but after the Allies had remained some days in fatal inaction for them, the possibility of taking Sebastopol disappeared. The resources of the place, and the facilities for receiving re-inforcements are then enumerated; and finally, the present position and extent of the works and means of resistance are described; "concentrated batteries, and houses converted into block-houses"—"triple and crossed fires," and no end of means of defending the place to the last stone.

Hoping against hope, there are some who believe that now the allied governments will begin to make war in earnest. That the Polish flag will be seen before Sebastopol. That the words Italy and Hungary will be "whispered" as suggested by Mr. Roebuck; that the national spirit rather than the dynasties of Denmark and Sweded will be appealed to. But though things ought so to be, a dishonorable peace, or rather a fatal truce, rather than this, will be the resort of the Governments.

There is another rumor, almost too strange to be noted, but which the respectable and thoroughly liberal Liverpool Albion in some measure authenticates, as received from an independent and credible source, even that Austria really desires the establishment of a barrier against Russia in the establishment of an independent Poland. The Albion confesses:—

"That this disturbed our own belief too seriously to receive our credence on any proofs less conclusive than those furnished us. It may be said, and we ourselves have often said, that it would be hardly possible for Austria to relinquish her own grasp upon Poland, and yet retain it on Italy and Hungary But she may deem the danger of being liberal, for once in her history, in one portion of her plundered acquisitions, as a cheap purchase of imagined and momentary security elsewhere; and we are persuaded that such security is only imaginary, and will be but momentary. The fact, however, we have to deal with, is, that Austria is not unwilling to see that territorial diminution of the rule of Russia of which all our statesmen have hitherto expressed their disapproval Austria, wise in her generation, as she has ever been, despite her enormous crimes and follies collectively, sees that the time is approaching when Russia must be opposed in Poland, or when Poland can no longer be held by Russia. And shall England continue to keep her eyes shut to what even Austria begins to perceive? Shall we continue to shut our eyes to the disruption which must ensue in that quarter, and in numerous other quarters, be the issue of the struggle in the Crimea, what it may."

But the Albion gives no hint of what Austria asks of the Western Powers in order to this, if it be so. Austria is too cowardly, or too prudent, to move, unless with Prussia in the rear, and with France and England to protect on either flank Certain it is that Austria is uneasy, and old Radetsky fretting in Italy. The re-inforcements, whose march was denied only a few days since, are now known to be very considerable. Moreover, Lord John Russel and the Times, always opposed, just now by an evil coincidence, disparage Mazzini and his efforts. The Italian patriot first spoke on the general question in an eloquent letter to a friend, published last week; its tone was rather sad, but was worthy of himself, and its views in accord with those of Kossuth.

Again; the French Emperor is said to have remonstrated with the Pope on account of the abuses of his government, and advised its secularization, even as did Lord Minto in 1847-8! Apropos of this French Emperor. There is his loan, the second in the year, filled up in ten days, and not by capitalists. Three hundred thousand persons offering subscriptions, and those of the humble classes reaching $30,000,000, being one-third of the sum required. That there is the spirit of greed and of gambling in this, is certain, but what other elements this deponent sayeth not. The profane but expressive epithet, Almighty Dollar, is correct, but another will need to be coined for speedy use. It should seem that, if the Czar is not to dominate in Europe, an unbound Almighty Satan will reign universally, by virtue of loanmongers, and be everywhere worshipped in all Bourses, Wall street, or not, excepted, as the case may be. May the omen be averted, and out of evil and seeming evil, good be still educed, and the wrath and the cupidity of man be made to praise Him."

YELLOW FEVER—DEATH OF SEVEN DOCTORS. BALTIMORE, Sept. 11. At Norfolk on Sunday there were 40 deaths from the fever, and a considerable diminution in the number of new cases.

At Portsmouth on Sunday, there were six deaths.

Drs. Marshall and Fleaty of Baltimore, Dr. Craycroft of Philadelphia, Dr. Smith of Columbia, (Pa.) and Drs. Going and Marsh of Richmond, are dead. Dr. Balfour of Norfolk, is also dead.

The fever has broken out at Suffolk, 16 miles from Portmouth, and the people are flying, panic-stricken.

We learn from conversation with a physician just returned from Norfolk and Portsmouth, leaving the latter place on Friday last, that the yellow fever is now raging to a fearful extent both among the white and the black population. One half of all who are attacked, die; the mortality among the negroes, however, is much the greatest, as they are "bad patients," refusing in many instances, to take medicine when attacked, generally expressing a wish to die, complaining of "misery in the head," or "misery in the shoulder."

The detail of suffering in individual cases, and in whole families, is almost too harrowing for publication. In some instances, the master, mistress, and servants are all sick at a time, and on attempting to separate the latter, they, if possible, seek their mistress' sick room, often hiding under the bed in order that they may not be discovered by the physicians or nurses, many of the slaves are heard begging, as a last request, to be interred with their master or mistress, as the case may be... [illegible] to attack and death. Of the [illegible] physicians from Philadelphia, [illegible] have been attacked by the prevailing disease, and three have died—so in proportion with the rest of the inhabitants male and female, who have remained in these plague-stricken cities.

The pestilence has made orphans of a multitude of little ones—they are gathered into one building, and the Howard Association are doing for them all in their power; but that noble association have the well, the sick, the dying, and the dead to care for. Their hearts and hands are full. [N. Y. Com. Adv.

Dead fish have accumulated in Hughes' Quay, Baltimore harbor, in such quantities that it was feared their decomposition would cause disease in the neighborhood. A dozen scows and a steam tug were employed in removing them.

CAMP MEETING.

The Lord willing, there will be a Camp Meeting in Carmel, Me, near Carmel village, to commence on the 18th day of Sept., in the evening, and continue over the Sabbath.

We request the Brn. to make arrangements to be on the ground early on the 18th, in order to erect tents for the accommodation of the Brn. and others who may attend.

As there will be no boarding tent on the camp ground, we especially request all to bring what bedding, tents and provisions they can conveniently. Provision will be made in the tents for the Brn who may come from a distance. There will be teams at the Depot to convey all who may need such help to the ground.

We earnestly invite all who differ from us in faith, to attend and give us a candid hearing.

We desire all to come, as we entertain no sectarian opinions; and we hope our ministering Brn. from the west will not neglect to attend, should an opportunity offer. We desire that whatsoever we may do or say may be for the glory of God and the salvation of mankind.

"Come over and help us" in the name of the Lord. Amen.

In behalf of the Brn.,

JOHN BILLINGS,
GEORGE W. BROWN,
SAMUEL BRAGG,
HENRY PERKINS.

GROVE MEETING IN SOUTH HAWLEY.

There will be a Grove Meeting in South Hawley in a beautiful grove, (directly opposite the tavern of Levi Holden,) to commence Thursday, Sept. 20th, and continue over the Sabbath. Should the weather be unfavorable for meeting in the grove, a large and convenient Hall will be furnished free of expense. Brn coming from a distance, can find board, lodging and horse-keeping at much reduced prices at the tavern, and a free table spread for the worthy poor.

Brn. R. V. Lyon and Wm. Sheldon are expected to attend the meeting; and other preaching Brn. are invited to attend, as the Lord may direct, who can preach to us the Gospel as preached by Abraham—and the kingdom as preached by Prophets, Apostles, and Jesus; and the things noted in the Scriptures of truth relative to these subjects.

For The Crisis.

Look to God for Light.

By Orrin P. Allen.

Lone traveler, weary,
Is thy way dreary?
Does darkness brood around?
Can no true path be found
In the dark gloom of night?
Look up to God for light!

Art thou of wealth bereft?
Or are thy fond hopes cleft?
Does the cold world scorn thee?
Mourn not, despondingly,
Nor turn thou from the right;
Look up to God for light!

Is thy heart filled with grief?
Canst thou find no relief
From pain and sorrow?
Hope, for the morrow
May bring thee sweet delight;
Look up to God for light!

Is there danger swelling
Around thy humble dwelling?
Does the wild storm increase?
And dost thou wish for peace?
Then pray thou, in thy might;
Look up to God for light!

Would'st rightly guide thy life
Through these dark scenes of strife,
To an eternal home
Where sorrows never come,
But all is fair and bright?
Look up to God for light!

Yes, look to God for light,
When weary is thy flight,
And death's dark hour is near;
His love thy heart will cheer,
And beam upon thy sight,
Making bright day of night!

For The Crisis.

I sigh for Home.

I'm weary of earth, and I sigh for home,
For a Pilgrim I long have been;
And sad is my heart while onward I roam,
Towards the Heavenly Land unseen.

I'm weary of earth and its glittering toys,
Its vanities, all, I despise,
My heart turns away to the unfading joys
Of my home, which in Paradise lies.

I'm weary of earth, 'tis death's dark domain,
His footprints all nature betrays;
I long for the hour when in beauty again,
Our Savior, death's victims shall raise.

I long for that day when the curse never more
Shall darken our Eden with gloom,
When the desert again, as in glad days of yore,
With the verdure of spring time shall bloom.

I sigh for that land where the tree never fades,
Where winter's chill winds never blow;
Where no tear ever falls, no sorrow invades,
Where life's waters unceasingly flow.

Where pilgrims no longer in loneliness roam
Through the wilderness, weary and sad,
But find in that heavenly Country, their home,
In unfading loveliness clad.

I sigh for that land where the sorrowing Bride
Now waiting in widowhood lone,
In her radiant crown and white robes, attired,
Shall sit down with her Lord, on His throne.

I'm weary of earth, for the Kingdom I sigh,
And oft falls the hot, burning tear;
With sorrowing heart I look upward, and cry
"Oh, quickly, dear Savior, appear!"

Marie.

"The Three Worlds; Or, Earth's Past, Present, and Future."

(Concluded.)

The first object of note is the unfinished Tower of Babel from which the bewildered hosts are retiring confused and dismayed. The families of man thus dispersed, establish their settlements in various quarters of the globe. A brief period developes their true and proper character, and nothing but a storm of fire and brimstone from heaven on the cities of the Plain is sufficient to strike terror to the hearts of offenders, and prevent the universal extension of disorder, sin and shame. The example of "the world that was" availed little towards the reformation of the race. The current of sin rolled on apace. Oppressive and mighty empires arose. We see the proud and cruel dynasty of the Pharaohs, (worthy prototype of American slaveholders and slave hunters) oppressing and pursuing the weak and the fearful, until finally amid the closing waves of the Red Sea their crimes were expiated, and their power and glory overwhelmed. We see the commencement of the Assyrian empire, founded by Nimrod, rising in strength and grandeur—heaping its gathered treasures within the ramparts and palaces of Nineveh, until at length its increasing and insulting impiety provoked the indignation of the Almighty, and beneath it the power of Assyria was broken forever.

Next upon the stage came Babylon—raging like a mighty lion, scattering and devouring the flock of God, ruling over all the earth, holding its court and displaying its glory upon the banks of the Euphrates, until God numbered the kingdom and finished it, and divided it, and gave it as the spoil and the reward of the Medes and Persians.

The Medo-Persian empire carried its conquests far and near. It was cruel, fierce, ravenous, in its character; despotic and oppressive in its administration, and continued until, smitten by the fierce onslaught of the Macedonian conqueror, its diadem was trampled in the dust.

The Grecian empire sped in its course of conquest to the far distant Indus, spreading the name and fame of the world's conqueror, Alexander, to the remotest lands, and to the remotest ages, until its divided governments, weakened by mutual conflicts, fell a prey to the mighty rulers of the West.

The Roman empire rose from the robber city on the Tiber to be the robber and the ruler of the world—oppressing with an iron hand—breaking in pieces other kingdoms—expanding in its full glory—then broken up and dismembered by external incursions and internal divisions—rearing its "Ten Kingdoms" like so many "horns" of cruelty upon the head of a ferocious beast, exalting the tripple crowned Pontiff to the temple of God, and running on through the years of many generations, a course of sin and blood and strife until the present day.

The Eastern empire maintained a struggling existence for many centuries until swallowed up by the great eastern Antichrist—the dominion reared by the ambitious fanaticism of the Prophet of Mecca, and perpetuated through periods of national vigor and conquest, of national pride and cruelty, of strength and security, to its present state of dotage and dependence, while the Papal Antichrist of the west arose, founded in priestly usurpation, up-built by iniquity, cemented by blood, sustained by cruelty, and crowned by crime—with its wide spread influence, its unlimited power, its unceasing impiety, its protracted war with Jehovah, with its bulls, its edicts, its decrees and its anathemas—with its filth, its corruption, its covetousness and its idolatries—with its tortures, its poisons, its engines of hellish cruelty and malignant hate—and wearing out the remnant of the flock of God, and making this world the theatre of crimes enormous beyond the power of human understanding, and marking with blood and agony no small portion of the history of the world.

The Asiatic nations with their huge and gory systems of idolatry, with their cruelty, oppression, and perfidy, the inhabitants of far distant China, the dwellers in the palm groves of Hindostan, the inhabiters of the islands of the sea, all these have sinned till their iniquities have risen before the Almighty and provoked his wrath. Shall we go further, and speak of the modern nations of Europe? Even now the cup of punishment is placed to their lips, the sword of vengeance gleams above their heads, and ere long prince and ruler, emperor and sultan, kaiser and autocrat must meet, in their exterminating destruction, the reward of national perjury, oppression, and perfidy.

Shall we follow the star of empire in its westward course? The groans of four millions in a bondage bitterer than that of Egypt, rise mournfully on our ears, and convince us that earth has nothing to expect from man but the most determined and invincible iniquity which he is capable of committing.

Oh, how sad the history of the present world! "The whole world lieth in the wicked one," and the refinement and politeness of the present age contrast strangely with the constant effort to bind heavier burdens on the weak, to rule with more relentless rigor the trembling sons of want, to fraudulently retain the hire of the suffering laborers, to fill up in common with all the nations of the earth the cup of human transgression, and to awake to judgment the vengeful ire of the Lord God Omnipotent.

Let us turn from this picture and contemplate the history of the elect disclosed in the records of inspiration.

Shall we commence with Abraham as he forsakes his father's house, as he wanders a pilgrim in many lands, as he builds his altar and erects his tent, as he talks with God and joyfully embraces the promises from His lips? Shall we follow his descendants in all their changeful histories? We see them journeying toward the realm of the Pharaohs, a famine-stricken company of "threescore and ten"—we hear their groans beneath the oppressor's iron hand—we behold them marching forth by hundreds of thousands, defended by that God whose angel of destruction had passed by their sprinkled doors—we hear their cries on the one bank of the Red Sea, and their shouts and songs on the other—we journey with them through the wilderness—we pass Mount Sinai with its robe of cloud and its crown of fire—we see the overthrow of the rebellious—we behold the sweltering carcases of the disobedient—we feed on the dropping manna—we drink from the smitten rock—we behold the flying hosts of Amalek—we see the heaped up Jordan stay its flow, the ramparts of Jericho fall, the rulers of the heathen flee, the usurping nations driven asunder, and finally, amid the vineclad hills and verdant vales of Palestine, amid the water-brooks and springs, the milk and honey, and surrounded by every privilege, they find at last the goodly promised land.

Here we might expect obedience. But alas! to the disgrace of humanity be it told, that the constant tendency of this favored people was to apostasy and sin.—Their history is a history of sin and punishment; of repentance and blessing; of revolt and judgment. The writings of the Prophets are thickly strown with reproofs, and are finally closed with the prediction of a threatened curse. The Judges ruled till the people rejected their Almighty King, and received instead a man who was given in anger and removed in wrath.

The reigns of David and Solomon were measurably prosperous, but still marked with guilt, which augmented with succeeding generations, causing them to mock God's messengers, despise His Prophets, and murder His children, until from the lips of an insulted God pealed forth the mandate, "Remove the diadem, take off the crown, abase him that is high, and exalt him that is low. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. 21: 26, 27. Thenceforth no king possessed the throne of David. The nation of God's choice became the portion of contending powers until well nigh destroyed.

At length, infinite wisdom and compassion manifested itself in one great effort to rescue men from ruin. The herald-angels sang the song of Peace o'er the plains of Bethlehem—the star walked on in its brightness to mark the spot where Jesus lay, and a Prince and a Savior was granted to the world. But said the chosen race, "This is the heir: let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours." It was done. Upon a hill-top, strewn with skulls and bones, between two malefactors, beneath darkened skies, amid the tears of disciples, the mocking of Jews, the rocking of earth and the rending of graves, the Son of Man expired. Sinner, He died for you! Believer, He died for you!—Reader, He died for you!

Thus earth was moistened by the tears and crimsoned by the blood of the Son of God. But from His death came pardon, and from His resurrection came peace.—To His disciples He gave a message of salvation, bidding them to carry it to earth's remotest bounds, and then passed away from earthly shame to heavenly glory, awaiting at God's right hand the subjugation of his foes.

His Gospel has been preached. Beginning at Jerusalem, faithful men have published it in every land. They have thirsted in the desert and chilled upon the mountain; they have crossed the seas and penetrated the forests—they have parted with ease, and periled even life itself, bearing this blessed message to perdition-bound men. Some have heeded it. For a while it sped swiftly in its conquering flight; but at length it assumed the places and habiliments of human pride and power. Woeful were the succeeding ages. The Church fled to dens and caves, and her pathway was marked by the blood of the faithful, and lit by the martyr's faggot-fires. Thus the Church went on till the religion of Christ became the occasion of bloody conflicts, and the man of sin enthroned himself in God's own temple. The dawning light of the Reformation gave a ray of hope to the struggling Church, and by the movements of Divine Providence they have been for the most part delivered from their persecutors. But still they turn away from God. The spirit and the practice of holy men of old is rarely to be found. Garnished temples, gorgeous altars, broad phylncteries, and long prayers, are numerous; but faithful ministers, reprovers of wrong, pleaders for right, haters of evil, rebukers of oppression and sin, are very few indeed.

A sickly, hollow religion, is the religion of the day—an educated, polished, and attenuated religion—a polite and fashionable religion—a religion that cuts the rebukes of slavery out of Sunday-school books and Tract Society volumes. A religion whose ministers go to the communion table and break the consecrated bread to oppressors, to slave owners, and buyers and sellers, and breeders! And shall not God judge and visit upon such a Church? Shall not fearfulness surprise the hypocrites? Shall not the sinners in Zion be afraid?

Earth speeds on in her course of folly. She hastens to her goal—the goal of destruction. Already the premonitory throes of her final travail are coming upon her. The nations are awake! The ring of hammer and anvil are heard as they beat their plow shares into swords, and their pruning hooks into spears. Strength is infused into the weak. Men have gone forth to make the stirring proclamation, "prepare war among the gentiles!" The clouds gather. The thunders mutter.—The storm of wrath rolls up the sky. O Earth! Earth! Earth! Thou hast drunk the blood of prophets, and hidden the ashes of saints, and borne the curse of God for long, long ages past. Thy final travail shall speedily come.

But while the world that now is moves onward in its mighty race, the inhabitants of it are, and are to be, mostly unconscious of the nearness of the impending catastrophe: not on account of lack of evidence, but on account of the lack of faith. Men are not necessarily in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief. The bursting buds of the forest trees are not more unmistakable indications of the approach of summer, than the signs of these times are of the speedy consummation of the present age. The child of God is warned to know by these unmistakable tokens that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

But what availeth warning? Did it save Jerusalem? Did it save Tyre?—Did it save Babylon? Did it save Egypt? Did it save the Antediluvians? Did it save the Sodomites? And will it save this present generation? Of what avail are signs in heaven above and in earth beneath? Of what avail are the mighty roarings of the sea and the waves thereof? Of what avail is the distress of nations and perplexity that pervades the world? Of what avail are the premonitory thunders that mutter in the distant heavens, and the premonitory shocks that jar the distant earth? Of what avail are those portentous clouds of darkness that overhang the nations, or those fierce lightnings that gleam in red fury above them? Will all these things be heeded by wicked men? Hark! "The wise shall understand, but the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand." And so, notwithstanding the amazing efforts put forth in this last hour of this dispensation—notwithstanding God has sent his messengers, rising up early and sending them—yet, "As it was in the days of Noah and as it was in the days of Lot, so also shall the coming of the Son of man be."

Alas that it must be so! But so it is. Men will dream on until God shuts the door, breaks up the foundations of the great abyss and opens the floodgates of heaven. Men will riot on till the angels gather the just from their midst and pour the fiery storm upon their heads. Men will say, "My Lord delayeth his coming," until his sign glares in the darkened sky, and all heaven is flooded with the glory of his presence. Men will jest and mock until all the tribes of the earth begin to mourn. Men will sleep in sin till the last trumpet wakes them, and refuse to pray till they pray to rocks and mountains! Ah, yes, and scoffers will enquire in mockery, where is the promise of His coming, until the heavens are kindling with nature's final fires.

The concluding period of the history of the world that now is, as sketched by inspiration, is dark, cheerless, and stormy. Iniquity abounds. Love waxes cold.—Evil men and seducers wax worse and worse. Men will not endure sound doctrine. Perilous times come. Men have a form of godliness, and deny the power thereof. Men, like Jannes and Jambres of old, resist the truth by their counterfeits and imitations. Scoffers walk after their own lusts. Evil servants smite their fellows. Faith is almost extinct in the earth. The Church is like the widow crying day and night. The world is secure and careless. The elements of strife are abroad. The whirlwind rises from the coasts of the earth. The unclean spirits gather the nations to battle. The kings of the earth assemble for fierce and final conflict.—Armageddon gleams with glittering armor, and then it swims with flowing blood.—The dispensation of God's mercy to this present world closes up. The night grows darker and darker, the clouds thicker and thicker, the storm fiercer and fiercer, the riot wilder and wilder, until the red blaze of the conflagration bursts along the darkened heavens, and the Son of God is revealed.

"But the heavens and earth, which are now, by the same word, are kept in store reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness, but is long suffering to us ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come, as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also; and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless, we according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. 3.

Here is the conclusion of the history of the world that now is, as forewritten by the inspired penman. In the midst of earth's carnal and ungodly slumber the day of the Lord shall come. And oh! what a day! Silent, stealthy, thief-like it comes. That day, like the pillar of cloud, is light to Israel, and dark to Egypt.—Light to those weeping ones who will find that joy cometh in the morning. But that day of joy is the night of despair to a guilty world! What a day! How the thunders shall shake the departing heavens. How the flames shall melt the solid ground! How the works of man shall perish, and the joys of man depart! O, reader, will that day bring joy or sorrow to your heart?

Thus shall God purge the world of sin. Thus shall the works of man be burned up, ere the works of God can be displayed in the fulness of their perfection. So God shall wipe out the serpent's burning trail, and unbind the burdening curse from the bosom of a groaning earth.

But what is beyond? Is it non-existence? Is it a sea of lava? Is it a world ruin left floating a vast wreck in space, to show the danger of transgression and of sin? Ah no.

A glorious future is yet in reserve for this curse-burdened, groaning world. Yes, notwithstanding iniquity must come, and judgment must come, and fire must come, and ruin must come, yet that God who rolled back the surging waters of the deluge, and smiled benignly on the emerging earth, shall call forth "from the conflagrant mass, purged and refined," a fairer world; shall clothe it with a deeper verdure and, shall beautify it with the trees of God, shall garland it with Sharon's roses, shall roll crystal rivers through its wastes, and call forth sparkling fountains in its deserts, shall hang a brighter bow of promise in its heavens than Noah ever saw, shall bless it as He never blessed Eden of old; shall plant Jerusalem from above as a gem of unfading beauty upon its verdant bosom, and shall welcome His people to it as their resting place, the Paradise of God.

This was the blest landscape that lay before the eyes of the Apostle. And it was no phantom of his imagination, it was no dream of a disordered brain. Nay! "We, according to his promise, look for a New Heaven and a New Earth."—Listen to that Prophet whose lips were enkindled by fire from the altar of God. "Behold I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." This is the imperishable "promise" that stands written in the Scriptures of Truth, and which is handed down for the consolation of the exiled flock of God. And then as we reach the last pages of divine revelation, we discern the same glowing scenes.—"Behold I create all things new!" peals forth sublimely from the eternal throne. The work is done. The rubbish and wreck of a former creation has passed away. The sea is no more. The palace of the King of kings descends—heaven and earth are filled with one glory—God dwells with men and wipes away their tears, and death, and sorrow, and crying, and pain, have disappeared forever. The gates of pearl are wide open. The streets of gold echo the tread of immortal hosts, the jasper walls resound with matchless melody, as the ransomed come with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. The palms wave on high—the harpings swell amid the golden arches—the song of Moses rolls its rapturous melody around—and mingling with it, and rolling full and free its thunder notes as high as heaven, is heard the song, "Worthy the Lamb that was slain!" Reader, will you be there?

This the third world, and here the "third heaven" to which Paul in rapturous vision was caught away, shall bend lovingly to embrace an earth so fair. It is termed by the Savior "the Regeneration" in which the apostles shall be enthroned beside their Lord. Matt. 19: 28. It is an uncursed, a sorrowless, a tearless world. It is a world where righteousness dwells. Sin and pollution are eternally exiled from its holy borders, and naught shall mar the peace of the blessed, or cast gloom upon its beauteous face.

Friend, Three Worlds are before your mind as exhibited in the Word of God.—One of them is past. Another is now in being, but it "passeth away," its course is well nigh run, it waxeth old as doth a garment, and groaneth beneath the burden of the curse of God. It rolls on towards a fiery abyss—it is "reserved unto fire." Another is "the world to come whereof we speak." Heb. 2: 5. Choose now your world! Remember that Jesus died to redeem you from "this present evil world." Will you then cling to it? Will you choose it as your home? Will you have your treasure here? Will you seek earth's honors? Will you share its pleasures? Will you love its wealth? Have then the world! Riot on. Sin on. Forget God. Forget Christ. Forget Gethsemane. Forget Calvary. Forget the deluge. Forget the cities of the Plain. Forget alike God's mercies and his judgments until they burst upon you and then! "weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth."

Christian, seeing we look for such things, let us be holy. Eternal glories are in prospect. Let us seek them. Cast off the world. Throw pleasure aside. Strive for an abundant entrance. Fight the good fight. Run the race. O, hasten to finish thy work. Weep over the perishing. Beseech men to be reconciled to God. Save some. One at least. One to sing eternally. One to dwell in Paradise restored. Delay not. The Judge is at the door.—May we escape the things that are coming on the earth, and meet at the judgment uncondemned. Amen.

It is interesting to find that the great subject of our Lord's coming and Kingdom is being discussed by some who have not been identified with us in our faith.

We cut the following from the "Christian Observer," a Presbyterian paper printed in Philadelphia.

The Destroyer of Anti-Christ.

The question is not whether Mr. Barnes is a millenarian or not; but, it is simply this: Is the exposition which Mr. Barnes has given us of 2 Thess. 2: 8, the correct one or not? If his exposition of the Greek words Epiphaneia and parousia, rendered brightness and coming, be not correct, will the Editor of the Christian Observer, or some of his numerous readers be so kind as to show us the fallacy of his reasoning, and the defect of his exegesis. If they cannot do it, let them candidly acknowledge the fact. We want honest criticism, such as Mr. Barnes has given us in his exposition of this passage, and not, the pious wishes or feelings of good men in the case. When we get the true meaning of the spirit in the passage, every one can make his own inferences.

Our design is not to impute to any one, any sentiment that he does not honestly hold to be the truth. All we say is, that Mr. Barnes' exposition of 2. Thess. 2: 8, is directly opposed to the spiritualizing theory, which teaches that the anti-christian power spoken of in this passage, is to be destroyed by the simple preaching of the word of God. Mr. B. says, the idea is, "that He (Christ) would appear, and that this anti-christian power would be destroyed by His appearing; that is, by Himself, when He shall return. The agency in doing it, would not be His brightness, but Himself. It would seem to follow from this, that however this enormous power of wickedness might be weakened by the truth, the final triumph over it would be reserved for the Son of man Himself, on His second return to our world." With this exposition, we cordially agree. Will any one make it plain that this is not the correct exposition of the passage? We forewarn him, that he has a herculean work before him.

Holding, as we do, that Br. B.'s exposition of this passage is the true one, we ask any unprejudiced man to say whether our inference from the passage is not legitimately drawn, viz., that anti-christ must exist during the millennial dispensation of the Church, and on to the end of time; or else our Lord must come personally before the millennium, and destroy anti-christ.

The reasoning is this:—

Anti-christ will be destroyed by Christ Himself, on His second return to our world:

But, our Lord will not return the second time till the end of the world:

Therefore, Anti-christ will exist till the end of the world.

This is a legitimate anti-millenarian inference. Or this;

Antichrist is to be destroyed by our Lord himself on His second return to our world;

But Antichrist cannot exist in the millennial dispensation of the Church; for then all shall know the Lord.

Therefore, our Lord will come before the millennium, and destroy Antichrist.

This is the millenarian view of the subject. Will some one be kind enough to show us that Mr. B.'s exposition is not correct, and that our inference is not legitamately drawn.

On 2d Thess. 1: 8, Olhausen says:—"When the Anomos (the wicked one, referring to the man of sin,) thinks he has attained to all in the possession of his universal monarchy, in which he has united all spiritual and worldly power in his own person—Christ will annihilate him by His appearance." "The combination Epiphaneia tes parousias, the brightness of His coming which is found here only, is, however, peculiar. Here the apparent tautology is to be explained so that Epiphaneia, (brightness,) denotes the subjective, parousia, (coming,) the objective aspect, that is, this latter expression puts forward the actuality of Christ's appearing, the former one the contemplation of it on the part of man, the consciousness of His presence."

Thus it appears that Mr. Barnes and Dr. Olshausen agree in their exposition of this passage.

The Child's Prayer of Faith.

Not long ago, says a traveler, I was on a journey in a mail-coach with a woman, who, after two years of complete blindness, had regained her eyesight by a successful operotion. Her heart was full of praise to the Lord, who had led her to think of the plan; she was overflowing with love and gratitude to him. It was touching to witness her anxiety to see her only child again, a boy of six years old; and she was constantly talking of her darling. Among other things, she told me this little anecdote of him.

"About seven or eight weeks ago, my husband and I were considering whether I should go to the hospital, and submit to the operation, or not. My husband, who gains very little by his cloth weaving, was afraid of the expense, and explained to me what a pity it would be if we found, after all, that the money had been spent in vain. I was very much troubled about it, and did not know what to do. One day I was sitting with my little boy, feeling very sad, and I was crying. All at once he got up and went away. After a little time he came back again, walked hastily up to me, and said, quite confidently, 'Mother, do go to T——. I have been out in the court-yard, and I prayed to the Savior—'Lord, make my mother see again!' And now I am sure it will be so. Oh, Mother, how glad I shall be when you come home again, able to see!' As soon as the boy said this, I felt sure that I must go!" [Selected.

"What! To hear that Madman.!"

A gentleman and his wife, one Sabbath morning, going to church in Glasgow, Scotland, met a friend, who spoke to them and inquired where they were going.—They said, to hear Dr. Chalmers. He said, What! to hear that madman?—They replied, if he would agree to go with them and hear Dr. Chalmers for once, and if, after that, he persisted in talking in such a manner of him, they would never dispute the matter with him again. He accompanied them, and, singular to relate, it happened that when Dr. Chalmers entered the pulpit that day, he gave out the text, "I am not mad most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of truth and soberness," and the gentleman, who, I rather think, was a medical man, became from that day a changed man, and a convert to evangelical Christianity. I had often heard this story without being able to authenticate it, till, on happening to mention it to my friend, Dr. Webb, he told me that he knew it to be perfectly authentic, and he knew who the party was. I was delighted with this confirmation of the story, as I think it one of the most interesting anecdotes in modern biography. [Selected.

For The Crisis.

A Voice of Warning from the Four Winds.

The Spiritualist, or modern necromancer, a creature of yesterday, but now world-renowned and counting his millions, sees, though with perverted vision, the hastening new era.

Andrew Jackson Davis, speaks for the general body in denominating spirit-rapology, "the great question of the age, which is destined to convulse and divide Protestantism.

"You may be assured of the truth of this approaching crisis. The world must recognize it, because it will be accompanied with war; for politics are inseparably connected, all over the world, with religious systems. Religion will develop reason; but politics will impel the masses to unsheathe the sword, and to stain the bosom of nature with blood. Friends of progress! be not discouraged; for the final crisis must come; then the strange interregnum.

"Protestantism, as now constructed, will first decay; because it is to be divided into two, the smallest party will go back into Catholicism; the other will go forward into Rationalism. And then, after a succession of eventful years, a political revolution will hurl the Catholic superstructure to the earth, and the prismatic bow of promise will span the heavens. The children of earth will then be comparatively free and happy! for the millennial epoch will have arrived" (Review of Bushnell, pp. 3, 187, 217, 221.) Such are their delusive hopes.
